been lost to the Muslims and to the mosque—as a building—by virtue of the Limitation Act, there was a right remaining in the mosque—as a juristic person—to be maintained in its original form and that therefore on its demolition a right of action arose. This argument was difficult to understand but it appears to have been based upon the argument already considered that it was the duty of any owner to maintain the sacred character of a building in his possession and, in addition, that there was a duty to maintain the building itself. We have not been referred to any authority on this point and indeed it appears to me that it is without any force whatever. When the Sikhs took possession of the mosque in 1762, limitation clearly began to run, and all rights being lost to the mosque and its worshippers at the expiry of the prescribed period of 12 years, no new act by those in possession could give a fresh cause of action. It was argued that the demolition of the mosque amounted to desecration and that this was a new act of desecration giving rise to a cause of action. From the history however of this building it is clear that from the Muslim point of view, there was complete desecration of the mosque many years ago and the demolition of the building was no more desecration than the original acts. In addition the injury to the Muslims was complete when they were dispossessed, and there cannot be after the expiry of the limitation period—all rights being lost—any further right accruing to the mosque itself, as a building or as a juristic person, or to the Muslims.

The final argument which shows that there is nothing in the contentions of the appellants is that if they thought they were right that the Limitation Act did not apply, and that adverse possession could not be obtained by the respondents, there was nothing to prevent them from suing for possession. They have not done so and the reason is obvious ; they knew the Limitation Act did apply and that therefore they could not get possession. They have tried therefore by the exercise of considerable ingenuity to attain their end by this suit for a declaration and injunction.

To sum up therefore : The personal law of the Mahomedans has been modified by the Punjab Laws Act and the Limitation Act. Mahomedan law regarding wakfs, and the lack of any rule of limitation within that law, cannot apply to this suit.

The Limitation Act and Art. 144 of the Act apply. A mosque is immovable property. Every suit is subject to the Limitation Act, and the Act applies without distinction to suits concerning both sacred and secular property; nor does it make any difference if the plaintiffs in such suits are divine or human. It therefore follows that the Muslims and the mosque at the end of 12 years' adverse possession by the Sikhs lost all rights in the land and building, including the right of worship. The Sikhs on the other hand by virtue of S. 28, Lim. Act, obtained a good title to the land and building thereon and have full rights therein as owners. The building under the circumstances cannot be held to have maintained its sacred character as a mosque, nor is there any duty cast upon the present proprietors to maintain its original sacred character or to maintain it as a building. Property dedicated to God can be alienated if adverse possession of the property is obtained and kept for 12 years. Finally there was no subsisting right in the plaintiffs at the date of suit and therefore no action lay. On these grounds therefore this appeal must be dismissed with costs and it is unnecessary for me to discuss the other points raised. I have had the advantage of reading the judgment of my learned brother Bhide upon the other points. I agree with him on all his conclusions and have nothing to add.

Bhide J.—In the vicinity of a well known Sikh Shrine called the 'Gurdwara Shahid Gunj Bhai Taru Singh' situated in Lahore City, there used to be a mosque which according to the deed of dedication relied upon by the plaintiffs in this case (vide Ex. P. 14.1) was built by one Qurban Ali and was made over by his son Falak Beg to one Sheikh Din Mohammad as a mutwalli or custodian in the year 1134 of the Hijri era, corresponding to 1722 A. D. According to the defendants the mosque or the adjacent site was subsequently the scene of massacre of thousands of Sikhs who fell victims to the religious persecution of the then Muslim Governors of Lahore. About the year 1760, when the Sikhs came into power, they took possession of the mosque and the adjacent site, and on a portion thereof erected the shrine known as Gurdwara Shahid Gunj Bhai Taru Singh referred to above, in memory of Bhai Taru Singh, one of the principal martyrs. Since then the mosque admittedly remained in possession of the Sikhs. There is evidence on the record showing that the Sikh Holy Granth was kept in it and it was used as a place of worship for some years, but subsequently it seems to have been turned to secular uses and let out for residential purposes from time to time. Shortly after the advent of British Rule, Nur Ahmad, a descendant of Sheikh Din Mohammad the first Mutwalli of the mosque, made strenuous efforts to recover possession of the mosque and some land which was attached to it. He filed several petitions for the purpose, and also a civil suit which was fought out up to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner; but his claim was dismissed as it was found that the Sikh mahants in charge of the neighbouring Gurdwara had held adverse possession of the property for over 20 years. In 1883, one Pirshah sent a petition to the Lieutenant Governor of the Punjab on behalf of the Mahomedans for restitution of the mosque. An enquiry was again made through Sayyad Alam Shah, Extra Assistant Commissioner, but after considering his report the Lieutenant Governor refused to interfere.

No further attempt to recover the mosque was apparently made till the year 1925, when on the Gurdwara Shahid Gunj Bhai Taru Singh having been notified as a 'Sikh Gurdwara' under the Sikh Gurdwaras Act, and the adjacent property including the building of the mosque having been claimed to belong to the Gurdwara, a muslim association of Lahore, known as the Anjuman-i-Islamia, Punjab, claimed the mosque on behalf of the Mahomedan community under S. 5 of that Act. This petition was however dismissed by the Sikh Gurdwaras Tribunal on 20th January 1930 and no appeal was preferred from that decision.

There was litigation between the then mahants of the 'Gurdwara Shahid Gunj Bhai Taru Singh' and the present defendants under the Sikh Gurdwaras Act, in which the latter were successful and as a result, the Gurdwara and the appertaining properties including the mosque passed under the control of the defendants. On the night of the 7th and 8th July 1935 the Sikhs, whose title had been upheld by the Courts more than once, proceeded to demolish the building of the mosque which had become old. This however offended the feelings of the Mahomedan community and led to serious communal disturbances followed by a public agitation for the recovery of the site of the mosque, which eventually resulted in the institution of the present suit on 30th October 1935. Plaintiff 1 in this case is the mosque itself, suing in its juristic capacity, while the other plaintiffs (2 to 18) are Mahomedans, including some minors and pardanashin ladies, claiming to have a right to pray in the mosque. The latter set of plaintiffs sued in a representative capacity on behalf of the Mahomedan community and the procedure laid down in O. 1, R. 8, Civil P. C., was complied with for the purpose. The plaintiffs did not sue for possession but dating their cause of action from the demolition of the mosque on the night of 7th and 8th July 1935 prayed for the following reliefs :

(a) a declaration to the effect that plaintiff 1 (i. e. the site of the mosque) is the site of a wakf mosque dedicated to God and that it cannot be used for any purpose, which according to Mahomedan law be against the purposes of a mosque and that the plaintiffs 2 to 18 and all other followers of Islam have a right to use the said mosque for purposes of worship without let or hindrance by any one, and

(b) consequential relief in the shape of the following injunctions : (i) that defendants should not use plaintiff 1 for any purpose which may be contrary to its sanctity and use according to Mahomedan law ; (ii) that defendants should not in any way interfere with the rights of plaintiffs 2 to 18 to worship in the said mosque, and (iii) that the defendants should be required to reconstruct that portion of plaintiff 1, i. e. the mosque, which they demolished or caused to be demolished on the night of 7th and 8th July 1935, in the same shape and form as before or in the alternative that they should be ordered to pay such amount to the plaintiffs as may be held to be sufficient for such reconstruction.

The defendants resisted the suit on various grounds, including limitation and res judicata. The issues framed in the case were as follows :

1. Is plaintiff 1 a juristic person, capable of suing through Maulana Mohammad Ahmad as next friend ? O. P.

2. Does a suit for declaration lie, when plaintiffs 2 to 18 are not in possession of the subject-matter of the suit ? O. P.

3. Is the suit barred : (a) by decision of the Sikh Gurdwaras Tribunal, dated 20th January 1930, (b) by provisions of the Gurdwaras Act,

(c) by previous decisions between 1850 and 1883 ? O. D.

4. Was the notification under the Gurdwaras Act secured by fraud and deceit ? If so, what is the effect ? O. P.

5. Is the subject-matter of the suit waqf, that is a mosque, dedicated for prayer ? O. P.

6. (a) Was the subject-matter of the suit used as a mosque by Muslims for prayers prior to July 1935 ? O. P. (b) If the dedication is proved, but the subject-matter of the suit was not actually used for prayers up to 1935, what is the effect on the suit ? O. P.

7. Is the suit within time ? O. P.

8. Have the defendants acquired a title to the property in dispute by adverse possession or otherwise ? O. D.

9. Are the plaintiffs entitled to : (1) right of worship at the subject-matter of the suit ; and (2) mandatory injunction for reconstruction of the buildings on the site in suit ? O. P.

The learned District Judge in dismissing the suit summarised his findings on the above issues as follows :

1. The "Masjid Shahid Ganj" is a juristic person capable of suing through Maulana Mohammad Ahmad as next friend.

2. A suit for a declaration does lie ; but

3. The suit is barred : (a) by decision of the Sikh Gurdwaras Tribunal, dated 20th January 1930 ; (b) by the provisions of the Gurdwaras Act, though not by (c) the decisions between 1850 to 1883.

4. The notification under the Gurdwaras Act was not secured by fraud and deceit.

5. The subject-matter of the suit was in its origin waqf, that is, a mosque originally dedicated for prayers in 1722 ; but

6. It has not been used as a Muslim place of worship, since possession and control passed to the Sikhs, about 1762.

7. The plaintiff's suit is not within limitation.

8. The defendants have acquired from the mahants in possession from about 1762 to 1934 a title by adverse possession.

9. The plaintiffs are not entitled to the reliefs claimed.

From the above decision the present appeal has been preferred. The defendants had disputed in the Court below that the demolished building was ever used as a mosque (vide Issue 5), but their learned counsel did not challenge before us the findings of the learned District Judge on the point, viz that the building was constructed by one Qarban Ali and was dedicated as a mosque in 1722 A. D. and that one Sheikh Din Mohammad was appointed as its first custodian or mutwalli, as shown by the deed of dedication Ex. P-14/1. The learned counsel for the defendants also did not dispute the finding on Issue 1 that plaintiff 1—the mosque—could sue as a

'juristic person'. The plaintiffs had attempted to prove in the Court below that in spite of the long possession of the Sikhs, Mahomedans had occasionally exercised their right to pray in the mosque (vide Issue 6) but the evidence on the point was meagre and wholly unconvincing and the point was not pressed by their learned counsel before us. The decision of the appeal must therefore proceed upon these findings viz. that the building in question was originally constructed and dedicated for being used as a mosque about the year 1722 A. D., that the Sikhs had been in possession of it for over 150 years and that the Mahomedans had not exercised their right of saying prayers in the mosque during this long period.

On the above findings, the first and foremost difficulty in the way of the appellants is that of limitation, and consequently, the main arguments addressed to us centred round Issues 7 and 8 which relate to this question. The position taken up by the learned counsel for the appellants at the outset was that according to Mahomedan law, property dedicated as waqf vests in the Almighty, is 'extra commercium' and retains its character as 'waqf' for all time. It was contended that in view of these characteristics, 'waqf' property is not subject to the law of limitation. On behalf of the defendants, the fact that according to Mahomedan law, pure and simple, 'waqf' property has the above characteristics was not disputed; but it was contended that the law governing the decision of the point is not pure Mahomedan law but that law as modified by statute and that suits relating to waqf property are subject to the operation of the law of limitation like any other suit.

An examination of the above question raises the following points for consideration: (1) To what extent is Mahomedan law applicable to the decision of the point? (2) If the law of limitation is applicable, what is the section or article of the Limitation Act which applies to this case? (3) Is the suit within time according to the law applicable?

As regards the first point, the law is to be found in S. 5, Punjab Laws Act, which lays down that in questions regarding succession and certain matters including any religious usage or institution, the rule of decision shall be any custom applicable to the parties, if one is proved, and otherwise the Mahomedan law in cases where the parties are Mahomedans, and the Hindu law in cases where the parties are Hindus, except in so far as such law has been altered or abolished by legislative enactment or is opposed to the provisions of the Act or has been modified by any custom. It will thus appear that even when both the parties to the suit are Mahomedans (in the present case the defendants are not governed by Mahomedan law), the Mahomedan law applies only in so far as it has not been altered or abolished by legislative enactment. Now the Mahomedan law does not admittedly place any time limit on the enforcement of claims. But the Limitation Act applies to all suits without any reservation in favour of claims based on Mahomedan law. In fact the Limitation Act specifically provides for limitation in respect of certain claims which are purely governed by Mahomedan law (see e. g. Arts. 103, 104, 125 etc., of Sch. 2, Lim. Act). There are also special provisions which prescribe periods of limitation in connexion with Mahomedan religious endowments along with Hindu and Buddhistic endowments (see Art. 134-A, 134-B of Sch. 2, Lim. Act). It cannot therefore be disputed that the Mahomedan law has been altered by the law of limitation and even waqf property is not outside its scope. The Limitation Act is a comprehensive enactment laying down specific periods of limitation for different kinds of suits and when no specific section or article is applicable, the residuary Art. 120 will ordinarily apply. S. 10, Lim. Act lays down that limitation shall not apply in the case of certain suits against trustees etc. relating to religious endowments; but it is not disputed that the present suit does not fall within the scope of that section. In support of the contention that the present case should be decided according to the principles of Mahomedan law, pure and simple, reliance was placed on behalf of the appellants on 20 Cal 116²⁰ at p. 137. That was a case decided by a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court in 1892 and all that was laid down therein was that questions relating to the validity of dispositions made by Mahomedans should be determined according to the Mahomedan law and that this had been the uniform practice of that Court from the year 1798 onwards. No question of limitation was involved and that ruling is certainly no authority for the proposition that suits relating to waqf property are not subject to the law of limitation. Besides in the Punjab we have a positive enactment of the Legislature laying down the extent to which the Hindu or Mahomedan law is applicable in this province and S. 5 of that Act lays down, as stated above, that even when the parties are Mahomedans, that law will apply only so far as it is not altered by statute. S. 3, Limitation Act, lays down that :

Subject to the provisions contained in Ss. 4 to 25 (inclusive) every suit instituted, appeal preferred and application made after the period of limitation prescribed therefor by Sch. 1 shall be dismissed, although limitation has not been set up as a defence.

There being no provision in the Limitation Act, exempting suits relating to 'wakf' properties from its operation, the present suit must be held to be subject to the rules of limitation prescribed in the Limitation Act. The learned counsel for the appellants admitted his inability to cite any direct authority laying down that a suit of the present description relating to what was once 'wakf' property is not governed by the Limitation Act. He referred to a number of authorities in support of his contention that, according to Mahomedan law 'wakf' property is 'extra commercium' and retains its character as such permanently : viz. 38 P L R 182,⁴ 27 P R 1913,²¹ 2 M I A 390,²² 1906 A W N 159,²³ 26 Bom 198,²⁴ A I R 1930 Oudh 245,²⁵ 35 Mad 681³ and 100 I C 241.²⁶ But none of these rulings really appears to have any bearing on the question of limitation before us. In 38 P L R 182,⁴ a decision by their Lordships of the Privy Council on which great reliance was placed, a piece of land, which was a portion of a grave-yard was sold by one Mt. Musahib Khanam to the defendant Ballabhadass, professing to have derived her title to it from her grandfather Kale Khan. The Mahomedans of Lucknow sued to establish that the land was a part of a grave-yard and as such inalienable. The main point for decision in the case was whether the land in dispute was a portion of a grave-yard or the private property of Kale Khan and the chief evidence on the point was that of the Khasra or the 'revenue record' of 1868. In this Khasra the land was described as a 'grave-yard' (qabarastan) and this entry raised a presumption in favour of the plaintiffs. Kale Khan was shown in the Khasra as the owner of the land, but he had been also described as a 'Sunni Faqir' and his occupation given as 'service,' and their Lordships, after taking into consideration all the entries in the Khasra and the other relevant facts, came to the conclusion that Kale Khan was merely a manager or custodian and not the real owner. On the basis of this finding it was held that the land was inalienable and the plaintiff's suit was decreed. The land had been sold only in 1928, shortly before the suit and no question of title by adverse possession of the alienee arose in the case. Kale Khan, having been found to be only a manager, could not, of course, claim any adverse possession.

It will thus appear that the decision of their Lordships in the above case lends no support whatever to the view that 'wakf' property being 'extra commercium' could not be adversely possessed. When it is said that 'wakf property' is 'extra commercium' according to Mahomedan law all that is meant is that, such property cannot be dealt with or alienated like ordinary property according to that law—the reason apparently being that according to that law human ownership in such property ceases and it vests in the Almighty. This feature of 'wakf' or dedicated property is not peculiar to Mahomedan law and the position as regards dedicated property is practically the same under Hindu law, as will be shown hereafter. But this does not mean that no one can acquire a valid title to dedicated property by adverse possession over twelve years. The title of a person claiming such adverse possession over dedicated property rests not on Mahomedan or Hindu law but on the law of limitation and prescription as it prevails in British India and if personal law has been modified by the statute of limitation (as shown above), the Courts in British India have no option but to give effect to that statute. The other rulings cited on behalf of the appellants on this question are also of no assistance to the appellants but may be noticed briefly.

27 P R 1913²¹ was a Privy Council ruling similar in some respects to 38 P L R 182.⁴ In that case also the entry in the revenue records to the effect that the land in suit was a 'qabarastan' (grave-yard) was held to be sufficient to show that it was so and one Makhdum Husain Shah whose name was entered in the column of 'owners' was found to be a mere trustee or a custodian. No question of adverse possession was raised, but it is significant that the portions of the 'qabarastan' which had been already sold or encroached upon were excluded from the scope of the suit. 2 M I A 390²² was an old case decided by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 1840. In that case the wakf property was held to be exempt from the law of limitation, but this decision was based on a special regulation (viz. Regn. 2 of 1805) which was then in force. In 1906 A W N 159,²³ on which some stress was laid by the learned counsel, the property in dispute which had been confiscated by Government was found to be a grave-yard and it was therefore held that the Government could acquire no better rights than those of the original owners. For, Government could only confiscate such rights as the original owners had, and nothing more. In 26 Bom 198,²⁴ the land in dispute was found to be a grave-yard, which though disused for some years, retained its character as such and the Mahomedans had been in the habit of performing religious services at the tombs thereon. It was remarked:

The ownership of the soil may be vested in others; but the permission to bury in the land, granted as it must be subject to the custom of the community, carries with it the right to perform all customary rites.

It will thus appear that the decision was based on the permission for burials granted by the owners and local custom. In A I R 1930 Oudh 245,²⁵ a Single Bench ruling of the Oudh Chief Court, the question of adverse possession was raised, but no such possession was apparently proved and the point was not discussed. In 35 Mad 681,³ it was said that all proprietary rights of men are annihilated when property is dedicated and vests in God and the same was also held in 100 I C 241,²⁶ but in neither of these rulings was any question of adverse possession by a third party involved.

It will thus appear that there is no warrant either in the Limitation Act or the rulings cited for the proposition of law contended for by the learned counsel for the appellants, viz. that 'wakf' property is not subject to the law of limitation. On behalf of the respondents, on the other hand, A I R 1935 Oudh 425⁵ and A I R 1936 Oudh 207⁶ were cited. The former was a suit for possession of a portion of a wakf property (a grave-yard) governed by Mahomedan law, but it was held to be barred under Art. 142, Limitation Act. In the latter case, which was of a similar type, it was remarked that the plaintiff could recover only such portions of the grave-yard over which defendants' title had not been perfected by adverse possession. Both these suits were apparently between Mahomedans and related to wakf property and yet they were held to be governed by the ordinary law of limitation. In 50 Cal 329,²⁷ a mutwalli had mortgaged a portion of a wakf property for a purpose unconnected with the wakf and in 1906 a final decree for foreclosure and possession had been obtained. In 1913, the successor of the mutwalli brought a suit to recover the property. Their Lordships of the Privy Council held that the suit was governed by Art. 142 or 144, Limitation Act, but was within time, as the late mutwalli had been in possession within 12 years. 56 All 111²⁸ is another ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council in which wakf property was held to be governed by the law of limitation.

I have confined myself above to cases relating to wakf property under the Mahomedan law, because it was argued that the inalienability and permanent character of wakf property were peculiar features of Mahomedan law and could not be affected by the law of limitation. As a matter of fact these features are not really so peculiar to Mahomedan law. It was pointed out in 27 Mad 435²⁹ (at p. 450) that the "inalienable character of land consecrated to religious purposes has been generally recognized under the Roman, Christian and Mahomedan systems as well as under Hindu law". In 12 Bom 247³⁰ (at p. 264) it was said that property dedicated to a pious purpose is by Hindu law as well as by Roman law placed 'extra commercium': In 6 Bom 546³¹ (at p. 552) it was remarked that grants made to a Hindu temple are permanent, irresumable and substantially inalienable. It will thus appear that there is no material difference in this respect in the character of property dedicated for religious purposes whether under Mahomedan law or other laws. There are many reported cases including several decisions of their Lordships of the Privy Council, wherein properties dedicated to Hindu temples or idols have been held to be subject to the law of limitation and prescription: see e. g. 23 Madras 271,¹⁹ 32 Cal 129,³² 37 Cal 885,¹⁷ 44 Mad 831,³³ 57 All 159,³⁴ A I R 1936 P C 183³⁵ etc. It is thus perfectly clear that the law of limitation applies to property whether sacred or secular.

The learned counsel for the appellants next contended that a mosque, being a place of worship had a peculiar sanctity attached to it and such property could not lose its character by any human act such as adverse possession by a stranger. No authority was cited in support of this contention and the only argument advanced was that the cases cited for the respondents were distinguishable as they did not relate to "mosque". But the Mahomedan law itself does not appear to make any distinction so far as the incidents of "wakf" property are concerned as between a "mosque" and other wakf properties. Any property which is "wakf"—whether it is a mosque or something else—is according to that law "extra commercium" and its ownership vests in God. There is therefore no reason why a "mosque" should not be subject to limitation and prescription when other "wakf" properties have been held to be so as shown above. The Limitation Act certainly does not exempt wakf properties from its operation. Not only this, but as pointed out already, there are distinct provisions in it relating to "Muhammadan religious endowments"—which expression presumably includes "mosques" (vide Arts. 134-A and 134-B of Sch. 2 and S. 10 of the Act). In support of the contention that a "mosque" retains its character for all time, reliance was next placed on certain rulings relating to "grave-yards" wherein accused persons were convicted under S. 297, Penal Code, although the graves were on properties owned by the accused persons or where the accused persons had committed alleged criminal acts with the permission of the owners e. g. 18 All 395,³⁶ 40 Cal 548³⁷ and A I R 1932 Cal 459.³⁸ These rulings are based upon the language of S. 297, Penal Code, and appear to have really no bearing on the question of limitation before us. The mere fact that a person may be guilty of committing an offence under S. 297, Penal Code with respect to graves on land owned by himself, cannot show that adverse possession can never be obtained over land covered by graves and that a "grave-yard" must retain its character as such for all time. So long as the graves stand, even the owner of the land underneath will be guilty, under S. 297, Penal Code, if he commits any act falling within the purview of that section with the requisite knowledge or intention. For the purposes of the criminal offence under S. 297, Penal Code, the question of ownership may not be material but these rulings cannot support the proposition that a "grave-yard" must remain a grave-yard for all time and that private ownership over it cannot be acquired by adverse possession. For example, if a person builds on land covered by graves, and no action is taken for over 12 years, there seems to be no reason why that land should not become his private property. This was, in fact, the view taken in A I R 1935 Oudh 425⁵ and A I R 1936 Oudh 207⁶ already referred to.

The learned counsel for the appellants tried next to find some support for his argument from the analogy of English law and drew our attention to the law relating to consecrated property as summarized in Vol. 11 of Halsbury's Laws of England, pp. 860-864. It was urged that when a church is consecrated it retains its character "whoever may be the actual owner and whatever may be the nature of his tenure". Attention was also drawn to (1869) 4 Q B 407⁸ in which Lord Cockburn remarked :

.... Where ground is once consecrated and dedicated to sacred purposes, no Judge has power to grant a faculty to sanction the use of it for secular purposes and nothing short of an act of Parliament can divest consecrated ground of its sacred character.

But neither in the summary of English law as given in the paragraph in Halsbury's Laws of England referred to above nor in (1869) 4 Q B 407⁸ was there any reference to the question of adverse possession of third parties or limitation, and consequently the above remarks which are of a general character and based on English Ecclesiastical law can be of no more assistance to the appellants on the question of limitation than the general character and incidents of wakf property as laid down in Mahomedan law. Lastly, it was contended that as the 'mosque' was suing as a 'juristic' person and as the building of the mosque is the corpus of such a juristic person, it must be looked upon as incorporeal and eternal and not as ordinary 'immovable property,' and that it was, therefore, not subject to the law of limitation and prescription laid down in Art. 144 and S. 28, Limitation Act. This argument again was not supported by any authority and is difficult to follow. So far as I can see, it appears to be founded on some confusion of ideas. It is difficult to see why the building of a mosque or its site cannot be looked upon as 'property' merely because the 'mosque' has been held to be capable of suing or being sued as a 'juristic' person. The expression 'juristic' person (or its equivalent 'legal person') simply means any subject-matter to which the law attributes a legal or fictitious personality (cf. Salmond's Jurisprudence, 9th Edn. p. 425). The necessity for the attribution of such a personality in the case of a mosque arises from the fact that Mahomedan law recognizes the validity of gifts of property in favour of mosques and consequently a mosque can become a holder of property (cf. Tyabaji's Mahomedan Law, Edn. 2 Para. 363; Ameer Ali's Mahomedan Law, Edn. 4 Vol. 1 p. 397 and Abdul Rahim's Mahomedan Jurisprudence p. 218). Hindu religious institutions have also been held to be 'juristic persons' in similar circumstances and for similar reasons: see 44 Mad 831³³ at p. 839, a decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council. As a holder of property, a mosque must have a status to take legal action to protect such property and consequently it is found convenient for the purposes of law to look upon a mosque as a 'juristic' or 'legal' person capable of suing and being sued. But when the law attributes such a personality to a mosque, it attributes it not to the building of the mosque, but to the mosque as an institution i. e. as a religious foundation. For, the building used as a mosque at a particular time may fall down and may be replaced by a new one; but the properties gifted in favour of the mosque will continue to be attached to the mosque as an institution. The learned counsel for the appellants were not able to cite a single authority in support of their contention that the mosque, as a 'juristic person' is identical with the building of the mosque. On the other hand, 59 P R 1914¹¹ and 153 P R 1884,¹² which were cited on behalf of the appellants go to show that the mosque conceived as a 'juristic' person is the religious foundation or the institution and not the building or the 'brick and mortar' of which it consists.

As to the second point, we are of opinion that though theoretically 'wakf' property belongs to no human owner, nevertheless a mosque—as a concrete example of 'wakf'—is an institution, and its possession is legally maintained by its lawful guardian for the time being; in virtue of his position, the guardian can resist trespass, recover debts, make purchases and mortgages all in virtue of the right which resides in the institution. In the same way we think the mosque, as an institution, might acquire an easement by prescription; and that being so, we cannot think of any rule or principle by which we could deny to the mosque (as an institution) the same right of preventing strangers approaching its walls by the exercise of a right of pre-emption, as other house-holders have. The object of the right of pre-emption is to secure the cohesion of families, and obviate the inconvenience of a mixed or alien neighbourhood among private house-holders. Now it can hardly be denied that exactly the same convenience which results to a private house from the exercise of the right, may result also to a mosque.

We have no hesitation in deciding, on this principle, that the mosque as an institution has practically proprietary rights exercised through the guardian, and that one of the rights is to claim, on the ground of vicinage, a right of pre-emption in the case of sales of adjoining properties. In the present case, the mosque adjoins the house sold, as much and, indeed, more than the plaintiff's house does, therefore the plaintiff has no preferential claim.

The above remarks were approved in the later ruling (59 P R 1914,¹¹ to which Shah Din J., an eminent Mahomedan jurist of this Province, was a party) and it was held that while the 'mosque' was a 'juristic' person, the building of a mosque was 'immovable property' for the purposes of giving a right of pre-emption under S. 13.1(7), Punjab Pre-emption Act 1905. It was urged, that in the case of a Hindu idol (which is also looked upon as a juristic person, in so far as it can be a holder of properties), it has been held that the idol cannot be looked upon as mere moveable chattel or property. Reference was made in this connexion to 38 Cal 284³⁹ and to 52 Cal 809.⁴⁰ In the former case, a suit was instituted, on behalf of the Thakurs (i.e. the idols) suing in their juristic capacity for removing themselves from the custody of the plaintiffs and the question was raised whether the suit was for recovery of 'moveable property' within the meaning of Art 49, Lim. Act. It was held that the suit by the Thakurs for removing themselves from the custody of the defendants to the custody of the plaintiffs 3 to 6 and being placed in their new habitation was not a suit for 'moveable' property within Art. 49 and that Art. 120 was appropriate. The facts of that case and the form of the suit were peculiar. The suit was by the idols themselves and the relief was not for the recovery of the 'idols,' but for the idols being located in a certain place. In this aspect of the question Art. 120 appears to have been held to be appropriate. For, after holding that Art. 120 applied, the learned Judges went on to remark :

In this view of the case, it is not necessary to consider whether the Thakur is to be considered a 'moveable property'.

The remarks on the latter point must therefore be treated as 'obiter'. In 52 Cal 809⁴⁰ their Lordships of the Privy Council remarked that idols cannot be regarded as mere chattel; but this remark was made with reference to the alleged right of a shebait to locate them anywhere or deal with them in any way he liked and not with reference to the general question whether they can be treated as property for any purpose. The dispute in that case was between rival custodians and there was no question of adverse possession by a third party or of limitation involved. As pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 2 I A 145⁴¹ at p. 152 it is only in an ideal sense that a Hindu idol is looked upon as a "juristic" person. That idea must be therefore kept distinct from the idea of an idol, as a physical object. In Gour's Hindu Code, in his commentary on S. 199, the learned author remarks (vide Para. 2072): "An idol is treated by Hindu law, both as a juridical person and as property". In 4 Mad 315,⁹ it was held that idols were "property" in the eye of law. In 51 All 621¹⁰ at p. 628, it was remarked that adverse possession can be obtained not only against idols, but over the idols themselves.

The contention of the learned counsel for the appellants that a mosque as a juristic person cannot be looked upon as "immovable" property in law would seem to lead to the absurd result that no protection could be claimed for the mosque against torts or crimes relating to property. As stated already, the contention of the learned counsel on this point is not supported by any authority whatever and is opposed to the view taken in 153 P R 1884¹² and 59 P R 1914.¹¹ If we keep clear in our minds the two distinct notions, viz. the mosque as an institution and the mosque as a building (which is only intended to serve to carry out the purpose of the institution), there is no difficulty in seeing the fallacy underlying the argument that the mosque being a juristic person is not "immovable property". The mosque as a "juristic" person is, of course, a "person" (though a fictitious one) and not "property" at all. The "juristic person" is the institution and it is the institution which is the holder of properties attached to it—including the building of the mosque itself. In 41 Cal 57,⁴² it was held that where a temple had been washed away by the river and a new one had been erected elsewhere, the religious foundation continued and the endowed properties became automatically attached to the new temple.

In the present instance also although the building of the "Masjid Shahid Ganj" has been demolished, legally it is possible to conceive of the mosque as an institution to be subsisting but this is only in an ideal sense. It is only in this ideal aspect, that the present suit, which has been lodged on behalf of the mosque as a "juristic" person may be held to be maintainable. But this conception can be of no practical importance when the mosque does not possess or cannot legally claim any property as shown below.

The question whether the "juristic" person suing in this case can get the reliefs claimed, must depend in the first place on the question whether the suit is within time. For, "juristic" persons like other plaintiffs are subject to the law of limitation and enjoy no special privilege in this respect. There are several decisions of their Lordships of the Privy Council in which properties owned by Hindu idols as "juristic" persons were held to be subject to the law of limitation and adverse possession: see e.g. 32 Cal 129³² and 37 Cal 885.¹⁷ I am therefore unable to see force in any of the grounds on which it is claimed that the present suit is not governed by the law of limitation and hold that the contention must be overruled. The next point for consideration is the rule of limitation governing the case. The plaintiffs have sued for a declaration and certain consequential reliefs. The suit being on behalf of the mosque as a "juristic" person (i. e. as a religious institution) and also on behalf of the whole of the Mahomedan community, the plaintiffs ought to have sued for possession as will be shown hereafter. But leaving that point for the moment, the declaratory suit as framed would appear to be governed by Art. 120, Lim. Act, which prescribes a period of six years. The starting point for limitation would prima facie be the time when the Sikhs took possession of the mosque sometime about 1760 A. D., and the rights of the institution as well as of the Mahomedan community were denied.

The appellants however contended that the cause of action accrued to them when the mosque was demolished in July 1935. This contention of the appellants is based on the assumption that the building of the mosque retained its character as a mosque till the date of the demolition. The appellants had alleged that they had exercised their right of saying prayers in the building from time to time till its demolition; but as already stated this allegation was not substantiated. The first question for consideration therefore is whether the mosque retained its character as such, in the hands of the defendants. The defendants contended that the ownership of the building vested in them long ago by "adverse possession" over 12 years since the Sikhs took possession of the building, sometime about the year 1760 A. D. Considering the circumstances under which the property was taken by the Sikhs, there can be no doubt that their possession must have originated either in an act of State or trespass. There is no direct evidence as to how the building was used from 1760 up to 1853, when Nur Ahmad instituted his suit for possession of the mosque. But it is scarcely likely that the Mahomedans would have been allowed to have access to the building for any purpose whatever during this period. There is moreover direct evidence to show that in 1853, it was found that the Sikhs had held adverse possession of the property for over 20 years (vide petition of Nur Ahmad, dated 26th March 1853, marked as Ex. D-35, and judgments in the suits instituted by him marked as Exs. D-40, D-41 and D-42). It may therefore be safely taken that the defendants had been in adverse possession of the mosque for over 12 years before 1853, and consequently by the combined operation of S. 28 and Art. 144, Lim. Act all rights of the persons entitled to possession of the mosque or of any interest therein were extinguished. The juristic person, i. e. the "institution" was certainly entitled to claim possession of the building of the mosque on behalf of all interested in it when the Sikhs took possession of it and by their adverse possession over 12 years the rights of the institution in the building were lost. Further the Sikhs having remained in possession for over 12 years, the ownership of the property vested in them (cf. 3 Cal 224,¹ 3 All 435,² 4 Cal 699,⁴³ etc.). It follows therefore that as the Mahomedans had no rights of any kind left in the building the demolition of the building in July 1935 could give the appellants no cause of action to sue for the reliefs claimed. In this aspect of the question, the defendants' refusal to allow the Mahomedans to pray on the site of the mosque could not constitute a "continuing wrong" within the meaning of S. 23, Lim. Act. For when all rights of Mahomedans in the mosque were extinguished and the Sikhs became the owners of the building, the "right to pray" in the mosque was also extinguished and in refusing that right to the plaintiffs the defendants cannot be held to be guilty of any wrong, much less a "continuing" one. 31 P R 1917⁴⁴ cited on behalf of the appellants is clearly distinguishable, as the mutwalli in that case was in lawful occupation of the hujra and it was only his wrongful user of the place as private residence that was complained of. Consequently, each act of wrongful user was held to give a fresh cause of action in that case.

It is significant that the appellants have chosen to sue only for a declaration of their rights and certain mandatory injunctions. No satisfactory explanation was given as to why the appellants did not sue for possession, if wakf property was immune from the law of limitation as claimed by them. Plaintiff 1 in the case is the mosque suing as a juristic person, while the remaining plaintiffs are suing on behalf of the whole of the Mahomedan community. The position of a juristic person is not that of a minor (see 32 Cal 129³² and A I R 1932 Mad 328⁴⁵ at p. 333) and it is doubtful if the suit was properly instituted through S. Mohammad Ahmad as a "next friend". For, this gentleman is admittedly not a mutwalli and has no particular connexion with the mosque. But even assuming that the suit on behalf of the 'juristic person' was properly instituted through a "next friend", there seems to be no reason whatever why the 'juristic' person should not have sued for possession. The argument that the 'juristic person' being the mosque, could not sue for its own possession is obviously fallacious; for as pointed out before, the 'juristic' person is the religious institution and not the building of the mosque and the institution was therefore clearly entitled to claim possession of the mosque or its site for the benefit of all persons interested in the institution. As regards the other plaintiffs also, although they may not be individually entitled to claim possession, the suit being on behalf of the whole of the Mahomedan community, they could have sued for possession (see 158 I C 916,⁴⁶ 71 I C 463,⁴⁷ and the remarks of their Lordships of the Privy Council as regards the proper relief in A I R 1936 P C 83⁴⁸ at p. 89). The possession of the defendants being unlawful according to the allegations of the plaintiffs, this relief was clearly open to them. In the circumstances, it seems to me that it was not even open to the plaintiffs to sue for a mere declaration and injunction as they did and the suit was liable to be dismissed on this short ground. According to S. 42, Specific Relief Act, it is not permissible to sue for a mere declaration when further relief in the shape of possession is open to a party. Again, according to S. 56, Cl. (1) of the same Act, no relief by way of injunction (which is purely discretionary) can be granted, when an equally efficacious relief could be obtained by other usual modes of proceeding. It is well established that when it is open to a person to sue for possession, he cannot be granted any relief in the shape of a mere injunction (see 24 I C 199⁴⁹ and 33 Mad 542⁵⁰).

The plaintiffs seem to me to have sued for a mere declaration and injunction owing to their consciousness that a suit for possession would be barred by time. But they cannot circumvent the law of limitation, by merely suing for an injunction, when they could have sued for possession (see 13 Mad 445⁵⁰). As already stated, all rights of the plaintiffs were extinguished long ago by the operation of S. 26 and Art. 144, Lim. Act, and the present suit must, therefore, be held to be hopelessly barred. In the end, I may refer to the rather curious argument on behalf of the appellants that the mosque retained its sacred character in the hands of the defendants, although the plaintiffs may not be entitled to recover possession owing to lapse of time. It was contended that a duty was cast on the Sikh defendants, who were in possession, to maintain the building intact owing to its sacred character and, therefore, the demolition of the building in July 1935 by the defendants gave a fresh cause of action to the plaintiffs—or at any rate to plaintiff 1, viz. the mosque, as a 'juristic' person. This argument appears to be based partly on a misconception as regards the true nature of a 'juristic' person and partly on the assumption that the building retained its sacred character even when the rights of Mahomedans in it were lost and title had passed to strangers.

As regards the first point, it has been already pointed out that the 'juristic' person in this case is the institution and not the building of the mosque. The mere fact that the mosque's right to sue as a 'juristic' person was admitted by the defendants does not, therefore, involve any admission that the building of the mosque retained its character as a mosque and was still sacred when it was demolished in 1935. The learned District Judge has, no doubt, found that the building was originally erected as a mosque; but he has also found that the title thereto had passed to the defendants long ago by adverse possession. His finding is therefore of no assistance to the appellants. The essential character of a 'mosque' consists in its being a place of worship for the use of Mahomedans; but the Mahomedans had been denied, and had lost, their right to pray in it long ago. The mere fact that the building was referred to in some comparatively recent documents as a 'mosque' is of no significance whatever, as the description of the building must obviously be attributed to its old associations. There is ample evidence on the record to show that the building had been used by the Sikhs for years for secular purposes.

The contention that the mosque retained its sacred character in spite of its adverse possession by the defendants was not supported by any authority and seems to be devoid of any force. The position taken up by the appellants that waqf property being 'extra commercium' retains its character for all time and is not subject to the law of limitation, has been already shown to be wholly untenable. The cases relating to Mahomedan grave-yards on which again reliance was placed in this respect (viz. 18 All 395,³⁶ 40 Cal 548³⁷ and A I R 1932 Cal 459³⁸) have also been dealt with already. The decision in these cases, as pointed out before, is based on the wording of S. 297, I. P. C. The mere fact that a person may be guilty of committing an offence under S. 297, I. P. C., with respect to a grave on his own land, cannot show that the land underneath the grave will always remain sacred. In the case of a grave it is the presence of the remains of the dead body that makes the grave sacred. Consequently the grave will be considered to be sacred so long as the remains of the dead body are enshrined in it. But if the grave is dug up and the land is built upon, it cannot be said that the land will still remain sacred for ever. Similarly the building of a mosque cannot be considered to be sacred, unless it retains its essential characteristics as a mosque, i. e. unless the Mahomedans have a right to say their prayers therein. So long as the Mahomedans have such a right, even a non-muslim in possession of it, may be bound to respect it and may be found guilty if he commits any act falling within the purview of S. 297, I. P. C. But once this right is lost and the title passes to a stranger as in this case, it is difficult to see on what possible grounds the building of the mosque could be considered to be sacred.

In the present instance I do not see how the defendants could be considered to have had when they demolished the mosque in 1935 the requisite knowledge or intention even for the purpose of an offence under S. 297, I. P. C., as they had been in possession over 150 years, had peaceably used the building for secular purposes, and their title also had been upheld by Courts ever since 1853. It is however unnecessary to go into that question for the purposes of this appeal. All that need be considered for the purpose of the argument under discussion is whether the demolition of the building of the mosque in July 1935 could constitute a "tort" and give any cause of action to the plaintiffs. It seems to my mind, perfectly clear that when the Mahomedans had lost all rights in the building by adverse possession long ago and title had passed to the Sikhs, the building could no longer be held to be a 'mosque' in the true sense of the term and was therefore not sacred. As the plaintiffs had lost all their rights, and ownership had vested in the defendants there could not be any obligation on the defendants to keep the building intact. For, there could be no such obligation in law unless there was a corresponding right in the plaintiffs. I have therefore no hesitation in holding that the demolition of the mosque in July 1935,

On the above findings the appeal must fail on the question of limitation but as the question of res judicata was also argued at length, I shall deal with that point briefly. The defendants' plea of res judicata was based (1) firstly, on the decisions on the petitions filed by Nur Ahmed in the years 1853-55 to recover possession of the mosque and (2) secondly on the decision of the Sikh Gurdwaras Tribunal dated 20th January 1930 on the petition filed by the Anjuman-i-Islamia, Punjab, on behalf of the Mahomedans under S. 5, Punjab Sikh Gurdwaras Act.

As regards No. (1), it appears that Nur Ahmed filed several petitions but it is sufficient to refer to one of them, viz. the one dated 23rd June 1855, which was apparently filed as a regular suit in forma pauperis and was dismissed by the Deputy Commissioner of Lahore on 14th November 1855 (see Ex. D-40). The decision of the Deputy Commissioner was confirmed by the Commissioner on appeal on 9th April 1856 and by the Judicial Commissioner on 14th June 1856 (see Ex. D-41 and D-42). It will appear from Ex. D-40, that Nur Ahmed sued for possession of the mosque with seven shops and a 'hamam' and 'khanqah,' valuing the claim at Rs. 17,000. He based his claim on the deed of dedication in favour of his grand-father by Qurban Ali. The Deputy Commissioner after considering the evidence produced and the decision in some previous cases with respect to the same property, dismissed the suit. As regards this decision, it was contended on behalf of the appellants that it cannot operate as res judicata, as it does not fall within the ambit of S. 11, Civil P. C. It was urged that the procedure followed in the suit, was not regular, e. g. no issues were framed and evidence was not recorded on oath and so forth. It was also suggested that the 'Punjab Civil Code' which was then followed, had not been duly sanctioned by the Government of India. Lastly it was contended that Nur Ahmed was suing in a private capacity on the basis of a gift by Qurban Ali and not as a mutwalli.

None of these contentions appears to have any force. The suit was apparently tried according to the procedure then in force and was taken up to the highest Court of Appeal. The mere fact that the procedure then in force was of a summary character seems to be immaterial for the purposes of

S. 11, Civil P. C. The contention that the Punjab Civil Code, which was then followed by the Courts, had not received the sanction of Government was sought to be supported by a decision reported in 64 P R 1867.⁵¹ But that ruling itself shows that the Government of India had subsequently approved of it. The fact remains that the decision of the Deputy Commissioner was upheld by the highest Court of Appeal and this raises a presumption that the suit was properly tried according to the law and procedure then in force. It is clear from the Deputy Commissioner's judgment that Nur Ahmed was suing for possession of the very mosque now in dispute. Nur Ahmed stated that the property was gifted by Qurban Ali, and the deed of dedication produced by him, which is relied on by the appellants, shows clearly that he claimed to be a descendant of the first mutwalli, Din Mohammad, and as such entitled to possession of the mosque. There can be no doubt therefore that he was not claiming the mosque as private property. As a mutwalli, Nur Ahmed was entitled to recover possession of the mosque, for the use of the Mahomedans. His suit was thus of a representative character and the decision therein must be held to be binding on all Mahomedans by virtue of Expln. VI to S. 11, Civil P. C. (cf. 46 All 651⁵²).

The learned District Judge has held that the decisions on the petitions and the suit of Nur Ahmed do not operate as res judicata because the claim in the present suit is not one for possession by ejectment as it was in Nur Ahmed's case, but only for a declaration that the Mahomedan community has a right of access to the mosque for purposes of prayer. But this fact alone does not appear to me to be sufficient to take the case out of the operation of S. 11, Civil P. C. S. 11 applies not only to the final decision but also to issues. The real issue in the present case was whether the mosque in question retained its character as a mosque till July 1935, when it was demolished. The decision of this issue depended upon the question whether the defendants had perfected their title by adverse possession and as a consequence the rights of all Mahomedans in the mosque had been lost. This question was also in issue in Nur Ahmed's case in 1855, and it was then found that Nur Ahmed, although he claimed to be a descendant of the original mutwalli (Sheikh Din Mohammad), was not entitled to recover possession as the Sikh defendants had been in adverse possession for over 20 years. The finding in Nur Ahmed's case that the defendants Sikhs were in adverse possession over 20 years before 1855 operates as res judicata and bars the agitation of the same issue in the present case. If that finding stands, it follows that the rights of the Mahomedans in the mosque in question were lost even before 1855, and the present suit must fail on that ground.

52. Thakur Sri Gat Ashram Narainji v. Jaisbth Madho Acharia, (1924) 11 A I R All 504=80 I C 406=46 All 651=22 A L J 641.

Coming to the decision of the Sikh Gurdwaras Tribunal, it seems to me that the present suit would also be barred by the provisions of S. 37, Punjab Sikh Gurdwaras Act. According to the provisions of that Act, when the mosque in question was claimed to be the property of the 'Gurdwara Shahid Gunj Bhai Taru Singh' and a notification issued with respect to the claim under S. 3 of the Act, it was incumbent on any person who claimed any right, title or interest in the property to file a petition under S. 5 of the Act to establish his claim. The present plaintiffs did not do so, but the Anjuman-i-Islamia, a well-known representative Mahomedan association of Lahore, did claim the mosque on behalf of all the Mahomedans. The claim was dismissed and the learned District Judge has held the decision to be binding on all Mahomedans. On behalf of the appellants it was however argued that (1) the Anjuman-i-Islamia was not a truly representative association (2), that the procedure laid down in O. 1, R. 8, Civil P. C., was not followed and therefore the decision of the Tribunal can bind none except the members of the Anjuman-i-Islamia.

As regards the first point, the learned District Judge has pointed out that the Anjuman-i-Islamia is an old Mahomedan association of Lahore, duly registered under the law, and one of its avowed objects is the protection of waqf properties. The association is admittedly in charge of the management of some six mosques in Lahore including the Badshahi Mosque. There is in fact no evidence worth the name on the record to show that the Anjuman-i-Islamia cannot properly be considered to be a representative Mahomedan association for the purposes of the question now under consideration. In the course of the arguments, it was admitted before us that when a question arose recently about the restoration of an ancient mosque, which was in the possession of Government, to the Mahomedan community, the Government made over the mosque to this very Anjuman. It is therefore clear that the Anjuman is looked upon as a truly representative Mahomedan association to this day. I have therefore no hesitation in repelling the appellants' contention on this point. It was in the fitness of things that this Anjuman, which takes special interest in the protection of waqf properties, filed a petition under S. 5 on behalf of all the Mahomedans to recover the Masjid Shahid Gunj and it was probably because the Mahomedans in general had full confidence in this Anjuman that no other Mahomedan thought it necessary to file any other petition with reference to the said mosque.

The next point for consideration is the effect of the omission to follow the procedure laid down in O. 1, R. 8, Civil P. C. in connexion with the petition of the Anjuman under S. 5, Sikh Gurdwaras Act. It was argued on behalf of the appellants that in consequence of the omission to follow that procedure, the decision of the Tribunal is not binding on them. In support of this contention, reliance was placed chiefly on a decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in 56 Mad 657,⁵³ in which it was held that in a representative suit to which O. 1, R. 8, Civil P. C. is applicable, the decision will not bind persons who are not parties to the suit unless the procedure laid down in O. 1, R. 8, Civil P. C. is strictly followed. On behalf of the respondents, on the other hand, it was contended that O. 1, R. 8, Civil P. C. was not applicable to the petition and even if it were, the Anjuman was a truly representative body and its petition having been fought out bona fide on behalf of all the Mahomedans, the decision of the Tribunal was binding on all of them. In my opinion the contention of the learned counsel for respondents is correct. The Sikh Gurdwaras Act is an enactment of a special nature and is governed by its own procedure. Sub-s. 11 of S. 12 of the Act prescribes that the proceedings of the Tribunal shall be conducted according to the Civil Procedure Code, but only 'so far as may be' and 'subject to the provisions of the Act'.

53. Kumaravelu Chettiar v. Ramaswami Ayyar, (1933) 20 A I R P C 183=143 I C 665=60 I A 278=56 Mad 657 (P C).

In the present instance the petition under S. 5 was not really in the nature of an independent suit but was a reply to the claim put forward on behalf of the 'Gurdwara Shahid Gunj Bhai Taru Singh' to certain properties. This claim was notified as required by S. 3 in the Gazette and also published at the head-quarters of the district, the tahsil and the revenue estate etc. as required by rules. The publication of the claim with respect to the "mosque" in the above manner was a general notice to the public and it was an invitation to everybody who claimed to have any right, title or interest in the property to establish his claim in the manner prescribed by the Act. The purpose of the notice issued in a suit under O. 1, Rule 8, Civil P. C. has thus been already served. Only the Anjuman-i-Islamia came forward to claim the Masjid. The presumption is that others did not feel interested or were content to leave the matter in the hands of the Anjuman. The Anjuman claimed the Masjid on behalf of all the Mahomedans and the Tribunal treated their claim as a representative one. There is no suggestion that there was any collusion between the Anjuman and the defendants. The claim appears to have been fought out bona fide and there is no good reason whatever why the decision of the Tribunal should not be held to be binding on all Mahomedans.

It was urged that the notification was not proper notice to the Mahomedan public as the Masjid was described as 'Gurdwara Singhian.' But as the learned District Judge has pointed out, the defendants cannot be considered to be guilty of any fraud or deception in this respect as they did not treat the building in dispute as a mosque and could not be expected to describe it as such. The mere fact that in some rent-deeds executed in favour of the mahants of the Gurdwara, the property was referred to as 'Masjid' was obviously due to its old association and not because the Sikhs still looked upon the building as a Mahomedan place of worship or treated it as such. But, when the property had to be described for the purposes of the claim under S. 3, the defendants naturally described it in the true character in which they held it. The boundaries of the property were given and its location shown in a plan. There was therefore no deception in the matter and the notification and the publication of the claim were enough to give reasonable notice of the claim of the Gurdwara to all concerned. The very fact that the Anjuman-i-Islamia did get such notice and put forward its claim is significant in this connexion and it appears that certain other Mahomedans also claimed adjacent properties. I have therefore no hesitation in rejecting the argument that the decision of the Sikh Gurdwaras Tribunal was not binding owing to fraud in the publication of the notification under S. 3. Even in 56 Mad 657,⁵³ their Lordships of the Privy Council recognized that there may be exceptional cases where it could be shown that the omission to follow the procedure in O. 1, R. 8, Civil P. C. was a technical irregularity which caused no prejudice and the litigation having been bona fide, the previous decision would be binding. In the present instance, it seems to me in the first place that O. 1, R. 8, Civil P. C. was not strictly applicable and secondly that even if it were applicable, the case would fall in the category of the exceptional cases referred to by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 56 Mad 657.⁵³

As the claim of the Anjuman was a representative one and it was decided that the Mahomedans were no longer entitled to recover possession, the decision must be held to be binding on the present plaintiffs. It was urged that every Mahomedan has an individual right to pray in a mosque (see 7 All 178⁵⁴) but when the Tribunal held that the Mahomedans in general had no rights left in the mosque that finding must be held to be binding on all. In this aspect of the case, no question of assertion of a claim on behalf of any individual on the ground of want of knowledge etc. within the purview of S. 30 (ii), Sikh Gurdwaras Act, arises. According to S. 37 of that Act, no Court can now pass any decree or order which would be in conflict with the decision of the Tribunal on the petition of the Anjuman-i-Islamia under S. 5 of the Act. Consequently that decision bars the granting of the reliefs claimed in the present suit. In my judgment the appeal fails on all the grounds urged before us and must therefore be dismissed with costs.

Din Mohammad J.—(After setting out the facts of the case, the issues framed, the findings thereon and the decision of the lower Court, his Lordship proceeded.) Dissatisfied with this decision, the plaintiffs have appealed and, in view of the importance of the case and the complicated nature of the issues involved therein, the appeal has been placed before a Full Bench for decision. I may say at once that sitting as a Court of law we are neither concerned with the events which led up to the institution of this suit, nor with the agitation carried on by one community or the other in relation to the subject-matter of the suit. We have merely to determine whether the decision of the District Judge is in accordance with the law as is administered in the British Indian Courts.

It is strenuously contended by counsel for the appellants that inasmuch as the subject-matter of the suit has been found by the District Judge to be a mosque and as it is a well-recognized principle of the Islamic law that all proprietary rights of men are extinguished as soon as a building is constructed and consecrated as a mosque, it could not be possessed and owned by the defendants or their predecessors-in-interest in the sense in which mundane belongings are possessed and owned by human beings and that consequently it did not cease to be a mosque irrespective of the fact that it remained in the possession of the defendants for more than the prescribed period of limitation and had all along been put to profane use. It is further added that the use of the building by the defendants in a manner inconsistent with its original object was a continuous wrong and that the worshippers who are now represented by plaintiffs 2 to 18 were entitled to seek the reliefs they have claimed in spite of the lapse of time. It is next urged that, in any circumstances, a fresh cause of action accrued both to plaintiff 1 and the other plaintiffs on the day when the building of the mosque was demolished and that as that event happened on the night between 7th and 8th July 1935, the present suit was well within time.

Counsel for the respondents concedes that the building in suit was originally built and used as a mosque and does not challenge the finding of the District Judge that the plaintiff 1 as juristic person is competent to sue in its own right. He, however, lays stress on the fact that the defendants' predecessors-in-title came into possession of the building as long ago as 1762, that the object of the Sikhs from the very beginning was to rob the building of its sanctity, that since then the Muslims have never been allowed to offer their prayers in it and that, on the other hand, it has mainly been used as residential quarters and in one of its rooms Granth Sahib was read for some time and in another room fodder had been stacked. He further contends that the building in suit, even if it was a religious institution at its inception, is as much subject to the law of limitation as any other property endowed or attached to a religious institution and that the rights of the mosque as well as of the Muslims having been extinguished by virtue of S. 28, read with Art. 144, Lim. Act, long ago, it lost its religious character and became a worldly possession of the defendants and their predecessors-in-title with which they could deal in any manner they liked. According to him, there was no question of the applicability of S. 23, Lim. Act, inasmuch as the defendants' title matured into full ownership long before the advent of the British Rule in the Punjab and the use of the building or its site by the defendants in a manner inconsistent with its original character constituted no wrong so as to afford the plaintiffs a new cause of action, and consequently no new cause of action arose even on the demolition of the building.

It may be mentioned here that after the case was first argued before us, we considered that certain matters, which were very material for the proper disposal of the case, had not been sufficiently argued. We consequently called upon the parties to address further arguments on the following points: (1) Whether a new period of limitation starts to run from the date of the demolition of the mosque; (2) if so, has the mosque or the worshippers the right to seek relief from the Court and ask for a mandatory injunction to issue to the defendants to rebuild the mosque; (3) if such a right exists, can the Court issue such an injunction; and (4) will the Court issue such an injunction, and if such an injunction is issued, can this injunction be enforced?

Both parties fully availed themselves of the opportunity so granted and placed before us their respective points of view in connexion with the questions set out above. The appellants reiterated their former position and urged that the demolition of the mosque gave both the mosque and the worshippers a fresh cause of action and that both or either of them could sue for a mandatory injunction which, in the circumstances of the case, was the only proper relief that could be granted. Our attention was further drawn to O. 21, R. 32, Civil P. C., which clearly empowered the Court to enforce any decree that it might pass in this respect. The respondents demurred to this proposition and stated that in the first instance no fresh cause of action arose on the demolition of the building inasmuch as no right subsisted in the plaintiffs at that time; secondly that neither the mosque nor the worshippers could sue for a mere injunction as they were admittedly out of possession; and thirdly that a relief by way of injunction would be both impossible and impracticable.

From the arguments advanced before us on the case in general, two principal questions arise for decision in the first instance: (1) whether the defendants or their predecessors-in-interest had not acquired an indefeasible right by prescription or otherwise in the subject-matter of the suit and if they had, what was the nature of that right considering that the building in suit had been originally constructed and consecrated as a mosque; and (2) whether S. 23, Lim. Act, applies and even if it does not, whether the suit of any of the plaintiffs is within limitation in respect of any of the reliefs claimed in view of the recent demolition of the building.

Before dealing with these questions, however, it is necessary to determine how far the rules of the Islamic law relied upon by the appellants can be invoked in this matter. They have based their arguments on Ss. 5 and 6, Punjab Laws Act, the material portions of which are reproduced below:

Section 5. — In questions regarding . . . any religious usage or institution, the rule of decision shall be

(b) the Mahomedan law, in cases where the parties are Mahomedans, and the Hindu law, in cases where the parties are Hindus, except in so far as such law has been altered or abolished by legislative enactment, or is opposed to the provisions of this Act, or has been modified by any such custom as is above referred to.

Seeing that the party in possession of the religious institution in suit happens to be a non-muslim, the question naturally arises whether the personal law of the plaintiffs would still apply in the present case. As long ago as 1885 a similar question came up for decision before five Judges of the Allahabad High Court in a pre-emption case reported in 7 All 775⁵⁵ where one of the parties to the suit was a non-muslim and although the statute which governed the case was different, it was couched in the same language in its material portions as S. 5, Punjab Laws Act, 1872. The principal judgment was delivered by Mahmood J. who, after discussing the matter in all its aspects, came to the conclusion that rights derived from members of the Muslim community, whether by Hindus or by other non-Mahomedans would be governed by the Mahomedan law, inasmuch as the inception of the right and not the array of the parties to the suit was the determining point of the decision in such cases. The other four Judges did not adopt the reasoning employed by Mahmood J. but accepted his conclusion on the grounds of equity, remarking that it would not be equitable that persons who are not Mahomedans, but who have dealt with Mahomedans in respect of property knowing perfectly well the conditions and obligations under which the property is held, should merely by reason that they are not themselves subject to the Mahomedan law, be permitted to evade those conditions and obligations. Reference in this connexion may also be made to the dissentient judgments of Norman and Macpherson JJ. in 4 Beng L R 134.⁵⁶ Norman J. observed:

In a country like British India, where Hindus and Mahomedans are living side by side, each governed by their own personal law, a person of one persuasion dealing with a person belonging to the other is bound to take notice of the law which regulates the extent of the power of disposition of property possessed by the person with whom he contracts. I think it clear that a Hindu who purchases the property of infants from the elder brother in a Mussalman family would not be allowed to contend that he acted in good faith, and did not know that the elder brother acting as guardian for the infants had not the same authority as the karta in a Hindu family possesses. If a Mussalman purchased property belonging to a member of a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara. I think he could not plead that he bought in ignorance of the provisions of that law, so as to give himself a title at the expense of the children or coparceners of the vendor.

I may also refer in this connexion to the remarks made by Ameer Ali, Ghose and Prinsep JJ. in 20 Cal 116,²⁰ which again was a case between a Muslim and a Hindu. At p. 137 of the report Ameer Ali J. observed as follows:

The first question therefore which one has to consider is whether the disposition in question is to be discussed upon the basis of the Mahomedan law, or of any other system of law. From the year

56. Sheikh Kudratullah v. Mahani Mohan Shaha, (1870) 4 Beng L R 134 = 13 W R 21 (F B).

1798 downwards, the Courts of justice have uniformly applied the Mussalman law to the determination of questions affecting the validity of dispositions made by Mahomedans. In 2 M I A 390,²² the defendant was a Hindu and the question was whether the property which formed the subject matter of the suit was wakf or not. Their Lordships in the Privy Council decided the case on the basis of the Mahomedan law. And every case before and since has proceeded upon the same principle. Whilst on this point, I would refer to the words of Levinge and Steer JJ. in (1864) W R 185⁵⁷ at p. 186.

For facility of reference I may reproduce here the words referred to by Ameer Ali J.:

It may be remarked that the Courts of this country have invariably applied in practice the Mahomedan law to a variety of cases other than those coming under the denomination of inheritance, marriage and caste, and even if immemorial and recognized practice did not legalise the action of the Courts, it cannot be said that when this Court administers to Mahomedans their own laws, they do otherwise than administer justice according to equity and good conscience.

At p. 179 of the report Ghose J. said :

I should here premise that the case before us is not between two Mahomedans, but between a Hindu, who is the creditor, and a Mahomedan, the debtor. S. 37 of Act 12 of 1887 provides as follows :

Where in any suit or other proceeding it is necessary for a Civil Court to decide any question regarding succession, inheritance, marriage or caste or any religious usage or institution, the Mahomedan law in cases where the parties are Mahomedans and the Hindu law in cases where the parties are Hindus, shall form the rule of decision except in so far as such law has, by legislative enactment, been altered or abolished.

(2) In cases not provided for by sub-s. (1), or by any other law for the time being in force, the Court shall act according to 'justice, equity and good conscience'.

This case is governed by Cl. 2 of the section, and the Court has here to act according to 'justice, equity and good conscience'.

Cases often occur in our Court where the parties to a suit are of different persuasions, and one of them relies upon the particular law which governs him as the inception of his title, and the Court has to consider that law But while the Court goes into these questions, it does so, not because the Mahomedan law applies to the Hindu, but because 'justice, equity and good conscience' require that they should be considered. In like manner, in the case before us we have to consider whether the property which the creditor desires to sell is still the property of B, and as such, is liable to be sold for his debts, or whether he has made a valid dedication of it as wakf, and as such, it is inalienable.

The matter for our decision in these appeals is simply whether the deed of 4th Aughran 1281 constitutes a valid wakf such as is binding under the Mahomedan law.

It may be added that Petheram C. J., also referred to the Mahomedan law books alone in order to determine the validity of the wakf relied on by the Mahomedan debtor.

I am in respectful agreement with the opinions expressed by the learned Judges referred to above and have no hesitation in holding that, in spite of the fact that the defendants are non-muslims, the character of the building in suit and the incidents attaching to it would, on the principles of justice, equity and good conscience alone, if on no other ground, be decided on the basis of the Mahomedan law; and no rule of decision derived from any other law would come into play in respect of these matters. This is what happens every day in the British Indian Courts. Muslims when they happen to deal with the property of the Hindus, are faced with the Hindu law and similarly Hindus, when they choose to acquire any property from the Muslims, have to contend with the Mahomedan law as soon as their acquisitions are challenged in a Court of law. As remarked by Mahmood J., in 7 All 775⁵⁵:

It is to be remembered that Hindu and Mahomedan laws are so intimately connected with religion that they cannot readily be dis severed from it. As long as the religions last, the laws founded on them last.

In determining, therefore, the rights, if any, acquired by the defendants in the subject-matter of the suit on account of their long possession, we shall have to ascertain first the true position of the mosque under the Mahomedan law.

The plaintiffs have examined several Muslim theologians representing different schools of thought and they all have unanimously stated that a place once consecrated as a mosque remains a mosque for ever and that its character is never lost even if it is deserted or falls into ruins, or is obliterated from the face of the earth. They have further stated that as soon as a building is consecrated as a mosque, it vests in God and all proprietary rights of human beings are extinguished in it. They have even declared that it is not only the visible structure that constitutes a mosque but from the lowest point in the earth up to the highest point in the heavens it is all a mosque and remains as such till eternity. It is therefore that it can neither be alienated, nor partitioned, nor inherited. It can never be used as a place of human habitation : and even if the building collapses, its materials cannot be utilized or sold. These opinions have been based on the Quran, the Hadis (the traditions of the Prophet), and the standard works of the Muslim jurists. Maulana Mufti Muhammad Kifayat Ullah, P. W. 3, who is president of the All India Jamiat-ul-Ulema (a body of theologians) has placed P. W. 3/A on the record, which contains all the authorities on which he has relied for his evidence. Shamas-ul-Ulema Sayyed Ali-ul-Hairi is Muftahid (religious leader) of the Shias of the Punjab and has produced P. W. 5-A mentioning the various authorities on which his statement is based. Maulvi Sana Ullah, P. W. 6, is Secretary of the All India Jamait-i-Ahl-i-Hadis and the authorities, on which his opinion is founded, are contained in P. W. 6-A and P. W. 6-B. In one of the books quoted by him, the author says :

It is unlawful to sell or auction or demolish any waqf property, especially a mosque or to give it away for its being included in a temple or Shivala of the Hindus, no matter whether the creator of the waqf himself or the ruling authority intends to do so. Such property is subject to the same rules as a free man and just as a free man cannot be converted into a slave, so cannot a mosque be changed into private property.

Maulvi Muhammad Ali, P. W. 7, is President Ahmadiyya Anjuman-i-Ishait-i-Islam and his evidence is also in the same strain as that of the others. Maulvi Muhammad Ismail, P. W. 8 is Khatib (Preacher) Jami Masjid, Ahl-i-Hadis. In one of the authorities cited by him, in order to emphasize the interminable nature of a wakf like a mosque, the illustration of the Holy Temple in Jerusalem is recorded which according to the author, was demolished by Nebuchadnezzar and desecrated by him by the throwing of sweepings and the slaughter of swine but on the ruins of which one of the descendants of David was enjoined by God to put up a place of worship later. In another authority it is stated that even if no visible trace is left of the building used as a mosque, its site remains a mosque for ever (P. W. 8-A). Maulana Ghulam Murshid, P. W. 9, is Honorary Professor of the Ishait-i-Islam College and has referred to several authorities of which extracts are given in P. W. 9-A and P. W. 9-B. One of the theologians referred to in P. W. 9-B has cited the example of Kaaba, to which every Muslim in the world turns his face five times a day for prayers and which, according to the Muslims, is the first mosque built on this earth by the Prophet Abraham. The building of Kaaba was for centuries used as a temple for idols but it lost neither its sanctity as the first house of God nor its status as a mosque. It is evident that the opinions alluded to above have not been invented for the occasion and it cannot be urged that they do not represent the true views of Islam on the character and status of a mosque. That this rule of Muslim law has been accepted without any modification in British India is amply borne out by authoritative text books like Baillie's "Digest of Muhammadan Law" on the subjects to which it is usually applied by British Courts of Justice in India, as well as by Ameer Ali's Muhammadan Law which again is a popular book of reference on all questions of the Islamic law which arise in the British Indian Courts. Some of the passages that are relevant to our inquiry are reproduced below :

1. "When a musjid (mosque) has fallen to decay and is no longer used for prayer, nor required by the people, it does not revert to the appropriator or his heirs and cannot be sold, according to the most correct opinions." (Baillie's Digest, 1865 Edition, page 606.)

2. "According to Abu Hanifa and Abu Yusuf, the land which has once been dedicated to a mosque continues wakf even though it has become waste and the building has fallen into ruin." (Ameer Ali's Muhammadan Law, Edn. 4, Vol. 1, page 403.)

3. "If a person were to make a wakf of a piece of land for the purpose of erecting a mosque, he cannot afterwards resume or sell it, neither can it be inherited, because this ground is altogether alienated from the right of the individual and appertains solely to God." (Ibid, page 404.)

4. "A masjid for which there no longer remained a congregation and all around it had gone to decay, it was not lawful to convert it into a cemetery." (Ibid, page 406.)

5. "A dedication in favour of a mosque is absolutely lawful according to Abu Yusuf for a mosque exists for ever until the Day of Judgment and can never revert to private proprietorship even though it be ruined and wholly disused, nor can its material be taken to any other mosque." (Ibid, page 407.)

6. "Though a mosque may be ruined and be never used, still it is a mosque, for ever consecrated to the eternal worship of God until the Day of Judgment." (Ibid, page 408.)

7. "But whether a mosque has become ruined or dilapidated, or the people have no further need owing to another mosque close by, still it will not revert to the ownership of the wakif, nor will it be lawful to take it or its property to another mosque." (Ibid, page 409.)

8. "It must be remembered that the failure or non-existence of the initial or primary object of a wakf does not, under the Hanafi law, affect the operative character or validity of the wakf, or avoid it." (Ibid, page 412.)

9. "When once a dedication has been duly effected, the right of the person making the wakf in the property dedicated 'drops' absolutely. Thenceforth the property is 'tied up' in the ownership of the Almighty, and nobody has a right to deal with it in any shape—neither the wakif, nor his heirs, nor the beneficiaries under the wakf. In other words, all right of proprietorship ceases, the property cannot be alienated, or transferred by sale or gift, nor is it subject to the rights of inheritance." (Ibid, page 482.)

10. "As a general rule therefore private alienation temporary or absolute, by mortgage or otherwise of wakf lands, even though for the repair or other benefit of the endowment, is illegal according to the Mussalman law." (Ibid, page 485.)

11. "No alteration made in a wakf building by the purchaser or anybody else can change the character of the wakf." (Ibid, page 491.)

12. "A wakf property is inalienable, because it belongs virtually to Almighty God, being intended for the benefit of mankind." (Ibid, page 541.)

13. "The second effect of the constitution of wakf is to render the property imprescriptible, that is, it cannot be subject to the rights of the sovereign as private property." (Ibid, page 543.)

14. "The third effect resulting from the constitution of wakf is that it renders the property so dedicated non-heritable." (Ibid, page 543.)

15. "The proprietorship of wakf property is transferred to God, that is to say, such property ceases for ever to be subject to the right of private proprietorship of" (Ibid, page 547.)

It is not peculiar to the Muslims alone to attach eternal sanctity to their mosques. A house of God in every religion that worships God is treated on similar lines. Take for example a church of the Christians. At p. 846 of Halsbury's Laws of England, (Edn. 2), Vol. 11, it is said that after consecration a church continues to exist as a church in the eye of the law, even though the material building is destroyed. At p. 860 it is remarked that property once consecrated will retain the ecclesiastical character thus bestowed upon it, whoever may be actual owner and whatever may be the nature of his tenure. At page 861 it is observed that property consecrated is separated for ever from the common uses of mankind and is set apart solely for sacred purposes for all time. At p. 863 it is stated that when the fabric of a church has once become devoted in sacros usus, it cannot ever be used as a habitation for man, nor has a Judge any power to sanction the use of it for secular purposes. It would thus appear that under English law a church stands on the same footing as a mosque under the Mahomedan law, the only difference being that, while under the former an Act of Parliament can divest a church of its sanctity, under the latter this authority is vested in no human being in the world, even if he is a ruler of the State and in no human institution, even if it is a law-making body. Besides, a mosque is held in exceptional reverence and esteem and is treated as a house of God in the real sense of the term. None who is unclean can enter its precincts and even the mightiest potentate on earth is bound to take his shoes off when visiting it and must rub his shoulders with the humblest of his subjects when in prayers, for he stands there in the presence of the King of all kings. By virtue of the transcendent character that a mosque thus holds it is ranked far above every other kind of property whether secular or sacred.

Such being the inherent characteristics of the building in dispute, and such the conditions and obligations attaching thereto under the Mahomedan law, the question is how far the provisions of the Limitation Act affect the case. It is contended on behalf of the respondents that the Mahomedan law has been altered and abolished within the meaning of S. 5, Punjab Laws Act (4 of 1872) by the Limitation Act to this extent that if the possession of a mosque is acquired by a person whose interests are hostile to those of the Muslims and who does not believe in the sanctity of the building, it becomes adverse to the Muslims and that unless somebody interested in the mosque takes any step to recover its possession from the adverse possessor within the period of twelve years, all rights in the mosque are extinguished and its sacred character is lost as well. The Limitation Act being the law of the land, all the provisions of the Mahomedan law relating to a mosque are to be read subject to the modifications and improvements introduced by that statute. The law of limitation makes no exception in favour of any sacred property as such and consequently in the eye of the law so far as limitation is concerned, sacred property stands on the same footing as secular property. The only cases, which are immune from the operation of the Limitation Act, are specified in the Act itself and those that are not so specified are not entitled to claim exemption on any basis. In order to illustrate that the Mahomedan law has been partially altered by the Limitation Act, counsel for the respondents has referred us to Arts. 103 and 104 which prescribe a fixed period of limitation for recovery of dower. Under the Mahomedan law a claim for dower cannot be barred by time, as limitation is not known to the Mahomedan law; but under the Limitation Act if any wife or widow, as the case may be, seeks to recover her dower through Courts, she is compelled under the law to bring her suit within the period prescribed therefor by the Limitation Act. It is further argued that by enacting Arts. 134-A, 134-B and 134-C the Indian Legislature has expressed its clear intention to bring the endowed property, of whatever nature it may be, within the purview of the Limitation Act. This being so, Art. 144, Lim. Act has barred the remedy of the Muslims to recover the building in suit for ever and S. 28, Lim. Act has extinguished their right to do so.

It is conceded on behalf of the respondents that a mosque is a juristic person, but it is contended that in relation to a mosque this legal fiction comes into existence only when any property takes a worldly shape and inasmuch as this fiction cannot exist divorced from property, it vanishes along with the property which brings the fiction into existence.

On behalf of the appellants it is not denied that the Limitation Act is the law of the land, nor is it asserted that S. 3, Lim. Act, is not applicable to any suit which is brought in a Court of law. It is however contended that the Limitation Act does not touch a religious institution like a mosque inasmuch as a mosque is not immovable property in the crude sense of the term but is something different from it. It is a juridical person and a juridical person as such cannot be treated as property, what to say of its being treated as immovable property. They further urge that a mosque is 'extra commercium' and as it cannot be purchased or sold, it cannot be adversely possessed. Even if the Limitation Act applies, and a mosque is covered by Art. 144, Lim. Act and is adversely possessed, it is in its nature incapable of being owned in the sense in which other worldly properties are owned. Its sacred character is never lost nor are the conditions and obligations attaching to it destroyed. An adverse possessor takes it subject to all the burdens which are imposed upon it and all the privileges to which it is entitled. Moreover, the mere fact of its being possessed by a non-muslim or its being used in a sacrilegious manner, is not such an act of hostility as would start the adverse possession of the non-muslim possessor in the legal sense of the term. Whether it remains in its original shape and form or whether it falls into crumbles, it continues to be a mosque and every person who professes the Muslim Faith, is entitled to treat the building as of right as a mosque and to say his prayers therein. Under the Mahomedan law a zimmi (a non-muslim fellow subject) can be the custodian of a mosque and the religious faith of the custodian therefore does not matter. Every time that any Muslim belonging to any generation is prohibited from using the building or the site of the mosque as a mosque, a fresh cause of action arises to him to seek his remedy in a Court of law.

Both parties have relied on a large number of decided cases and even though I am disposed to think that most of them have no direct bearing on the question at issue, yet in view of the importance of the case and the complex nature of the issues involved, I consider it advisable to refer to them all and to comment upon them wherever necessary. I shall first discuss the authorities relied upon by the appellants. In 2 M I A 390²² decided in 1840, which was referred to with approval in a later judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council reported in 44 Mad 831,³³ a sajjada nashin of a khankah entered into a contract with a Hindu of the name of Jewun Doss Sahoo for the loan of a certain sum of money and as security for the repayment thereof transferred certain lands comprised in and constituting part of the grants made to the khankah under a royal decree. It was stipulated that if the sum was not repaid within the prescribed period, the lands would become the absolute property of the said creditor. Later, another deed was executed in the creditor's favour by his Muslim debtor. On the debtor's death the successor challenged the alienations made by his predecessor and insisted that the lands in question were wakf property of which neither a conditional nor a bona fide sale could be made. The opinions of the law officers upon the tenure of the lands in suit were taken by the Sudder Dewany Adawlut and they were to the effect that by the Mahomedan law the sale or mortgage of wakf lands was illegal and on that ground the Sudder Dewany Adawlut decreed the claim. On appeal, their Lordships of the Privy Council came to the same conclusion and held that the property in suit was wakf and that inasmuch as a mutwalli, had no right to alienate such property, the transfer was illegal. In the course of their judgment, their Lordships referred to Hidaya, Book XV, as translated by Hamilton in support of their conclusions. Limitation was pleaded as a bar in this case by the Hindu alienee, but his contention was repelled on the basis of a different enactment which is not now in force.

In 27 P R 1913,²¹ certain Mahomedan residents of Multan sued for an injunction restraining the defendants from selling a piece of land forming part of the area known as Mai Pak Daman grave-yard and entered in the settlement record as ghair mumkin kabristan in the possession of the Mahomedans and owned by Makhdum Hassan Bakhsh. Their Lordships of the Privy Council held that on the facts found the land in suit formed part of a grave-yard set apart for the Mahomedan community and that the Makhdum had no private rights of ownership over any part of the grave-yard. It may be remarked that the decision of this case was mainly influenced by the fact that the defendant was the trustee and custodian of the shrine of the Saint Mai Pak Daman. Their Lordships inter alia observed:

It is obvious that if it were held that within the area of the grave-yard, land unoccupied or apparently unoccupied by graves was private property and at the disposal of the recorded owner, it would lead to endless disputes, and the whole purpose of the Government in setting aside land as an open grave-yard for the Mahomedan community in Multan would be frustrated.

This case for the reasons stated above cannot serve as a useful authority for the proposition advanced by the appellants. In 44 Mad 831,³³ their Lordships of the Privy Council at p. 840 of the report observed as follows:

The conception of a trust apart from a gift was introduced in India with the establishment of Muslim Rule. But the Mahomedan law relating to trusts differs fundamentally from the English law. It owes its origin to a rule laid down by the Prophet or Islam; and means, 'the tying up of the property in the ownership of God the Almighty and the devotion of the profits for the benefit of human beings'. When once it is declared that a particular property is wakf, or any such expression is used as implies wakf, or the tenor of the document shows, as in 2 M I A 390,²² that a dedication to pious or charitable purposes is meant, the right of the wakif is extinguished and the ownership is transferred to the Almighty. The manager of the wakf is the mutwalli, the Governor, Superintendent, or Curator. The head of these khankas which exist in large numbers in India, is called a sajjada nashin. But neither the sajjada nashin nor the mutwalli has any right in the property belonging to the wakf: the property is not vested in him, and he is not a "trustee" in the technical sense.

This judgment too beyond making a general exposition of the nature of a Mahomedan wakf does not advance the appellants' case any further. It may also be remarked in passing that S. 10, Lim. Act has been amended since and the managers of religious or charitable endowments have been declared to be the trustees thereof.

In 38 P L R 182,⁴ the suit under appeal concerned a plot of land in the city of Lucknow. In the words of their Lordships of the Privy Council, the purpose of the suit was to establish that that plot of land was a grave-yard in the sense of the Mahomedan law, that is to say 'extra commercium' and dedicated for the benefit of the Mahomedans in general in such sense that private ownership therein did not exist. In 1928 that plot of land was sold by one Mt. Musahab Khanum to Ballabh Das, a Hindu. Thereupon certain Mahomedans sued in a representative capacity to recover the land from the defendants. In the course of the litigation that followed it was found that after the Mutiny of 1857 and by virtue of Lord Canning's Proclamation of 15th March 1858, all lands in Oudh were confiscated and every right in the soil in the city of Lucknow was vested in the Crown. By the letter of the Financial Commissioner of Oudh, dated 7th August 1868, lands were granted to people whom the Crown liked to grant. It was then that one Kale Khan from whom Mt. Musahab Khanum derived her title, was entered as a proprietor by virtue of possession of this land. It was admitted by the defendants that in 1868 and prior thereto some few persons had been buried in the land. In 1870 the land was closed for the purposes of a cemetery by order of the Municipal Board. It was proved that in 1913 there were some thatched houses of some tenants on the land for which rent was received by a daughter of Kale Khan. In 1919 a map of that plot of land was produced in Court in another legal proceeding and it showed a number of thatched huts and five or six latrines. On these facts the Subordinate Judge held that Kale Khan was neither a manager nor a takiadar of the land in suit and that the land was his private property. The District Judge agreed in this view. On appeal, the Chief Court reversed the judgments of the Courts below and decreed the suit. Ballabh Das appealed to their Lordships of the Privy Council but his appeal was dismissed with a certain modification in the decree. In the course of their judgment, their Lordships observed at p. 137 of the report :

If however account is taken of the fact that the particular plot No. 108 is described as a grave-yard it becomes difficult indeed to suppose that the fact of possession or custodianship is not the basis of the entry. . . . The khasra can hardly mean that it was the intention of Government at the First Regular Settlement, to vest the ownership of such a cemetery as is described in the map in a private individual, thereby destroying its character as a qabristan according to ordinary conception of the Mahomedan law.

At p. 188 their Lordships have remarked:

If the materials in the present case fell to be looked at as a mere question of evidence, their Lordships are satisfied that the true inference to be drawn from the evidence as a whole would be that the suit land is a cemetery in the ordinary Mahomedan sense and is no longer the subject of private ownership.

In the result, their Lordships granted a declaration that the suit land was dedicated for the purposes of a grave-yard according to the Mahomedan law and that defendant 1 had no title thereto. In 1906 A W N 159,²³ a plot of land had been used as a cemetery for a number of years before the Mutiny of 1857. Subsequently the whole village in which the land was situated, was confiscated by Government in consequence of the misconduct of the Muslim owners of the village during the Mutiny and was sold to the defendants who were Hindus. Some time afterwards the Muslims brought a suit for a declaration that the plot of land referred to above was a public burial ground and was not the property of the Hindu purchasers of the village and further asked for an injunction restraining the defendants from making encroachments on the land. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit on the ground that an actual dedication of the land had not been proved. The lower Appellate Court found that the land was a cemetery and had been used as such for upwards of 100 years. The defendants appealed and Banerji J. who heard the appeal observed as follows :

In Mr. Amir Ali's Mahomedan Law, Vol. 1, Edn. 8, p. 315, it is stated that 'when a person erects an aqueduct for Musalmans or an inn for the occupation of travellers or a caravan-sarai' or constitutes his land into a cemetery, the right of property according to Muhammad (a disciple of Imam Abu Hanifa) abates when people have used the aqueduct, or have occupied the inn or caravan-sarai or buried in the cemetery'. . . . The Court below was therefore right in holding that the defendants had no longer any proprietary right in the land in suit. By the confiscation which took place after the Mutiny, only such rights were confiscated as existed in the rebels at the date of the confiscation, and it is those rights only which have been acquired by the defendants. If a valid wakf had been created in regard to the land in question before the confiscation, the original owners had ceased to have any right to the said land. Therefore the defendants by acquiring the rights which had been confiscated, could not acquire the ownership of the land.

On the basis of the Privy Council judgment referred to above as well as on that of the Allahabad judgment, the appellants urge that even an act of State is not sufficient to rob the sacred property of its sanctity. They further argue that if a person acquires any rights in the sacred property which is so confiscated, he takes the property along with the burden which is imposed upon it, and that the only position that can be conferred by law on the transferee by virtue of such an acquisition is that of a mere possessor and not of an absolute owner. To this extent these judgments lend support to the appellants' contentions. In the Privy Council case, land had been confiscated and re-conferred upon Kale Khan and his name had also been entered as a proprietor by virtue of possession. He had built thatched huts on the land and had rented them to certain tenants. He had also constructed some latrines on it. Such use of the land was obviously inconsistent with its use as a grave-yard and these acts had been committed more than 12 years before the institution of the suit. There was not a scintilla of evidence to show that Kale Khan had anything to do with the original takia-dars of the land and it was only in view of the subject-matter of the suit that their Lordships of the Privy Council appear to have held that the entry as regards his ownership indicated mere possession and custodianship and not proprietorship in the ordinary sense of the term. Similarly, in the Allahabad judgment the whole village had been confiscated including the grave-yard and sold by the Government to non-Muslims. From the fact that the appeal had arisen in 1904 and that the confiscation had taken place in 1857, it appears that the suit by the Mussalmans had been instituted long after the ordinary period of limitation had expired. In spite of this lapse of time, the learned Judge presumably in view of the nature of the subject-matter of the suit concluded that it could not be owned either by the Government or by its assignee, inasmuch as the property in its very nature was incapable of being owned.

In A I R 1930 Oudh 245,²⁵ Srivastava J. observed :

Once land has been dedicated for the purpose of a cemetery it must always be regarded as a cemetery unless for any reason the land turns out to be unfit for use as a cemetery. Once a wakf is established either by evidence of dedication or by evidence of user it is an essence of the wakf that it should be permanent.

In arriving at this conclusion the learned Judge referred to a passage in Baillie's Digest which reads as follows :

And being asked with regard to a cemetery in a village where it had gone to decay and there remained in it no traces of the dead, not even bones, whether it was lawful to sow the land and take its produce, answered "No" for in legal effect it is still a cemetery.

In A I R 1931 Oudh 45,⁵⁸ Pullan J. adopted the observations made by Srivastava J. in the case cited above. These two judgments obviously emphasize the permanent nature of a Mahomedan wakf. In 35 Mad 681,³ the suit in which the second appeal had arisen was instituted by the plaintiffs representing the Shafei residents of a place called Pudunagaram against the defendants as representatives of the Hanafis of the same locality, praying for an injunction restraining the latter from enlarging a certain reservoir attached to a mosque which had been found by the Courts below to be in their exclusive management ever since another mosque had been built a long time before by the Shafeis in the same compound, from using some granite stones lying in the compound in the construction of the reservoir and from obstructing a pathway extending from the gate of the older mosque by the side of its reservoir to the mosque which was in the exclusive possession of the plaintiffs. One of the questions that arose for decision was whether the mosque in which the Hanafis generally said their prayers and the reservoir attached thereto which was intended to enable the congregation to perform ablutions were the common properties of the plaintiffs and the defendants. The trial Court found that as the Hanafis had been in exclusive possession of and using the mosque ever since the other mosque was built by the Shafeis, that is for a period of more than 12 years, the latter had lost their right in the older mosque and its reservoir. The Subordinate Judge in appeal confirmed that finding. A further appeal was presented to the High Court and in the

It seems to us that the finding must be understood with reference to the subject matter of the litigation. It will suffice for us therefore to point out that according to the accepted view of the Sunni Schools which comprise the followers both of Imam Abu Hanifa and Imam Shafie it is in the very conception of a wakf which is the name for a grant by which mosques and similar institutions are dedicated—that all proprietary rights of men should be extinguished in the property so dedicated. The result according to the theory of Muhammadan law is that proprietary rights in the subject matter of wakfs become re-vested in God inasmuch as He is originally the owner of all created things and it is by His permission that men acquire rights therein so that when men's right ceases in a particular thing, it reverts to the proprietorship of God. (See Hamilton's Hidaya, Grady's edition, pages 231, 232.) Further as it is the object of a dedication of the nature of a mosque that the public should say their prayers therein, it is not open to those who are charged with the superintendence and management of a mosque to exclude any Mahomedan who wishes to say his prayers in it, except on the ground of misbehaviour.

In arriving at their conclusions, the learned Judges relied on a Privy Council judgment reported in 18 Cal 443⁵⁹ and on two cases from the Allahabad High Court, each decided by five Judges, reported as 12 All 494⁶⁰ and 13 All 419,⁶¹ respectively. This judgment no doubt was between Muslims themselves and may not go a long way to help the appellants; but the principles enunciated therein are (1) that proprietary rights in a mosque are extinguished as soon as it is consecrated, and (2) that so long as a mosque exists as a mosque, every Muslim has a right to offer his prayers in it. In 37 Cal 128,⁶² at p. 161, Mookerjee J. in connexion with the case of a Hindu endowment, states :

The Hindu law recognises dedication for the establishment of the image of a deity and for the maintenance and worship thereof. The property so dedicated to a pious purpose is placed extra commercium and is entitled to special protection at the hands of the Sovereign whose duty it is to intervene to prevent fraud and waste in dealing with religious endowments.

In 12 Bom 247,³⁰ which again is a case of a Hindu endowment, West J. observed at p. 264 of the report :

Property dedicated to a pious purpose is, by the Hindu as by the Roman law placed extra commercium. Mr. Macpherson admitted for the defendants in this case that they could not sell the lands bestowed on the idol Shri Ranchhod Raiji. This restriction is like the one by which the Emperor forbade the alienation of dedicated lands under any circumstances. It is consistent with the grants having been made to the juridical person symbolized or personified in the idol at Dakor. It is not consistent with this juridical person's being conceived as a mere slave or property of the shevaks whose very title implies not ownership, but service of the god. It is indeed a strange, if not wilful, confusion of thought by which the defendants set up the Shri Ranchhod Raiji as a deity for the purpose of inviting gifts and vouchsafing blessings, but, as a mere block of stone, their property for the purpose of their appropriating every gift laid at its feet. But if there is a juridical person, the ideal embodiment of a pious or benevolent idea as the centre of the foundation, this artificial subject of rights is as capable of taking offerings of cash and jewels as of land. Those who take physical possession of the one as of the other kind of property incur thereby a responsibility for its due application to the purposes of the foundation—compare Griffin v. Griffin.⁶³ They are answerable as trustees even though they have not consciously accepted a trust, and a remedy may be sought against them for maladministration

It may be remarked that this judgment was confirmed on appeal by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in 24 Bom 50.⁶⁴ In 52 Cal 809,⁴⁰ the idol in suit was established as a household god and the founder gave funds in order to continue the upkeep and maintenance of the deity. During his lifetime the founder acted as shebait and after his death his widow officiated similarly as a ministrant of the worship. An adopted son of the founder attained the age of 20 years in the lifetime of the widow and became de facto the person charged with the same duties as his adoptive father and mother had performed. He executed a deed of trust providing particular premises for the location and worship of the deities. Some time afterwards the widow died and it came to light that she had made a very large endowment in favour of the family idol and by her will had appointed her adopted son her executor and trustee. In the course of the litigation that ensued after the death of the adopted son, one of the questions that arose was as to the location of the idol. On behalf of one of the litigants it was argued that the testator treated the idols or images which he had set up as his personal property and left them absolutely to his adopted son. This proposition was rejected by the Appellate Court and their Lordships of the Privy Council remarked that they could give no countenance to it and approvingly referred to the following passage from the judgment under appeal:

The inclusion of the idols however among items of property, moveable and immovable, does not show that the testator regarded his interest in them in the same light as his interest in his secular property.

At p. 821 of the report their Lordships observed:

An argument which would reduce a family idol to the position of a mere moveable chattel is one to which the Board can give no support. They think that such an argument is neither in accord with a true conception of the authorities, nor with principle.

Their Lordships do not think that such cases form any ground for the proposition that Hindu family idols are property in the crude sense maintained, or that their destruction, degradation or injury are within the power of their custodian for the time being. Such ideas appear to be in violation of the sanctity attached to the idol, whose legal entity and rights as such the law of India has long recognized.

At page 825 it was remarked:

The true view of this is that the will of the idol in regard to location must be respected. If, in the course of a proper and unassailable administration of the worship of the idol by the shebait, it be thought that a family idol should change its location, the will of the idol itself, expressed through his guardian, must be given effect to. . . .

A fortiori it is open to an idol acting through his guardian, the shebait, to conduct its worship in its own way at its own place always on the assumption that the acts of the shebait expressing its will are not inconsistent with the reverent and proper conduct of its worship.

In 38 Cal 284,³⁹ an old temple in which certain Thakurs were located was blown off by a storm and they were placed in another temple near by. Some disputes arose between the shebait in whose temple the Thakurs had been placed and the shebait of the original temple. Consequent upon these disputes, the old shebait rebuilt the temple which had been demolished and wanted to bring the Thakurs to the new temple. Thereupon a suit was instituted by the Thakurs in their juristic capacity that they might be taken out of the temple of the defendants and placed in their own new temple. The trial Court dismissed the suit under Art. 49, Limitation Act, which applies to suits for specific moveable property not covered by Arts. 48, 48-A and 48-B or for compensation for wrongfully taking or injuring or wrongfully detaining the same. Chatterjee J. who delivered the judgment remarked :

In this view of the case it is not necessary to consider whether the Thakur is to be considered a moveable property. Besides, a Thakur has been held to be a juridical person, and, considering the claim as it is made in this case, I do not see why it should not be held that the Thakur is a juridical person, and is therefore not amenable in any sense to the mischief of Art. 49.

Richardson J. concurred in the order proposed by Chatterjee J. These authorities have been relied upon by the appellants in support of the proposition that a mosque is not property in the crude sense of the term and it is argued that a mosque, although made of bricks and mortar, cannot be treated as immovable property in the same way as an idol which is made of wood or stone cannot be treated as moveable property. The mosque is as much a juristic person as an idol and similar sanctity attaches to it as attaches to an idol. The respondents contend that these authorities are not in point, inasmuch as a mosque is not placed on the same footing by the Muslims as an idol is by the Hindus. A mosque is only a house of God, while an idol is God himself. It is a personification of God, or, in other words, it is God symbolised. But I do not agree. The ratio decidendi of the judgments alluded to above was not whether an idol as a symbol of God could be treated as moveable property or not but whether as a juridical person it could be held as such and the reason that prevailed with the learned Judges for holding an idol to be outside the description of moveable property was, as appears from the remarks quoted from 38 Cal 284,³⁹ that it was a juridical person.

In 20 I C 78⁴² the allegation of the plaintiff was that the land in dispute was made over to the predecessor of the defendant in order that the income might be applied for the worship of the image established by an ancestor of his more than half a century before the institution of the suit. About 40 years before commencement of the litigation, the site on which the temple stood was washed away and the image itself was broken to pieces. Since then, the broken image had been worshipped by the predecessor of the defendant. The plaintiff however established a new image in a newly constructed temple in the same village. He consequently prayed that the defendant might be compelled to perform the worship of the newly established image and to provide out of the income of the land in his possession the articles necessary for the worship of the image and if the defendant refused to perform the worship or to supply the articles necessary in that behalf, a decree might be made against him for ejectment. The learned Judges observed :

The question arises whether this trust came to an end when the temple was washed away and the image was broken This text shows that when an image has been mutilated or destroyed, the religious purpose does not come to an end . . . and the endowment is not affected by the destruction or mutilation of the image. The religious purpose still survives and a new image may be established and consecrated in order that it may be worshipped as intended by the original founder.

On the analogy of this case the appellants seek to establish that the religious purpose, for which the mosque was constructed, did not come to an end by the destruction of the mosque and that it still survived. The appellants have further relied on 26 Bom 198,²⁴ 18 All 395,³⁶ 40 Cal 548,³⁷ A I R 1932 Cal 459,³⁸ 138 I C 309⁶⁵ and Reg. Second Appeal 1391 of 1936,⁶⁶ in support of their contention that the sacred character of wakf property is not lost merely by being possessed or owned by persons holding faiths different from those of the original dedicators or from those of the persons for whose benefit the wakf is intended.

In 26 Bom 198,²⁴ certain land at Dharwar, which had formerly been used as a grave-yard by the Mahomedan community residing there but which had not been used as such for 20 or 30 years, was sold by the owner to a Hindu named Ramrao Narayan Bellary who thereupon began to prepare the foundation of a house which he proposed to build upon it. The Mahomedan residents of Dharwar brought a suit alleging that they were accustomed to perform religious rites and ceremonies at the graves in the said land and prayed for a declaration that they were entitled so to do and for an injunction restraining the defendants from obstructing them. Both the Subordinate Judge and the District Judge decreed the suit. Ramrao appealed and the appeal came on for hearing before a Division Bench composed of Fulton and Crowe JJ. Fulton J. in delivering the judgment observed as follows :

The land in dispute, it has been found, is a grave-yard, disused, it may be, for 20 or 30 years, but retaining nonetheless its character as such. By the custom of the country founded on a sentiment which may almost be described as universal, the ground in which human remains are interred is regarded as for ever sacred. The members of the families of the dead are in the habit of performing certain religious services at their tombs. The ownership of the soil may be vested in others, but the permission to bury in the land granted as it must be subject to the custom of the community carries with it the right to perform all customary rights. The District Judge may have gone too far in inferring from the facts which he found proved that the land was the property of the Mahomedan community. But those facts certainly justified him in confirming the decree of the Subordinate Judge which directed that the plaintiffs whose relatives have been there buried, have the right of performing all such worship and ceremonies near the makan and the graves on the ground in dispute as are enjoined by the Mahomedan custom and religion.

This judgment clearly shows that even if land under graves is sold to a Hindu, he does not acquire such rights of ownership on the graves themselves as he does in connexion with ordinary property. He is bound to keep the graves as they are and cannot in any manner interfere with them. If a purchaser for valuable consideration with notice cannot assert his rights of ownership on the property purchased by him, it is difficult to comprehend that an adverse possessor would be able to exercise the rights of absolute ownership in the sacred property which he has acquired by a wrongful act of his.

In 18 All 395,³⁶ certain persons who had entered upon a burial place and ploughed up the graves were held liable to be convicted of an offence under S. 297, I. P. C., notwithstanding that their entry on the land was proved to have been by the consent of the owner thereof. In 40 Cal 548,³⁷ there existed a visible grave in a disused grave-yard which was claimed by a Hindu owner as his private property. He built a chabutra there and caused disturbance of the grave, thus wounding the feelings of the person whose mother was buried there. He was convicted and the matter came before a Division Bench composed of Sharfuddin and Richardson JJ. The contention raised on behalf of the convict was that the land in question was his ancestral land, that it belonged to him and was in his possession, that he was in enjoyment of the fruits of the trees standing upon it and that the land was no more a burial ground or depository for the remains of the dead, inasmuch as it had not been used for burying purposes for a great many years. Sharfuddin J. who delivered the principal judgment observed :

In my opinion however it is not necessary for the purposes of S. 297, I. P. C. that a burial ground should be in use. If it has been a burial ground and if there are visible graves in it, it becomes a depository for the remains of the dead. It is possible that the bodies in those graves may have disappeared, but the remains of those bodies are still there, although they may have crumbled to dust.

Richardson J. concurred in the view held by Sharfuddin J. and remarked :

It is said that at any rate the petitioner had the possession and custody of the land in which the tomb stood and that the mere entry upon the land would not therefore amount to a trespass. That no doubt is so, but what is found here is that the petitioner did more than merely enter upon this land. It is not contended that he had the right to use the land for all purposes as land in its natural state. It is not suggested, for instance, that he could remove the tombs and plough up the whole surface of the land. It is not denied that the place was at one time lawfully used as a place of sepulture. So far at any rate as it was so used, it was set apart as a depository for the remains of the dead and is entitled therefore to the protection afforded by S. 297.

In A I R 1932 Cal 459,³⁸ Patterson J. in a case in which an owner of the land had demolished certain structures erected over the graves of the complainant's relatives observed :

Although the petitioners have been found by the Civil Court to be the owners of the land in question and although they have been given khas possession thereof by the Civil Court, that does not entitle them to disturb any graves that may be found existing in the land or to damage any structure that may have been raised over such graves, if by such act or acts the feelings of any person interested in the graves are likely to be wounded.

In connexion with the three judgments cited above, it is objected that they do not touch the point at issue before us, inasmuch as they relate to criminal law and proceed on different grounds. I am not however impressed by this argument. No criminal Court can ordinarily punish a person for encroachment upon his own land or for exercising his legitimate rights in connexion with a property which he can call his own. It is only when, in spite of his being an ostensible owner, the property cannot be deemed under the law to belong to him that his interference with it can be culpable. These judgments clearly show that whoever the possessor, the sacred character of graves is not lost and to that extent they go a long way to support the case of the appellants. It needs no authority to say that under the Mahomedan law, a mosque is held more sacred than a grave-yard inasmuch as one is the house of God, while the other is a mere depository of mortal remains. In almost all standard works on the Mahomedan law, mosques have been dealt with separately from every other kind of wakf property merely on the ground of their sanctity. What applies to grave-yards therefore applies with greater force to mosques. If, in spite of the fact that a recognized owner of the land, which has been used as a grave-yard, cannot treat the graves as his personal property, it passes one's comprehension that a person coming into possession of a mosque can be said to be in law entitled to claim it as a private house of his and nothing more. Moreover if the sacred character of a grave-yard is not altered by the lapse of time, how can the sanctity attaching to a mosque vanish in similar circumstances? The possessor in these cases possesses the sacred property, be it a grave-yard or a mosque, subject to all the burdens or privileges attaching to it, and is bound under the law to treat it as such. To hold otherwise would be completely to disregard and override the provisions of the Mahomedan law which the Courts are bound to follow in this respect so long as the guarantee given by the British Government in the shape of proclamations and legislative enactments lasts.

In this connection I may mention that under English law, from which we have mostly derived our notions and conceptions of property, the rule is that even though the title of the former owner is extinguished by the efflux of time, the property remains subject to the rights which are not merely incidental but paramount to his estate. As stated in The Time Limit on Actions by Lightwood, 1909 Edn. at p. 80 :

On the other hand, in (1852) 4 H L C 1065,⁶⁷ Lord Cranworth C., suggested that a legal estate got by disseisin would not affect the rights of parties equitably entitled, and this suggestion has recently been embodied in an authoritative decision in (1906) 1 Ch 386 (C A).⁶⁸ It follows from that case that equitable interests rank as independent estates in the land, and continue to be enforceable against the legal owner of the land for the time being, whether he has acquired it by assignment or by disseisin, unless, in the former case, he can claim to be a purchaser for value without notice—a claim which of course cannot be made by a disseisor. The actual point in (1906) 1 Ch 386⁶⁹ related to restrictive covenants. It was decided that these created in favour of the covenantee an interest in the land which was independent of the estate of the covenantor, and that they were binding upon the land in the hands of an adverse possessor who had gained a legal title in consequence of the lapse of the statutory period and the extinction of the title of the covenantor. But the interest in land created by a restrictive covenant is at most equitable, and the same considerations apply with greater force to trusts which confer upon the cestui que trust a direct interest in the land itself.

At p. 117 of the same book the learned author says :

Of this nature are legal easements, and also the restrictions on the use of the land — or negative easements—created by restrictive covenants entered into by the former owner or one of his predecessors-in-title. Such covenants confer upon the covenantee an equitable interest in the land which is binding on all persons to whom the land comes, until there is a purchaser for value without notice. They are binding therefore on persons acquiring a title by possession, and on purchasers from them who have either actual or constructive notice. . . . And upon the same principle apparently, express trusts create interests paramount to the estate of the trustee, and are not necessarily extinguished at the same time as the trustee's title.

These passages have been quoted with the object of showing that law recognizes certain rights which are not extinguished with the extinguishment of the original owner's title and that even where legal title passes to an adverse possessor, he may in certain circumstances, be bound under the law, by those obligations by which the property adversely possessed by him is bound. In the present case, I am not prepared to accept for a moment that any legal title passes to a non-muslim possessor of a mosque merely by virtue of possession or that the rights of Muslims are extinguished unless certain other things happen to which I shall allude later. The rights of a mosque to be treated as such as well as the right of worshippers to use it as such are rights not only incidental but, in the words of the Author, "paramount to the estate," and what appears to me to be deducible from these passages is that such rights stick to the mosque even if it passes into the hands of a non-muslim. It may be urged by the respondents that the rights possessed by the beneficiaries of a mosque are covered by the words "any interest in immovable property" as used in Art. 144 ; but in my view this Article cannot be invoked inasmuch as no suit for possession of such interest as is possessed by beneficiaries of a mosque can be brought.

In 138 I C 309,⁶⁵ a Division Bench of this Court composed of Sir Shadi Lal C. J. and Hilton J. observed :

Finally it was said that there are no idols in the property and that the temple has for a long time been used as a residential house, but there is authority in 20 I C 78⁴² for the view that a temple is still a temple even if the idol is thrown away or the building has become dilapidated. In my judgment the use of the property as private property cannot in any way detract from its character as dedicated property.

In R. S. A. 1391 of 1936⁶⁶ the dispute related to a piece of land used as a grave-yard which in the revenue records had been described as the property of an ancient Hindu temple in the city of Multan. The managing body of the temple instituted a suit for a declaration that the temple was owner of the land and the defendants had no right to interfere with its rights. The trial Court found that the land had been established as a grave-yard long before the first land revenue records of 1868 described it as such and it consequently held that the plaintiff temple had no right whatever in the land. The District Judge came to a different conclusion and decreed the suit. On appeal, a Division Bench of this Court reversed the judgment of the District Judge and restored that of the trial Court. Coldstream J. who delivered the judgment, observed :

From the history of the land given in the Settlement records it appears that during the time of the Sikhs a Bairagi applied to be given the land, which was uncultivated and unclaimed, and appropriated it . . . From the fact that the whole area . . . was described as a grave-yard in 1868, it is certain that the grave-yard had been in existence a long time and the admitted fact that since then it has been a kabristan is by itself presumptive evidence that the land had been set apart for use as a burial ground. . . .

The Mahomedans may have been apathetic or, probably enough, were content at that time to live in amity with an important Hindu landlord and such conduct will not alter the nature of the wakf if there was a wakf.

The remarks made in this judgment are clearly helpful to the appellants inasmuch as the facts on which the judgment was pronounced were to some extent similar to those now before us. In the case cited, a Mahomedan grave-yard had during the Sikh regime been attached to a Hindu temple and here too it is contended by the respondents that a similar treatment was meted out to the mosque. In spite of the grave-yard having been attached to the Hindu temple by an act of State so to say, it was held that the sacred character of the grave-yard was not lost. It is true that the grave-yard was being used as such; but, as remarked above user or non-user makes no difference in the matter of sacred places.

A I R 1935 Cal 405⁶⁹ and A I R 1933 P C 193.⁷⁰ In 31 P R 1917,⁴⁴ the dispute between the parties related to a mosque, over which the defendants had built a balakhana in which they both resided with their families. The plaintiffs sued for a declaration that the defendants had no right to reside there and for a perpetual injunction restraining them from so residing and thereby causing desecration of a place of worship. The Subordinate Judge granted the relief prayed for but the Divisional Judge dismissed the suit on the ground that it was barred by limitation inasmuch as one of the defendants, who was a mutwalli of the mosque in question, had been occupying the balakhana as a private residence for more than six years prior to the institution of the suit. On appeal a Division Bench of the Punjab Chief Court observed as follows :

The occupation by the defendants of the balakhana over the mosque for purposes of private residence is an act of desecration of a place of worship which indisputably amounts to a "wrong" and the wrong is a "continuing wrong" so long as the occupation lasts in the same sense in which for instance a nuisance is a continuing wrong which gives rise to a cause of action de die in diem; and therefore under S. 23 aforesaid, a fresh period of limitation began to run in favour of the plaintiffs in this case at every moment of the time during which the defendants' occupation of the balakhana has continued. The plaintiffs' cause of action is not the erection of the balakhana by the defendants in 1903, which took place once and for all in that year; but it is the occupation of the balakhana by the latter for a purpose inconsistent with the use of the mosque as a place of worship after its dedication to Divine service. Their occupation is an actionable wrong which may be objected to at any moment of time by any Mahomedan who has a right to use the mosque as a place of worship; and the circumstance that the balakhana was first erected in 1903 and has, it may be assumed, stood in the same condition ever since, did not give rise to a cause of action which can be said to have exhausted itself; a fresh right to sue accrues to every worshipper at the mosque who objects to the balakhana being used for purpose of private residence and whose objection is disregarded by the person in occupation of that balakhana. In our opinion therefore S. 23, Lim. Act, applies to the present case.

On the strength of this judgment, the appellants urge that the respondents' using the mosque in a manner inconsistent with its sacred character is a continuing wrong and consequently the appellants can avail themselves of the benefit of S. 23, Lim. Act. As against this, the respondents contend that inasmuch as the person desecrating the mosque in the judgment cited was the mutwalli himself, and not an outsider, the principles enunciated there are inapplicable to the present case where the desecrators are trespassers. I am however disposed to think that the judgment relied upon does lend support to the appellants' contention. In the first place, one of the defendants there did not occupy any position of trust in relation to the mosque. Secondly, had the case been considered in the light of the desecrators being trustees, S. 10, Lim. Act may have been invoked and not S. 23. Even if it be said that S. 10 was not relied upon as it did not apply to Mahomedan endowments prior to 1929 when the Limitation Act was amended expressly to include the Hindu and Mahomedan endowments, the appellants' position remains unaffected.

In A I R 1935 Cal 405,⁶⁹ S. 23, Lim. Act was held applicable to a case where the plaintiff was found to have a right to use certain land as a passage and the defendants had erected certain sheds which were obstructing him in the exercise of his right. In A I R 1933 P C 193,⁷⁰ the passage on which the appellants have relied, reads as follows :

The charans in the old shrines were impressions of the foot-prints of the saints, each bearing a lotus mark. The Swetambaris who prefer to worship the feet themselves, have evolved another form of charan not very easy to describe This the Digambaris refuse to worship. . . . Both the lower Courts have held that the action of the Swetambaris in placing charans of the description in three of the shrines is a wrong of which the Digambaris are entitled to complain. As regards limitation, the Subordinate Judge held on rather insufficient grounds that the acts complained of took place within six years of suit so that this part of the claim could not be barred by Art. 120, but he also held that it could not be barred under that Article as it was a continuing wrong, as to which under S. 23, Lim. Act, a fresh period begins to run at every moment of the day on which the wrong continues. The High Court on the other hand were of opinion that it was not a continuing wrong and that the claim was barred under Art. 120. In their Lordships' opinion the Subordinate Judge was right in holding that the acts complained of were a continuing wrong and consequently that this part of the claim is not barred.

The respondents contend that the principles enunciated in these judgments do not apply to the present case, but in my view on the question of determining what a continuing wrong is, they do afford a good deal of help to the appellants. Reference has further been made in this connexion to Salmond on Torts. At page 165 the following passage occurs :

When the act of the defendant is a continuing injury, its continuance after the date of first action is a new cause of action for which a second action can be brought, and so from time to time until the injury is discontinued.

An injury is said to be a continuing one so long as it is still in the course of being committed and is not wholly past. Thus the wrong of false imprisonment continues so long as the plaintiff is kept in confinement ; and a trespass continues so long as the defendant remains present upon the plaintiff's land.

At p. 210 the learned author says :

That trespass by way of personal entry is a continuing injury, lasting as long as the personal presence of the wrong-doer, and giving rise to actions de die in diem so long as it lasts, is sufficiently obvious. 'A continuation of every trespass is in law a new trespass.'

The appellants contend that the principles enunciated above apply to this case and that so long as acts of desecration are committed by the defendants, they give rise to a new cause of action at every moment of the day that the desecration continues.

I shall now take up the authorities relied on by the respondents. In 51 All 621,¹⁰ a suit was instituted for a declaration that the house in dispute was trust property and was not alienable. It originally belonged to the ancestor of one Chittaranjan Mukharji but was put to auction and purchased by a stranger in 1878. Sometime afterwards, it was transferred by the auction-purchaser to Mukharji's father and had been held by the family since then. In 1908 Mukharji executed a deed of endowment dedicating the house in dispute in favour of three family idols and appointing his own mother as the shebait of the said idols. No application for change of names in the Municipal Board was however made, nor was any mutation effected in the revenue papers. In 1909 Mukharji and his mother jointly executed a mortgage deed of this house. They purported to mortgage the property in their own right as well as the shebait of the idols. In 1914 a second mortgage of the same property was made in favour of another person. In the meantime a deed of revocation was also executed by Mukharji. When the suit was instituted, the contesting defendant pleaded that there had been no valid dedication, that the deed of endowment had never been acted upon or given effect to, that it had been duly revoked and that in any case there had been adverse possession for more than 12 years against the idols. The

The view of the Court below that there could not be any adverse possession because the idols themselves remained in the house cannot for a moment be accepted. As a matter of fact there can be adverse possession, not only as against the idols but over the idols themselves. That adverse possession can be acquired against idols in respect of property dedicated in their favour is fully clear from several cases decided by their Lordships of the Privy Council In our opinion the same principle applies whether the adverse possession is exercised by a total stranger or by the donor himself. So long as such possession is exercised to the ouster and knowledge of Chittaranjan's mother, who alone can hold the property on behalf of the idols, it would mature into title after the lapse of the prescribed period.

Counsel for the respondents has urged that this is a clear instance of a case where adverse possession was established against a house of God and that the case was on all fours with the case before us ; but I do not consider that his contention is sound. Neither was the house a temple nor was it treated as such in the case and the remarks made by the learned Judges that adverse possession could be established over the idols themselves were clearly obiter. In 32 Cal 129³² a suit had been instituted to recover possession of land as Shebait of an idol. It was resisted on the ground of limitation. In the course of their judgment their Lordships observed :

There is no doubt that an idol may be regarded as a juridical person capable as such of holding property, though it is only in an ideal sense that property is so held. And probably this is the true legal view when the dedication is of the completest kind known to the law

But assuming the religious dedication to have been of the strictest character, it still remains that the possession and management of the dedicated property belongs to the shebait. And this carries with it the right to bring whatever suits are necessary for the protection of the property. Every such right of suit is vested in the shebait, not in the idol. And in the present case the right to sue accrued to the plaintiff when he was under age. The case therefore falls within the clear language of S. 7, Lim. Act.

In 48 All 348,⁷¹ the decision proceeded on the basis of the authority referred to above and it was held that if property belonging to an idol is alienated by the manager, adverse possession runs against the idol just as against any other person. In 23 Cal 536,¹⁶ the appeal arose out of a suit brought by the plaintiff-appellant in 1892 to recover khas possession of certain immovable property with mesne profits, and to obtain a declaration that a pottah and a kabala executed in 1857 and 1875, respectively, set up by the defendants, were illegal and collusive, upon the allegation that the property constituted the debutter of an idol. The defence was that the suit was barred by limitation. It was held that the suit coming either under Art. 134 or under Art. 144, Limitation Act, was barred. The learned Judges in the course of their judgment observed as follows :

The idol is a juridical person capable of holding property as has been authoritatively settled by the decision of the Privy Council in 13 M I A 270,⁷² and the possession of the defendants who profess to derive title, not from the idol, but ignoring its rights, must be taken to have become adverse to the idol from the dates of the two alienations which are both more than 12 years before the date of the present suit The succeeding shebait, as was observed in the case just referred to, formed a continuing representation of the idol's property. If we were to hold otherwise, it would lead to a most anomalous result ; for, then it would follow that, although after any alienation of the idol's property, ten successive shebait may not take any steps to recover the idol's property, the eleventh shebait, it may be after a 100 years or more, would still be in time to institute a suit for recovery of possession. Such a result the Legislature could not have contemplated.

In my view, neither this case is in point nor are the previous cases inasmuch as the property involved in all these cases was property attached to a religious institution and not the religious institution itself. It is in fact not disputed by the appellants that so far as the property attached to a religious institution is concerned, there is a mass of authority in support of the view that it is subject to the law of adverse possession.

In 37 Cal 885¹⁷ on which much stress was laid by counsel for the respondents, the mahant of the math of a Hindu deity who was in possession of two maths died leaving two chelas between whom a controversy arose as to the right of succession to the maths and the property annexed to them. The dispute was settled by an arrangement embodied in an ekrarnama, dated 3rd November 1874, executed by the senior chela in favour of the junior chela by which the math at one place was allotted in perpetuity to the elder chela and his successors, while the math at the other place and the properties annexed thereto were allotted to the younger chela and his successors for the purposes connected with his math subject to an annual payment of a small sum of money towards the expenses of the first math. Their Lordships of the Privy Council remark :

The learned Judges of the High Court have rightly held that in point of law the property dealt with by the ekrarnama was prior to its date to be regarded as vested not in the mahant but in the legal entity, the idol, the mahant being only his representative and manager. And it follows from this that the learned Judges were further right in holding that from the date of the ekrarnama the possession of the junior chela by virtue of the terms of that ekrarnama, was adverse to the right of the idol and of the senior chela as representing that idol, and that therefore the present suit was barred by limitation.

In my opinion this case instead of helping the respondents helps the appellants, inasmuch as what was conceded to the person alleging adverse possession was mere possession of the property in suit and nowhere was it laid down that he had acquired such rights in the property in suit as to enable him to convert it into his private property. In spite of the adverse possession, the religious character of the math or the waqf nature of the properties attached thereto was not altered in any manner.

In 23 Mad 271,⁷³ a suit was brought by the respondent to establish his right to the management of an endowment connected with a temple situate in Madras and the only question that arose for determination was whether the suit was barred by the law of limitation. Their Lordships of the Privy Council applied Art. 124, Lim. Act, as well as S. 28, and observed :

In 1 Mad 235,⁷⁴ this committee held that an assignment by the managers of a pagoda of the right of management thereof was beyond their legal competence under the common law of India and that no custom to do so had been established. There is no proof of any custom in this case, and consequently these deeds of sale are void and did not give any title to the purchaser. The title remained in C and N and the possession which was taken by the purchaser was adverse to them

Their Lordships are of opinion that there is no distinction between the office and the property of the endowment. The one is attached to the other, but if there is, Art. 144 of the same Schedule is applicable to the property. That bars the suit after 12 years' adverse possession.

Here again the subject-matter of the suit was not such as could claim the same incidents as are attached to a mosque under the Mahomedan law.

In 46 Mad 751,⁷⁵ the suit out of which the appeal had arisen was instituted to recover, as against a purchaser under an execution sale and those who claimed under him certain property which had by two deeds dated 21st February 1890 and 13th December 1894 been devoted to charitable purposes. The settlor died in 1895 leaving him surviving a widow and an only son. A creditor of the son sued him and obtained a decree in execution of which the endowments of the charity were attached. The settlor's widow, on behalf of the judgment-debtor's son who was then an infant, filed an objection to the attachment, but it was dismissed on the ground that during the lifetime of his father he had no locus standi. In the same year, another suit was instituted by the minor acting through the same next friend seeking to establish the validity of both the deeds, and while this suit was pending, the property was brought to sale under the decree against the judgment-debtor on 22nd March 1898. The sale was confirmed on 11th August 1898 and delivery of possession was made to the purchaser. From the day of the sale until the institution of the suit, the purchaser and his legal representatives remained in uninterrupted possession of the property. On 31st December 1900, it was declared in the second suit brought by the minor that the properties including those seized under the execution sale formed a trust estate for the purpose specified in the deed. In 1910 the minor attained majority and in 1913 he obtained a decree removing his father from the office of trustee, and two days later brought the suit out of which the appeal arose, to recover the property. Their Lordships remarked :

There is no doubt that whatever period of limitation be assigned, the full period had run before these proceedings were instituted.

A further argument was put forward before their Lordships to the effect that the statute of limitation began to run afresh as each new trustee succeeded to the office, but their Lordships did not agree to this contention and held that the suit was barred under Art. 134 or Art. 144, Lim. Act. It is obvious that the property involved in the suit was property attached to a Hindu institution and the same observations as I have made above apply to this case.

An idol installed in a particular Asthan is a juridical person capable of holding property and getting it managed through its manager, shebait or mahant. Such a manager, shebait or mahant would represent the idol or the institution for the time being completely, and possession, if adverse, against the mahant for the time being must be deemed to be adverse against the idol or the institution, unless the character of the alienation under which possession was taken could be deemed to enure only for the lifetime of a particular manager, shebait or mahant. The adverse possession in such a case begins to run from the date when the alienee takes possession of the property alienated and each succeeding manager, shebait or mahant cannot get a fresh start, so far as the question of limitation is concerned, upon the ground of his not deriving title from any previous manager, the reason being that the succeeding managers, shebait or mahants form a continuing representation of the idol or the institution to which the endowed property has been dedicated.

In 5 Pat 341,⁷⁶ a Division Bench of the Patna High Court held that the possession of a purchaser of the property of a math from its mahant became adverse to the math from the date of the transfer and was not interrupted or affected by the death of the transferor or the succession of a new mahant even though the latter did not derive his title from the previous mahant. The observations made in this case as well as in the previous case are of no use to the respondents in the present case on the grounds stated above.

It is well settled that properties vested in an idol may be lost by the adverse possession of another and that the possession of an out-and-out purchaser from the manager of an idol will be adverse to the idol even if the sale be effected for an unauthorized purpose.

This observation was mainly based on 37 Cal 885¹⁷ and 46 Mad 751,⁷⁴ both of which have been discussed above. In 41 Mad 124,¹⁸ it is observed that possession which was adverse to the institution was equally adverse to the disciples who sued on its behalf, but it is apparent that the property involved in the case was not the institution but the property attached to it. In 36 Bom 135,¹³ the plaintiff, a manager of a temple, brought a suit in the year 1908 to recover possession of certain endowed property which the defendant had purchased at a Court sale in 1870 in execution of a decree against the then manager ; and it was held that the defendant's possession was adverse to the idol. This case is obviously distinguishable on the grounds stated above.

In A I R 1935 Oudh 425,⁵ a representative suit was brought for possession of a house which was alleged to have been built on a part of the land which was used as a grave-yard. The house had stood there since 1912 and its materials had been sold by one Lal Mohammad to one Amir Ali. In 1915 the site of the house too was sold to one Jawad Ali, nephew of Amir Ali. In 1926, Jawad Ali sold the khandhal or the ruined house to the defendant-respondent. On these facts the Subordinate Judge had held that the suit was time-barred under Art. 134, Lim. Act. It was contended before the learned Judges that the lower Court was wrong in applying that Article inasmuch as under certain Privy Council judgments that Article did not apply to Mahomedan wakfs. The learned Judges upheld this contention and applied Art. 142 instead on the following grounds :

This Article is clearly applicable as the plaintiffs or the Muslim community whom they represent were dispossessed of the land in question belonging to the grave-yard by the erection of a house thereon.

It is obvious that there were no graves on the land sold and this case therefore is no authority for holding that the title of an adverse possessor could be perfected on graves in the same manner in which it could be perfected on other mundane holdings. In A I R 1936 Oudh 207,⁶ a takiadar claimed adverse possession over a grave-yard on the ground of his having made certain alienations in respect of certain portions of the grave-yard and also by virtue of his having constructed certain kothris on a portion of the grave-yard. Subsequently another portion of the grave-yard was sold by the takiadar upon which a representative suit was instituted by certain Muslims. King C. J. observed :

The main question is whether the predecessors-in-interest of the defendants had perfected their title to the land by adverse possession. The defendants' case was that eleven kothris had been built on the land in dispute by the predecessors-in-interest of the defendants more than twelve years before the date of the suit. On this point we have a clear finding of fact by the lower Appellate Court to the effect that only four kothris had been built on the land in suit more than twelve years before the date of the institution and those kothris were of a temporary nature. On this finding it seems to me that it is impossible for the appellants to succeed in their claim, based upon adverse possession, in respect of any part of the land in suit which is not covered by the four kothris mentioned.

It has been argued that the cemetery must be taken as a whole and as it has been shown that the takiadars have been alienating portion of the cemetery from time to time and that certain portions have been permanently alienated more than twelve years before the date of the suit, it must be held that the takiadars had perfected their title by adverse possession over the whole area of the cemetery. I am unable to accept this contention.

It may be mentioned that even in relation to the four kothris referred to above, the learned Judge decreed the suit on the ground that the mere building of kothris would not imply renunciation of the takia-dar's permissive possession or the open and public assertion of a hostile title. In the course of this judgment the learned Judge had further observed :

If a takiadar in possession of a grave-yard sells a portion of it to some other person who builds a house and if the Mahomedan community are apathetic in the matter and allow the encroachment to remain for more than twelve years, then it might well be held that the person in possession had perfected his title by adverse possession for more than twelve years over the portion of the grave-yard sold to him.

Counsel for the respondents has laid much stress on this passage but counsel for the appellants has urged that, in the first instance, it is obiter and, secondly, it does not appear to be the considered opinion of the learned Judge. I am however disposed to think, as I shall explain below, that an encroachment by way of demolition or in the shape of a new construction can be taken to be an act of hostility that may be a determining factor in such cases and that if no suit is brought within twelve years of the assertion of such a hostile title, the right of the interested persons is lost.

In 38 Cal 526,⁷⁸ their Lordships of the Privy Council, basing their judgment on a previous judgment of their own reported in 36 Cal 1003,⁷⁹ discussed Art. 134, Lim. Act, in connexion with a permanent lease of debutter lands and held that that Article did not apply. This judgment is of no use to the respondents.

In support of his contention that a mosque, in spite of its being a juristic person, is immovable property in the ordinary acceptation of the term, counsel for the respondents has referred to two judgments of the Punjab Chief Court.

In 153 P R 1884,¹² the mutwalli of a mosque had, on behalf of and for the benefit of the mosque, purchased a house adjoining the mosque. The house in question adjoined the house of another person who happened to be a Hindu. The Hindu brought a suit for pre-emption alleging that the mosque or its guardian had no right on the ground of the mosque's vicinage, inasmuch as the mosque was the property of the deity and not of any earthly owner and had no right of the kind contemplated by the Pre-emption Act attaching to it. Tremlett and Powell JJ., who heard the appeal, remarked :

As to the second point, we are of opinion that though theoretically wakf property belongs to no human owner, nevertheless a mosque as a concrete example of wakf is an institution, and its possession is legally maintained by its lawful guardian for the time being : in virtue of his position, the guardian can resist trespass, recover debts make purchases and mortgages all in virtue of the right which resides in the institution. In the same way, we think that the mosque, as an institution, might acquire an easement by prescription ; and that being so, we cannot think of any rule or principle by which we could deny to the mosque (as an institution) the same right of preventing strangers approaching its walls by the exercise of a right of pre-emption, as other house-holders have. . . .

We have no hesitation in deciding, on this principle, that the mosque as an institution has practically proprietary rights exercised through the guardian, and that one of the rights is to claim, on the ground of vicinage, a right of pre-emption in the case of sales of adjoining properties. . . .

A mosque is in our opinion as much an estate as a house owned by a private owner.

In 59 P R 1914,¹¹ it was argued that since a Mahomedan mosque was not a juristic person and could not hold property as a Hindu dharamsala or temple can, no right of pre-emption could be exercised by the mutwalli of such a mosque. This argument did not find favour with the learned Judges. After holding that the mosque is a juristic or an artificial person, they observed as follows at page 201 of the report :

Under the said clause [S. 13 (1) clause seventhly] it is not, in our opinion, an essential condition of the valid exercise of the right of pre-emption by the present plaintiff that he should be proprietor of the mosque in the same sense in which he would be, for instance, proprietor of his own private dwelling house ; all that it is necessary for him to establish is, that he is the sole guardian and manager of the mosque, . . . that the legal ownership in the mosque . . . does not vest in any other person, and that he alone deals and is entitled to deal with the outside world on behalf and for the benefit of the mosque in all its legal relations. It is in this sense that the mutwalli of a mosque or the manager of a Hindu religious institution, by whatever name he may be called, can be appropriately said to be "a person whose immovable property," though it is not his private property,

The learned Judges further approvingly referred to the passage quoted above from 153 P R 1884.¹² In so far as a right of pre-emption could be claimed only on the basis of owning immovable property, these two judgments obviously lend support to the contention of the respondents that, in spite of a mosque being a juristic person, it is immovable property, but it is clear from these judgments that the word "own" in relation to a mosque does not carry the same signification as it does in ordinary cases. In the judgment of 1884 the mosque is throughout described as an institution and inasmuch as the judgment of 1914 merely follows that of 1884, no special significance is attached to the words "immovable property" used therein.

In support of their contention that there could be no continuing injury in this case the respondents have relied on 49 I C 93,⁸⁰ 19 Mad 154⁸¹ and 3 L L J 128.⁸² In 49 I C 93,⁸⁰ the Corporation of Calcutta objected to a certain platform which had been erected on a piece of land claimed by the Corporation as its own. The owner of the platform sued for a declaration of his right to the land upon which the platform stood. It was found that the platform had been in existence for about 50 years. On these facts the learned Judges observed that the Corporation had lost its right to that portion of the land upon which the platform stood from the date of its dispossession or the discontinuance of possession. They further repelled the contention of the Corporation that it was a continuing wrong, on the ground that the injury was complete on the erection of the wall and even though the effect continued, this did not extend the period of limitation.

In 19 Mad 154,⁸¹ the Municipality of Madras sued to recover as forming part of a highway, a strip of land adjoining the house of defendant, on which a "pial" had been erected more than 45 years before the suit. It was held that the defendant had acquired a title by adverse possession against the Municipality. In 3 L L J 128⁸² the defendants had erected a thatched shed in front of their house and the plaintiffs on the basis of joint ownership asked for a perpetual injunction to issue to the defendants directing them to remove those sheds. It was held that S. 23, Lim. Act, was inapplicable inasmuch as the moment the sheds were erected the injury complained of and sought to be removed by the issue of an injunction was complete and there was no continuing injury within the meaning of the statute.

The principle enunciated in these three judgments is not applicable to the present case as they proceed on their own facts and besides deal with property which is secular and not sacred. As observed in 31 R R 1917⁴⁴ in the case of an encroachment on a mosque, the cause of action does not exhaust itself the moment an encroachment is committed but continues so long as the encroachment continues.

Counsel for the respondents contended that in two of these cases the person against whom judgments were given was a juristic person, but the fact that it was so does not advance his case any further. Reference may also be made to L. P. A. No. 109 of 1935⁸³ decided by the Hon'ble Chief Justice and Monroe J. on 11th December 1935, where relying on the three Privy Council judgments reported in 6 Cal 394,⁸⁴ 1 C W N 96⁸⁵ and 29 I C 385,⁸⁶ it was held that the wrong done by the defendant in constructing a house which obstructed the light and air of the plaintiff was a continuing wrong and that no period of limitation applied. It may be remarked that 49 I C 93⁸⁰ had been relied upon by the learned single Judge of this Court but his judgment was reversed on appeal. In 2 Pat 391⁸⁷ at pp. 402 and 403 the learned Judges observed :

The principle of S. 23, Limitation Act, which deals with continuing wrongs, can have no application to a declaratory suit and there is no recurring cause of action for a declaratory relief.

further made to 26 Mad 410,⁸⁹ in which it was held that the cause of action for a declaratory relief was the alleged wrongful denial by the defendant in each case of the plaintiff's title and possession and the criterion was not whether the right was a continuing one but whether the wrong was a continuing one within the meaning of S. 23.

A perusal of the two judgments cited above shows that the circumstances in which those remarks were made were dissimilar to those now before us and cannot be utilized in defeating the claim of the present appellants. In cases of continuing wrong, the nature of the subject-matter of the suit as well as the nature of the injury complained of is always material and no hard and fast rule can be laid down as to when a wrong is a continuing wrong. Moreover in the view that I take of the case, the rights of the appellants had not been extinguished and both the right and the wrong were continuing.

I have already observed that most of the cases relied upon by either side do not directly touch the question at issue and those that have any bearing on the facts of the present case can be used only by way of analogy and not by way of direct authority. After giving due weight and full consideration to the cases cited and the arguments advanced before us, I have arrived at the following conclusions :

(1) That under the Mahomedan law, (a) a mosque is a place of worship solely and exclusively dedicated to the worship of God in accordance with the tenets of Islam and it remains as such till eternity ; (b) all proprietary rights of men are extinguished in a mosque as soon as it is consecrated as such and can never be revived or resuscitated afterwards, whatever may happen to the building and whosoever may have its custody ; and (c) it can never be treated as private property by any human being in the world, even if he is a Sovereign of the State.

(2) That British Courts in India cannot ignore the provisions of the Mahomedan law altogether while dealing with a mosque and that the special features which it possesses and the peculiar privileges which it enjoys are always to be determined under the Mahomedan law and under no other law, even though one of the parties to the suit before them may be a non-muslim.

(3) That although S. 5, Punjab Laws Act, contemplates that Mahomedan law can be altered or abolished in certain respects, in regard to the privileged position that a mosque occupies under the Mahomedan law, it has neither expressly nor impliedly been altered or abolished by the Limitation Act, or, for that matter, by any other enactment.

(4) That inasmuch as a mosque is placed 'extra commercium' and is in its very nature incapable of being owned by human beings, it cannot be considered "property" in the sense that it can be the object of a right of ownership. It is possible therefore to argue that a mosque is outside the mischief of the Limitation Act, even though that Act purports to deal with properties comprised in a Hindu or Mahomedan endowment in the circumstances mentioned in Arts. 134-A, 134-B and 134-C. It can also be argued that a mosque as a juristic person is not property and is thus not touched by the Limitation Act ; but for the purposes of this case it is not necessary to decide whether this is so.

(5) That on the assumption that a mosque is covered by the provisions of the Limitation Act, it continues to retain its sacred character wherever it may be and in whatever condition it is placed so long as it retains its original shape and form and that its sacred character is never lost by any act of desecration, however profane and sacrilegious it may be.

(6) That the only act of hostility that the Courts in India can countenance in the case of a religious institution like a mosque is an act of direct physical interference with its building and that anything short of it cannot be taken into account inasmuch as all through the period that a so-called adverse possessor does not throw such an open challenge as is indicated above, he continues to remain under a heavy burden of which he is never relieved. By taking possession of a religious institution and not using it for the purpose for which it is intended, he merely imposes upon himself the duties and obligations of a quasi-manager or a custodian and any breach of those duties in the shape of not using the institution in the manner for which it is intended does not benefit him in any way nor does it extinguish the right of the beneficiaries of that institution just as a breach of duty on the part of a recognized custodian or manager would not entail these consequences. A beneficiary aggrieved by his act may seek relief against him if he so chooses to do but his inaction does not prejudice the other beneficiaries.

(7) That so long as the original shape and form of a mosque remain intact, the trespass by a wrongdoer is a continuing injury giving rise to a cause of action at every moment of the day that the trespass continues, and that this cause of action accrues not only to the mosque itself as a juristic person but also to its beneficiaries who in the very nature of the wakf are not confined to any place or period of time but are spread over all places and all ages.

(8) That both the quantity and the quality of the rights of an adverse possessor cannot in law exceed those that exist in the person dispossessed by him and he cannot accordingly prescribe for a title higher than that of the person whom he has dispossessed.

(9) That the rights and obligations attaching to a mosque are paramount to the estate and they cannot be lost merely by the efflux of time and that such rights and obligations follow the property and adhere to it wherever it goes.

(10) That the case of an adverse possessor, who is a wrong-doer, does not stand on the same footing as that of a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice and cannot therefore be considered in the light of those decisions which deal with the latter.

(11) That even if it be considered that the right of beneficiaries of a mosque to offer their prayers in it is an interest in immovable property which I doubt, this right cannot be extinguished under S. 28, Lim. Act, inasmuch as that section deals with the effect of not instituting suits for possession of any property and not with that of not instituting suits for possession of any interest therein as contemplated by Art. 144, Lim. Act, and consequently such rights are never extinguished under the provisions of the Limitation Act.

(12) That to enforce the Mahomedan law to the extent indicated above is in consonance with the principles of justice, equity and good conscience, but the Courts in British India can only go thus far and no further. Where therefore owing to the apathy or inaction of the Muslim community, an adverse possessor alters the outward shape or form of a mosque or destroys its building or replaces it by another building of his own without being challenged within a period of 12 years from the date that he takes that step, he cannot be ousted from that property after the lapse of that period, as his ouster in those circumstances even though permissible under the Mahomedan law, would be both unjust and inequitable under the law of the land.

(13) That inasmuch as the defendants or their predecessors-in-title had not committed any adverse act of the nature indicated above, their possession never became adverse either to the mosque or to its beneficiaries and that consequently Art. 144, Lim. Act, does not bar the remedy of the present appellants.

(14) That on the grounds stated above the demolition of the building in dispute on the night between 7th and 8th July 1935 gave a valid cause of action both to the institution and the beneficiaries and that the suit of both is well within time.

In the course of arguments, reference was repeatedly made to the awkward situation that might arise if the Hindus also put forward a claim to-day to resume all those temples which had long ago been demolished and converted into mosques by the Muslim Kings, as under the Hindu law too the principle applies that when once a temple is dedicated, it always remains a temple. Apart from the fact that it is an extraneous matter which should not be considered in the determination of this case, no complications are likely to arise if the views set forth above are adopted. If any temples were seized and desecrated by the Muslim Kings, they were not allowed to retain their outward shape and form. They ceased to be temples long ago and no temple exists now in relation to which it can be said that to all appearances it is a temple and that it has been treated as such throughout the period of its seizure.

It follows from the conclusions formulated above that the subject-matter of the suit was nothing but a mosque when it was demolished, irrespective of the vicissitudes of fortune through which it had passed and regardless of the profane uses to which it had been put and it is clearly established on the record that everybody concerned, including the parties to the suit, realized this position full well and treated the building as a mosque right up to the moment it was razed to the ground. So far as the Muslims are concerned, they never ceased to revere it as a mosque and throughout the period of the British Rule made several efforts to regain it. Similarly the defendants' predecessors-in-title never for once called it by any other name. It was described by them as a mosque in the previous litigation that ensued soon after the annexation of the Punjab by the British Government. In the pleas put in by Ganda Singh in 1855, he clearly stated that the mosque was granted to him along with the khankah, etc., before the reign of Maharaja Ranjit Singh. His witnesses made a statement to the same effect describing the building in suit as a mosque (pages 18 and 19 of Part 3 of the printed record). In the order that was passed in connexion with this mosque in 1850, the words that "the mosque could not be released" are significant. In 1879 Ganda Singh executed a will in which he described the building as a mosque (p. 36 of Part III). In 1883 when a report was submitted by an Extra Assistant Commissioner to the higher authorities, he stated that the mosque was still standing and even went to the length of saying that it was unusual that a mosque which should ordinarily be in the custody of the Mahomedans should remain in the possession of the Akalis and that the Akalis using it in a manner opposed to the tenets of Islam exacerbated the feelings of the Muslims.

In 1885 in a suit instituted by Mt. Khem Kaur, widow of Ganda Singh, against her son Asa Singh, the latter put in his written pleas where he expressly stated that the mosque was wakf property (p. 45 Part III). In his statement before the Court he once more gave the same appellation to the building in suit and stated that ten shops adjoined the mosque and that the mosque was lying vacant (p. 47, Part III). In the Municipal khasra prepared in 1890 (Ex. P. 15) the site in dispute was described as masjid (mosque). In certain applications submitted to the Lahore Municipality by the then mahants, Gian Singh and Lal Singh, the building in dispute was described as a masjid. In the petition submitted by Harnam Singh to the Sikh Gurdwaras Tribunal he described the building in suit as a mosque (pp. 64 and 65, Part III). In the rent deeds produced by the defendants themselves, which were executed in favour of their predecessors-in-title, this building was always mentioned as a mosque. Harnam Singh who was the last mahant in possession of the mosque appeared in this case as a witness for the plaintiffs and made a clear admission to the effect that the building was a mosque. It is noteworthy that the present defendants themselves described the building in suit as a mosque when they submitted a plan of the property claimed by them before the Sikh Gurdwaras Tribunal. Their own witness Mohar Singh, D. W. 3, in the present case has stated that during the time he lived there, some of the mahants and Sikhs used to call it a masjid (mosque) and that on the night that it was demolished the persons who were engaged in demolishing it said: "It is a mosque of the Muslims, knock it down," (page 85, part I).

Further in the summer of 1935, when the agitation on the part of the Muslim community for the restoration of the mosque took a serious turn, the building demolished was throughout described as a mosque in the various communiques issued by the Government from time to time (pp. 26 to 35, part II). The Deputy Commissioner who was in charge of the city of Lahore in those days and who is shown as a Sikh in the History of Services of Gazetted Officers, has stated as P. W. 25 in this case:

To the Muslim deputation of 3rd July (1935) who complained that the mosque was likely to be demolished any moment, I gave an assurance that I was responsible for the safety of the mosque until the Punjab Government had examined the dispute: page 61, part I.

The obvious fact that those Sikh gentlemen who are said to have seized the mosque by way of resentment never thought for a moment to demolish it and that throughout the regime of Maharaja Ranjit Singh it was allowed to stand as a mosque and that even after the annexation of the Punjab by the British, it never came into the head of any of the mahants in charge of the mosque to alter its shape or form or to demolish it and that not until the time that the mosque came into the possession of the Akalis that the act complained of by the appellants was committed, speaks volumes in favour of the appellants' contention.

That even Mr. Cale, the District Judge, came to the same conclusion is clear from the following passage in his judgment: (P. 141, Part 1)

The cumulative effect of all these documents is to establish that the building in dispute has been regarded throughout as a mosque. In the litigation before the Gurdwaras Tribunal the fact that this building was a mosque, though formally denied in the jawab-i-dawa of the Shiromani Gurdwaras Parbandhak Committee, was apparently accepted without question. Hilton J. in his judgment refers to 'the mosque, the building of which still stands on the disputed property'. Again, in dismissing the petition of the Anjuman Islamia, Hilton J. assumes that the building is a mosque but refused to give the Anjuman Islamia possession on the same ground that the suits of Nur Ahmad in 1853 and 1855 were dismissed, viz. that the claim was time-barred.

Again, at p. 144, he says :

I am of opinion that the arguments in favour of the building being a mosque remain unimpaired.

The question now arises whether the relief prayed for by the appellants in the form of an injunction can be legally granted to them. The appellants contend that in view of the highhandedness displayed by the defendants in demolishing the mosque, the injunction claimed by them should be granted in the terms prayed for. The respondents, on the other hand, urge that, in the first instance, no suit for injunction lies inasmuch as a suit for possession is the only remedy available to the plaintiffs if aggrieved, and secondly, that the relief by way of injunction should not be granted to the appellants because (a) a person out of possession cannot claim such relief, (b) the relief sought by the appellants is impracticable and unenforceable, and (c) the plaintiffs had in a way acquiesced in the act of demolition and delayed their suit. Both sides have relied on various decided cases and text-books on the subject concerned and I shall discuss below all those authorities which have been cited at the Bar.

The matter of perpetual injunction is governed by Ss. 54, 55 and 56, Specific Relief Act (1 of 1877). S. 54 deals with the circumstances in which a perpetual injunction can be granted. S. 55 treats of mandatory injunctions; and S. 56 enumerates certain cases in which injunction should be refused. While dealing with the subject of injunctions, Salmond in his treatise on "The Law of Torts," at p. 173, observes :

The jurisdiction thus conferred upon the High Court to issue injunctions is discretionary. The general principle however in accordance with which this judicial discretion must be exercised is that an injunction should be granted in all cases of continuing or threatened injury, unless in the particular instance there is some special reason why it should be refused. In other words, an injunction, though not a matter of right, is a matter of course, unless the Court in the exercise of its judicial discretion and on special grounds considers that this remedy would not be just or convenient.

At p. 176 the same learned author says :

Conversely, if the defendant has himself acted with wilful and highhanded disregard of the plaintiff's rights, an injunction will be granted even in cases which would otherwise have been deemed too trivial for this remedy.

In "Kerr on Injunctions", p. 1, a writ of injunction is described as a judicial process whereby a party was required to do a particular thing or to refrain from doing a particular thing according to the exigency of the writ. At p. 688, the same learned author, while dealing with the consequences of the breach of an injunction, remarks :

A man who does not obey it to the letter so long as it exists, is guilty of contempt.

Woodroffe in "The Law Relating to Injunctions", says at page 23 :

By the Specific Relief Act the Courts are expressly given power to grant injunctions to do substantive acts when such injunctions are necessary to prevent the breach of an obligation.

At page 114 of the same book it is said :

In addition to the preventive jurisdiction there is superadded the power of the Court to grant a mandatory injunction, that is, an order compelling a defendant to restore things to the condition in which they were at the time when the plaintiff's complaint was made.

At page 152 it is remarked :

The remedy for the enforcement of decrees granting permanent injunctions lies in execution of the decrees and the procedure laid down by the Code relating to the execution of decrees is to be observed.

At page 310 the following passage is relevant :

Though the jurisdiction by mandatory injunction to compel the restoration of matters in status quo is sparingly exercised, yet a trespass irreparable in its character and of a continuing nature may be restrained by a mandatory injunction, thus restoring things to their original condition.

In "The Principles and Practice of Injunctions in British India" by Basu, the following observations at page 151 are pertinent :

So even in England where the jurisdiction to grant mandatory injunction was formerly questioned is now granted as a matter of fact and in a positive form In British India since the passing of the Specific Relief Act, the mandatory injunction is always in the direct form

And with rare exceptions the mandatory form will not be decreed for other purposes than to restore and maintain a condition that has been wrongfully changed.

At one time it was supposed that the Court would not issue mandatory injunctions at all. At a more recent period, in cases of nuisance, a mandatory injunction was granted under the form of restraining the defendant from continuing the nuisance. The Court seems to have thought that there was some wonderful virtue in that form, and that extra caution was to be exercised in granting it. To that proposition I can by no means assent. Every injunction requires to be granted with care and caution, and I do not know what is meant by extraordinary caution.

90. Smith v. Smith, (1875) L R 20 Eq 500=44 L J Ch 630=32 L T 787=28 W R 771.

Where therefore money could not adequately reinstate the person injured, the Court said, as in cases of specific performance, 'we will put you in the same position as before the injury was done.' When once the principle was established, why should it make any difference that the wrong-doer had done the wrong, or practically done it before the bill was filed. It could make no difference where the plaintiff's right remained and had not been lost by delay or acquiescence.

In (1869) L R 9 Eq 28,⁹¹ a certain company which had undertaken an obligation to make a road was called upon to construct it. Sir W. M. James, V. C., in delivering his judgment, remarked :

Rather than allow such a gross piece of dishonesty to go unredressed, the Court would struggle with any amount of difficulties in order to perform the agreement. I can easily conceive if there were a difficulty about the statutory power that the Court might see its way by ordering the company to permit the plaintiffs to do these works at the expense of the company because the company have got the land and the Court might say, 'You must allow the plaintiff to do so, but you must pay all the costs that the plaintiffs have been put to.'

It may be remarked that in this country no such difficulty arises in view of the provisions of law contained in sub-r. (5) of R. 32 of 21, Civil P. C. If a decree for an injunction has not been obeyed, the Rule says that the Court may in lieu of or in addition to all or any of the processes aforesaid, direct that the act required to be done may be done so far as practicable by the decree-holder or some other person appointed by the Court, at the cost of the judgment-debtor, and upon the act being done the expenses incurred may be ascertained in such manner as the Court may direct and may be recovered as if they were included in the decrees.

In (1872) 13 Eq 44,⁹² a Railway Company which had agreed to construct and for ever maintain at their expense a siding of specified length alongside the line upon land belonging to the landowner, and to be provided by him for that purpose, for the use and to the reasonable satisfaction of the landowner, was enjoined so to do. In that case too it was pleaded that a decree for damages would meet the ends of justice; but this contention was repelled. In (1922) 2 Ch 1,⁹³ Scrutton L. J., at page 20 of the report, says :

A wrong-doer who has either broken his contract or committed a tort may be ordered by the Court not to pay the damages thereby caused, but to do acts either to fulfil his contract, sometimes known as specific performance and sometimes by a mandatory injunction to do certain works, or to put right the tortious wrong that he has committed As a matter of jurisdiction it seems that the Court has the right to make any such order, but in practice it does not make certain orders and does make others.

In that case an order had been made requiring the defendants to execute such works as may be necessary to restore the remedial works by clearing out the man-hole at the top of the drain and the order so made was not interfered with on appeal. As indicated above, the respondents' main objection is that inasmuch as a suit for possession lies in the present case, no relief by way of declaration or injunction is permissible. In support of their contention that a suit for possession is competent in the circumstances of this case, the respondents rely on 13 Mad 445,⁵⁰ 33 Mad 452,⁴⁹ 41 Mad 124,¹⁸ 2 Pat 391⁸⁷ and A I R 1932 Lah 394.⁹⁴

In 13 Mad 445,⁵⁰ a suit was instituted for a perpetual injunction restraining the defendant from preventing the plaintiff from entering a house attached to a certain temple. The defendant alleged that he had been in exclusive possession of the house prior to the institution of the suit and that a previous suit by the father of the plaintiff for a declaration of his right to exclusive possession had been dismissed. On these allegations the suit was dismissed as time-barred. The learned Judges of the High Court, after agreeing with the Courts below that the suit was so barred, further remarked that as the plaintiff was out of possession, it was open to him to sue for such possession as he might be entitled to and that the exceptional form of relief by way of perpetual injunction was not open to him.

In 33 Mad 452,⁴⁹ a trustee of a temple on being ousted from possession by his co-trustees sued for a declaration that his dismissal was invalid and for an injunction restraining his co-trustees and the temple committee from interfering with the exercise of his rights as trustee. He claimed no consequential relief in the nature of possession against his co-trustees. It was held that a suit for a mere declaration was not maintainable and that an injunction could not be claimed by a plaintiff out of possession when he did not ask for possession against defendants who were actually in possession. In 41 Mad 124,¹⁸ it was held that if a mutt property had been alienated, the disciples of the mutt could claim a decree directing possession to be given to the head of the mutt for the time being and that it was immaterial whether the head of the mutt was a trustee or only a life-tenant.

In my opinion, none of these cases is in point. In the earliest Madras judgment the remarks are obiter. Moreover the plaintiff there was suing in respect of a house which could be owned and possessed by him as an owner and not in respect of property which in its nature was incapable of being so owned. In the second Madras judgment the plaintiff was a trustee and could claim possession of the trust properties in his capacity as a trustee. In 41 Mad 124¹⁸ again, the suit was for a decree directing possession to be given to the head of the mutt. The proposition as laid down in the Madras judgments holds good where a person who is bound to sue for possession seeks to circumvent the law and has recourse to this extraordinary remedy. Where however this is not the case, the principles enunciated therein do not apply. Neither did the learned Judges intend to lay down any proposition of universal applicability, nor is it applicable in this case. In 2 Pat 391,⁸⁷ it was held that every Mahomedan who derived any benefit from a wakf was entitled to maintain an action against the mutwalli to establish his right thereto, or against a trespasser to recover possession of the wakf property which had been misappropriated, without joining any other person who might participate with him in the benefit. In the course of their judgment the learned Judges observed:

Where, in such a case, the plaintiff is entitled to consequential relief, he is not entitled to sue for a mere declaration. Even when the only consequential relief which the plaintiff is entitled to ask for is that the Court shall deliver the alienated trust property to the offending mutwalli, a suit for a mere declaration is not maintainable.

In A I R 1932 Lah 394,⁹⁴ the judgment cited above was followed. In both these cases the property trespassed upon was property attached to a mosque and not the mosque itself. A beneficiary in some cases may be entitled to recover endowed property for the benefit of the trustee; but I consider that it is not necessary for the beneficiaries of a mosque to bring a suit for possession of the mosque itself and that they cannot be compelled so to do if they merely seek to establish their right to offer payers in it. This right they can exercise irrespective of the fact that the mosque is in the custody of a non-muslim, inasmuch as under the Mahomedan law a non-muslim can be a custodian of a mosque. To deny the beneficiaries a relief by way of declaration in the circumstances of this case would be to limit the scope of the substantive part of S. 42, Specific Relief Act, within a very narrow limit and to extend that of the Proviso beyond legitimate bounds. The Proviso to S. 42 comes into play only where the plaintiff being able to seek further relief than a mere declaration of title omits to do so; and, in my view, the beneficiaries of a mosque are not able to sue for possession of the mosque within the meaning of the Proviso.

In 75 I C 549,⁹⁵ the suit appears to have been instituted by a person in the position of a trustee who claimed the gaddi for himself as also a declaration of his right of ownership to certain property known as the Jacobabad tikana to which several shops were attached and a factory too. Evidently that suit is distinguishable from the one now before us. In (1905) 1 Ch 386,⁸⁸ it was held that no mandamus would lie against a local authority to do any particular works, nor would the Court prescribe what particular works were necessary for the maintenance of the roads. Apart from the fact that in almost all the English cases relied on by the appellants in this case and alluded to above this judgment was referred to in the counsel's arguments and not followed, the principles on which it was decided do not hold good in India. In 18 I C 394,⁹⁶ a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court observed that a person could not sue for a declaration of his right unless he had an existing right and a mere contingent right which might never ripen into an actual existing right, was not sufficient to ground an action for such a declaration. These observations are evidently not in point. Besides, I have already held that the appellants have an existing right and on that ground this ruling will not harm the plaintiffs. I am of opinion therefore that neither were the appellants bound to sue for possession nor are they debarred from claiming relief by way of injunction against the defendants. In fact the beneficiaries of a mosque are entitled only to the right of saying prayers in it and to gain that object a relief by way of declaration or injunction is the only relief that they can claim.

In the present case, the beneficiaries have asked for the reconstruction of the building as it originally stood and they can achieve this end only by obtaining a mandatory injunction against the respondents. To this the respondents demur on the ground that it is difficult on the record to determine what the original condition of the building was when it was demolished and that consequently it is impossible for this Court to grant the relief prayed for. I however do not agree. A person who takes upon himself the responsibility of demolishing the building of a mosque cannot escape his liability to restore it to its original shape merely on the ground that it is physically impossible to reconstruct it in the exact shape, form and condition in which the building stood when it was demolished. What the defendants have to restore in this case is abundantly clear from the evidence led by the plaintiffs. The dimensions of the mosque are well known and so are its outward features including the domes and the minarets. It has also been reliably established that if a new building is erected on the same lines as before with the materials now available, it would cost about thirteen to fourteen thousand rupees (page 71, Part 1). As already pointed out, under O. 21, R. 32, sub-r. (5), Civil P. C., if the defendants refuse to obey the injunction issued, this Court can direct even the plaintiffs, or any other person, to do the act required to be done so far as practicable, at the cost of the judgment-debtors, and the expenses incurred thereon can be recovered as if they were included in the decree. In my view therefore there is no substance in the objection raised by the defendants on this score.

Taking into consideration the circumstances in which the mosque was demolished, the conclusion is irresistible that the act of the defendants was most high-handed. They were fully aware of the fact that they would injure the feelings of the whole Muslim community if they demolished the mosque. They knew that His Excellency the Governor was making every possible effort to find the best solution of the difficult situation that had arisen. They were aware of the undertaking given by the Deputy Commissioner that the mosque would be protected until the Punjab Government had examined the dispute. In spite of all this, the mosque was demolished before any decision could be arrived at by the Punjab Government. This act of demolition involved a clear breach of obligation which the defendants owed to the Muslim community in general and there was no delay or acquiescence on the part of the plaintiffs or the community whom they represent, as the circumstances brought on the record clearly show. I would therefore grant an injunction against the defendants to re-construct the building in the same shape and form as it possessed prior to its demolition and to allow the members of the Muslim community to exercise their right of worship in it. I would further restrain the defendants from using the site as it is at present or the building when constructed, in any manner which is inconsistent with its sacred character.

There still remains the question whether the suit is barred by any provision of law relied on by the defendants. As stated above, the bar pleaded was three fold (a) on account of the previous decisions between 1850 and 1883; (b) on account of the decision of the Sikh Gurdwaras Tribunal; and (c) on the strength of Sections 32 and 37 of the Sikh Gurdwaras Act. I shall take up these points in the order in which they are stated above.

The bar pleaded in (a) was based on S. 11, Civil P. C. It was stated that certain suits were instituted by one Nur Ahmed, who claimed to be the mutwalli of the mosque, against the predecessors-in-title of the present defendants from 1850 to 1885, and that inasmuch as his claim for possession of the mosque was defeated on every occasion, the present suit was barred by the rule of res judicata. It was also alleged that on a report made by an Extra Assistant Commissioner in 1883 the Government declined to restore the mosque to the Muslims. The material portion of S. 11 reads as follows :

No Court shall try any suit or issue in which the matter directly and substantially in issue has been directly and substantially in issue in a former suit between the same parties, or between parties under whom they or any of them claim, litigating under the same title, in a Court competent to try such subsequent suit or the suit in which such issue has been subsequently raised, and has been heard and finally decided by such Court.

Before a suit can be held to be barred under Section 11 therefore several conditions must be satisfied, and it is apparent that in the suits relied upon, most of the requirements mentioned in the section are lacking. So far as the case of 1850 is concerned, it is stated in Exhibit D-40, which is a robkar, dated 14th November 1885, issued by the Court of the Deputy Commissioner, Lahore, that that was a criminal case in respect of the mosque and the land attached thereto. The order passed therein was that the mosque could not be released. That order was upheld on appeal by the Commissioner, Lahore. That suit clearly is not a suit contemplated by S. 11, Civil P. C. In 1853 a regular civil suit appears to have been instituted by Nur Ahmed, which was dismissed on the ground that his suit of 1850 had been dismissed. On 11th December 1854 Agha Kalb Abid Khan, Extra Assistant Commissioner, Lahore, made an order on the record of the muafi estate measuring 13 bighas of culturable land with a well and a mosque, wherein he remarked that the building was a mosque and the land sued for was attached thereto and that interference by the Akalis or Hindus was most improper. He however declined to interfere on account of some order which had been previously made in the suit of one Muhammad Bakhsh and others.

It appears from a copy of the order, Exhibit D-37, that the subject-matter of the petition before him was culturable land and his decision was that he could not award the applicant the muafi land sued for. Ex. D-39 is a copy of the order made in appeal from the order of Agha Kalb Abid Khan. Besides, there are certain other orders passed by the Appellate Courts in the matter of Nur Ahmed, which have been duly exhibited in the case. It would however appear that in none of these orders had any finding been arrived at as to whether Nur Ahmed was a mutwalli or whether the mosque had ceased to be a mosque or the rights of the Muslims to say prayers therein had been extinguished. All that was decided was that Nur Ahmed could not recover possession of the mosque from the persons in possession on the ground that they had been in possession of the mosque along with the appurtenant building and the other property attached thereto since the time of the Sikh rulers. No decision was consequently arrived at on the questions now in issue, nor were they ever raised in the form in which they have now been raised. All that the defendants' predecessors-in-title contended in those cases was that they could not be deprived of the possession of the mosque and the other properties attached to it on the ground of their old possession. They never for once denied that the subject-matter of the suit was a mosque. In fact if the plea of res judicata can be allowed to prevail on the basis of those judgments, it would debar the present defendants from denying that the building they demolished was a mosque.

Further, as remarked by the District Judge: "The subject-matter of the suit is not the same as it was in the previous litigation". In all the cases instituted by Nur Ahmed he sought to recover possession from the Sikhs of the property to which he laid claim as mutwalli, while here the suit is by the mosque itself as well as the beneficiaries for the restoration of the mosque to its original shape and form, with the additional prayer that the beneficiaries may be allowed to use it as a mosque. On this ground too the rule of res judicata does not operate. So far as the report of 1883 is concerned, no question of res judicata arises at all, as it was not a decision given in a suit but an order passed in an executive capacity.

We were also referred to 47 P R 1870⁹⁷ where 64 P R 1867⁵¹ was dissented from and it was held that the Civil Code which was in force at the time of the annexation of the Punjab had no legal sanction. On the strength of this judgment it was urged that inasmuch as all the previous decisions were given when the only law in force was that Code and no other Code, they could not operate as res judicata. This argument is not without force. Decisions which are contemplated to operate as res judicata under S. 11, are those which are given after a complete observance of the procedure laid down by the law and not those which are more or less orders passed in an executive capacity. To found the decision of a Civil Court entirely on the findings arrived at in a criminal judgment, in my view, robs it of all its sanctity and binding force, and it is obvious that all the judgments relied upon by the respondents appear to have taken their cue from the criminal judgment alone which was passed in 1850.

In A I R 1936 Mad 267,⁹⁸ Venkatasubba Rao J. observed:

When in a suit, where the trust is properly represented, after real and genuine contest a decision is given, it will be absurd to hold that persons not parties to the previous suit, although they may have an interest in the trust, can ask the matter to be re-opened and the question to be re-tried.

There has been no such contest in the suits relied upon as contemplated in this judgment, nor is the question in the present case the same.

In 39 Cal 887,⁹⁹ the headnote says:

The widow of a shebait of a certain temple, who succeeded her deceased husband in that office, mortgaged some land, as also her interest in the temple income to one J, who obtained a decree on his mortgage on 24-9-1880. In execution thereof he put up the temple income for sale, purchased it himself and obtained delivery of possession in 1892. The widow and the next reversioner then brought a suit to set aside the sale on the ground that the property sold was not saleable. That suit was withdrawn with liberty to bring a fresh suit. The widow alone then brought another suit which was dismissed on the ground that it was barred by S. 244, Civil P. C. She having died, the reversioner brought a suit against the said J, on 3rd January 1910, for a declaration that he was entitled to the temple income inasmuch as it was not saleable. On objections taken by the defendant that the suit in so far as it related to the temple income was barred by the rule of res judicata and by limitation: Held that inasmuch as there was no collusion or dishonesty about the former suits, and as in one of them the plaintiff himself was a party, the decree passed in the suit against the shebait would bind her successor, the plaintiff, and that therefore the present suit was barred by the rule of res judicata.

A mere perusal of the headnote shows that the facts of that case were clearly distinguishable from those of the present case. In 12 C W N 739,¹⁰⁰ the respondents relied on the following passage appearing at p. 742 of the report:

It is sufficient to hold that in 1883, when the previous litigation was commenced, S. K. under the arpannamah of 1879, had authority to represent the debutter estate and that as a matter of fact she did represent that estate. She undoubtedly sued in her capacity as representative of the estate and there can be no question that the Court of Wards who carried on the suit as her next friend, held possession on her behalf and was in fact and in law the administrator of the estate. Under such circumstances it is impossible to hold that the estate in the hands of the appellant is not bound by that judgment. If the previous litigation had been brought by the then shebait, there could not have been any possible controversy that the decision would be binding upon the present appellant as shebait, on the principle explained by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in 2 I A 145,⁴¹ and by this Court in 11 C W N 489¹⁰² that the successive shebaites formed in effect a continuing representation of the property of the idol.

Apart from the fact that the circumstances of that case are different, it is noteworthy that the learned Judges have appended a condition to the observations made by them in the following terms:

This is of course subject to the qualification that the judgment relied on is untainted with fraud and collusion and that the necessary and proper issues were raised, tried and decided in the suit.

It is obvious that none of the issues which have now been raised by the appellants, were ever raised, tried or decided in the previous suits.

In 46 All 651,⁵² which is based on 2 I A 145,⁴¹ it was observed:

A decree obtained by one of the trustees on behalf of a trust against the other trustees, either for a declaration that the property in dispute was trust property or for rendition of accounts in a suit brought in the interests of the trust or for the protection of the trust property, is binding as much on the trustees who are parties to the suit as on all persons interested in the trust; for, as observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in *Prosunno Kumari Debya v. Golab Chand Baboo*⁴¹ the shebaites of a trust form a continuing representation of the idol's property. Each of the above suits was instituted by Mt. S. K. not in her private right but on behalf of the trust, and as such the decision arrived at in those suits is conclusive between the parties thereto within the meaning of Explan. 6 to S. 11, Civil P. C.

The principle enunciated in this judgment however does not advance the case of the respondents any further.

In 59 Cal 636,¹⁰¹ the following proposition was laid down:

Where the plaintiff or the defendant sues or is sued in a representative capacity, which attaches to him under the general law, the decision binds the entire body whom he represents. These are cases of administrators, trustees, shebaites, mutwallis

It is no doubt true that in certain circumstances decrees made in favour of or against a mutwalli may bind the beneficiaries; but those circumstances do not exist in the present case. Besides, Nur Ahmed had all along been claiming that his ancestors were mutwallis of the mosque, but his status as such was never recognized in the orders referred to above. Inasmuch as it was never denied that the building was a mosque, the present appellants are not affected by the principle laid down in this judgment even if it be admitted that it applied to their case.

For the reasons given above, I consider that the judgments relied upon by the respondents do not bar the present suit. Even if those decisions carry any binding force, they will not operate as res judicata as the issues involved in the present case were never raised or decided by them against the Muslim community. The decision that the mosque cannot be released does not, as explained above, extinguish the rights of the Muslim community to use it as a place of worship or deprive the mosque of a right to continue as such.

The respondents have next urged that the judgment of the Sikh Gurdwaras Tribunal, in the petition of the Anjuman Islamia operates as res judicata and that inasmuch as the decisions of the Tribunal are as binding as the decisions of a Civil Court and that the issues now under controversy were raised before the Tribunal and decided there, the present suit of the appellants based on the same facts and raising the same questions is barred. The appellants on the other hand contend that the decision of the Sikh Gurdwaras Tribunal does not operate as res judicata because (a) it is a special Tribunal not contemplated by the Code of Civil Procedure; (b) the issues which have been raised in the present case were not raised and decided in that form by the Tribunal; and (c) even if grounds (a) and (b) were decided against them, (1) the Anjuman Islamia, on whose petition the decision was given did not hold a representative capacity despite the fact that it purported to make the petition on behalf of the entire Muslim community, and the community could not be bound by the decision inasmuch as the formalities laid down by O. 1, Rule 8, Civil P. C., were not observed; and (2) the only order that the Gurdwaras Tribunal could pass was that of rejecting the petition under Section 5 and it could not confer any title on the Sikhs.

The petition of the Anjuman Islamia was made under S. 5, Sikh Gurdwaras Act under which any person claiming any right, title or interest in any property included in the list submitted under S. 3 is empowered to put forward a counter claim. It was stated therein that the petition was being presented on behalf of the Mahomedans and it was prayed that the property included in the list be excluded. Hilton J. who delivered the principal judgment, while disposing of this petition remarked :

The claim is based on the allegation that all this property was waqf of the mosque and that the Sikhs took forcible possession of it. Similar claims were made on behalf of the Mahomedan community in 1852, 1855 and 1883. These claims failed on the ground that the Sikhs had adverse possession. The learned counsel for the petitioners based his argument before us on the claim that the mosque having been built as a mosque by Mir Mannu about 1750 must always remain a mosque and that property once dedicated to waqf can never be lost by adverse possession. He did not, however, cite before us any authority to support this proposition, and in my judgment there is not sufficient ground upon which we can depart from the view which was taken in the suits of 1852, 1855 and 1883, which are relevant under S. 42 of the Act. In my judgment the claim of the Anjuman Islamia has no valid foundation and the mere fact that the building is shaped as a mosque does not justify us in granting them a decree. I would therefore dismiss petition No. 1282.

I shall deal first with the point (c) raised by the appellants inasmuch as if the decision on that point goes in their favour, no other question arises. It is admitted that no such action was taken by the Tribunal on the petition of the Anjuman Islamia as is laid down under O. 1, R. 8, Civil P. C. By S. 12 (11), Sikh Gurdwaras Act, it is provided that the proceedings of a Tribunal shall, so far as may be, and subject to the provisions of the Act, be conducted in accordance with the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure 1908, and it is clear therefore that in order to make its decision binding on the entire Muslim community, the Tribunal was bound to follow the procedure laid down in respect of representative suits in the Code of Civil Procedure. The respondents refer to S. 15, Sikh Gurdwaras Act, and urge that inasmuch as by that section power is conferred on the Gurdwaras Tribunal to inquire if any person desires to be made a party to any proceeding and to join in any proceeding any person who it considers ought to be made a party thereto, O. 1, R. 8, does not apply to the proceedings before the Sikh Gurdwaras Tribunal and that if no action under S. 15 is taken by the Gurdwaras Tribunal, no person, however aggrieved he may be by its decision, can re-agitate the same matter. This however does not appear to me to be a true exposition of law. No doubt S. 15 empowers the tribunal to summon any person and join him as a party in the proceedings, but that section does not in any way make the tribunal independent of the provisions of O. 1, R. 8, in those suits there the decision is likely to affect persons other than those who are not before it. It will be seen that power to strike out or add parties is conferred upon all Civil Courts by O. 1, R. 10 (2), Civil P. C., yet they are bound to take action under O. 1, R. 8, whenever a suit purports to have been instituted in a representative capacity. The power conferred on the Tribunal under S. 15, Sikh Gurdwaras Act, is similar to the one conferred upon the Civil Courts by O. 1, R. 10 (2) and does not absolve it from the necessity of following the procedure as laid down in O. 1, R. 8. It was incumbent therefore upon the Tribunal to observe all the formalities laid down there in order to make its decision binding on the general Muslim community. As the Tribunal failed to do so, its decision cannot bind the present appellants.

It may be remarked that a suit by a beneficiary to establish the right of offering prayer is not a representative suit. In 7 All 178,⁵⁴ a case decided by five Judges of the Allahabad High Court, it was held that every Mahomedan who had a right to use a mosque for purposes of devotion was entitled to exercise such right without hindrance and was competent to maintain a suit against anyone who interferes with its exercise, irrespective of the provisions of S. 30 and S. 539, now corresponding to O. 1, R. 8, and S. 92, Civil P. C. 1908, respectively. It was further decided that S. 30, Civil P. C., applied only to cases in which many persons were jointly interested in obtaining relief, and not to cases in which an individual right had been violated. Petheram C. J., who delivered the principal judgment, observed as follows :

The question has arisen in consequence of the peculiar way in which property of this kind is held. According to Mahomedan custom, the property in a mosque and in the land connected with it is vested in no one. It is not the subject of human ownership, but all the members of the Mahomedan community are entitled to use it for purposes of devotion whenever the mosque is open. . . . Every one who has such a right is entitled to exercise it without hindrance, and has a right of action against anyone who interferes with its exercise. It is not a joint right ; it is a right which belongs to many people.

In this connexion our attention was further drawn to the remarks made by the learned Judges of the Punjab Chief Court in their judgment under appeal before their Lordships of the Privy Council in 27 P R 1913.²¹ At p. 101 of the report they say :

Plaintiffs sue as members of the Mahomedan community each and every member of which is entitled to bury his dead anywhere in the whole grave-yard . . . It is not necessary for such a member to shew that he has used the grave-yard ; a newcomer, for instance, if a Mahomedan, has an equal right with the oldest resident.

In A I R 1931 Oudh 45⁵⁸ Pullan J. in a case relating to a grave-yard remarked :

Any Mahomedan interested in the burial of the dead on this plot was at liberty to bring a suit objecting to the sale of the property This property is inalienable and whether it belongs to the public or not, there is no bar to the present objector filing a suit to contest the sale even if it be held that as a party he is debarred from making an objection under S. 47, Civil P. C.

It follows from these judgments that the right of a Muslim to use a mosque is an individual right and can be exercised whenever he chooses so to do, so long as the mosque exists.

In 56 Mad 657⁵³ it was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that in a representative suit instituted under O. 1, R. 8, Civil P. C., the decision in a former suit did not operate as res judicata by force of S. 11, Expln. 6, if the former suit was not instituted in compliance with the above rule, namely by permission of the Court; the Court giving notice as therein prescribed to all persons interested. The only possible exception that their Lordships contemplated was where the former suit had been litigated bona fide on behalf of the plaintiff and others with a common right and the omission to comply with the rule had been inadvertent and no injury therefrom had been sustained by the plaintiff in the second suit. This exception however would not be applicable in this case in view of the observations made by Petheram C. J. in 7 All 178⁵⁴ to the effect that a right exercisable by a Mahomedan in connexion with a mosque is not a joint right in the ordinary sense of the term. The District Judge while dealing with this judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council referred to the interpretation put upon it by a Division Bench of this Court in a judgment reported in A I R 1936 Lah 13,¹⁰³ but the same Bench in a later judgment, reported in 18 Lah 629,¹⁰⁴ had thrown further light on the matter and after discussing the judgment of their Lordships at length had come to the following conclusion :

A decision in a representative suit binds all persons other than the plaintiffs expressly named in the plaint only when, (a) if the suit relates to a private right, the formalities as laid down in O. 1, R. 8, are observed and (b) if the suit relates to a public right, the formalities laid down in S. 91, Civil P. C., are observed.

Both the judgments were delivered by me and in the later judgment I explained what was laid down in A I R 1936 Lah 13.¹⁰³ The view expressed in 18 Lah 629,¹⁰⁴ therefore, represents the considered view of this Court so far as the interpretation of 56 Mad 657⁵³ is concerned.

If a suit ceases to be a representative suit, it does not operate as res judicata. It was remarked by their Lordships of the Privy Council in A I R 1928 P C 16¹⁰⁵:

In so far as the nature of the suit was changed by the amendments mentioned, viz., by adding strangers to the trust as defendants and by prayers for relief not covered by S. 92, the suit ceased to be one of a representative character and the decree based on the compromise such as it was, viz. by six only out of the seven plaintiffs in the suit, however binding as against the consenting parties, cannot bind the rest of the public. S. 11, Explan. 6, has no application to such a case.

In 12 Lah 497,¹⁰⁶ the principle of res judicata was not applied to a case where there had been a change in the parties. Johnstone J. who delivered the judgment in concurrence with Broadway J., observed:

In view of the difference in personnel between the plaintiffs in the suit and the parties in the present appeal, I do not think that the principle of res judicata can be properly applied.

On the grounds stated above, I am satisfied that the judgment of the Sikh Gurdwaras Tribunal does not bar the present suit. Firstly even if the Tribunal be held to be a Court within the meaning of S. 11, inasmuch as it failed to take any action in accordance with the provisions of O. 1, R. 8, Civil P. C., its judgment cannot be treated as a judgment in a representative suit. Secondly, a suit instituted by a beneficiary for the exercise of his right of devotion in a mosque is, as laid down in 7 All 178⁵⁴ and the other judgments alluded to above, a suit for the enforcement of an individual right and is not covered by the provisions of O. 1, R. 8. The Anjuman Islamia can at best be treated as a beneficiary and no more. This being so, the present appellants cannot be said to be claiming under the Anjuman as contemplated by S. 11, so as to be bound by the decision in its petition.

105. Abdur Rahim v. Abu Mahomed Barkat Ali, (1928) 15 A I R P C 16=108 I C 361=55 I A 96=55 Cal 519 (P C).

In this view of the matter it is not necessary to determine whether the Sikh Gurdwaras Tribunal is a Court within the meaning of S. 11, or whether the issues raised before it were the same as are raised in this suit.

Before I leave this subject, I may refer to 16 Lah 968,¹⁰⁷ where a Division Bench of this Court held that on the hearing of a petition under S. 10, which is analogous to S. 5, the Tribunal had no power to make a declaration that the property in suit belonged to a Sikh Gurdwara, and that all that it could do was to reject the claim as put forward in the petition. On this ground too the decision of the Tribunal would not be of much use to the respondents.

The third ground on which it is contended that the present suit is barred is based on the provisions of the Sikh Gurdwaras Act itself. For facility of reference it will be necessary to reproduce here these sections on which this objection is founded. The material portion of S. 30 (ii) reads as follows:

If any right is claimed for any person in connexion with a Notified Sikh Gurdwara and the Court finds that the right might have been made the subject of a claim in a petition forwarded to the Local Government under the provisions of S. 5, . . . and that no such claim was duly made within time, the Court shall decide the claim against the person claiming the right:

Provided that in the case of a claim that might have been made under the provisions of S. 5 or S. 10, the Court need not so decide, if it is satisfied that the failure to make the claim was owing to the fact that the person who might have made the claim . . . had no knowledge of the fact that the right, title or interest had been included in a list published under the provisions of sub-s. (2) of S. 3 . . . and could not by the exercise of reasonable diligence, have come to know . . . of the fact that such right, title or interest, was so included.

Where in any suit or proceeding pending at the commencement of this Act or instituted after its commencement, in a Civil or Revenue Court it has become or becomes necessary to decide any claim in connexion with a Notified Sikh Gurdwara which the Court finds might be made under the provisions of S. 3, 5, . . . within the time prescribed therein, the Court shall frame an issue in respect of such claim and shall forward the record of the suit or proceeding to a Tribunal.

Except as provided in this Act, no Court shall pass any order or grant any decree or execute wholly or partly, any order or decree, if the effect of such order, decree or execution would be inconsistent with any decision of a Tribunal, or any order passed on appeal therefrom under the provisions of this part.

Relying on the provisions which have been reproduced above, the respondents contend that inasmuch as the present appellants failed to put in a claim under S. 5, Sikh Gurdwaras Act, the present suit cannot but be decided against them under the substantive part of sub-s. (ii) of S. 30 and that even if they are entitled to claim the benefit of the proviso to that sub-section, the proceedings must be referred to the Sikh Gurdwaras Tribunal under S. 32. They finally urge that at any rate no decision favourable to the appellants can be made in the present suit inasmuch as such decision would offend against the provisions of S. 37, Sikh Gurdwaras Act. The appellants resist these propositions of law and contend that the Proviso to S. 30 (ii) is clearly applicable to their case inasmuch as, firstly, they had no knowledge of the fact that the right, title or interest in the property in suit had been included in any list published under the provisions of S. 3 (2) and, secondly, they could not by the exercise of reasonable diligence have come to know of the existence of the fact that such right, title or interest was so included. In the list put in by the Shromani Gurdwara Parbandhak Committee the property claimed by the committee, so far as it relates to the present suit, was described as Shahid Ganj Singhian and no member of the Muslim community could ever guess that this appellation was intended for the mosque in suit. The Shromani Gurdwara Parbandhak Committee had intentionally used this mysterious appellation so as to lead the Muslims astray and that they cannot now be allowed to take advantage of this wrongful act of theirs. They further urge that the Proviso to S. 30 (ii) was not controlled by S. 32, inasmuch as S. 32 applies to the transfer of those suits only which were pending in Courts at the time that the Sikh Gurdwaras Act came into force and does not apply to suits which may subsequently be instituted. So far as S. 37 is concerned, the appellants' position is that the section itself makes an exception in favour of suits contemplated by the Proviso to S. 30 (ii) and that consequently it does not affect their case.

On giving due weight to the arguments advanced on both sides, I am of opinion that the case of the appellants is covered by the Proviso to S. 30 (ii). It is not denied by the respondents that the description of the property given in the list was as stated by the appellants. They, however, urge that by the exercise of due diligence, the Muslims in general could come to know of the fact that that description referred to the mosque in suit and that, in fact, the Anjuman Islamia was apprised of it and did put in a petition under S. 5. I am not, however, impressed by this argument. The Anjuman Islamia may have utilized its own resources claiming as it does several resourceful members, but the community in general had no such resources at their disposal and could not be put on their guard in view of the wrong description of the property claimed. The cases relied upon by the respondents in this respect are not in point. In A I R 1930 Lah 717,¹⁰⁸ it was observed :

The publication of the list and notifications is undoubtedly intended to give notice to the general public of what was being claimed and the Proviso to S. 30 (ii) can only be availed of on proof of what is therein required.

This does not in any way militate against the position of the appellants, inasmuch as the list here did not mention the mosque in suit at all and the publication of such list can in no manner defeat the claim of the present appellants.

In A I R 1933 Lah 828,¹⁰⁹ Addison J. who delivered the principal judgment remarked :

Gurbakhsh Singh was in full physical possession of the bunga and service upon him was proper service within the meaning of S. 3. Nor can it be said that in this case Proviso 1, S. 30 (ii) of the Act can be applied. . . .

The defendants other than Gurbakhsh Singh were entered as in possession of 31 kanals 17 marlas of land and a muafi in the same list as the list in which the bunga was entered. There was an entry as regards the muafi and as regards the land in the revenue papers so that with respect to them the defendants other than Gurbakhsh Singh were given notice under S. 3 of the Act and a complete list was sent to them in which of course the bunga was also entered. They knew that action had been taken as regards all land attached to the Golden Temple. It is true that they only directly received notice with respect to the muafi and the land but if they had exercised any diligence at all they would have seen that the bunga was entered in the list.

This case is clearly distinguishable from the case now before us as the recital of the facts stated above would indicate. The persons who were held to be barred under the substantive part of S. 30 (ii) were those to whom the lists had actually been despatched and the mere fact that they, being interested in the land only did not notice that the bunga was also mentioned in the list, could not serve as an excuse for not making a claim under S. 5. In the case before us, there is no allegation that any notice was sent to the Muslim community in general or that the property claimed by the Sikhs was even remotely described as a mosque.

Reference in this connexion may be made to 15 Lah 66.¹¹⁰ There the property claimed by the Sikhs was shown in possession of two persons who were servitors of the Gurdwara. No mention was made of the land being shamilat nor was a copy of the relevant entry of the Record of Rights attached thereto. Notice was accordingly issued to the two persons said to be in possession and as they made no claim, a notification by the Government was issued under S. 5 (1). The village proprietary body then instituted a suit and the trial Court found that the land belonged to them and was in their possession. On these facts it was held by a Division Bench of this Court that as the village proprietary body had no knowledge of the fact that their shamilat land had been included in the list and as they could not by the exercise of reasonable diligence have come to know of the fact that their land had been so included, the Proviso to S. 30 (ii) applied. The case of the appellants is much stronger than the case cited above.

The question now arises whether under S. 32 it is necessary to forward the proceedings to the Sikh Gurdwaras Tribunal. In this matter also the contention of the respondents, as stated above, does not appear to me to be in consonance with law. The language of the section is unambiguous. It is intended to apply only to those suits which were pending at the commencement of the Act or in which, though instituted after its commencement, the claim could be made under the sections mentioned therein within the time prescribed. It does not obviously cover such suits as are instituted long after the time during which the petitions could be made has expired. A comparison of the language employed in S. 30 (ii) and S. 32, respectively, would lend support to this conclusion. In both sub-ss. (i) and (ii) of S. 30 the words used are "might have been made the subject of a claim," while in S. 32 the words are "might be under the provisions;" and interpreted in their plain grammatical sense, the words "might have been made" refer to the time that has passed, while the words "might be made" contemplate that the time is still running during which the claim can be made. It is true that the interpretation put by the respondents upon S. 32 is in accordance with the construction put upon the section in a judgment reported in 15 Lah 66;¹¹⁰ but with all respect I venture to differ from the conclusion arrived at there. In a later judgment also, to which I was a party, the section was interpreted in the same manner; but it appears that the point was conceded by the opposite side and not discussed at all. The Full Bench judgment, reported in A I R 1931 Lah 85,¹¹¹ does not advance the case of the respondents any further, inasmuch as in that case S. 32 was applied to a pending suit as would appear from the referring order at p. 86, col. 2 of the report. In my opinion therefore it is not necessary to refer these proceedings to the Sikh Gurdwaras Tribunal under S. 32.

Section 37, Sikh Gurdwaras Act, too is no bar in the way of pronouncing a judgment favourable to the appellants in this case. That section begins with the words "Except as provided in this Act", and inasmuch as the appellants bring their case under the Proviso to Section 30 (ii), it is permissible under the law to decide the case in their favour in spite of the decision of the Sikh Gurdwaras Tribunal, even if that decision runs counter to their interest. But here this question does not arise, as the Sikh Gurdwaras Tribunal did not pronounce any decision which can come into conflict with the reliefs now claimed by the appellants. The Tribunal merely decided that the mosque was adversely possessed by the Sikhs. Neither was it called upon to adjudicate upon the rights of the worshippers, nor did it hold that the Sikhs were entitled to treat it as a private house of their own or to deny the Muslims the right of offering prayers. Having decided all the points raised at the Bar in favour of the appellants, I would accept the appeal, set aside the decree of the District Judge and grant the appellants a decree in terms of the reliefs prayed for. In view of the peculiar circumstances of the case however I would leave the parties to bear their own costs.

Criminal Revn. No. 204 of 1937, Decided on 3rd November 1937, referred by Abdul Rashid J., D/- 7th April 1937.

 Police Act (5 of 1861), Ss. 30 and 32— License given to take out procession — Procession led by accused not licensees — Magistrate ordering procession to move faster while passing mosque — Order deliberately disobeyed by accused and riot taking place as a result — Accused charged under S. 32 with refusing to obey order passed by competent authority — Conviction held to be proper — Every processionist held to be governed by license.

A license was given to certain persons under S. 30, Police Act, to take out a procession. The procession was led by the accused who was not one of the licensees. Order had been given by the Additional District Magistrate to the procession to move faster while passing a mosque. The order met with deliberate disobedience by the accused with the result that a riot took place. The accused was charged under S. 32, Police Act, with refusing to obey an order passed by a competent authority, and was convicted, no reference being made about the license :

Held that the accused was properly convicted under S. 32. The license applied to the processionists generally and every processionist was governed by the terms of the license and as there was disobedience to a lawful order, the ordinary law applied : A I R 1929 Lah 404, Disting.

Order of Reference.

Abdul Rashid J. — On 19th September 1935, the Superintendent of Police Rohtak granted a license under S. 30, Police Act, to four persons, namely Baij Nath, Chandan Lal, Raja Ram and Lachhman Sarup, authorizing them to take out a procession on the day of the Bharat Milap through the streets of Rohtak. On 8th October 1935 the Hindus of Rohtak took out the Bharat Milap procession, and at about 6 P. M. this procession reached near the Gashtian mosque. Bilas Rai petitioner was leading a music party in this procession and this party stopped in front of the Gashtian mosque. As the time of the evening prayers was fast approaching, Sardar Partap Singh, Deputy Superintendent of Police (P. W. 4) asked the petitioner to move his party onward so as to pass the mosque before the beginning of the evening prayers. The accused refused to comply with the order and stated that he would not move until the Dola which had been taken to Mandir Bhawan had rejoined the procession. The Deputy Superintendent of Police brought this fact to the notice of Rai Sahib Lala Izzat Rai, Additional District Magistrate (P. W. 5). Lala Izzat Rai went ahead and asked the petitioner to move on. The petitioner told the Additional District Magistrate that he was needlessly alarmed to which the Additional District Magistrate replied that he was a responsible official and could not take any risk, and that if the petitioner refused to move he would order his arrest. The petitioner however offered the flags which he was holding to the Additional District Magistrate with the remark that the Additional District Magistrate could lead the procession himself. In the words of the Additional District Magistrate the bandsmen also shared the reluctance of the petitioner to move. The District Magistrate then came to the place and pushed the accused forward. Shortly afterwards the procession was attacked in the rear and this led to a riot which was not quelled till the police had opened fire.

After going through the evidence I am of the opinion that the accused deliberately refused to obey the orders of the Deputy Superintendent of Police and the Additional District Magistrate. The question for determination therefore is whether in these circumstances the accused is liable under S. 32, Police Act. The lower Courts have held him to be liable and have sentenced him to a fine of Rs. 100. It must be remembered that the petitioner Bilas Rai is not one of the licensees. Two of the conditions printed on the license are in the following terms :

(1) This license is issued subject to the condition that all the terms embodied therein shall be implicitly obeyed.

(2) The licensees and other persons in the procession shall obey any such order as may be issued by the Magistrate or other officer in charge of the procession relating to the speed of the procession.

It was contended by the learned counsel for the petitioner that if any of the processionists disobeys the terms of the license he cannot be punished under S. 32, Police Act, and that only the licensee is liable to be sentenced under this section for the breach of the conditions of the license committed by any processionist. It was urged that S. 32, Police Act, implies that every person violating the conditions of any license granted to him by the police shall be liable on conviction to a fine not exceeding Rs. 200. The words "to him" do not occur after the word "granted" in S. 32, of the Police Act. It was however maintained that the grant of a license implies a "grantee" or a "licensee" and that it is such grantee or licensee alone who can be punished if any processionist violates the conditions of any license granted by the police. Reference was made in this connexion to Division Bench ruling of this Court reported in 10 Lah 852¹ where it was held that it is only the licensee to whom a license for the formation of a procession is given under S. 30, Police Act, who is bound by the license and liable to be prosecuted if any member of the procession is guilty of a breach of the conditions of such license, and not the persons who signed the license as sureties, there being no legal sanction for requiring an applicant to produce sureties. The question involved in the present case was not expressly dealt with in the Division Bench ruling alluded to above. Moreover condition (2) of the present license did not appear in the license that was considered in the reported case.

On behalf of the Crown it was contended that under the provisions of S. 32, every processionist who violates the conditions of the license is liable to a fine not exceeding Rs. 200 and that the liability is not confined only to the licensee. It was urged that the word "granted" in S. 32 is not followed by the words "to him" and therefore once a license has been granted every person who forms part of the procession taken out in pursuance of the license becomes liable if the conditions of the license are violated. Reliance was also placed by the learned counsel for the Crown on condition (2) of the license issued in the present case.

The question involved in the present case is one of importance, and it is desirable that it should be authoritatively decided by a Division Bench. Subject to the orders of the Hon'ble the Chief Justice, I refer this case to a Division Bench.

Order.—This application in revision was referred to a Bench by a Judge sitting alone, as he was under the impression that there was a Division Bench decision dealing with the matter. The facts are that a license was given under S. 30, Police Act, to take out a procession. The procession was led by the man who has been convicted. Orders were given by the Additional District Magistrate to the procession to move faster while passing a mosque. This order met with deliberate disobedience by the petitioner with the result that a riot took place. The accused was charged under S. 32, Police Act. When the charge was read out to him, not a word was said about the license. The accused was merely charged with refusing to obey an order by the competent authority. Mr. Sham Lal in this Court argues however that he was charged with disobeying the conditions of the license. The first point taken is that as the accused was not himself the licensee, he could not be convicted on this charge. Against this argument is the fact that the accused was not charged with disobeying the conditions of the license. He was charged under S. 32, Police Act, and perfectly properly convicted under that section. But even supposing that he was charged with disobeying the conditions of the license, there is nothing in counsel's point. The Division Bench case alluded to, reported in 10 Lah 852,¹ has nothing to do with this point. In that case it was decided that sureties, under the circumstances of that case, could not be responsible for non-compliance with the conditions of the license by the licensee. That case clearly has no bearing on the point we are now considering. This license itself applied to the processionists generally. Under the law every person in the procession would be behaving illegally in taking part in the procession if there had not been a license. Therefore, every processionist was governed by the terms of the license and if there was disobedience to a lawful order the ordinary law would apply. Under no circumstances is the point raised by counsel good. The application in revision is dismissed.

Decided on 6th September 1937, from Cantonments Act (1924), Ss. 210 (g) and 213

A person was served with a notice by the Can-fruit in his shop. The person represented to the authority that he had been carrying on business for a long time whereupon he was allowed to continue business. He then applied to the authoand no license was issued. He was tried summarily under Ss. 210 (g) and 213 and was convicted :

Held that the conviction could not be interfered person could not take advantage of S. 210 (3) owing to his own conduct in applying for license and not taking it out subsequently. [P 427 C 2]

Order.—This is a petition for revision by Naru Ram against his conviction by a Magistrate of the 1st Class with enhanced powers under S. 30, Criminal P. C., under Ss. 213 and 210 (1) (g), Cantonment Act.
The petitioner has been sentenced to a fine of Rs. 5 on conviction. The offence charged against him is that he has been selling fruit within the limits of Cantonment of Multan without a license.

The objection of the petitioner is that he has been carrying on business in the shop in question for 50 or 60 years and therefore does not need a license. In this contention he is obviously wrong because
S. 210 (3) provides that no person who was, at the commencement of the Cantonment Act of 1924, carrying on his trade, calling or occupation in any part of a Cantonment, shall be bound to apply for a licence for carrying on such trade, or occupation in that part until he has received from the Cantonment authority not less than three months' notice in writing of his obligation to do so, and if the Cantonment Authority refuses to grant him a license, it shall pay compensation for any loss incurred by reason of such refusal. It appears that when the Cantonment Authority first served a notice upon him prohibiting him from selling fruit in the shop in question, the petitioner represented to the Authority that he had been carrying on business for 50 or 60 years whereupon he was allowed to continue his business. Whether the Cantonment Authority required him then to take out a license or not, is not clear but it does appear that in May 1936 the petitioner applied to the Cantonment Authority for a license. I am informed by the learned Assistant Advocate-General that the Cantonment Authority was and is prepared to grant the license but the petitioner has not paid the prescribed fee for the license and therefore no license has been issued to him. Under the circumstances, it is doubtful whether sub-s. (3) of S. 210, Cantonment Act, can be taken advantage of by the petitioner owing to his own conduct in applying for a license and not taking it out subsequently.

It is not denied by the learned counsel for the Crown that if, under the circumstances the Cantonment Authority refuses to grant a license to the petitioner, it shall be bound to pay compensation to him.

I am not therefore prepared to interfere on revision with the conviction of the petitioner or with the sentence. The whole trouble has been invited by the petitioner first by applying for a license and then not taking it out on payment of the prescribed fee. At the same time I wish to remark that this is not a case which should have been tried summarily by the Magistrate.
As I have already stated above, the question of compensation might have arisen under certain contingencies and but for the fact that the facts of this case are stated in the written statement of the accused and have been supplemented before me by the information supplied by the learned Assistant Advocate-General, it would have been difficult to ascertain them on the present record. With these remarks I dismiss the petition.

Khuda Bakhsh—Accused—Respondent.

Criminal Revision No. 1537 of 1937,
Decided on 4th January 1938, reported by District Magistrate, Montgomery, D/- 29th October 1937.

Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 110—Previous conviction is not necessary for order of security being passed — Magistrate must consider and weigh evidence produced by prosecution.

A previous conviction is not necessary for an order of security being passed in proceedings under S. 110 and it is incumbent on the Magistrate, before whom the proceedings are started, to consider and weigh the evidence produced by the prosecution to prove that the person against whom proceedings are started is an habitual thief, before he proceeds to pass any order. [P 428 C 2]

M. A. Majid for Advocate-General —
for the Crown.

Faqir Ullah — for Respondent.

Facts. — The police instituted proceedings under S. 110, Criminal P. C. against Khuda Bakhsh and he was served with a notice to show cause why he should not be bound down under Ss. 110/118, Criminal P. C. for being a habitual thief, a robber, and a receiver of stolen property, as well as for being a dangerous character. After recording the evidence of 19 witnesses out of 35 entered in the challan, the Sub-Divisional Magistrate discharged the respondent. In doing so the only ground which he put forward in his order is that there was not a single conviction on record against the respondent.

Order of Reference.

The Sub-Divisional Magistrate has stated that before any question of habit can arise, it must be clearly proved that the person proceeded against has at least on one occasion been convicted for some offence. This proposition seems to be unwarranted. It is nowhere laid down that before a person can be shown to be a habitual thief, it should be proved that he had any previous conviction. In fact, S. 117 (4), lays down that the fact that a person is a habitual offender may be proved by evidence of general repute or otherwise. The latest ruling on this point seems to be A I R 1936 Oudh 238.¹ It has been clearly laid down in this Division Bench ruling that it is not necessary to prove any previous conviction. There are, no doubt, rulings to the effect that where there is no previous conviction, the Magistrate must weigh the other evidence with extreme caution. It may be that in this case after recording the full evidence the Magistrate might have been justified in arriving at a conclusion that there was insufficient evidence to warrant an order of security being passed; but the Magistrate has not said so in his judgment. In fact he has not considered or applied his mind to the other evidence. He did not proceed to record the remaining evidence that the prosecution wanted to produce and his only ground for discharge is the one mentioned above. A perusal of his order will make this clear. Since this proposition, if accepted, is bound to have a far-reaching effect, it is necessary that the High Court should authoritatively rule, as has been done in the past, that a previous conviction is not necessary for an order of security being passed. The records are forwarded for issuing a direction to the Magistrate to proceed with the evidence of the remaining witnesses and arrive at a decision on this case on its merits. The original file of the case is also submitted.

Order. — The learned Magistrate in this case is clearly incorrect in his supposition that a previous conviction is necessary for proceedings under S. 110, Criminal P. C. There is no such provision in the law itself which on the other hand lays down in S. 117 (4) that the fact that the man is an habitual offender can be proved by evidence of general repute or otherwise. In the judgment referred to by the learned District Magistrate (A I R 1936 Oudh 238¹) the following words occur which are worth quotation in full :

Where in a proceeding under S. 110, Criminal P. C., there was evidence showing that the accused had been suspected of complicity in certain thefts and had been mentioned in each case in the reports made in the police station at the time of each theft and there was further unrebutted evidence of the residents of the village that he had the general repute of being a burglar and a thief an order under S. 110, Criminal P. C., requiring him to execute a bond with sureties to be of good behaviour was a proper order.

The learned Magistrate, therefore, has erred in law in refusing to consider and weigh the evidence produced by the prosecution to prove that the respondent in this case was an habitual thief. I see from the calendar put up that the evidence is not only evidence of various occasions in which he has been suspected of theft but also evidence of his general reputation as a thief and also evidence of association with bad characters. I accordingly accept the reference and setting aside the order of discharge send the case back for further enquiry according to law.

Criminal Appeal No. 708 of 1937, Decided on 7th October 1937, from order of Dist. Judge, Attock at Campbellpur, D/- 3rd March 1937.

(a) Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 476, 476-A — Application for making complaint under S. 476 dismissed in default — Applicant taking no steps to get order of dismissal set aside—It is not open to superior Court to entertain another application by same applicant and to make complaint — "Rejection" in S. 476-A includes rejection on ground of failure to prosecute application.

Where an application asking a Court to make a complaint under S. 476 is dismissed in default by the Court and the applicant takes no steps to get the order of dismissal set aside, which he could have done either by asking the Court to set aside its ex parte order and restore his application or by appeal to the superior Court under S. 476 of the Code, it is not open to the superior Court to entertain another similar application made to it by the same applicant and make a complaint. The term "rejection" in S. 476-A includes rejection on the ground that the applicant did not appear to prosecute the application as he ought to have done. So long as the procedure is regular, the superior Court is not concerned with the reasons for which the application was dismissed under S. 476-A. The Court can take action only if the lower Court had neither made a complaint itself nor rejected the application for making one.

(b) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 476 — It is not necessary that action under S. 476 must be taken before close or in strict continuation or within any particular time after termination of proceedings in which perjury has been committed — Application need not necessarily be prompted by high motives (Obiter).

Although a Court may properly hesitate to make a complaint on an application which is presented long after the proceedings, in which perjury is alleged to have been committed, have ended and which is obviously not prompted by any other motive than personal grudge, there is nothing in the statute to warrant the proposition that an action under S. 476 is only to be taken before close of the proceedings, or in strict continuation with them or within any particular time after their termination. Nor is there any justification for the

Judgment.—On 5th July 1934 a mutation was sanctioned in the land revenue records of Nakka Kahut, a village in Attock District, recording a partition of land between Nawab Khan and his brother Fateh Khan. The Naib Tehsildar's order stated that the parties had been identified by the lambardar Jahan Khan. On 16th December 1935, Muhammed Yar, son of Fateh Khan, filed a suit against Nawab Khan and Fateh Khan for a declaration that the private partition between Nawab Khan and Fateh Khan was not binding on him. The parties had agreed that they would be bound by an oath taken by Jahan Khan, the lambardar. Jahan Khan on 19th February 1936 stated in Court on oath that he had not appeared in any mutation proceedings between the parties before the Naib Tehsildar and Patwari. On this statement the suit was at once decreed, the Sub-Judge recording at the same time that Nawab Khan confessed judgment after the oath was taken.

Nearly three months after the decree, on 8th May 1936, Nawab Khan put in an application in the Subordinate Judge's Court asking the Court to make a complaint of perjury against Jahan Khan in exercise of its powers under S. 476, Criminal P. C. This application was dismissed in default on 18th August 1936. Nawab Khan took no steps to have this order of dismissal reversed as he could have done either by asking the Court to set aside its ex parte order and restore his application, or by appeal to the superior Court under S. 476 of the Code. Instead of doing so Nawab Khan on 1st October 1936 put in an application before the District Judge. This application, it is to be noticed, was not within limitation for an appeal against the Subordinate Judge's order. Notwithstanding the fact that the lower Court's order of dismissal was still in force the District Judge accepted the application and made a complaint. Against this order of the District Judge, Jahan Khan has submitted the present appeal. As notice was issued by the Court to Nawab Khan, I have allowed the latter's counsel to address the Court opposing the appeal. The Crown does not oppose it.

It is contended by the appellant's counsel that the District Judge's order must be set aside firstly because the application to him was belated, being made nearly eight months after the termination of the proceedings to which it related, secondly because it was not made in good faith but to vent spite, thirdly because the District Judge acted without jurisdiction under S. 476-A as the lower Court had rejected an application for the making of the complaint, and fourthly because the prosecution could not possibly in this case be successful. The District Judge's order was not an appellate order and it is not disputed that an appeal lies against it.

While, no doubt, a Court may properly hesitate to make a complaint on an application which is presented long after proceedings have ended and which is obviously not prompted by any other motive than personal grudge, as is presumably the case here, I can see nothing in the statute (and I say it with great respect to the learned Judges who have expressed a different view) warranting the proposition that action under S. 476 is only to be taken before the close of the proceedings in which the perjury is alleged to have been committed, or in strict continuation of them, or within any particular time after their termination. Nor is there justification for the view that only applications prompted by high motives are to be entertained. In the present case there is no necessity however to discuss this aspect of the case, or the argument that the complaint should not have been made in a case which was most likely to fail, for in my opinion the order of the District Judge was without jurisdiction. Under the provisions of S. 476-A, he could take action only if the lower Court had neither made a complaint itself nor rejected an application for the making of one. The learned District Judge has entertained this application on the ground that the dismissal of Nawab Khan's application on 18th August 1936 in default was not a rejection of the application. In my opinion, he was wrong to entertain it. He was not concerned with the reasons for which the application was dismissed (so long as the procedure was regular) and had it been the intention of the legislation that 'rejection' in S. 476-A should not include rejection on the ground that the complainant did not appear to prosecute the application as he ought to have done, it would presumably have made this clear.

I accept the appeal, set aside the order appealed against and dismiss the application by Nawab.

Second Appeal No. 442 of 1936, Decided on 16th December 1937, from preliminary decree of Senior Sub-Judge, Multan, D/- 31st July 1936.

Mortgage—Suit on—Prior mortgagee assigning his rights under mortgage decree — Assignment is invalid unless registered — Want of registration has not effect of extinguishing rights of prior mortgagee so as to entitle subsequent mortgagee to claim decree free of mortgagee rights of prior mortgagee.

An assignment of a mortgage decree requires registration and such an assignment is invalid unless registered but the want of registration will not have the effect of extinguishing the original rights of the assignor mortgagee and a subsequent mortgagee bringing a suit on his mortgage, and whose mortgage is admittedly subject to the mortgagee rights of the prior mortgagee, cannot claim a decree free of the mortgagee rights of the prior mortgagee. His rights cannot be held to have disappeared merely because the assignments by him have been found to be invalid for want of registration. [P 431 C 1, 2]

Bhide J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of Rs. 13,368-1-3 by the Peoples Bank of Northern India (now in liquidation) on the footing of a mortgage. In Para. 6 of the plaint it was stated that a house included in the mortgage had been the subject of a previous mortgage in favour of one Lekh Raj but that the mortgagee rights of Lekh Raj had become extinguished inasmuch as the plaintiff had not been impleaded in the previous arbitration proceedings by Lekh Raj against the mortgagor Ram Kishan. It transpired that Lekh Raj had obtained a decree against Ram Kishan on the basis of an award and after his death the decree had been transferred by his widow Mt. Khillo Bai to Gurdial. Mt. Khillo Bai and Gurdial were accordingly impleaded as defendants and put in their pleas. The plaintiff Bank disputed the assignment of the decree in favour of Gurdial and also pleaded that the assignment, if any, was invalid for want of registration. The trial Court has found the issues in favour of Gurdial and granted a decree to the plaintiff subject to his rights. From this decision the plaintiff Bank has appealed.

Various points had been taken by the plaintiff Bank against Gurdial, but the learned counsel for the appellant has confined himself to one of them only, namely that the assignment of decree by Mt. Khillo Bai in favour of Gurdial was invalid for want of registration. In support of the contention that the assignment was invalid, he relied on Cl (e) of S. 17 (1), Registration Act, which was introduced in that Act by an amendment of the year 1929. He also referred to the Commentary at page 71 of Mulla's Registration Act (Edn. 2) in which it is pointed out that there was a conflict of decisions among the High Courts in India and that the amendment gave effect to the view of the Bombay High Court, that the assignment of a mortgage decree required registration. The learned counsel for the respondents contended on the other hand that Cl. (e) of S. 17 (1) was not applicable because the decree in this case did not create any new rights and the rights, such as they were, were created by the mortgage. This contention was not supported by any authority in point and does not seem to have force. Although the mortgage may have created the original rights, the decree did certainly declare the rights of the mortgagee after deciding the point in dispute and stated the amount which was due to the mortgagee and the manner in which it could be realised by him. The contention of the appellant that the assignment was invalid for want of registration, must therefore prevail. However, the only effect of this contention is that the original rights of Mt. Khillo Bai must be held to remain intact.

The learned counsel for the appellant contended that the rights of Mt. Khillo Bai, widow of Lekh Raj, had come to an end because Gurdial had applied to the executing Court under O. 21, R. 16, for execution of the decree on the basis of the assignment and he had been substituted in place of Mt. Khillo Bai as the decree-holder. We are however not concerned in this case with the effect of this substitution on the execution of the decree. That question will be decided in due course by the executing Court when it is raised. The only point which arises here for decision in this case is whether the plaintiff is entitled to get a decree free of the mortgagee rights of Lekh Raj. The mortgage in favour of the plaintiff was admittedly subject to the previous mortgagee rights of Lekh Raj and these rights cannot be held to have disappeared merely because the deed of assignment in favour of Gurdial has been found to be invalid. The appeal must therefore be accepted and the decree of the trial Court modified by declaring that the plaintiff can realize the amount due to him by sale of the mortgaged property, that is, the equity of redemption of the house referred to in para. 6 of the plaint subject to the previous mortgage rights of Lekh Raj, or his successor-in-interest. As the appellant has failed on the other grounds raised by him, I would leave the parties to bear their costs.

Under Mahomedan law dower is to be regarded as a debt due from the husband to the wife. This debt is payable on demand. Such debt being a just antecedent debt arising out of the contract of marriage the husband is fully entitled to alienate ancestral land in favour of his wife in lieu of this debt provided it is not unreasonably high : 60 P R 1900 and 40 Cal 288 (F B), Rel. on ; 7 P W R 1910, Disting. Judgment. — The following pedigree-table will be helpful in understanding the facts of this case :

On 22nd June 1924, Nawab Din, defendant 1, got married to Mt. Nawab Bibi, defendant 2. A kabinnama (Ex. D-1) was executed at the time of the marriage stating that the dower of Mt. Nawab Bibi had been fixed at the sum of Rs. 4000. It was further stated that in lieu of dower, Nawab Din had given land measuring 119 kanals to his wife and that he would get this land mutated in her name whenever she makes a request to that effect. On 10th May 1934, a mutation was effected in favour of Mt. Nawab Bibi in respect of 119 kanals 10 marlas of land. On 10th May 1935, the plaintiffs instituted the suit out of which the present appeal has arisen, for a declaration to the effect that the sale by Nawab Din in favour of his wife, Mt. Nawab Bibi, dated 10th May 1934, was without consideration and necessity and shall not affect their reversionary rights after the death of the alienor. Only two issues were framed by the trial Court :

(1) Was the dower of defendant 2 fixed at Rs. 4000 and did defendant 1 transfer the land to her in lieu thereof ?

(2) Relief.

The trial Court held that the sum of Rs. 4000 was in fact fixed as the dower of Mt. Nawab Bibi at the time of the marriage and that the plaintiffs' version that dower was fixed at the sum of Rs. 32 did not represent the facts correctly. The dower was fixed at the sum of Rs. 4000 as the parents of Mt. Nawab Bibi were not prepared to give their daughter in marriage to Nawab Din unless their demand for a high dower was acceded to because Nawab Din's grandfather had been suffering from leprosy. On these findings the plaintiffs' suit was dismissed. Against this decision the plaintiffs preferred an appeal in the Court of the learned District Judge, Gurdaspur. The learned District Judge affirmed the findings of the trial Court and held that the dower of Rs. 4000 was agreed to at the time of the marriage. The learned Judge was however of opinion that as the land was ancestral qua the plaintiffs and as the amount of dower was unreasonably high, Nawab Din was not entitled to alienate this land in favour of his wife on account of dower. The appeal of the plaintiffs was accepted and they were given the declaratory decree prayed for. Against this decision Mt. Nawab Bibi and Nawab Din have preferred a second appeal to this Court.

The marriage between Mt. Nawab Bibi and Nawab Din took place on 22nd June 1924. Under Mahomedan law dower is to be regarded as a debt due from the husband to the wife. This debt is payable on demand. It must therefore be held that on 10th May 1934 a sum of Rs. 4000 was due from Nawab Din to Mt. Nawab Bibi. This debt was a just antecedent debt arising out of the contract of marriage that took place in 1924. Nawab Din was therefore fully entitled to alienate the land in favour of his wife in lieu of the debt due from him. It was held by a Full Bench of the Punjab Chief Court in 65 P R 1900¹ that just debts are debts which are actually due and are not immoral, illegal or opposed to public policy and have not been contracted as acts of reckless extravagance or of wanton waste or with the intention of destroying the interests of reversioners. This view was approved by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 26 P R 1913².

The learned District Judge has relied on a Single Bench ruling of the Punjab Chief Court reported in 71 P W R 1910.³ The facts of that case were however very different from the facts of the present case. In that case an Arain had alienated the entire ancestral property possessed by him in favour of his wife in lieu of a dower of Rs. 300. It was held that the amount of dower, in the circumstances of that case, was unreasonably high and that in any case the transaction fixing the dower at a very high amount was of a suspicious character. There was no finding in the reported case that the dower had been genuinely fixed at the sum of Rs. 300. In the present case, the District Judge has observed in his judgment that Nawab Din, defendant 1, is admittedly a man of property and that he must arrange to satisfy the dower with other property against which the reversioners will not be liable to object. There is no finding in the present case that in view of the property possessed by Nawab Din the amount of dower is unreasonably high.

It was contended by the learned counsel for the respondents that Nawab Din, defendant 1, had acted in a reckless manner in June 1924 in fixing the dower at the sum of Rs. 4000. No such plea was ever taken in the trial Court, the case of the respondents throughout being that the sum of Rs. 32 was actually fixed as the amount of dower. Moreover, the question as to what is regarded as a reasonable amount of dower amongst the Jats of Gurdaspur District is a question of custom and it was incumbent on the plaintiffs to raise this point in their pleadings and to lead evidence thereon. No exception was taken to the amount of dower in the trial Court on the ground that it was unreasonably high. The learned District Judge has therefore made out an entirely new case for the plaintiffs. If a party relies on custom, it must prove firstly that it is governed by custom and secondly what that custom is. If the plaintiffs wanted to show that custom does not permit the alienation of a good deal of ancestral property in lieu of dower, it was open to them to get an issue framed on this point and to lead evidence to prove the custom: vide 45 Cal 450.⁴

The learned counsel for the respondents also contended that the alienation in favour of Mt. Nawab Bibi really took place at the time of the nikah in June 1924 and that therefore the alienation was not in lieu of an antecedent just debt. This argument cannot be entertained in view of paras. 1 and 6 of the plaint where it is definitely stated that the sale in favour of the wife took place on 10th May 1934, and that this sale should be set aside as being fictitious and without consideration and necessity. If no sale took place on 10th May 1934, as contended by the learned counsel for the respondents, then the present suit would be liable to dismissal as no cause of action had arisen to the plaintiffs in May 1934.

For the reasons given above, I accept this appeal, set aside the judgment and the decree of the learned District Judge dated 17th February 1937, and restore that of the trial Court dismissing the plaintiffs' suit. In view of all the circumstances of the case, I order that the parties shall bear their own costs throughout.

Second Appeal No. 6 of 1938, Decided on 7th March 1938, from decision of Dist. Judge, Lyallpur, D/- 17th November 1937.

Punjab Debtors Protection Act (2 of 1936), S. 4—Decree amount made charge on property by decree—S. 4 does not apply to execution of decree.

If property is already subjected to a mortgage or charge by the decree itself the Legislature perhaps did not intend to interfere with the operations of the decrees and allow the Collector to exclude any portion of the property for the maintenance of the judgment-debtor. S. 4 is not applicable to the execution of such decrees.

Achhru Ram — for Appellant.

Amar Nath Chopra — for Respondent.

Judgment.—The sole point for decision in this case is whether the proceedings for temporary alienation of the land of the judgment-debtor in execution proceedings ought to be transferred to the Collector under S. 4, Punjab Debtor's Protection Act (2 of 1936). The decree was one for payment of Rs. 1850 by certain instalments and directed that this amount would be a charge on certain property of the judgment-debtor, and that he would not be competent to alienate it by mortgage, sale, etc.

4. Abdul Hussein Khan v. Bibi Sona Dero, (1917) 4 A I R P C 181=43 I O 306=45 I A 10=45 Cal 450=12 S L R 104 (P C).

As a result of this provision in the decree, no attachment of the said property in execution was necessary and this point is not disputed. S. 4 of the Punjab Debtor's Protection Act runs as follows :

Notwithstanding anything contained in any other enactment for the time being in force whenever a Civil Court orders that land be attached and alienated temporarily in the execution of a decree for the payment of money the proceedings of such attachment and alienation shall be transferred to the Collector.

According to the plain wording of the section, it would apply only to those cases in which the land has to be attached and then temporarily alienated ; in the present instance no attachment being necessary, it is contended on behalf of the appellant that S. 4 will not apply. The learned counsel for the respondent on the other hand urges that the intention of the Legislature was that the provisions should apply to the execution proceedings in case of money decrees and the use of the word "attached" does not necessarily show that the section will not apply, when attachment is not necessary. The presumption however is that every word used by the Legislature has a significance and it is possible that the wording in question was intended to exclude from the operation of the section mortgage decrees or decrees of the kind passed in the present instance whereby a charge is created on the land. If property is already subjected to a mortgage or charge by the decree itself, the Legislature perhaps did not intend to interfere with the operations of the decrees and allow the Collector to exclude any portion of the property for the maintenance of the judgment-debtor. The Courts have to interpret the language of an enactment as it stands. If the intention of the Legislature was different, it of course is open to it to make it clear by a suitable amendment of the Act. In view of the language of S. 4, it seems to me that the section was not applicable to the execution of the decree in the present case. I accordingly set aside the order of the learned District Judge and direct the executing Court to proceed with the execution according to law. In view of the fact that the point of law is not covered by any authority I leave the parties to bear their costs throughout.

The powers of a Court of revision are strictly confined within the limits prescribed by S. 115, Civil P. This principle is all the more applicable in cases of revision from an order making an award a rule of Court.

Dev Raj Sawhney and R. P. Khosla —

Din Mohammad J. — The circumstances in which this petition has been presented are as follows: A champertous agreement was entered into between the petitioners and the respondent under which the latter had to finance the petitioners in their attempt to regain the property alienated by a female relative of theirs and to share the property thus recovered half and half. It was provided in the agreement that if any differences arose between the parties, they were to be referred to the sole arbitration of one Atma Singh. Relations between the parties became strained after some time and the financier made an application to the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Amritsar, under Para. 17, Sch. 2, Civil P. C. that the agreement be filed in Court. The petitioners strenuously resisted this application, but the Subordinate Judge made the order prayed for. The petitioners preferred an appeal from the order of the Subordinate Judge which, however, was dismissed by a single Judge of this Court on 8th April 1935. Thereupon, an order of reference was made to the arbitrator appointed in accordance with the provisions of the agreement. The arbitrator made a thorough enquiry into the matter. The parties were allowed to make detailed statements of their case on which no less than six issues were framed. On 8th July 1936, the arbitrator made his award and filed it in Court. The Subordinate Judge gave sufficient opportunity to the parties to raise any objections they liked and, after disposing of the objections raised by the petitioners on 1st December 1936, he ordered that the award be made a rule of the Court. This order is being attacked in revision.

Several preliminary objections were taken to this petition; but, in our view, it can be disposed of on the short ground that it does not come within the ambit of S. 115, Civil P. C. Reference in this connexion may be made to the following remarks of their Lordships of the Privy Council in a judgment reported in 25 P R 1902:¹

Their Lordships are inclined to agree with the view of Clark J. in 84 P R 1901,² that in the case of an award revision would be more objectionable than an appeal. If an application in revision were admissible in a case like the present the finality of any award would be open to question. * * * * * They (the arbitrators) may have erred in law, but arbitrators may be judges of law as well as judges of fact, and an error in law certainly does not vitiate an award. The award having been duly made, and not having been corrected or modified, and the application to set it aside having been refused, the Subordinate Judge had no option but to pronounce a decree in accordance with it. The Subordinate Judge does not appear to have exercised a jurisdiction not vested in him by law, or to have failed to exercise the jurisdiction so vested, or to have acted in the exercise of his jurisdiction illegally, or with material irregularity. He appears to have followed strictly the course prescribed by the Code.

Counsel for the petitioners has urged that, inasmuch as effect has been given to an unregistered award, which was further extortionate and unconscionable and hence unenforceable, partial partition has been allowed and the award affects some property outside the jurisdiction of the Subordinate Judge who had taken cognizance of the case, the award was bad in law and without jurisdiction and so is the judgment of the Subordinate Judge that makes it a rule of the Court. These objections however were never raised either before the arbitrator or the Court below, and it cannot be said that either the arbitrator or the Subordinate Judge committed any illegality or any irregularity in not attending to those objections which were never taken before them. The powers of a Court of revision are strictly confined within the limits prescribed by S. 115, Civil P. C., and, unless a judgment is vitiated by any of the defects specified therein, no interference with it can be made by the revising Court. Counsel for the petitioners has been unable to show that, besides the objections that he has taken for the first time in revision before us, any such defect exists in the order of the Court or the award of the arbitrator as would bring his case within the purview of S. 115, Civil P. C. We accordingly hold that this petition is not competent. In this view of the case, it is not necessary to dispose of the other preliminary objections taken by the respondent. We accordingly dismiss this petition with costs.

Punjab Tenancy Act (16 of 1887), S. 59 (c) — Word "occupied" — Meaning — Mere mention of name of co-sharer as co-owner in shamilat-deh does not denote occupation of such co-owner.

The word "occupied" in the Punjab Tenancy Act implies some control over the land by whatever name it may be expressed in law. It may not necessarily be actual possession and may include constructive possession. But a cosharer whose name is merely mentioned along with other co-sharers as a co-owner in the shamilat-deh may neither have physical control over the property nor be in constructive possession thereof. His contact with the land by virtue of such entry alone is too remote to be dignified by the name of possession even in the literal sense of the term.

Din Mohammad J. — The facts bearing upon the question of law involved in this case may shortly be stated. One Imam Din, who was an occupancy tenant of the land in suit, died on 3rd December 1934. Thereupon Faiz Mohammad and others took possession of the land and later, on 7th June 1933, mutation was sanctioned in their favour by the revenue authorities. Consequent upon this, one Mt. Atto claiming to be the landlord instituted the suit out of which the present appeal has arisen for possession of the said land. The principal question that arose for decision by virtue of S. 59, Tenancy Act, was whether the common ancestor of the defendants and the deceased Imam Din ever occupied the land. The Subordinate Judge who tried the suit came to the conclusion that, inasmuch as the common ancestor of the defendants and the deceased occupancy tenant happened to be recorded as one of the cosharers in shamilat-deh of which the land in suit formed a part, the plaintiff's suit could not succeed. On appeal, the Senior Subordinate Judge, holding that it had not been proved that the common ancestor of the defendants and the deceased tenant had occupied the land within the meaning of S. 59, Tenancy Act, in spite of his having been entered as a co-sharer in the shamilat, decreed the suit with costs throughout. The defendants presented a further appeal to this Court which came for hearing before Bhide J. He agreed with the trial Court in its interpretation of the word "occupied" as used in S. 59, Tenancy Act and accepted the appeal. He however in view of the peculiar circumstances of the case left the parties to bear their own costs throughout. The sole question that falls to be determined in this case is what is the true construction to be put on the word 'occupied' as used in the proviso to S. 59, Tenancy Act.

On behalf of the appellant it is strenuously contended that the mere mention of a cosharer's name in the revenue papers in relation to shamilat-deh does not connote such occupation on the part of that cosharer as is contemplated by the framers of the Tenancy Act and that, in order to satisfy the requirements of the proviso to S. 59, some definite contact with or apparent control over the land is necessary. The respondents on the other hand have urged that the word 'occupied' is wide enough to include such possession as existed in this case. There is no direct authority on the point at issue but after giving full consideration to the matter, we are disposed to think that whatever interpretation the word 'occupied' may have in different legislative enactments in the Tenancy Act, it implies some control over the land by whatever name it may be expressed in law. It may not necessarily be actual possession. For instance, if a person cultivates the land through his tenants, in legal parlance his possession would not be actual but constructive, but even if so, it cannot be denied that the said person is in occupation of the land. The person in question has dominion over the property and can oust trespassers, realise rents and even eject the tenants and himself assume physical control over the said property. But where neither he has physical control over the property nor is he in a position to exercise any dominion over the property through his tenants or servants or in a position to assume physical control over it, he cannot be said to be in occupation of the land. A cosharer whose name is merely mentioned along with other co-sharers as a co-owner in the shamilat-deh may neither have physical control over the property nor be in constructive possession thereof. His contact with the land by virtue of such entry alone is too remote to be dignified by the name of possession even in the literal sense of the term. In fact in the present case Ex. D.5 on which reliance was mainly placed by the trial Court clearly indicates that the land was in physical possession of two different persons, namely Pir Bakhsh, son of Umar Khan and Sandal Khan, son of Bahar Khan, who though included among the owners of this land were holding the land in their own right and not under the other co-owners. They were the only persons who could be said to be in occupation of the land. We have no hesitation therefore in holding that neither on general principles nor on the particular facts of this case the common ancestor of the defendants and the deceased tenant ever occupied the land in suit within the meaning of S. 59, Tenancy Act.

The learned Judge of this Court referred to certain rulings of the Punjab Chief Court, namely 20 P R 1871,¹ 22 P R 1876,² 4 P R 1881 (Rev.)³ and 26 P R 1895,⁴ in support of his conclusion, but all that those rulings have laid down is that a person is held to be in occupation of the land even if he does not cultivate it himself but gets the land cultivated through others. This proposition however is of no use in the present case as here that circumstance does not exist. For the appellant reliance

2. Shian Singh v. Khushia, (1876) 22 P R 1876.

4. Nihal Singh v. Hari Singh, (1895) 26 P R 1895.

has been placed on 100 P R 1908,⁵ A I R 1933 Lah 1010⁶ and 65 P R 1909⁷ and though those authorities also are not exactly in point, they are of some help in interpreting the word "occupied" generally. In 100 P R 1908⁵ one of the questions that arose for decision was whether upon the assumption that the tenancy of the three mortgagees was joint, the constructive possession of Khan Singh over the whole land could be said to amount to "occupation" of the land actually occupied by Kishen Singh within the meaning of S. 59 and the learned Judges remarked :

We have grave doubts upon this point and as at present advised we are inclined to hold that the word "occupied" means actually occupied and that it does not include an occupation which is merely such by implication of law.

No doubt no definite opinion was given upon that question as the case was decided on a different point but the interpretation of the word "occupied" was given after consideration and not in an off-hand manner. In A I R 1933 Lah 1010,⁶ Dalip Singh J. observed in connexion with a case under the Provincial Insolvency Act where also the word "occupied" has been used that "that word seems to be a physical fact." In 65 P R 1909⁷ Johnstone J. remarked that :

In the expression "belonging to and occupied by agriculturist" the words "belonging to" are not synonymous with "occupied by" and that the term "occupied by" means "lived in by" or "used for agricultural purposes by".

We have already explained above that occupation in some cases may not necessarily mean physical contact and it may include constructive possession in the technical sense of the term, but as we are not prepared to hold that the mere mention of the name of a co-owner in the column of owners in relation to land which is in the cultivating possession of somebody else who does not hold the land under the co-owners denotes occupation of such co-owner, we accept this appeal, set aside the order of the learned Judge of this Court and decree the plaintiff's suit. As the question was not free from difficulty we order that the parties will bear their own costs throughout.

First Appeal No. 455 of 1936, Decided on 4th January 1938, from order of Sub-Judge, First Class, Amritsar, D/- 8th December 1936.

Limitation—R and other partners obtaining contract from Municipality and depositing with it certain amount by way of security — Suit by S against R in his individual capacity—Deposit money attached and sold to B—Suit by B beyond period of limitation for recovery of deposit amount on basis of his purchase of R's rights in it—B held stood in R's shoes and could not claim extension of period of limitation merely on basis of order of executing Court which referred him to regular suit if so advised.

Anything done behind the back of a debtor does not tend to extend the period of limitation originally provided for the recovery of a debt under the Limitation Act. [P 439 C 2]

One R, along with three other persons obtained a contract from the Municipal Committee and the firm in whose name the contract stood deposited certain sum with the Municipality by way of security. Subsequently one S instituted a suit for recovery of some money against R in his individual capacity and obtained a decree in execution of which he attached and sold the amount lying in deposit with the Municipality. The amount was purchased by B. In the meanwhile the other partners of the firm in whose name the contract had been obtained instituted a suit against the Municipality for recovery of the deposit money and obtained a decree. Throughout the pendency of this suit B made no attempt to be brought on record as plaintiff. B however instituted a suit for recovery of certain amount against the Municipality on the basis of his purchase of R's rights in the deposit money. The suit was beyond the period of limitation:

Held that B could not claim extension of limitation period. Had R put forward a claim against the Municipal Committee for recovery of the deposit amount he could sue only within period prescribed for the suit. His rights were in execution of his decree purchased by B who as assignee from R stood in his shoes and could not by the mere fact of his purchase override the provisions of the Limitation Act. It could not be argued that once attachment of the amount was made, the Limitation Act ceased to operate and that B, the auction-purchaser, was at liberty to recover the amount at any time he liked in complete disregard of the provisions of the Limitation Act. Moreover, B could not claim fresh period of limitation merely on the basis of an order of the execution Court which referred him to a regular suit if so advised. [P 439 C 2]

Held further that there was other defect in B's suit. The very sale relied upon by B was illegal inasmuch as it obviously disregarded the clear provisions of law as laid down in O. 21, R. 49, Civil P. C. [P 439 C 2]

J. G. Sethi—for Appellant.

Dev Raj Sawhney and Behari Lal—
for Respondents.

Din Mohammad J.—The suit out of which this appeal has arisen was instituted in the following circumstances: One Rallia Ram along with three other persons, who are not on the record, obtained a contract from the Municipal Committee, Amritsar, and the firm in whose name the contract stood deposited Rs. 2000 by way of security in the first instance and in the course of the execution of the work Rs. 8000 were further deducted from the amounts due to the contractors on that account. Subsequently, one Salig Ram instituted a suit for recovery of some money against Rallia Ram in his individual capacity and obtained a decree against him. In execution of that decree, he made an application for attachment and sale of the amount lying in deposit with the Municipal Committee, Amritsar. That amount was sold in favour of Billa Mal, father of Ishar Das, on 18th July 1931. In the meantime, on 22nd June 1931, the four partners of the firm in whose name the contract had been obtained instituted a suit against the Municipal Committee, Amritsar, for recovery of a certain amount, including Rupees 10,000 mentioned above.

On 16th December 1933, the suit was partially decreed and on 22nd January 1936, the decree made by the trial Court was upheld by this Court with certain modifications. It may be mentioned here that throughout the pendency of the suit or the appeal, the plaintiff or his predecessor-in-interest never made an attempt to be brought on the record as a plaintiff in the case. He however instituted the present suit for recovery of Rs. 7343.12.0 against the Municipal Committee, Amritsar, on the basis of the alleged purchase of Rallia Ram's rights in Rs. 10,000 lying in deposit with the said Committee. Rallia Ram too was impleaded as a defendant in the case, but it was expressly stated in the plaint that the plaintiff prayed for a decree against the Municipal Committee alone and the plaintiff further amplified this statement before the framing of the issues that Rallia Ram was a pro forma defendant only and that no relief was being claimed against him. Both Rallia Ram and the Municipal Committee resisted the suit on various grounds and on the pleadings of the parties the following issues were framed :

(1) Whether Sain Das, Prem Das and Sundar Das are necessary parties in the suit? (2) Whether the suit is within limitation? (3) Whether the amount in suit has since been forfeited and what is its effect? (4) Whether plaintiff purchased this amount in the auction proceedings in the decree in favour of Salig Ram against Rallia Ram? (5) What is the share of Rallia Ram in the amount of Rs. 10,000? (6) Relief.

The Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that the three persons mentioned in Issue 1 were necessary parties to the suit and inasmuch as they had not been joined as defendants in the case, the suit failed on that ground alone. He further held that the suit was barred by limitation. Issue 3 was not pressed before him and hence it was not decided. On Issue 4 the decision went in favour of the plaintiff and Issue 5 was decided against him on the ground that it had not been established that Rallia Ram had any share in the money in suit. On these findings, the Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit, leaving the parties to bear their own costs on the ground that the plaintiff had failed on a question of law. The plaintiff has appealed.

Counsel for the appellant has mainly stressed the question of limitation before us. He has contended that as stated in the plaint the cause of action arose to the plaintiff on 1st June 1933, when he was directed by the executing Court to institute a regular suit if so advised and has referred to 18 Bom 260,¹ 30 Bom 115,² 35 Bom 79³ and 38 Bom 631⁴ in support of his contention. These authorities however are not in point. They deal with a different matter and proceed on facts which are apparently distinguishable from the facts of the present case. In 18 Bom 260,¹ the plaintiff obtained a decree against one Ishvar and in execution attached the property in dispute. The defendants intervened and obtained an order for the removal of the attachment on 11th August 1888. On 13th August 1889, the plaintiff instituted a suit for a declaration that the property belonged to the judgment-debtor and as such was liable to attachment and sale. The defendants pleaded that they had been in possession of the property for more than

1. Hari Shankar v. Naran Karsan, (1894) 18 Bom 260.

4. Tayabali Ghulam Husein v. Atmaram Sakharam, (1914) 1 A I R Bom 299=25 I C 375=38 Bom 631=16 Bom L R 520.

12 years prior to the institution of the suit and that the suit was therefore barred. The learned Judges who heard the appeal held that it was a suit to set aside the order of 11th August 1888, and should be determined by ascertaining the rights of the parties at the date of that order. As the defendants had not at that date acquired a title to the property by adverse possession for 12 years, the plaintiff was entitled to a decree. In 30 Bom 115,² the defendant's husband Vishnu sold certain land to Vithal on 1st June 1889, and passed to him a rent-note the period of which expired on 20th March 1890.

Subsequent to the expiry of the period, Vishnu, and after his death his widow, the defendant, continued in possession. Afterwards the plaintiffs to whom the land had been sold, having obtained a decree for possession against the sons of Vithal, Vithal's widow Kashibai, caused obstruction to delivery of possession in execution of the decree. The plaintiffs thereupon on 22nd January 1902, applied for the removal of the obstruction and the Court, on 26th July 1902 ordered that their application be registered as a suit between the decree-holders as plaintiffs and the claimant as defendant. It was held that the claimant was not entitled as against the decree-holders to count the time up to 26th July 1902 when the application was numbered as a suit, as the period of his adverse possession. The 12 years of adverse possession expired in March 1902, and prior to that the proceedings had been taken. In 35 Bom 79,³ it was held that the suit having been brought by the plaintiff under S. 283, Civil P. C. of 1882 (O. 21, R. 63, Civil P. C. of 1908) to establish his right to attach and sell the property in dispute as that of his judgment-debtors R and D in execution of his money decree, all that he had to prove was that on the date of attachment the judgment-debtors had a subsisting right to the property; and that the suit must therefore be tried as if it were a suit for possession by the judgment-debtors. In 38 Bom 631,⁴ it was held that it was not open to the garnishee to plead a defence which had already, in an execution enquiry, been unsuccessful, except in a suit instituted within one year from the date of the adverse order, that the property attached could be regarded as property in the possession of the garnishee in trust for the judgment-debtor, and therefore could be attached. It may be remarked that in the present case the Municipal Committee Amritsar had not been unsuccessful in its objections.

We cannot persuade ourselves to believe that anything done behind the back of a debtor tends to extend the period of limitation originally provided for the recovery of a debt under the Limitation Act. Had Rallia Ram put forward a claim against the Municipal Committee for recovery of the amount lying in deposit with it, he could sue only within the period prescribed for the suit under the Limitation Act. His rights were in the execution of a decree purchased by the plaintiff. The plaintiff as an assignee from Rallia Ram stood in his shoes and could not by the mere fact of his purchase override the provisions of the Limitation Act. We are not at all impressed by the argument advanced on behalf of the appellant that once an attachment of debt is made, the Limitation Act ceases to operate and that an auction-purchaser is at liberty to recover the amount at any time that he likes in complete disregard of the provisions of the Limitation Act. We agree with the Subordinate Judge therefore that the plaintiff's suit was long time barred when it was instituted. At best the cause of action for recovery of the amount in suit accrued to Rallia Ram when the contract was broken, and as counsel for the appellant has not relied on any acknowledgment whatsoever for the extension of the period of limitation and as the plaintiff did not take proper steps open to him under the law to recover the amount, he cannot escape the consequences of his laches and claim a fresh period of limitation merely on the basis of an order which refers him to a regular Court of law if so advised.

In our view, this is not the only defect in the plaintiff's suit. It fails on several other grounds too. For instance, the very sale relied on by the plaintiff was illegal inasmuch as it obviously disregarded the clear provisions of law as laid down in O. 21, R. 49, Civil P. C. The amount in suit was part of a partnership property and consequently it could not be sold in the manner in which it was done. It was incumbent upon the Court to observe the procedure provided for the attachment of such property. Similarly, the plaintiff cannot obtain any relief in the absence of the three persons whom he did not choose to implead even when the defect was pointed out to him. They are interested in the amount in suit and no action prejudicial to their interest can be taken behind their back. It is also not proved on the record that Rallia Ram has any share in the property in suit. Counsel for the appellant has mainly relied in this connection on a statement made by Rallia Ram on 26th November 1936, but firstly this statement even if admissible, which is doubtful, is insufficient to prove the appellant's contention and secondly it has been contradicted by Rallia Ram himself on this record on several occasions. In his written statement, he pleaded unequivocally that he had no concern with the amount in suit and in his statement in Court on 19th August 1936, he adhered to the averment made in the written statement. On all these grounds, we maintain the order of the Court below and dismiss this appeal with costs.

Second Appeals Nos. 590 and 762 of 1937,

March 1937.

(a) Adverse Possession—Plaintiff mentioned only as tenant in previous suit—Property in dispute sold in execution—No assertion of hostile title by plaintiff—Plaintiff's possession held only that of licensee.

In a suit for adverse possession, there was no evidence that the plaintiff had ever asserted a hostile title, though such occasions arose, e. g. when the plaintiff was mentioned only as a tenant in a suit to which he was a party, and when the property in suit was attached and sold as belonging to a third person :

Held that the suit could not succeed. A belated assertion of title on plaintiff's part would not be sufficient to clothe him with a status higher than that of a licensee : A I R 1918 Lah 308 and A I R 1924 Pat 341, Disting. [P 441 C 2]

(b) Evidence Act (1872), S. 35—Copies of Shajra and Khasra of Municipal Committee are documents under S. 35 and admissible in evidence, though no presumption of correctness attaches to them.

The copies of Shajra and Khasra of the Municipal Committee are documents falling under S. 35 having been prepared by the employees of the Municipal Committee in the discharge of their official duties and it is well known that under

S. 19, Municipal Act every officer or servant employed by the Committee is deemed to be a public servant within meaning of S. 21, I. P. C. It is true that no presumption of correctness attaches to these documents; but this is a different matter altogether from holding them inadmissible in evidence. [P 441 C 2]

Din Mohammad J. — This judgment will dispose of Second Appeals Nos. 590 and 762 of 1937. The facts of the case giving rise to these appeals are as follows: On 14th July 1934, one Amar Singh obtained a decree for Rs. 7800 against the estate of Captain Damodar Singh deceased. On 19th May 1935, the house in dispute was sold in execution of the said decree and was purchased by one Jassa Ram for Rs. 3510. On 30th May 1935, one Puran Bhagat instituted a suit against the decree-holder, Amar Singh, the auction-purchaser Jassa Ram, Mt. Mino, widow of Captain Damodar Singh, and two other persons, who are said to be Sher Singh's reversioners, for a declaration that the house in dispute was in his possession as an owner and was consequently not liable to attachment and sale in execution of the decree of Amar Singh against Damodar Singh's estate. In the plaint, it was alleged that one Sher Singh, who was the father of Gurmukh Singh, the adoptive father of Damodar Singh, had gifted the house to the plaintiff in lieu of medical services rendered to him and that since then the plaintiff had been in possession thereof as an owner.

This suit was resisted by all the defendants concerned who denied the factum of gift and pleaded that the plaintiff was in occupation of the house as a tenant and not as an owner. It was further stated that in a suit instituted by defendants 4 and 5 against Captain Damodar Singh and others, the plaintiff too was impleaded as a defendant in the capacity of a tenant of the house in suit, that at the instance of the then plaintiffs a notice was issued to him requiring him not to pay rent to Captain Damodar Singh, and that as he did not then assert his right of ownership in the house in suit, he was now debarred by his conduct and acquiescence from maintaining the suit. It was next urged that the plaintiff was estopped also on account of the fact that he had not protested at the time of attachment and sale of the house. On the pleadings of the parties the necessary issues were framed. The Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that the alleged gift was not proved and that as the plaintiff in spite of his being present at the time of the attachment and sale of the house, had not objected to the attachment of the property and had stood by at the time of sale, he was estopped by his own conduct from instituting this suit. Holding that the possession of the plaintiff was permissive at its inception and that its character had never been altered since, he dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

On appeal, the District Judge agreed with the Subordinate Judge that the alleged gift had not been proved but finding that the possession of the plaintiff had been proved to be for more than 12 years and that there was no evidence to establish that it was permissive at its inception, he allowed the appeal and decreed the plaintiff's suit as laid. Dissatisfied with this decision, the auction-purchaser Jassa Ram has filed Appeal No. 590 of 1937, while Mt. Mino has filed Appeal No. 762 of 1937. Counsel for the appellants contends that the remark made by the District Judge that 'it seems to have been accepted' by both sides before him that the expression "a large number of years" was intended to mean a period longer than the period of 12 years, does not represent the true state of affairs, that his further remark that "practically no evidence is forthcoming" is not warranted by the record, and that his exclusion of khasra and shajra from consideration is illegal. They further urge that the District Judge has failed to take into consideration the effect of the plaintiff's inactivity at the time when he was served with a notice at the instance of defendants 4 and 5, wherein his status was defined to be that of a tenant. On these grounds, they argue that the judgment of the District Judge is vitiated and cannot stand. As against this, counsel for the respondent contends that the plaintiff having been found to be in possession of the house for more than 12 years and that the story of his being a tenant having been rejected by both the Courts, no conclusion could be arrived at, other than that at which the District Judge had arrived.

After hearing counsel on both sides, we have come to the conclusion that these appeals must succeed. There is evidence on the record that the plaintiff was put into possession of the house in suit by Sher Singh. It is even admitted by the plaintiff himself that he used to attend on Sher Singh as his medical adviser and that the house was given to him by Sher Singh on that account. He based his claim of ownership on an alleged gift from Sher Singh and that gift he has not been able to prove. The house, in these circumstances, would revert to its original owner unless and until the plaintiff succeeds in establishing that he had perfected his title in any other manner permissible by law. The onus of proving the circumstances in which he had acquired a right of ownership in the house would lie very heavily on him. The only question that falls to be judged therefore is whether the plaintiff has succeeded in discharging that burden. There is clear evidence on the record that on two different occasions when this right was denied to him, he kept quiet: first when in the suit instituted by defendants 4 and 5 he did not protest against his being considered a mere tenant, and secondly when the house was actually attached and put to auction as Captain Damodar Singh's property. This would show that on the two occasions mentioned above when he should have asserted a hostile title, if he had any, he did not assert it and there is not an iota of evidence on the record to prove that he had asserted a hostile title at any period prior to the happening of those events. A belated assertion of his title therefore would not be sufficient to clothe him with any status higher than that of a licensee.

The conclusion that the house in suit was not owned by the plaintiff, is strengthened by entries in the copies of shajra and khasra of the Municipal Committee produced by the appellants, which have not been considered by the District Judge on the ground that they were irrelevant. These documents, in our view, fall under S. 35, Evidence Act, having been prepared by the employees of the Municipal Committee in the discharge of their official duties and it is well known that under S. 19, Municipal Act every officer or servant employed by the Committee is deemed to be a public servant within the meaning of S. 21, I. P. C. It is true that no presumption of correctness attaches to these documents; but this is a different matter altogether from holding them inadmissible in evidence. In the latter case they are excluded from consideration altogether while in the former they can be used as corroborative evidence. The appellants were therefore clearly prejudiced by these documents not having been considered by the District Judge at all. The District Judge has further observed that even if these documents were admissible, the remark of the lower Court based on them that the house in suit was in the possession of a Tarkhan in 1900, in no way excludes the Tarkhan's possession being in the capacity of a tenant of the plaintiff; but this observation of the District Judge is obviously wrong inasmuch as if once those documents are admitted in evidence they do exclude the possibility of the plaintiff being the owner of the house. In the column of owners the names of Chaudhri Gurmukh Singh, son of Chaudhri Sher Singh and of Mt. Narain Devi widow of Chaudhri Sher Singh have been mentioned and not that of the plaintiff.

In support of his contention indicated in the earlier part of his judgment, counsel for the respondent has relied on 46 I C 964¹ and 73 I C 41.² In 46 I C 964,¹ a Division Bench of this Court has held that the criterion of adverse possession is whether a person possesses land claiming it as his own and if he does, he must be held to be in adverse possession. This principle will not, however, help the plaintiff in this case inasmuch as it is not proved that prior to the institution of this suit, he had ever claimed the house in suit as his own. Moreover, in that case the persons claiming adverse possession were not plaintiffs but defendants in the suit and had for a period of more than 12 years been shown as co-owners in the shamilat. This has never been the case here. In 73 I C 41,² a single Judge of the Patna High Court held that when the defendant failed to prove the gift relied on by him, the conclusion to be drawn was not that his possession was permissive but that it was that of a trespasser. This case too is distinguishable as in the first place it is remarked in the judgment that permissive possession was not the case of either party and secondly the person relying on adverse possession was there, too, a defendant in the case and not a plaintiff. No doubt, in the present case, the story put forward by the appellants that the respondent was paying rent for the occupation of the house has not been believed, but this finding does not exclude the possibility of the plaintiff occupying the house with the permission of the original owners as a friend and not as a tenant, or in other words being a mere licensee. On these grounds we allow the appeals, reverse the judgment of the District Judge and dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs throughout.

Civil Revn. Petn. No. 175 of 1937, Decided on 15th July 1937, from order of Senior Sub-Judge, Lyallpur, D/- 9th February 1937.

Revision—No revision lies from interlocutory orders—Powers are limited by S. 224 (2), Government of India Act, 1935.

Section 224 (2), limits the High Court's powers to question judgments of inferior Courts to those given under the ordinary law. Hence High Court cannot entertain a revision from an interlocutory order which is not a decided case. [P 442 C 2]

Order.—I must accept a preliminary objection by Mr. Wazir Chand that no revision lies, as the order objected to is interlocutory and there is no decided case. Mr. Bishen Narain relies on Section 107, Government of India Act 5 and 6 Geo. V, Ch. 61 etc., but that is now replaced by the Government of India Act 1935 which came into force on 1st April 1937. S. 224 (2) of the later Act limits the High Courts powers to question judgments of inferior Courts to those given under the ordinary law. I dismiss this petition with costs. Second Appeal No. 1018 of 1937, Decided on 3rd February 1938, from decree of Senior Sub-Judge, Gurdaspur, D/- 19th July 1937.

Res Judicata—Constructive — House sold in execution of decree against certain members of family — Suit by another member challenging sale on ground that house, on partition of joint family, belonged to him — Suit dismissed — Subsequent suit challenging sale on ground that debts in connexion with which decree was obtained were incurred for illegal purpose is barred by res judicata.

Certain house was sold in execution of a decree against certain members of a family. Another member brought a suit challenging the execution sale on the ground that the house could not be sold as it had, on partition of the joint property, fallen to his share. The suit was dismissed. He brought a subsequent suit challenging the same sale on the ground that the debts in connexion with which the decree had been obtained were incurred for illegal purposes and hence the house was not liable to be sold in execution of the decree :

Held that the relief claimed in the subsequent suit ought to have been raised in the previous suit. The subsequent claim could not be considered to be so dissimilar that its union with the claim in the previous suit would have led to confusion. Judgment. — The material facts of the case giving rise to this second appeal were briefly as follows : In execution of a decree against defendants 1 and 2 two houses were attached and sold. The plaintiff, Gobind, who is a son of defendant 1 and brother of defendant 2, thereupon instituted the present suit for a declaration that the debts in connexion with which the decree was obtained had not been incurred for the benefit of the joint family consisting of himself and defendants 1 and 2, that the debts were in fact incurred for illegal and immoral purposes and, therefore the house property in question was not liable to be sold in execution of the decree. A preliminary objection was raised on behalf of the defendants that the suit was barred by the rule of res judicata. This objection was upheld by the Courts below and the suit was dismissed. The plaintiff has preferred a second appeal. The learned Senior Sub-Judge in dismissing the appeal before him has also held that the plaint disclosed no cause of action inasmuch as there was no allegation in the plaint that the auction-purchasers had any notice that the debts for which the decree was passed had been incurred for immoral or illegal purposes. There was however no issue on this question and I do not think that the judgment of the learned Senior Sub-Judge can be supported on that ground.

The only point which requires decision in the present case, therefore is that of res judicata. It is admitted that the plaintiff had previously brought two suits to challenge the same sale but in those suits he had pleaded that there had been a partition of the joint property of the family and the house property in dispute in the present case had fallen to his share. The first suit was dismissed owing to plaintiff's failure to produce evidence on the date fixed by the Court. The second suit, which was also based on the alleged partition was dismissed on the ground of res judicata. Thereafter the present suit was instituted by the plaintiff basing his claim on the allegations stated above. The learned counsel for the appellant has urged that the principle of res judicata in S. 11, Civil P. C., was not applicable as the plaintiff was suing on a different title, namely as a member of a joint family, while in the previous case he had alleged partition and claimed that the property in dispute had fallen to his share and he was the sole owner thereof. The learned counsel for the respondents on the other hand contended that the plaintiff was bound to put forward the present claim in the previous suit in view of Explan. 4 to S. 11, Civil P. C. The learned counsel for both the parties have cited a number of authorities, but it seems to me that it would be sufficient to refer to the decisions of their Lordships of the Privy Council which have been relied on, namely 29 All 331,¹ 11 M I A 50,² 20 Cal 79³ and 18 W R 163.⁴

1. Deputy Commr. of Kheri v. Khanjan Singh, (1907) 29 All 331=34 I A 72=4 A L J 232=10 O C 117 (P C).

2. Muthu Raghunadha Periya Oodiyat Taver v. Kattama Nachiar, (1866) 11 M I A 50=10 W R 1=2 Suth 212 (P C).

3. Kameswar Pershad v. Raj Kumari Rattan Koer, (1893) 20 Cal 79=19 I A 234=6 Sar 241 (P C).

The first ruling, namely 29 All 331¹ has been relied on by the learned counsel for the appellant. But it appears to be clearly distinguishable as in that case the first suit was for pre-emption while the second suit was based on the right of reversion. The two claims being of different character it was held that the first suit was not a bar to the second. The other three rulings, which were relied on by the learned counsel for the respondents appear to me to support the decision of the Courts below. In 11 M I A 50,² the plaintiff had first of all based his claim on the ground that the property was undivided. He had also relied on a will but this claim was eventually abandoned. The first suit having failed he instituted the second suit on the basis of the will. It was held that the second suit was barred by the rule of res judicata as it was open to the plaintiff to rely on the will in the alternative in the first suit also: see remarks at page 73. In 18 W R 163,⁴ the plaintiff had claimed that she had acquired title to certain land as 'towfeer.' That claim was dismissed and then a second suit was instituted in which he claimed that she was entitled to the same land as "talookdar." The second suit was held to be incompetent on the ground that it was open to the plaintiff to rely upon the second ground in the first suit also. The third ruling, 20 Cal 79,³ also takes the same view. In the course of their judgment, their Lordships made the following remarks with reference to S. 13, Civil P. C. of 1882 which corresponded to S. 11 of the present Code of 1908:

That it (claim) 'might' have been made a ground of attack is clear. That it 'ought' to have been, appears to their Lordships to depend upon the particular facts of each case. Where matters are so dissimilar that their union might lead to confusion, the construction of the word 'ought' would become important; in this case the matters were the same. It was only an alternative way of seeking to impose a liability upon Run Bahadur, and it appears to their Lordships that the matter 'ought' to have been made a ground of attack in the former suit, and therefore that it should be deemed to have been a matter directly and substantially in issue in the former suit and is res judicata.

This principle appears to me to apply to the circumstances of the present case. The plaintiff challenged the sale in execution in both the suits as an infringement of his right of ownership; in the first suit he maintained that he was the sole owner while in the present suit he claims to be a member of a joint family. According to O. 2, R. 1, Civil P. C. the plaintiff was bound to frame his suit so as to get a final decision on the subject-matter in dispute and prevent further litigation as far as practicable. The present claim cannot in my opinion be considered to be so dissimilar that its union with the claim in the previous suit would have led to confusion. I therefore hold that the decision of the Courts below was correct and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Ghulam Mohiyyud-Din — Accused
— Petitioner.

v.

Sardara and others — Respondents.

Criminal Revn. No. 1365 of 1937, Decided on 22nd December 1937, from order of Addl. Sess. Judge, Ferozepore, D/- 13th September 1937.

Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 252 (2)—Magistrate is bound to summon under S. 252 (2) at Government expense such of complainant's witnesses as he considers necessary—Mere fact that same case was investigated by police and no challan was put is no ground for refusing to summon such witnesses.

A Magistrate is bound to summon under S. 252 (2) at the expense of Government such of the complainant's witnesses as he considers necessary. Mere fact that the same case was investigated by the police and no challan was put up by them against the accused is no ground for refusing to summon the witnesses unless the Magistrate considers any of the witness as to be unnecessary. He can refuse to summon the witnesses on the latter ground but not on the former. [P 445 C 1]

Facts. — Ghulam Mohiyyud-Din has put in a ~~complaint~~ against Sardara and others under Ss. 307, 325, 107 and 109 Indian Penal Code. The accused were summoned for an offence under S. 325, Indian Penal Code. The case is pending in the Court of Khan Iftikhar Hussain Khan, Honorary Magistrate Second Class, Jalalabad. The complainant put in an application on 13th August 1937, requesting that his witnesses (who numbered fifteen) should be summoned at Government expense. The Magistrate made an order that the complainant should pay the travelling expenses and the diet money of his witnesses, otherwise proceedings would be taken for a discharge of the accused under S. 253, Criminal Procedure Code.

The Magistrate's order is based on the ground that this very case was investigated by the police and no challan was sent up against the accused.

Grounds. — S. 252 (2), Criminal Procedure Code lays down that the Magistrate has to summon such of the complainant's witnesses to give evidence before himself as he thinks necessary. In the present case, the Magistrate has not said that he considers any of the witnesses to be unnecessary. The case is a cognizable one and according to Para. 1, Ch. 9 (a) of the High Court Rules and Orders (Vol. 3), the Magistrate is authorized to pay the expenses of the witnesses in a case similar to the present one. I therefore recommend to the Honourable Judges of the High Court that they be pleased to order the Magistrate to summon the complainant's witnesses at Government expense. I also recommend that the Magistrate's discretion should not be fettered because one of the witnesses is shown as being resident of Aden. He may be simply ordered to summon such of the witnesses at Government expense as he considers necessary.

Order. — I agree with the learned Additional Sessions Judge and accepting the petition direct the Magistrate to summon under S. 252 (2) of the Criminal Procedure Code, at the expense of Government such of the complainant's witnesses as he considers to be necessary.

Khursaid Zaman—for Appellants.

Chaudhri Nazir Hussain, (Asst. Legal Remembrancer — for Respondent.)

Addison J.—Twelve plaintiffs, describing themselves as Dadd Jats, sued the Secretary of State for a declaration that they were Dadd Jats by caste and not Sheikh Dadds. The trial Judge dismissed their suit but the District Judge on appeal decreed it. There was a second appeal to this Court which was heard by a single Judge. He reversed the decision of the District Judge and restored the decision of the trial Court. Against his decision this Letters Patent appeal has been preferred on a certificate granted by the single Judge. It was contended before the single Judge that the matter was concluded by a finding of fact. The Judge admitted that prima facie this was so but in his opinion the District Judge had disregarded certain legal presumptions and for that reason he thought that a second appeal was competent. These wrong presumptions were that the District Judge had treated the earlier and later revenue records as entitled to equal weight while it was also held that the District Judge drew a wrong presumption from the admissions of the plaintiffs in certain deeds.

In the Settlements of 1860 and 1880 the plaintiffs' predecessors-in-interest were described as Jat Dadds. According to the single Judge the revenue records of 1900 and those subsequent thereto all showed the plaintiffs as Sheikh Dadds. This latter assertion is however not correct. There is no copy of the settlement record of 1900 of this village on the record. There are two copies of revenue entries however on the record, namely those of the years 1917 and 1929. These two records do show the plaintiffs as Sheikh Dadds but this is very different from asserting that they were recorded as Sheikh Dadds in the Regular Settlement of 1900. The plaintiffs produced three Jat witnesses who stated that the plaintiffs were their relatives with whom they inter-married, while the defendant placed on the record 14 documents in which the plaintiffs or their predecessors described themselves as Sheikh Dadds. This along with the settlement and revenue entries is all the material evidence. The District Judge did not regard the evidence of the documents as at all conclusive on the ground that naturally the persons in whose favour the mortgages and sales were made were money-lenders who would insist on the persons with whom they were dealing, describing themselves as anything but members of a statutory agricultural tribe.

The learned single Judge said that that was not a correct way of approaching the matter as those documents proved the admissions of the plaintiffs or their predecessors in interest. He admitted that those admissions were not conclusive but it was in his opinion for the plaintiffs to take away their weight by producing some evidence. He further stated that six of the documents were prior to 1900 when the Punjab Alienation of Land Act was passed and that the remarks of the District Judge could not be correct as regards them. He then went on to say that the District Judge did not consider whether greater weight should be attached to the earlier or the later settlements whereas there was authority that the later settlements should be preferred to the earlier settlements. Reference was also made to Rose's Glossary of Tribes and Castes in the Punjab which gives Dadds as an agricultural clan found in Shahpur whereas this case refers to District Jhelum which, however, is near to the Shahpur District. For these reasons, the learned single Judge accepted the appeal. According to S. 44, Land Revenue Act, 17 of 1887 an entry made in the record of rights in accordance with the law for the time being in force, or in an annual record in accordance with the provisions of this Chapter and the rules thereunder, shall be presumed to be true until the contrary is proved or a new entry is lawfully substituted therefor. It has already been pointed out that it is not known how the plaintiffs were described in the Regular Settlement of 1900 and that only copies of the revenue records of 1917 and 1929 have been placed on the record. It has not been shown how or why the description of the plaintiffs in the two Regular Settlements of 1860 and 1880 came to be changed from Jat Dadds to Sheikh Dadds. It is thus not established that a new entry has been lawfully substituted for the old entry and it should have been easy to produce the mutations which effected this change while it was also easy to produce a copy of the settlement record of 1900 of this village. But this question scarcely arises as will be seen later.

Further, as regards eight of the documents there can be no question that money lenders would insist that the persons who executed them should describe themselves as not being members of a statutory agricultural tribe as these eight documents are subsequent to 1900. The other six are prior to 1900, it is true, but even then under the Customary law it would have been necessary for the money lenders to prove necessity in case of any dispute with the heirs of the persons who executed the documents, if the persons with whom they were dealing were described as belonging to a caste which was a well-known agricultural tribe. Jats are probably the most numerous tribe in the Punjab and it would be impossible for anyone in their case to say that they did not follow custom; whereas if they were described as Sheikh Dadds it would be easy to put forward this plea and, if they followed Mahomedan law, the question of necessity would not arise. These six documents therefore do not appear to us to have that value which the single Judge placed upon them.

The District Judge thus considered the oral evidence; he considered the entries in the revenue records of 1917 and 1929; he considered the fact that in the 1860 and 1880 Settlements they were shown as Jat Dadds; he considered the effect of the documents put in and he then came to the conclusion that it had been established that the plaintiffs were Jat Dadds. This is a finding of fact and in our opinion he was competent to come to this finding, which could not be disturbed in second appeal. In 11 Lah 199¹ at p. 208 their Lordships of the Privy Council said that the question whether a statutory presumption was rebutted by the rest of the evidence was a question of fact. There is also another decision of theirs on a similar matter, namely 57 Mad 652.² Their Lordships further went on to say that the Appellate Court held that many of the entries, notwithstanding the presumption under S. 44, were incorrect. The entries relied on by the appellants were not the foundation of their title but were mere items of evidence adduced by them to prove the sale. The only question as regards the entries was their evidentiary value on the fact in issue.

These remarks apply with equal force in this case. At two Regular Settlements and for many years the plaintiffs had been described as Jat Dadds. In some unexplained way and at some time not known these entries were changed and they were described as Sheikh Dadds. The effect of the documents was considered by the District Judge, the effect of all the entries in the revenue papers was considered by him and he further noted that there were still certain other persons left in this village who were described in the revenue papers of 1931-32 as Jat Dadds. On that evidence he held, and he was competent to hold, that it had been established that the plaintiffs were Jat Dadds. This being a finding of fact, it could not be disturbed on second appeal. We accept the appeal, set aside the decision of the single Judge and decree the plaintiffs' claim with costs throughout.

J. L. Kapur — for Petitioner.

Arjan Dev Bagai — for Respondent.

Order.—The petitioner obtained a money decree against one Jiwan Shah, a Sayed of Dera Ghazi Khan district. After Jiwan Shah's death, his son Karam Hussain Shah was brought on the record and the land in dispute was attached as the property of Jiwan Shah deceased. Karam Hussain Shah objected that the land was ancestral and that as the family was governed by custom, the land was not liable to attachment in execution of a money decree against his father. The decree-holder replied that the judgment-debtors being Sayeds were governed by Mahomedan law and not by custom. During the pendency of the proceedings in the executing Court, Act 2 of 1936 was enacted, which lays down that where custom is the rule of decision in regard to succession, ancestral property is exempt from attachment in execution, unless the case is brought within certain specified exceptions mentioned in the section. The crucial point in the case therefore is, whether custom is the rule of decision in regard to succession to immovable property in the tribe or family of the respondent.

In the "Customary Law of the Dera Ghazi Khan District" compiled by Mr. Wilson in the course of the second revised settlement of 1917-1920, in answer to Question 28 at p. 24, Sayeds are described as following Mahomedan law in matters of succession, and at pp. 25-26 three instances of succession in this tribe are given in which Mahomedan law was followed. It is unfortunate that in his judgment the learned District Judge does not refer to this entry at all. It is settled law that entries in the riwaj-i-am are to be presumed to be correct and the onus lies heavily on the party who wishes to prove the contrary. It is not clear from the record whether the judgment-debtor had set up a general custom prevailing among Sayeds generally in the Dera Ghazi Khan dis-strict, or a special custom in his own family only. His counsel has stated before me that the custom relied upon was a special family custom, and he contended that in support of this two recent instances of succession contrary to Mahomedan law have been proved on the record. These instances were considered sufficient by the learned District Judge. Counsel concedes, however, that in view of the recent Full Bench decision of this Court in A I R 1937 Lah 451,¹ these instances cannot be considered to be sufficient. It has been held by the Full Bench that a custom can be established only by proof of "ancient" instances and that a few instances of recent times are not sufficient. Following the Full Bench case, it is not possible to hold on the present record that the rule of succession in this tribe or family is different from that mentioned in the riwaj-i-am. As however the Full Bench decision was delivered only recently, and a different view had prevailed before its pronouncement, I do not think it fair to the respondent to decide the case without giving him an opportunity of establishing the alleged custom by proof of "ancient" instances, in accordance with the decision of the Full Bench.

I accordingly accept the petition for revision, set aside the judgments of the Courts below and remand the case to the Court of first instance with the direction that the judgment-debtor-respondent be given an opportunity of producing ancient instances to prove the alleged custom contrary to the entry in the riwaj-i-am. The decree-holder will be entitled to give evidence in rebuttal. Costs will abide the event. Both counsel have been directed to cause their clients to appear before the Junior Subordinate Judge, Dera Ghazi Khan on 6th December 1937.

Second Appeal No. 1570 of 1936, Decided on 12th July 1937, from decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Lahore, D/- 14th August 1936.

Where B pleads that A made certain representations to him as regards his title to certain property and in a suit by A with respect to such property against B, B pleads that A is estopped by his representations and he cannot therefore bring the suit, A is not precluded from showing that the representation was due to a mistake and that it cannot operate against him till B establishes that he acted upon such representation and changed his position to his prejudice. [P 450 O 1]

(b) Transfer of Property Act (1882), S. 52—Applicability—Suit by A to recover lease money of certain property from B—B pleading that A represented to him that C owned half share in such property—B further pleading payment of half lease money to C — Contention by B that he having taken mortgage from C of his half share on A's representation, A was estopped from denying his title as mortgagee—Mortgage taken by B from C, on repudiation by A of C's title and on institution of suit for declaration of his title against C as well as B—Mortgage held affected by doctrine of lis pendens—A held not bound by mortgage.

A brought a suit against B to recover lease money of certain property. B pleaded that A had represented to him that C had half share in such property and that on such representation he paid half the lease money to C and took a mortgage of his half share from C. B therefore contended that A was estopped from denying his title as mortgagee and that he was bound by his mortgage. It was found that B took his mortgage from C after repudiation by A of C's title to the property and after the institution of the suit by A against C for declaration of his title to the property. To this suit B was also made a party:

Held that even though B was aware of the fact that the title of his mortgagor C was in dispute he took the mortgage from C. The mortgage was therefore affected by the doctrine of lis pendens and A could not be held bound by such mortgage. [P 451 C 1]

Judgment.—Second Appeals Nos. 1570 and 1602 of 1936 are connected and will be disposed of together. These arise out of a suit for recovery of Rs. 1800/- as rent by one Thakar Das against Jai Kishen Das. It was alleged that the shops were originally leased by Mt. Karam Devi to the defendant at a rent of Rs. 80/- p. m. Mt. Karam Devi died on 15th March 1932 and the plaintiff claimed to be her sole heir. He further alleged that he had given a notice to the defendant on 10th April 1935 to vacate the shops within one month and that as he had not done so he was liable to pay double the rent, as stated in the notice. Allowing for Rupees 1400 received from the defendant the plaintiff claimed the balance of Rs. 1800 due on account of rent for the period from 16th March 1932 to 16th June 1935. The defendant raised a number of pleas which will appear from the following issues which were framed in the case:

* 1. Is the suit of the plaintiff not maintainable without a succession certificate? O. P. on defendant. 2. Were any rent deeds executed after the death of Karam Devi in favour of plaintiff's sons and Tara Chand and, if so, how does that affect plaintiff's rights? O. P. on defendant. 3. Is the plaintiff entitled to claim double rent on the strength of notices D-1 and D-2 and if not, at what rate is he entitled? O. P. on plaintiff. 4. Can the defendant challenge plaintiff's right to sue notwithstanding the fact that he paid rent to him? O. P. on defendant. 5. Is plaintiff an heir of Karam Devi and can that plea be taken up in view of the conduct of the defendant? O. P. on parties. 6. Whether plaintiff ever gave up the rights that accrued to him, if any, under notices D-1 and D-2? O. P. on defendant. 7. What is the effect of the former litigation by Tara Chand on this suit? O. P. on plaintiff. 8. Relief?

The trial Court found all the issues against the defendant and decreed the suit. On appeal by the defendant only three points were raised before the learned Additional District Judge, viz. (1) that the learned Judge of the trial Court had erred in not giving sufficient opportunity to the defendant to produce his witnesses; (2) that plaintiff was not the heir of Mt. Karam Devi, and (3) that certain leases in favour of Tara Chand and the sons of the plaintiff were executed on the representation of the plaintiff and the plaintiff being bound by the representation was not entitled to claim the rent sued for.

On the first point the learned Additional District Judge held that the trial Court was justified, in the exercise of its discretion, in refusing to grant an adjournment to the defendant as he had not paid the process fee in time and had not appeared on the date which was fixed for scrutiny of service. On the second point he held that the plaintiff was the sole heir of Mt. Karam Devi according to law. On the third point he found that certain leases had been executed in favour of the plaintiff's sons and Tara Chand, his nephew, by various tenants including the present defendant with the consent of the plaintiff and he was therefore estopped from claiming more than one half of the rent of the shops; for according to these leases the plaintiff (or his sons?), had only one half share in the shops. He further found that the alleged notice in which the plaintiff had intimated that he would charge double the rent if the shops were not vacated within the period of one month had been cancelled as alleged by the defendant and the plaintiff was therefore not entitled to claim double the rent for any contumacious holding. According to the learned Additional District Judge, plaintiff was only entitled to Rs. 1440 as half share of the rent for the shops till 15th March 1935. On the latter date, a compromise was effected in a suit instituted by Tara Chand against the present plaintiff Thakar Das by which Thakar Das was acknowledged by Tara Chand as the sole owner of the shops. The learned Judge, was therefore of opinion that the plaintiff was entitled to full rent from the date of the compromise. On this basis, he modified the decree of the trial Court and granted plaintiff a decree for Rs. 280 only. As the defendant had succeeded on the main points he allowed costs to the defendant throughout. From this decision both parties have appealed.

I shall take up the plaintiff's appeal first. This appears to be concluded mostly by findings of fact. The learned counsel for the plaintiff sought to challenge some of the findings of the learned Additional District Judge, viz. (i) that the leases in favour of Tara Chand and plaintiff's own sons had been effected with plaintiff's own consent and were binding on him at least upto the date of the compromise in Tara Chand's suit, and (ii) that the notice dated 10th April 1935, on the basis of which the plaintiff claimed double rent had ceased to have force owing to a subsequent agreement between the parties by which it was cancelled. But these are findings of fact and the learned counsel was unable to point out in respect of these findings any point of law which could be properly raised in second appeal. The execution of the lease in favour of plaintiff's sons and Tara Chand may have been due to uncertainty as regards the legal position and other circumstances, as deposed to by the defendant's witnesses whose evidence has been accepted by the learned Additional District Judge. As regards the cancellation of the notice dated 10th April 1935, the circumstances are undoubtedly very suspicious. The parties gave conflicting versions. The learned Additional District Judge has, however, accepted the defendant's version and this finding again, being purely one of fact, is final.

The only point of law which the learned counsel for the plaintiff was able to urge was that even if the lease in favour of Tara Chand was executed on the basis of plaintiff's representation as held by the learned Additional District Judge, he was not precluded from showing that the representation was due to a mistake and that it cannot operate as an estoppel, unless and until the defendant was able to establish that he had acted on that representation and his position had been prejudiced. The defendant's position was that he had paid rent to Tara Chand and that he had also accepted a mortgage of Tara Chand's share as a result of plaintiff's representations at the time when the lease in favour of Tara Chand was executed and that the plaintiff was therefore estopped from denying that Tara Chand was entitled to half share in the shops. This point arises in connexion with the defendant's appeal also and it will be convenient to consider it in dealing with that appeal.

Coming now to the defendant's appeal, the main point stressed on his behalf was that the plaintiff had instituted this suit in the capacity of a landlord, on the basis of a lease executed by the defendant in favour of Mt. Karam Devi, of whom plaintiff claimed to be the sole heir but that he had failed to prove that the relationship of landlord and tenant existed between him and the defendant. The finding of the Courts below that plaintiff is the sole heir of Mt. Karam Devi according to Hindu law by which the parties were governed, was not challenged. But it was urged that according to the finding of the learned Additional District Judge plaintiff had himself got leases executed in favour of his sons and of Tara Chand in equal shares after the death of Mt. Karam Devi and as there was no subsequent lease in his own favour, he had no right to sue as a landlord for recovery of the rent of the shops. It was contended that according to these leases, the plaintiff's sons and not the plaintiff could sue. This contention might have had force, had it not been for the fact, that the defendant himself appears to have recognized the plaintiff as a landlord at least to the extent of half share in the shops and has on his own showing paid rent to him on that basis. It appears from the evidence, that although a lease was executed in favour of the plaintiff's sons and Tara Chand the lease in favour of plaintiff's sons was practically treated as 'benami' and the plaintiff himself was treated as the landlord. The defendant paid rent to the plaintiff and the receipts taken do not show that plaintiff purported to act as an agent of his sons. In view of this fact, there seems to be no force in this contention. It is significant that the point was not even pressed before the learned Additional District Judge.

The next point urged was that defendant had paid rent in good faith to Tara Chand as owner of half of the shops on the basis of the representation made by the plaintiff and he was therefore entitled to claim deduction for it. It was urged that the defendant had not been able to produce Tara Chand as a witness as the learned Judge of the trial Court refused to give him an adjournment for the purpose and that this action of the trial Court was illegal and has prejudiced him. As to this point, it may be noticed that the learned Additional District Judge has only allowed plaintiff half rent for the shops up to 15th March 1935, the date of the compromise in the suit filed by Tara Chand and Thakar Das. Full rent has been allowed to the plaintiff only for the three succeeding months, viz. 16th March 1935 to 16th June 1935. It is not urged that any rent was paid to Tara Chand for this latter period. The only fact which was laid stress on in this connexion was the mortgage executed by Tara Chand in favour of the defendant on 25th February 1934. If this mortgage (with possession) is held to be binding on the plaintiff the plaintiff will of course, not be entitled to any rent for half share of the shops from the date of the mortgage.

As I have noted above, the plaintiff has been held to be the sole heir of Mt. Karam Devi and this finding is not disputed, but the defendant's contention was that the plaintiff was estopped from denying the defendant's title as a mortgagee as the plaintiff had represented at the time of the execution of the lease in favour of Tara Chand that Tara Chand was owner of half share in the shops and the defendant had acted upon that representation in accepting a mortgage of Tara Chand's share. The learned counsel for the plaintiff however pointed out that this mortgage was effected after the plaintiff had repudiated Tara Chand's title and Tara Chand had sued for a declaration of his own title. The defendant was made a party to this suit and was aware that the title of Tara Chand was in dispute. Yet, he seems to have accepted the mortgage of Tara Chand's share during the pendency of the suit. In the circumstances, the doctrine of lis pendens laid down in S. 52, T. P. Act, will, in my opinion, apply and the mortgage cannot be held to be binding on the plaintiff.

On the above finding, the question of payment of rent to Tara Chand is not material as far as the defendant's appeal is concerned but it is material so far as plaintiff's appeal is concerned. As pointed out above in connexion with that appeal, the only point of law which was raised in that appeal was that even if plaintiff be held to be bound by his representation, he cannot be estopped from claiming full rent from the outset unless the defendant could show that he had actually paid rent to Tara Chand for half share in the shop which was believed by him to belong to him. The defendant has not established that he did so. But it was contended on his behalf that he was unable to do so as the trial Court refused to give him opportunity to produce Tara Chand, who was his most important witness in this connexion. The learned Additional District Judge has held that the trial Court was justified in refusing to give an adjournment, as process fee was not deposited in time. But it appears that summonses were in fact returned with the report that Tara Chand could not be found. In the circumstances, the mere fact that process fee was deposited late was hardly sufficient to justify the trial Court's order refusing further adjournment to the defendant for producing Tara Chand. Tara Chand was undoubtedly an important witness and it seems to me that in the interests of justice further opportunity should have been given. I therefore frame the following additional issue and remit the case to the learned Additional District Judge for a finding thereon: (1) Did the defendant pay any rent to Tara Chand for his share in the shop? If so, how much and for what periods?

The defendant should be given reasonable opportunity to produce Tara Chand and a finding recorded on the basis of the evidence of Tara Chand and the other evidence on the record. Report within two months. Objections shall be filed within ten days thereafter and the case put up for hearing thereafter as early as possible. Parties should appear before the Additional District Judge, Lahore, on 26th July 1937.

Judgment. — This is a second appeal arising out of an application for execution of a decree, dated 14th December 1929, which has been dismissed by the Courts below as time-barred. The decree was obtained from the Court of Lala Parshotam Lal, Subordinate Judge. The first application for execution was made on 6th December 1932. By that time Lala Parshotam Lal had been transferred and the application for execution was presented to the Senior Subordinate Judge who transferred it to the Court of Mr. Sher Nawab Khan, Subordinate Judge. On 8th December 1932, the decree-holder was absent and the application was dismissed in default. The second application was presented on 17th December 1932 to the Court of Mr. Sher Nawab Khan. It was then discovered that the application should have been presented to the Court of Bakhshi Sher

Singh who was the successor of Lala Parshotam Lal. The application is then said to have been returned to the decree-holder for presentation to the proper Court. It was so presented on 20th December 1932. It was again dismissed on 24th April 1933. There were several other applications afterwards which were dismissed for one reason or another. Eventually, the present application was made on 25th March 1936 and it has been dismissed as time-barred on an objection being raised by the judgment-debtor.

The decision of the question of limitation turns mainly on the question whether the first application for execution, dated 6th December 1932, was made to the proper Court. The learned counsel for the appellant contended that the application was made to the proper Court as Lala Parshotam Lal, Subordinate Judge, who passed the decree, had been transferred; but it has been found by the Courts below that Bakhshi Sher Singh was the successor of Lala Parshotam Lal and in the circumstances it seems clear that the application should have been made to Bakhshi Sher Singh according to law. The learned counsel for the appellant then contended that the appellant had at any rate acted in good faith in prosecuting his application in the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge and he was therefore entitled to deduct the time so spent under S. 14, Lim Act. The Courts below have found that the appellant did not act in 'good faith' in presenting the application to the Senior Subordinate Judge. This is a finding of fact; but even if it were considered to be a mixed question of fact and law, it seems to me that the appellant cannot get any benefit from S. 14 in the circumstances of the case. For his first application was made on 6th December 1932 and it was dismissed in default on 8th December 1932, as stated above. He was therefore entitled only to deduct two days on account of the prosecution of his first application. The second application had however not been made till 17th December 1932. Even making allowance for the two days spent in prosecuting the first application, this second application which was presented on 17th December 1932, i. e. more than three years and two days after the decree was time-barred.

The learned counsel for the appellant contended that the first application should be considered to be a step-in-aid; but it seems clear that the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge was not the proper Court for presentation of the application for execution and hence any application to that Court was not a step-in-aid. The appellant could at best claim the benefit of S. 14; but for the reasons stated above it seems to me that that section cannot help him in the circumstances of the case. I therefore uphold the decision of the learned District Judge and dismiss the appeal but in view of all the circumstances leave the parties to bear their costs.

First Appeal No. 118 of 1937, Decided on 21st October 1937, from order of Dist. Judge, Gujranwala, D/- 24th February 1937.

Punjab Pre-emption Act (1 of 1913), S. 22 (1), (5)—Security bond becoming void—Fresh bond should be asked for and not cash.

Having exercised the option between cash and security bond by asking for security bond, the Court cannot ask for cash in case the security bond submitted becomes void. Court should ask for another security bond instead. [P 452 C 2]

Shamair Chand — for Respondents.

Judgment.—The plaintiff was ordered to furnish security under S. 22 (1) of the Punjab Pre-emption Act, but the surety withdrew and then he was asked to deposit cash within a certain time. He failed to do so and as a result the suit was dismissed. The learned District Judge has held that the security bond having become void, the Court should have asked for fresh security and not cash under S. 22 (5) (b) of the Act. The learned Judge has accordingly remanded the case with the direction that fresh security be ordered to be furnished. In my opinion the interpretation placed on S. 22 (5) (b) by the learned District Judge is correct. S. 22 (1) was no longer applicable as issues had been framed and the option as regards choice between cash and security had already been exercised. I dismiss the appeal, but in view of all the circumstances leave the parties to bear their costs in this Court.

Rahmat Ali Khan executed a wakf-alal-aulad on 29th July 1931 under which he was himself the first beneficiary, then his wife Taj Begum, defendant 1, then his two grandchildren, Daisy Dilara and Qamar Sultan, after which the property was to go to Anjuman Hamayat Islam. Rahmat Ali Khan has since died. Mubarak Jan, his second daughter, has challenged the wakf and has claimed that she is entitled as heir to seven-eighths of the house. The suit has been dismissed and she has appealed. The short point in the appeal is whether the wakf is valid. It was contended that as it was against the Mahomedan law of inheritance and the principal heir had been excluded it was illegal according to Mahomedan law. The section relied upon is S. 3, Mussalman Wakf Validating Act (6 of 1913), which runs as follows:

It shall be lawful for any person professing the Mussalman faith to create a wakf which in all other respects is in accordance with the provisions of Mussalman law, for the following among other purposes: (a) for the maintenance and support wholly or partially of his family, children or descendants; and (b) where the person creating a wakf is a Hanafi Mussalman, also for his own maintenance and support during his lifetime or for the payment of his debts out of the rents and profits of the property dedicated:

Provided that the ultimate benefit is in such cases expressly or impliedly reserved for the poor or for any other purpose recognized by the Mussalman law as a religious, pious or charitable purpose of a permanent character.

It is clear however, that the words, ‘which in all other respects is in accordance with the provisions of Mussalman law’ do not refer to the law of inheritance but the law of wakfs as governed by Mussalman law. Further, sub-cl. (a) allows a wakf for the maintenance and support wholly or partially of his family, children or descendants, and it has been held by a Division Bench of the Sind Judicial Commissioners Court in 125 I C 33¹ that the expression ‘family children and descendants’ in Cl. (a), S. 3, Mussalman Wakf Validating Act, do not mean the family or children or descendants as a class but may mean only some persons of a particular class and that under the Mahomedan law a valid wakf can be created in favour only of some members of the family or some of the children or descendants, whether males or females, and to the exclusion of others. This authority is on all fours with the present case while it may further be pointed out that in a Division Bench case, A I R 1928 All 516,² two widows received most inadequate benefits while both daughters were entirely neglected except that one daughter was to receive for her life, after her mother’s death, the scanty allowance payable to her mother in the first instance. That therefore is another instance of exclusion of some of the descendants. There is no question that the wakf is valid: in fact in the present case it goes completely to the Anjuman Hamayat Islam after the death of the two grandchildren. There is no force in this appeal which we dismiss but we make no order as to costs here. Civil Revn. Petn. No. 701 of 1936, Decided on 15th July 1937, from decree of Judge, Small Cause Court, Lahore, D/- 27th July 1936.

Landlord and Tenant—Suit for rent—Person taking on lease certain premises so long as he would remain in town—Lessee leaving premises without sufficient reason before expiry of term — Landlord protesting to such vacating and entering into possession — Suit for rent for unexpired portion of lease held was maintainable.

A person contracted to take certain premises on lease for a period of three years and subsequently extended it to a period during which he would remain in the town. After remaining in possession of the premises for a long period he left the premises without any sufficient reason before the expiry of the term in spite of the warning given by the landlord that he would be liable for rent so long as he would remain in the town. The landlord thereupon took possession of the premises and brought a suit for recovery of rent for a part of the unexpired period of lease:

Order.—The previous history of this case is given in my order of remand, dated 15th April 1936, in Civil Revn. No. 7 of 1936, and it is not necessary to recapitulate it here. Briefly, the facts are that the plaintiff-respondent is the owner of a house in Lahore. The defendant-petitioner is an employee of the Burma Shell Company and has been posted at Lahore for some years. Early in 1931 the defendant took on lease the plaintiff's house on a rent of Rs. 70 per mensem, plus Rs. 3-8-0 water-rate, which also was payable to the landlord. Originally the tenancy was for a period of three years, commencing from 1st February 1931. The plaintiff alleges that subsequently, at the request of the defendant and by consent of parties, the term of the lease was extended from three years to "so long as the defendant remained in Lahore." The defendant however vacated the house on 15th March 1935, though he then was, and still is, posted at Lahore. He had paid to the plaintiff rent up to 15th March, and that for the later half of March has been realized from him under a decree passed by the Small Cause Court. In May 1935, the plaintiff brought this suit against the defendant for recovery of rent for April and May 1935, alleging that the defendant had vacated the house on 15th March 1935 without any justification that in accordance with the conditions of the contract between the parties the tenancy was to subsist so long as the defendant remained in Lahore, and that he was liable to pay rent for the period in dispute. The defendant pleaded that the tenancy was for a period of three years only which expired on 1st January 1934. He denied that the term of the lease had been modified as alleged by the plaintiff, and further averred that he had left the house "at the suggestion of the plaintiff himself." Lastly, he urged that the suit for rent was not maintainable as the plaintiff had taken possession of the house as soon as the defendant had vacated it.

The suit was originally dismissed by the Judge, Small Cause Court, on the legal ground that, even if the modification of the original term of the tenancy extending its duration from three years to the period during which "the defendant remained in Lahore" was proved, it was bad for uncertainty. On revision, it was held by this Court that this view of the law was incorrect, and that a tenancy for the period during which the tenant remained in the station where the rented premises are situate was valid. The case was accordingly remanded for re-decision on the merits. The Judge, Small Cause Court, has held it proved that the parties had, by mutual agreement, modified the conditions of the tenancy so as to extend its duration from a period of three years to "so long as the defendant remained in Lahore." He has also held that the defendant did not vacate the house on 15th March 1935 "at the suggestion," or with the consent, of the plaintiff. He found, on the other hand, that the real facts were that the defendant wanted a reduction in the rent, to which the plaintiff did not agree; and the defendant vacated the house in spite of the warning of the plaintiff that he was liable to pay rent so long as he remained in Lahore. Though the plaintiff took possession of the house as soon as it was vacated by the defendant on 15th March 1935, this did not, in the opinion of the learned Judge, put an end to the tenancy as the plaintiff had never "assented to the surrender of possession by the defendant, which could only be made with the consent of the landlord." He accordingly passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff for Rs. 147, being the rent and water-rate for two months.

The defendant has come in revision and his counsel has challenged the findings of fact of the Court below, that the term of the tenancy had been extended by mutual consent of the parties, and that the defendant did not vacate the house at the suggestion, or with the consent, of the landlord. After hearing counsel I see no force in either of these contentions. The findings of the Court below are supported by oral and documentary evidence on the record and on this evidence no other conclusion can possibly be drawn. In the lower Court it was argued that there was a surrender of the tenancy when the defendant vacated the house and the plaintiff took possession of it. This contention was overruled by the learned Judge on the ground that surrender must be with the consent of the landlord or it might be by operation of law. In this case no consent was proved, and it is quite clear from the correspondence that the plaintiff was all along protesting against the vacation of the house by the defendant and was holding him responsible for payment of the rent. Before me, the learned counsel for the petitioner specifically stated that he was not agitating this point again. He admitted that if it were found that as a matter of fact the term of the tenancy had been extended "for the period during which the defendant remained in Lahore," it could not be said to have been determined on the day the defendant vacated the house and the plaintiff took possession of it.

He argued however that on this finding the suit for rent did not lie, the only remedy open to the plaintiff being to sue for damages under S. 73, Contract Act. In support of this contention he referred to Woodfall's Law of Landlord and Tenant, p. 117, where it is stated, that there are two remedies available for breach of a contract of lease, either of which, but not both, may generally be adopted by the intended landlord or by the intended tenant, as the case may be, viz. (1) an action to recover damages for breach and (2) an action to compel specific performance of the contract. The learned counsel also referred to 137 P R 1906¹ in which the same proposition was laid down. This ruling however and the quotation from Woodfall are not applicable to the facts of the present case. In the ruling cited, the defendant, having agreed to take certain premises on lease, had not entered into possession at all. In the present case, as already stated, he had been in actual possession for a long time, but had vacated without any sufficient reason, before the expiry of the term. The rule laid down in Woodfall also applies to "intended landlord" or "intended tenant". Moreover, in those cases also, one of the alternative remedies available is stated to be a suit for specific performance of the contract.

No authority has been cited in support of the proposition, that in circumstances like those of the present case, a suit for rent does not lie. On the other hand in (1876) 2 Q B D 575,² the facts of which are very similar to those of the present case, a decree for recovery of rent for the unexpired period of the lease was passed. After giving the case careful consideration, I am of opinion that the decision of the lower Court is correct. The petition for revision fails and is dismissed. Having regard to all the circumstances however I leave the parties to bear their own costs throughout.

v.Raja Ram and others — Decree-holders — Respondents.

Exn. Second Appeal No. 1097 of 1937, Decided on 10th January 1938, from order of Dist. Judge, Ambala, D/- 17th April 1937.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), Ss. 2 (2), 144—Order on appeal setting aside sale of judgment-debtor's property is decree — S. 144 covers such order.

An order passed on appeal setting aside the sale of a judgment-debtor's property is a decree and S. 144 is wide enough to cover such order.

(b) Limitation Act (1908), Arts. 181, 182—Art. 181 applies to application for restitution under S. 144, Civil P. C. and not Art. 182.

Article 181 applies to an application for restitution under S. 144, Civil P. C. An application under S. 144 is not an application for execution and Art. 182 does not apply to such an application: A I R 1931 Lah 504; A I R 1926 Lah 685; A I R 1924 Lah 166; A I R 1918 Lah 378 and A I R 1934 All 626, Foll.; A I R 1934 Pat 246 (F B), Not foll. [P 456 C 2; P 457 C 1]

Judgment.—This second appeal is by Telu, son of Mula, deceased judgment-debtor. In execution of a money decree against Mula, his proprietary land and his mortgagee rights in some other land were attached and sold to the decree-holders. On an appeal by the judgment-debtor Mula, to this Court the sale of the mortgagee rights to the decree-holders in full satisfaction of the decree was confirmed but the sale of the proprietary land was set aside on 21st December 1932. It appears that possession of both the mortgagee rights and proprietary rights had been given to the decree-holders, the purchasers of those rights. Mula having died an application was made by his son Telu on 19th May 1933 for possession of the land in which proprietary rights had been sold to the decree-holders but the sale had been set aside by this Court. This application however was dismissed in default. The application out of which these proceedings have arisen was then made by Telu on 14th January 1936. This application is also for possession of the proprietary land. It purports on the face of it to be made under S. 144, Civil P. C.

Two questions arise on this appeal: whether the application should be under

S. 144 or whether it is under S. 151, Civil P. C.; and secondly, which Article of the Limitation Act is applicable: whether Article 181, which provides a period of three years from the date of the order which entitled Telu to an order for restitution, or whether Art. 182, which applies to applications for execution, in which case the application of 19th May 1933 is claimed to be a step-in-aid of execution and therefore the application of 14th January 1936 is claimed to be within time.

Section 144 provides for restitution in cases where a decree is varied or reversed. The question is whether an order passed on appeal setting aside the sale of judgment-debtor's property is a decree. In my opinion it is. S. 144 is wide enough to cover such an order. The learned counsel for the appellants in fact did not seriously urge this point. This result follows from the definition of the decree in the Civil Procedure Code.

The next question is of the applicability of Art. 181 or Art. 182, Lim. Act. On that point the authorities of this Court are clear. It was held in *67 P R 1918*¹ that Art. 181 applied to an application for restitution under S. 144. The distinction between S. 583, Civil P. C. of 1882 and S. 144 of the present Civil P. C. was pointed out and it was held that the change in the phraseology of S. 144 enacted by the present Civil Procedure Code had the result of taking an application under S. 144 out of the purview of an application for execution of a decree. The same view was taken in *A I R 1924 Lah 166*² and *A I R 1926 Lah 685*³ and by a Division Bench of this Court on a Letters Patent appeal from the case in A I R 1931 Lah 504.⁴ It is true that there is no detailed discussion of the question in these three judgments but the conclusion of the learned Judges is that Art. 181 applies.

For the appellants reliance is placed on a Full Bench judgment of the Patna High Court, 13 Pat 411;⁵ but against this as

1. Ram Singh v. Sham Parshad, (1918) 5 A I R Lah 378=44 I C 301=67 P R 1918=15 PLR 1918

2. Chanda Singh v. Bishen Singh, (1924) 11 A I R Lah 166=76 I C 501.

3. Gujarmal v. Narain Singh, (1926) 13 A I R Lah 685=96 I C 804.

5. Bhaunath Singh v. Kedar Nath, (1934) 21 A I R Pat 246=148 I C 1180=13 Pat 411=15 P L T 173 (F B).

I have already mentioned there is the view of this Court and also the view of a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in A I R 1934 All 626.⁶ The preponderance of opinion in the other High Courts is to the same effect. I consider therefore that Art. 181 applies to an application for restitution under S. 144, Civil P. C. An application under that section is not an application for execution. In the present case there was no order by this Court when it accepted the appeal of the judgment-debtor in 1932 that the property in dispute should be restored to the judgment-debtor. Consequently I dismiss this appeal but under the peculiar circumstances of the case I leave the parties to bear their own costs in this Court.

Second Appeal No. 1623 of 1936, Decided on 16th April 1937, from decree of Dist. Judge, Ambala, D/- 2nd June 1936.

Limitation Act (1908), Art. 125 — Art. 125 is not restricted to reversioners — Suit by members of proprietary body of village to declare alienation by widow void is governed by Art. 125.

The word 'reversioner' should not be imported into Art. 125. Art. 125 is not restricted to suit by reversioners. A suit by certain members of the proprietary body of the village to declare that an alienation by a widow shall not affect their reversionary rights is governed by Art. 125. [P 457 C 2]

Tek Chand — for Appellants.

Dr. Nand Lal — for Respondents.

Judgment. — This is a second appeal arising out of a suit by certain members of the proprietary body of the village Dhanna in the Ambala district for a declaration that a gift of land made by a widow named Mt. Atri in favour of a minor named Maghi shall not affect their reversionary rights. The trial Court found that the plaintiffs were entitled to succeed to the property according to custom on the death of Mt. Atri, but held the suit to be time-barred under Art. 120, Lim. Act. This decision was confirmed on appeal by the learned District

Judge and the plaintiffs have come up in second appeal.

Two preliminary objections were raised by Dr. Nand Lal for the respondents, viz. that the appeal was not properly instituted as the power of attorney was not thumb-marked by all the appellants and secondly that the appeal was not properly stamped. Neither of them appears to have force. There was apparently doubt as to whether the power of attorney was duly thumb-marked by some of the appellants, but as the appeal could have been filed by any of the appellants in the interests of all, these appellants were eventually made respondents to remove the objection raised by the office. As regards the court-fee, the alienation was by a widow and as the suit was not based on any allegation that the property was ancestral, Art. 22, Court-fees Act (as amended in the Punjab) was not applicable and the court-fee of Rs. 10 was in my opinion sufficient.

On merits, the only question for decision is that of limitation. The learned counsel for appellants has contended that the suit was governed by Art. 125, Lim. Act and not by the residuary Art. 120. The Courts below have held that Art. 125 was inapplicable because the suit was instituted by members of the proprietary body and not by near reversioners. Art. 125, however is not by its wording restricted to suits by reversioners. According to the wording of that Article any suit by a Hindu or a Mahomedan of this type would be governed by it provided the plaintiffs were the persons who if the female who made the alienation died at the date of the institution of the suit, would be entitled to possession of the land in suit. According to the finding of the trial Court, the plaintiffs did fulfil this condition and I see no justification for importing the word reversioner in this Article which does not occur there. I therefore hold that the suit is governed by Art. 125, and would be clearly within time, the period of limitation under this Article being 12 years, if the plaintiffs are the persons entitled to possession on the death of Mt. Atri.

The learned District Judge has not however given any clear finding on the question whether the plaintiffs were the persons entitled to possession of the land, if Mt. Atri had died at the date of the institution of the suit. I accordingly accept the appeal and remand the case to the learned District Judge for determination of this question and re-decision on merits. Costs to follow final decision.

Letters Patent Appeals Nos. 151 and 152 of 1937, Decided on 15th February 1938, from order of Bhide J., Lahore, D/- 23rd November 1937.

The words used in S. 60, Civil P. C. are the same as those used in S. 18 of Punjab Colonization of Government Lands Act. It follows therefore that if a receiver can be appointed under S. 51, Civil P. Addison J.—This judgment will dispose of Letters Patent Appeals Nos. 151 and 152 of 1937. One Mohammad Sharif got a decree from the trial Court, which was set aside by this Court on 20th November 1934. The opposite party claimed restitution and Mohammad Sharif successfully resisted this claim up to last year when, on 27th May 1937, a lease of certain land, of which he is an occupancy tenant and to which the provisions of S. 18, Punjab Colonization of Lands Act apply, was auctioned. The highest bidder was Captain Mehr Din, who offered Rs. 7736 for a lease of the land for 30 years; this sum being sufficient to pay off the amount claimed in restitution plus certain taqavi due, owing to the Government. This lease was confirmed by the Court on 18th June 1937. Against that order and the connected order two appeals were instituted in this Court, which were dismissed by Bhide J. on 23rd November 1937. These appeals under the Letters Patent are against the orders passed by him. Under S. 18, Colonization of Government Lands (Punjab) Act 5 of 1912, the land in question cannot be attached or sold in execution of a decree or order of any Court or in any insolvency proceedings. It is on this ground that these appeals were admitted.

We are prepared to concede that a lease cannot be granted without attachment; but it was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 47 All 385¹ that a receiver could be appointed to realize the rents and profits and to apply the net balance towards liquidating a decree although the judgment-debtor's interest in the villages was a right to future maintenance within the meaning of S. 60, sub.s. (1) (n), Civil P. C., and therefore could not be attached and sold. The words used in S. 60, Civil P. C. are the same as those used in S. 18, Punjab Act 5 of 1912. It follows therefore that if a receiver can be appointed under S. 51, Civil P. C., although the property is not liable to attachment or sale by reason of S. 60 of the same Code, similarly a receiver can be appointed in a fit and proper case to liquidate a decree, although the lands or rather the interest in the lands cannot be attached or sold by reason of S. 18, Punjab Act 5 of 1912. We have already followed this Privy Council decision in I L R (1937) 18 Lah 486² and our decision was followed by a single Judge of this Court in Civil Exn. Second Appeal No. 127 of 1937.³ This judgment of the single Judge is on all fours with the present case, except that the receiver was only appointed for seven years. The same view was taken of the decision of the Privy Council by a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court in 59 Cal 205,⁴ although a Division Bench of the Bombay High Court seems to have placed a different construction on their Lordship's decision: see 57

1. Rajindra Narain Singh v. Mt. Sundar Bibi, (1915) 12 A I R P C 176=87 I O 295=47 All 385=52 I A 262 (P C).

4. Hemendra Nath v. Prokash Chandra, (1932) 19 A I R Cal 189=137 I O 98=59 Cal 205=85 O W N 1066.

Bom 507.⁵ We follow our previous decision and hold that this is a fit and proper case in which a receiver should be appointed to realize the sum of Rs. 7736, from the profits of the land in order to liquidate the decretal amount plus the taqvi charges.

We accordingly accept the appeals to the extent that we make the purchaser of the lease a receiver of the land in suit until the above sum is liquidated. The Collector in granting the original lease made sufficient provision for the maintenance of Muhammad Sharif and we are not called upon therefore to do anything further in that respect. The receiver will have to render accounts to the Court each year on 15th January, commencing with 15th January 1939, showing the profits accruing for the past year. That sum will be deducted each year from the sum of Rs. 7736, and Muhammad Sharif can at any time get the land back from the receiver by paying either to him or preferably directly into Court the sum of Rs. 7736, minus the profits duly accounted for each year. Further, the receiver cannot hold possession for more than 30 years, for which he took the lease, and his possession will then cease whether the annual profits have or have not amounted to the sum which he had paid, namely the sum of Rs. 7736. The appeals are accepted as indicated above. Parties will bear their own costs before us and before the single Judge.

Second Appeal No. 8 of 1937, Decided on 21st April 1937, from order of Dist. Judge, Lyallpur, D/. 2nd January 1937.

(1908 as amended by S. 35 of Punjab Act, 7 of 1934), S. 60 (1) (c)—Property validly and legally vested in Official Receiver in 1933—Amendment coming into force in 1935 does not divest him of such property—Succession opening out long after vesting of property—Legal representatives can claim no exemption.

Judgment. — The facts of the case, which has given rise to this second appeal are as follows : In 1932 Buta Singh, respondent, in execution of a money decree obtained by him against Hazara Singh, father of the present appellants, got two houses attached as the property of the judgment-debtor. The appellants objected that the houses belonged to them and not to the judgment-debtor. These objections were dismissed. They then filed a suit for declaration of their title under O. 21, R. 63, Civil P. C., but the suit also failed. In May 1932, the judgment-debtor Hazara Singh applied for insolvency and on 5th October 1933, he was adjudicated insolvent and his property vested in the Official Receiver. This property included the houses in question. The appellants again objected before the Insolvency Court, that the houses belonged to them. After lengthy litigation this claim was disallowed by the District Judge, who held that they belonged to the insolvent. This order was passed on 24th February 1936. About a month later Hazara Singh, insolvent, died. About this time steps were taken to sell the houses, but the appellants, as the sons and legal representatives of the deceased, objected on the ground that the houses could not be sold as they were exempt under S. 60 (1) (c), Civil P. C. as amended by the (Punjab) Act No. 7 of 1934, which had come into force on 8th April 1935. The Insolvency Judge upheld the objection and directed that the houses be released. On appeal by Buta Singh, the learned District Judge has come to a contrary conclusion and has held that the houses vested in the Official Receiver in 1933, that they were not exempt from attachment and sale under S. 60 (1) (c), Civil P. C. as then in force, and that they could not be released in 1936 after the amendment introduced by Act 7 of 1934.

As already stated, Hazara Singh had been adjudicated insolvent in 1933 when his property vested in the Official Receiver. Hazara Singh lived for 2½ years after the order of adjudication, but he never claimed that the houses were exempt under S. 60 (1) (c), Civil P. C. Nor did he claim that he was an agriculturist and that the houses were "occupied by him." It had been ruled in numerous cases under S. 60, as it stood before the amendment, that the exemption applied only if the houses were being used or occupied bona fide for purposes of agriculture at the time of attachment. The insolvent in his lifetime never claimed that he was an "agriculturist" within the meaning of S. 60 or that at the time of attachment or his insolvency the houses were being "used or occupied for bona fide agricultural purposes". The learned District Judge was therefore right in holding that the houses had vested in the Official Receiver in 1933. It is no doubt true that 18 months later S. 60 was amended so as to enlarge the scope of the exemption. Under the amended law the houses of an agriculturist are exempt if they are not let out on rent or lent to others or left vacant for a period of a year or more. But I fail to see how this amendment which came into force in 1935 could divest the Official Receiver of property which had validly and legally vested in him in 1933. Nor do I see how the appellants, as the legal representatives of the insolvent can claim exemption, when succession to them opened out long after the vesting of the property in the Official Receiver. The learned counsel for the appellants has relied upon A I R 1937 Lah 52,¹ but the facts of that case are clearly distinguishable.

The appeal fails and is dismissed. As the respondent is not present, there will be no order as to costs.

Civil Ref. No. 19 of 1937, Decided on 16th November 1937, made by Deputy Commissioner and Collector, Karnal, D/ 24th August 1937.

Stamp Act (1899), S. 2 (17)—To bring instrument within definition of mortgage deed transfer should be effected by instrument in question.

In order to bring an instrument within the definition of mortgage deed it is necessary that the transfer should be effected by the instrument in question. Where an entry is merely a memorandum of payment of certain sum to another on account of the mortgage of certain land and does not purport itself to create the mortgage, the document is not liable to be stamped as a mortgage deed. [P 460 C 2]

Order.—This is a reference under S. 61, Stamp Act, by the Collector, Karnal District, forwarding a declaration by the Senior Subordinate Judge, Karnal, in Civil Appeal No. 25 of 1937, Dasaundha Singh v. Malhi Singh, decided on 24th April 1937, that a certain bahi entry (Ex. P.3) produced in that case was a receipt for the payment of Rs. 260 and could be admitted in evidence on payment of a consolidated penalty of Re. 1 as it did not bear a stamp. The Collector has expressed the opinion that the view taken by the Senior Subordinate Judge is wrong and that the document in question is really a mortgage deed, which created a charge for Rs. 260 on immovable property, and therefore it should have been stamped as such and penalty levied accordingly. I have examined the document and am unable to accept the view of the Collector. "Mortgage deed" is defined in S. 2 (17), Stamp Act as including every instrument whereby, for the purpose of securing money advanced, or to be advanced, by way of loan, or an existing or future debt, or the performance of an engagement, one person transfers or creates to, or in favour of another, a right over or in respect of a specified property.

In order to bring an instrument within this definition, it is necessary that the transfer should be effected by the instrument in question. The entry in dispute does not contain any words from which it may be inferred that the mortgage was created by it. It is merely a memorandum of payment of Rs. 260 to Mohli on account of the mortgage of certain land. It does not purport itself to create the mortgage. I hold that the document was not liable to be stamped as a mortgage deed.

The Customary law of the District is based on enquiries made in rural areas at the time of the settlement and no representatives from towns are consulted as a rule. The Mahajans of Hissar town, whose main source of livelihood is business and not agriculture, are not governed by the Customary law, but by the Hindu law. Judgment. — Civil Appeals 1161 and 1162 of 1936 are connected and will be disposed of together. The pedigree-table of the parties concerned is as follows :

Hanwant Ram had two wives. Daulat and Patru Mal were his sons by one of the wives and the remaining sons were by the other wife. On the death of Hanwant Ram, the entire estate consisting of land, houses and other property was partitioned, amongst the sons after a reference to arbitration. Daulat died shortly afterwards and thereafter two suits were instituted, one by Badri Parshad and the other by Patru. Patru claimed that he was the sole heir of Daulat according to Hindu law while Badri Parshad claimed that the parties were governed by custom and according to custom all the brothers of Daulat were entitled to succeed to his property. The main point for decision in both the suits, which were tried together, was whether the parties were governed by Hindu law or by custom. The trial Court held that the parties were governed by Hindu law and decreed Patru's suit and dismissed that of Badri Parshad. On appeal the learned Additional District Judge however came to a contrary conclusion and accepting the appeal of Badri Parshad decreed his suit and dismissed the suit of Patru. From this decision the present appeals have been preferred.

The main point for decision in these appeals is whether the parties are governed by Hindu law or by custom. The learned counsel for the appellant Patru Mal has contended that the parties being Mahajans and being residents of Hissar town and their main source of livelihood being business and not agriculture, they should be presumed to be governed by Hindu law. As regards the Customary law of the district, he urged that although the preface showed that the Mahajans in the district owned a considerable proportion of the land and were consulted at the time of the preparation of the riwaj-i-am of the District, this fact alone could not be sufficient to show that the riwaj-i-am applied to the parties to the present suit who, as stated above, are residents of a town and are not dependent on agriculture as their main source of livelihood. In support of his contention the learned counsel relied chiefly on 115 P R 1907,¹ 124 P R 1908,² 9 Lah 120³ and A I R 1927 Lah 47.⁴ The learned counsel for the respondents on the other hand contended that the rulings relied upon by the learned counsel for the appellant could no longer be held to be good law, that according to the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in 45 P R 1917,⁵ the riwaj-i-am is a strong piece of evidence in support of custom, and that the riwaj-i-am should be taken to be applicable to the whole of the District including towns and it was so applied to Peshawar town by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 10 Lah 86.⁶ It was also contended that Mahajans of the District should be looked upon as one community and that the fact that they were consulted at the time of the preparation of the riwaj-i-am is sufficient to show that the whole community is governed by custom as recorded in the riwaj-i-am. The learned counsel also pointed out that the riwaj-i-am was carefully prepared and in the answers to several questions, the custom as stated by Mahajans was specifically referred to.

The oral evidence produced by the parties was not of much value and the decision on the point of custom raised in the present case really turns on the question whether a presumption in favour of custom being applicable to the parties to the present case should be raised on the basis of the riwaj-i-am of the District. In his statement of the case Badri Parshad's counsel relied on 'special custom in the family and Mahajan community of Hissar' that all sons inherit equally and full brothers cannot exclude half-brothers. It is not now urged that any family custom is proved and the only question is whether any custom of the 'Mahajan community' of Hissar is proved. It is not clear whether by the word 'Hissar' Hissar town or 'Hissar district' was meant. But the Customary law of the district was not relied on at the outset, nor was any copy of the riwaj-i-am produced in evidence. The other party had therefore no opportunity of knowing that Badri Parshad relied on the 'Customary law of Hissar District' which was later relied on only in arguments.

However, even assuming that it was permissible for Badri Parshad to rely upon the "Customary law of the District" at any stage, it seems to me that it cannot be held to be applicable to residents of towns. The Customary law of the district is based, as is well-known on inquiries made in rural areas at the time of the settlement, and so far as I am aware, no representatives from towns are consulted as a rule. The general instructions for the preparation of the riwaj-i-am will be found in paragraph 565 of Douie's Settlement Manual. It will appear therefore that it is the leading men from villages who are usually consulted. The preface to the Customary law of the Hissar district shows that inquiries were made from Mahajans because they owned much land in the tract. The customary rules recorded in the riwaj-i-am are of the rural population and as Mahajans are not usually found amongst the land owning rural population to any appreciable extent, the above remark about Mahajans was apparently intended to explain why they were consulted at all. But the fact that Mahajans were consulted, would not in my opinion show that the riwaj-i-am was evidence about customs obtaining amongst all the Mahajans of the district particularly amongst residents of towns, when there is no evidence to show that any representatives of Mahajan residents of towns were consulted.

It was urged on behalf of the opposite side that Mahajans of the district should be looked upon as one 'community'. But I think it will be dangerous to generalize custom on any such basis. If such generalization were permissible, it could perhaps be extended to all Mahajans in the Punjab or even in India which would be absurd. It is well known that custom varies with tribe as well as locality, and the safest course is to confine the rule of custom to the persons, whose representatives may be taken to have been consulted. In the present instance, the representatives of Mahajans owning lands and living in villages were presumably consulted. Such persons frequently adopt customs of the agricultural tribes amongst whom they live. But it would not, I think, be justifiable to assume from their answers that Mahajans all over the district are governed by the custom recorded in the riwaj-i-am. The parties to this case own some land, but they live in the town of Hissar and their main source of livelihood is admittedly business and not agriculture.

5. Beg. v. Allah Ditta, (1916) 3 A I R P O 129 = 88 I C 354 = 44 I A 89 = 45 P R 1917 = 44 Cal 749 (P C).

6. Mt. Vaishno Ditti v. Mt. Rameshri, (1928) 15 A I R P C 294 = 113 I C 1 = 55 I A 407 = 10 Lah 86 (P C).

There is a long array of decisions of the Punjab Chief Court and this Court to the effect that there is no presumption in the case of high caste Hindus living in towns that they are governed by custom. In fact, custom has always been proved by the person who relies on it, 45 Cal 450,⁷ and the onus lay on Badri Parshad. His counsel now relies only on the Customary law of the district. For reasons given above the "Customary law of the district" is, in my opinion, not sufficient to raise any presumption that the customs recorded therein apply to the parties to the present suits. The learned counsel for the opposite side relied on 10 Lah 86,⁸ in which the Customary law of the Peshawar district was apparently applied to residents of Peshawar town. But the question whether the Customary law of the district could be properly held to be applicable to residents of towns was apparently neither raised nor considered by their Lordships and hence I do not think the ruling can be taken to be authoritative on that point. In my opinion, it is not proved that the parties to this case are governed by custom. I accordingly accept these appeals, decree the suit of Patru Mal and dismiss that of Badri Parshad. But in view of all the circumstances, I leave the parties to bear their costs throughout.

Second Appeal No. 1612 of 1937, Decided on 9th February 1938, from preliminary decree of District Judge, Ambala, D/- 6th October 1937.

(a) Mortgage—Consideration—Onus of proof — Execution proved — Acknowledgment of receipt of consideration by mortgagor recited — Purchaser of equity of redemption in auction sale — Onus lies on him to prove want of consideration.

Where a mortgage deed is proved to have been executed and the document contains an acknowledgment of the receipt of the consideration, this is strong prima facie evidence that the consideration has been actually received and is evidence not only against the mortgagors but also against persons claiming under them subsequent to the date of the mortgage. [P 464 C 2 ; P 465 C 1]

In execution of a decree for interest on a mortgage, the equity of redemption was sold. The mortgage deed was proved to have been executed by the mortgagor and contained an acknowledgment of receipt of consideration. Subsequently in the suits on the mortgage, the purchaser denied consideration and contended that the onus of proving the consideration for the mortgage lay on the mortgagee :

Held that the onus lay on the purchaser to prove want of consideration : A I R 1914 All 319 ; A I R 1930 Mad 251 and A I R 1929 Pat 254, Rel. on. [P 464 C 2]

(b) Mortgage — Consideration — Suit for interest on mortgage—Consideration not denied by mortgagor—Purchaser of equity of redemption in execution of decree for interest is estopped from pleading want of consideration for mortgage.

In a suit for recovery of interest due on the mortgage, the mortgagor did not deny the consideration. The suit was decreed against him, and in execution of that decree the equity of redemption was purchased :

Held that as the purchaser had derived title from the mortgagor at a Court sale in execution of a decree for interest due on the mortgage deed it was not open to him to say that this very mortgage deed was without consideration. [P 465 C 1]

Judgment.—On 10th July 1921 Ghulam Mohammad, defendant 1, mortgaged house No. 2047 to Teja Singh, father of the plaintiffs, for Rs. 99. The mortgage was without possession and the mortgage money carried interest at Rs. two per cent. per mensem. On 26th November 1928, the mortgagor Ghulam Mohammad created an additional mortgage on the same house in favour of the same mortgagee for Rs. 99 carrying interest at Re. 1-2-0 per cent. per month. On the same day, i. e. 26th November 1928, another mortgage deed was executed by Ghulam Mohammad in favour of Teja Singh by which he raised Rs. 99 on the security of house No. 2047 and another house No. 2042: interest on the amount secured on this mortgage was also fixed at Re. 1-2-0 per cent. per month. It was further stipulated that the mortgage money would be paid within six years, but that the mortgagee would be entitled to recover interest every month. On 24th October 1934 the mortgagee brought a suit for recovery of interest due on foot of the mortgage (Ex. P-3) dated 26th November 1928. In this suit Ghulam Mohammad defendant did not plead that the mortgage-

(Ex. P-3) was without consideration and a decree was passed for the sum claimed. The mortgagee decree-holder took out proceedings in execution, and the equity of redemption of both houses Nos. 2047 and 2042 was sold, and was purchased by Ghulam Nabi defendant 2 who is a brother of the mortgagor, Ghulam Mohammad defendant 1.

On 8th March 1937, the plaintiffs (their father Teja Singh, the original mortgagee, having died in the meantime) brought the present suit against Ghulam Mohammad and Ghulam Nabi for recovery of Rs. 600 due on foot of the three mortgages aforesaid (Exs. P-1, P-2 and P-3). In this claim they calculated simple interest at Re. 1 per cent. per month instead of the stipulated rate, in view of the provisions of the Punjab Relief of Indebtedness Act, which had come into force in the meantime. Both the defendants admitted that the mortgage deeds in suit had been executed by defendant 1, but they denied consideration. They also raised certain other pleas, but we are not concerned with them in this appeal. The trial Judge first placed on the defendants the onus of proving that the mortgage deeds in question or any one of them were without consideration, but subsequently, on an application by the defendants, he placed the onus of proving the consideration on the plaintiffs. After examining the evidence produced by both parties, the learned Judge held that consideration had been proved with regard to the first mortgage, dated 10th July 1921, (Ex. P-1) but that the plaintiffs had failed to prove the consideration of the second and the third mortgage deeds (Exs. P-2 and P-3). He accordingly granted the plaintiffs a preliminary decree under O. 34, R. 4, Civil P. C., for Rs. 287 with proportionate costs and interest at Re. 1 per cent. per month on Rs. 99 from the date of the suit till payment, and further ordered that if the amount of the decree was not paid on or before 23rd July 1937 the plaintiffs would have the right to get house No. 2047 sold and get the decree made final. The rest of the plaintiffs' claim was dismissed.

The plaintiffs appealed to the District Judge who has affirmed the decision of the trial Court, holding that the auction purchaser Ghulam Nabi could not be regarded as a successor-in-interest of Ghulam Mohammad and therefore Ghulam Mohammad's admission as to the execution of the mortgage deeds in question was not relevant against Ghulam Nabi. The plaintiffs have come in second appeal and it has been contended on their behalf that the Judges of the Courts below have misplaced the burden of proving consideration of the mortgage deeds (Exs. P-2 and P-3) on the plaintiffs and that on the material on the record the plaintiffs' suit should have been decreed with regard to these mortgages also. After hearing both counsel and examining the record I have no doubt that this contention is well founded and must succeed. The mortgagor Ghulam Mohammad is a literate person and he has signed both the mortgage deeds (Exs. P-2 and P-3) and below this signature on each of these deeds, he has acknowledged receipt of Rs. 99 in his own handwriting. So far as he is concerned therefore the onus of proving want of consideration clearly rests on him. S. 12, Debtors' Protection Act (2 of 1936) reads as follows :

Notwithstanding anything to the contrary contained in any other enactment for the time being in force, the burden of proving that any consideration alleged to have been paid by a money-lender actually passed shall be on him; unless the consideration is acknowledged by a debtor in his own handwriting or

In this case there is a clear acknowledgment by the debtor Ghulam Mohammad in his own handwriting of the receipt of consideration, Rs. 99 both on Exs. P-2 and P-3. Therefore the first part of S. 12 does not apply and the allocation of onus is to be governed by the ordinary law, under which, where execution is admitted, it lies on the executant to prove that the transaction was without consideration. So far as Ghulam Mohammad is concerned, this was frankly conceded by the learned counsel for the respondents. The question however remains as to whether Ghulam Nabi, who has purchased the equity of redemption of the mortgaged properties in Court sale effected in execution of a decree against Ghulam Mohammad, is in a different position. The Courts below have held that he is a stranger to the transactions, and as he is not in a position to admit or deny the execution of the deeds, the onus lay on the plaintiffs to prove consideration. In my opinion, this is an erroneous view of the law. The correct rule is laid down in 36 All 478,¹ where it was held that :

ledgment of the receipt of the consideration, this is strong prima facie evidence that the consideration has been actually received and is evidence not only against the mortgagors but also against persons claiming under them subsequent to the date of the mortgage.

In A I R 1930 Mad 251² at page 253 et seq., the Allahabad case cited above was followed and it was laid down that the onus to prove want of consideration lies on the successor-in-interest of the original mortgagor, whether he is his heir or is a purchaser from him by private sale, or whether the mortgaged property has passed to him by an auction-purchase. The Patna High Court in 8 Pat 766³ has also taken the same view. In the two last cases the decision of the Calcutta High Court in 6 Cal 268⁴ has been explained. With the view of the law as laid down in these cases, I am in respectful agreement. In the case before us there are certain other circumstances which do not appear to have been noticed by the learned Judges of the Courts below. As already stated, the mortgagee had instituted in 1934 a suit for recovery of interest due on Ex. P-3. In that case, Ghulain Mohammad had not denied the consideration for Ex. P-3. The suit had been decreed against him, and it was in execution of that decree that the equity of redemption of the two houses was purchased by Ghulam Nabi. Ghulam Nabi thus derived title from Ghulam Mohammad at a Court sale held in execution of a decree for interest due on the mortgage deed (Ex. P-3.) It is difficult to see how it lies in his mouth now to say that this very mortgage deed (Ex. P-3) was without consideration. Further, he is the brother of the original mortgagor and there is a strong presumption that he must have known the real facts. No circumstances have been brought out by the defendants in their evidence which might throw any suspicion on either of the mortgage transactions embodied in Exs. P-2 and P-3. It must therefore be held that the onus of proving want of consideration was on the defendants, Ghulam Mohammad and Ghulam Nabi. Both parties have led all available evidence, and on this evidence there can be no doubt that the defendants have failed to prove want of consideration.

I accept the appeal and in modification of the decrees of the Courts below, grant the plaintiffs a preliminary decree under O. 34, R. 4, Civil P. C. against both the defendants for Rs. 600 with costs in all Courts and interest at Re. 1 per cent per month on Rs. 297 from the date of the institution of the suit till payment on or before 10th May 1938. In case the amount decreed is not paid on or before 10th May 1938, the plaintiffs shall have the right to get houses Nos. 2042 and 2047 sold and have the decrees made final. In that event further interest will accrue at Rs. 4 per cent. per annum, from 10th May 1938 till payment.

Judgment.—On 3rd February 1916, Suleman Khan and his brothers, sons of Mehr Masih, sold certain specified fields, comprising an area of 101 kanals and 12 marlas to plaintiff 1 and father of plaintiff 2 and defendant 3. In the sale deed it was stated that the land sold was entered in the revenue papers as a part of a holding which was owned jointly by the vendors and the predecessors-in-interest of the present defendants-respondents (other than defendant 3), but that in a private partition these fields had fallen to the share of the vendors and that they had been in exclusive possession for a long time.

On 17th August 1935, the plaintiffs brought the present suit for possession alleging that they had been in possession of the land since the date of purchase, but that recently the defendants had attempted to disturb their possession and had actually brought under cultivation a portion of it. They accordingly prayed for a decree for exclusive possession. The suit was resisted by defendants 1 and 2, who stated that the vendors of the plaintiffs and the defendants were co-owners of the land which was a part of the joint holding, and denied that there had been any private partition, or that the plaintiffs or their vendors had been in exclusive possession. On the other hand they pleaded that the land had been in their own possession all along.

The trial Judge found that the alleged private partition had not been proved. He held however that the plaintiff's vendors had been in exclusive possession of the fields at the time of the sale. He also found that the plaintiffs had remained in cultivating possession of the land from 1916 to 1922, but that the land became banjar in 1923 and continued to be so till April 1935, when the defendants took possession of about three kanals of it, and brought it under cultivation. On these findings he held that the plaintiffs' claim was barred under Art. 142, Lim. Act. He accordingly dismissed the suit. On appeal, the learned District Judge upheld the finding of the Court below that the alleged private partition had not been proved but he found that the plaintiffs' vendors had been in exclusive possession since long before 1916 and that the plaintiffs had remained in exclusive possession from the date of the sale till 1922 when the land became banjar owing to some disputes relating to irrigation rights between the plaintiffs and other proprietors of the village. He found that the land remained in this condition till a short time before this suit when defendants broke a portion of it. On these facts, he found that from 1922 to 1934 the possession must be considered to follow title which was in all the co-owners including the plaintiffs and the contesting defendants. He accordingly accepted the plaintiffs' appeal in part and granted them a decree for joint possession.

The plaintiffs have come in second appeal and it has been contended on their behalf that the learned Judge is in error in holding that merely because the land was not under cultivation from 1923 to

1934, possession must be presumed to be that of all the co-owners. It is pointed out that the learned Judge has ignored the entries in the jamabandi for 1923-1924, 1927-1928 and 1931-1932, in all of which the land in dispute is shown as maqbuza mushtarian (in possession of the vendees, i. e. the plaintiff and appellant 3). He states that there is a presumption of correctness attaching to these entries, and that this has not been rebutted by any evidence on their part. After hearing both counsel and examining the record, I am of opinion that this contention is well founded and must succeed. As already pointed out, the Courts below have concurrently found that the plaintiffs' vendors were in exclusive possession before 1916 and that from 1916 to 1922 the plaintiffs themselves were in actual cultivating possession. Cultivation ceased in 1923 for want of irrigation but, as the jamabandi entries show, the land continued to be in possession of the plaintiffs until 1935, when a small portion of it was brought under cultivation by the contesting defendants. The allegation of the defendants that they had been in possession of the entire land from 1916 to 1934 has been held to be unproved. In these circumstances there is no doubt that the plaintiffs are entitled to a decree on the strength of their long exclusive possession even though the land is jointly owned by them and the defendants. It is well settled that in a case of a joint khata, where one cosharer has been in exclusive possession of a portion of the joint land, which does not exceed his share in the entire holding, another cosharer cannot dispossess him against his will from the portion of which he had been in possession : 104 P R 1919,¹ 108 P R 1889,² 13 P R 1910,³ A I R 1924 Lah 293⁴ and A I R 1925 Lah 518.⁵

The learned District Judge has observed that the plaintiffs must be taken to have abandoned their possession in 1923, but abandonment was not pleaded by the defendants nor was it put in issue, nor is there any evidence on the record to prove it. On the other hand, the plaintiffs have been shown in the revenue records as being in possession all along. I hold therefore that the plaintiffs are entitled to a decree for exclusive possession and entitled to remain in possession till partition. I accept the appeal, set aside the judgment and decree of the learned District Judge and in lieu thereof grant the plaintiffs a decree for exclusive possession of the land in dispute. Having regard to all the circumstances, I leave the parties to bear their own costs throughout.

Second Appeal No. 1286 of 1936, Decided on 30th March 1937, from decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Lahore, D/- 22nd May 1936.

Custom (Punjab) — Alienation — Consent — Plaintiff's grandfather selling ancestral land in 1888—At time of sale only two reversioners living, of whom one was plaintiff's father—Sale deed attested by plaintiff's father—Suit in 1901 by other reversioner for setting aside alienation in which plaintiff's father made defendant — Plaintiff's father supporting sale and suit dismissed—Consent given by plaintiff's father not proved to be mala fide—Plaintiff suing to set aside sale in 1934 — Plaintiff held had no locus standi to sue—Suit held barred by consent of plaintiff's father.

The alienation by sale of the ancestral land was effected in 1888 by the grandfather of the plaintiff who was born 26 years after the alienation and 25 years after the death of the alienor. At the time of such sale, only two reversioners were alive, who could have contested the sale. Of these, one was the father of the plaintiff who had attested the sale deed. The other brought a suit in 1901, for setting aside the alienation but the suit was dismissed. To this the plaintiff's father was made a defendant and he had supported the sale. In 1934 the plaintiff brought a suit for setting aside the alienation, on the grounds that the sale had been effected without consideration and legal necessity. It was not proved that the plaintiff's father gave consent to the sale mala fide with a view to injure the interests of the reversioners:

Held that the sale having become indefeasible at the instance of any reversioner long before the plaintiff was begotten, the plaintiff had no locus standi to sue : [P 468 C 2]

Held further that the plaintiff's suit was barred by the consent given by his father to the sale: 56 P R 1903 (F B), Rel. on. [P 468 C 2]

Mathra Das — for Appellant.Amar Nath Chopra — for Respondents.

Judgment. — This second appeal arises out of a suit brought by Sohan Singh, plaintiff-appellant, for possession of ancestral land, which had been sold by registered deed by his grandfather Mehtab Singh to Hasta, father of the contesting defendants, for Rs. 1000 as far back as 24th April 1888. The plaintiff was born in 1914 and instituted the suit on 26th April 1934, alleging that the sale had been effected without consideration and legal necessity.

The defendants pleaded that the suit was barred by limitation, that the plaintiff, being an afterborn grandson of the vendor, had no locus standi to sue, and that the sale had been effected for consideration and necessity. The trial Judge found for the plaintiff on the first two points, holding that the plaintiff had locus standi to sue and that the suit was within limitation. He held however that necessity had been established for the full amount paid and on this finding he dismissed the suit. On appeal, the District Judge disagreed with the trial Judge on all the three points mentioned above. He found that necessity had been established to the extent of Rs. 600 only, but that the plaintiff had no locus standi to sue as his father Bahadur Singh had ratified the alienation before his birth and that the suit was barred by limitation. In the result he affirmed the decision of the trial Judge dismissing the suit.

Before considering the questions of law which have been argued before me, it is necessary to state a few facts which were either admitted at the trial or are concluded by the findings of the learned District Judge. As already stated, the sale in dispute was effected on 24th April 1888. The land was admittedly owned by the father of the vendor Mehtab Singh, and the only living reversioners of the vendor at the time of the sale were (1) his only son Bahadur Singh, father of the plaintiff and (2) his brother's grandson Amar Singh. Bahadur Singh attested the sale deed. The vendor Mehtab Singh died in 1889. After his death one Khazan Singh, a distant collateral, instituted a suit to pre-empt the sale. To that suit, Bahadur Singh and the vendees were impleaded as defendants. Bahadur Singh supported the sale, and the suit was dismissed. In 1901, the other reversioner Amar Singh, instituted a suit for possession of the land on the ground that the land was ancestral qua him and the sale by Mehtab Singh in favour of Hasta had been effected without consideration and necessity. To this suit also, Bahadur Singh was impleaded as a defendant. On this occasion again, he supported the sale, which was upheld and the suit dismissed. After 1901 Bahadur Singh got a son named Bahal Singh, who is alive but has not brought any suit to contest the sale. The plaintiff Sohan Singh was born in 1914. He attained majority in 1932, and brought the present suit on 26th April 1934.

On these facts, there can be no doubt that the plaintiff's suit is barred by time. The learned trial Judge found the suit to be within limitation, following two Full Bench decisions of the Chief Court reported in 56 P R 1903¹ and 26 P R 1911.² Before me the learned counsel for the appellant has placed reliance on the same rulings. It appears however to have been overlooked that these rulings have been rendered obsolete by the enactment of (Punjab) Act 1 of 1920, which was in force at the time of the institution of the suit and governs the case. By S. 6 of that Act, a period of one year next after the commencement of the Act was provided for suits for which the period prescribed under the Act was shorter than that prescribed under the Limitation Act or the earlier Punjab Limitation (Ancestral Land Alienation) Act 1 of 1900. This one year expired in 1921, but at that time the plaintiff was a minor, and under S. 6, Lim. Act, he could bring the suit within one year of his attaining majority. The plaintiff was born sometime in 1914; he attained majority in 1932. Assuming that he had locus standi to sue, he could have brought the suit in 1933 up to the date of the completion of his 19th year. The present suit however was instituted on 26th April 1934. It is therefore clearly barred by time.

It is equally clear, that the plaintiff having been born 26 years after the alienation, and 25 years after the death of the alienor, had no locus standi to maintain the suit. As already stated, at the time of the sale, there were only two persons alive, who could have contested the alienation. Of these, Bahadur Singh, father of the plaintiff, had attested the sale deed and had subsequently supported the transaction in suits brought by Khazan Singh and Amar Singh in 1891 and 1901 respectively. Amar Singh actually brought a suit in 1901 to contest the sale but his suit was dismissed. The sale had thus become indefeasible at the instance of any reversioner, long before the plaintiff was begotten. He had therefore no locus standi to sue: 56 P R 1903.³ The plaintiff's suit is further barred by the consent of his father Bahadur Singh, which has not been proved to have been given mala fide with a view to injure the interests of the reversioners.

In view of these findings it is not necessary to consider the contention of the respondents' learned counsel that the transaction must be held to have been effected for necessity in view of the fact that the entire consideration has been found to have been proved, that 3/5ths of this was paid to prior creditors, and that no immorality or wanton waste is imputed to the vendor. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Second Appeal No. 206 of 1936, Decided on 5th April 1937, from decree of Dist. Judge, Delhi, D/- 18th November 1935.

Custom (Punjab) — Succession — Ancestral land—Riwaj-i-am—Delhi Province — Daughter inheriting father's property — Daughter dying without leaving male descendants—Proprietors of thulla are entitled to succeed to her father's property in preference to husband — Husband inherits only wife's absolute property — Proprietors of thulla need not be descendants of common ancestor.

According to the custom recorded in the Riwaj-i-am of Delhi Province, the proprietors of the thulla are entitled to succeed to the estate of the deceased after the death of his daughter who inherited her father's property and who has left no male descendants. The rule in riwaj-i-am that the husband inherits the property of the wife, merely refers to land which is the absolute property of the wife, as, for instance, property gifted to her or property which is her stridhan. It does not relate to property inherited by her as a daughter. In the absence of a clear indication to the contrary, she must be deemed to succeed to an ordinary estate of a female, if not under the Customary law, under the Hindu law. To such property the heirs of her father are entitled to succeed in preference to her husband because on her death the property must be deemed to revert to such Judgment. — Balle was the original owner of the land in dispute. He was a resident of village Kanjhaola in the province of Delhi. He died in 1914 and then there was a dispute between his daughter Mt. Manbhari and the proprietors of the thulla as to the right of succession to his land. The dispute was finally decided by the District Judge of Delhi in favour of the daughter who was held to be a preferential heir. Mt. Manbhari accordingly succeeded to the land and died in 1933. A month before her death she executed a will bequeathing the land in dispute to her husband. She did not leave any male descendant. The suit out of which this appeal has arisen was instituted by the proprietors of the thulla, who have been found to belong to the same got as Balle, for possession of land. The learned District Judge has held that according to the custom recorded in the riwaj-i-am of Delhi Province, the proprietors of the thulla are entitled to succeed to the estate of the deceased Balle after the death of the daughter who has left no male descendants.

The entry in the riwaj-i-am certainly supports the conclusion of the learned District Judge but the learned counsel for the appellant, the husband of Mt. Manbhari, who has come up on second appeal after obtaining a certificate under S. 41, Punjab Courts Act from the learned District Judge, has urged that the husband is described in another part of the riwaj-i-am as the heir to his wife in respect of property held by her in her own right. In my opinion the learned District Judge has rightly held that this merely refers to land which is the absolute property of the wife, as, for instance, property gifted to her or property which is her stridhan. It does not relate to property inherited by her as a daughter. In the absence of a clear indication to the contrary, she must be deemed to succeed to an ordinary estate of a female, if not under the Customary law, under the Hindu law. To such property the heirs of her father are entitled to succeed because on her death the property must be deemed to revert to such heirs and, as I have already stated, according to the custom mentioned in the riwaj-i-am the proprietors of the thulla

In my opinion there is no force in the contention of the learned counsel that this condition in the riwaj-i-am implies that the proprietors in the thulla must be descendants of the common ancestor. There is no justification for restricting the application of the rule in the manner suggested because such restriction does not find any place in the riwaj-i-am. I therefore dismiss this appeal with costs.

Second Appeal No. 600 of 1937, Decided on 16th November 1937, from decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Hoshiarpur, D/- 27th January 1937.

Limitation Act (1908), Art. 134-A—Grant of permanent lease by mahant of idol in 1909 — Decree for possession obtained by lessee — In 1935 suit by successor of mahant in the name of idol for permanent injunction restraining lessee from dispossessing him — Suit held was to set aside transfer in 1909 and was governed by Art. 134-A—Initial onus of proving that suit was within time was on plaintiff—Plaintiff would be entitled to injunction prayed for on setting aside transfer in 1909.

A mahant of an idol granted a permanent lease to the defendant in 1909 of the temple property. The defendant obtained a decree for possession of the land in suit. In 1935, a successor of the mahant granting lease brought a suit in the name of idol represented by him for a permanent injunction restraining the defendant from dispossessing the plaintiff from the land in dispute :

Held that the substantial relief claimed by the plaintiff was to set aside the transfer of immovable property by his predecessor in 1909. The suit was therefore governed by Art. 134-A. It was for the plaintiff to indicate as to when he came to know of the transfer and to establish that he came to know of it within 12 years of the suit. The plaintiff would be entitled to the permanent injunction prayed for after he set aside the transfer in 1909 : A I R 1933 Oudh 38, Rel. on.

Judgment.—The facts bearing on the questions of law involved in this appeal may be shortly stated. Mt. Mehtabi was the original owner of the land in dispute measuring 9 kanals 17 marlas. In the year 1885, she gifted this land in favour of Keshwa Nand. Keshwa Nand was the mahant of an idol known as Thakarji Maharaj. Keshwa Nand was succeeded by his disciple Kundan Anand in 1904. On 18th January 1909, Kundan Anand granted a permanent lease of the land in dispute to Lachhman Das, father of the defendants. In 1911 Kundan Anand was deposed from the office of mahant and was succeeded by Atma Nand. The land in dispute was in possession of the mortgagees in the year 1909. In 1912 the father of the present defendants sued Gosain and other mortgagees for possession by means of redemption. He impleaded Kundan Anand and the reversioners of Mt. Mehtabi as defendants in that case. A decree for redemption was passed in favour of the father of the present defendants on payment of Rs. 82. On 7th June 1928 the present defendants sued the tenants who were in possession of the land in dispute and a decree was passed in their favour on 25th September. Atma Nand was a party to this case but Thakarji Maharaj was not impleaded as a defendant. In 1934 the present defendants again instituted a suit against Atma Nand for recovery of possession of the land in suit. Atma Nand pleaded that Thakarji Maharaj was the real owner. This defence was not given effect to and a decree was passed in favour of the defendants for possession of the land in dispute.

On 25th April 1935 the present suit was instituted by Thakarji Maharaj through mahant Atma Nand for a permanent injunction restraining the defendants from dispossessing the plaintiff from the land in dispute. The defendants pleaded inter alia that the plaintiff was not the owner of the land in dispute as the land had been gifted in favour of Kashwa Nand personally and was not the property of the idol Thakarji Maharaj, that the suit was barred by limitation, that the lease in favour of the defendants' father was for consideration and necessity and that the suit did not lie in its present form. The trial Court decreed the plaintiff's claim holding that the land in dispute had been gifted in favour of the idol, that Atma Nand was only the manager of this property, that the plaintiff had been all along in possession of the land, that the alienation effected by Kundan Anand in 1909 in favour of the father of the present defendants was without consideration and necessity and that the suit was within time. Against this decision, the defendants preferred an appeal in the Court of the learned District Judge. The learned District Judge held that the alienation in favour of the father of the defendants was for consideration and necessity. He also held that the suit of the plaintiff was barred by limitation. On these findings the appeal was accepted and plaintiff's suit dismissed with costs throughout. Against this decision the plaintiff has preferred a second appeal to this Court.

The learned counsel for the appellant contended that the learned District Judge had erred in holding that the suit was barred by limitation. He urged that the plaintiff had been in possession of the land throughout and that therefore every attack on his title and every attempt to oust him gave him a fresh cause of action. It was maintained by the learned counsel that in these circumstances his suit was within limitation under Art. 120, Lim. Act. The learned counsel relied on A I R 1933 Lah 920,¹ 8 Lah 22² and 140 P R 1907.³ In my opinion the contention of the learned counsel is without force. In the present case the substantial relief claimed by the plaintiff was to set aside the transfer of immovable property made by Kundan Anand, the manager of Thakarji Maharaj, in the year 1909. This was therefore a suit to set aside a transfer of immovable property comprised in a Hindu religious or charitable endowment made by a manager thereof for a valuable consideration. The present suit consequently falls under Art. 134-A, Lim. Act. The limitation for such a suit is 12 years from the time when the transfer becomes known to the plaintiff. It was for the plaintiff to indicate in his plaint as to when he came to know of the transfer and to establish that he had come to know of the transfer within 12 years of the institution of the suit. The plaintiff would be entitled to the permanent injunction prayed for by him only after he succeeds in setting aside the transfer made by Kundan Anand in 1909 in favour of the father of the present defendants.

In the three rulings relied on by the learned counsel for the appellant, there was no question of setting aside transfers of immovable property. In those cases the plaintiffs had throughout been in possession of the property in dispute and they had brought suits for declarations to correct revenue entries or for similar other reliefs. Under those circumstances it was held that every invasion of the right of the plaintiffs gave them a new cause of action, and rendered suits for declarations filed by the plaintiffs within six years to be within time. Art. 120 is a residuary Article and as the present suit falls within the purview of Art. 134-A, Art. 120 cannot be held to be applicable. As under Art. 134-A, limitation begins to run from the time when the transfer becomes known to the plaintiff, the initial onus of proving that his suit is within time is on the plaintiff. If neither in the plaint nor at any subsequent stage of the case the plaintiff has ever fixed any date on which he alleges that he came to know of the transfer to the defendants, the suit must fail on that account. Reference may be made in this connexion to A I R 1933 Oudh 38.⁴ The learned counsel for the respondents also relied on 38 Mad 1064.⁵ He urged that the land in dispute had throughout been in possession of the mortgagees and that the plaintiff or his manager Atma Nand had never entered into actual physical possession. The learned counsel contended that in these circumstances even if Art. 120 be held to be applicable, the suit would be barred by limitation as limitation would run from the date of the alienation in 1909 and not from the date when the plaintiff had knowledge of the alienation. It is not necessary to give a considered opinion on this point as I have already held that the present suit is barred by limitation under Art. 134-A, Lim. Act.

In view of the findings given above, it is unnecessary to consider the question of consideration and legal necessity in any detail. I am of the opinion that consideration for the alienation in favour of the father of the defendants has been proved but that legal necessity has been proved only to the extent of Rs. 82 instead of Rs. 250. For the reasons given above I dismiss this appeal with costs.

Where in an execution case, the auction-purchaser who had deposited the sale price in Court was allowed to withdraw it on furnishing security to re-deposit when asked to do so, and on so being asked he asked for a month's time to deposit the amount which was granted by the Court and was not objected to by the counsel for the decree-holder, but on subsequent date the Court being aware of the surety bond ordered the surety to deposit the amount and modified the previous orders :

Held that the surety was not absolved under S. 135, Contract Act. Where in an execution case the Court had allowed the auction-purchaser to withdraw the deposit made by him on furnishing a security for re-depositing it when asked to do so and a surety bond was accordingly executed, and the Court having asked the purchaser to deposit the amount made an order that if the amount was not deposited within certain period the property be resold and short-fall be recovered from him but on the next date on becoming aware of the surety bond the Court reviewed and modified its order and directed the surety to pay the amount :

Held that the Court had an inherent power to review its previous order as the error was patent on the face of the record and the previous order was made by the Court suo motu through oversight. [P 473 C 1]

Judgment.—The material facts of the case giving rise to this appeal may be briefly stated as follows : Mt. Khudija Sultan, respondent 1, obtained a decree for a sum of Rs. 10,000 on 19th December 1934. In execution of that decree, a house belonging to the judgment-debtor was sold and was purchased by Mohammad Ramzan who deposited Rs. 5540 as purchase price in Court. In the meantime, the judgment-debtor's sons had instituted a suit to challenge the decree and in the course of that suit an injunction was obtained for staying the sale proceedings relating to the house. No objections to the sale had been filed in Court within the statutory period, but owing to the injunction obtained by the sons of the judgment-debtor the sale was not confirmed. The auction-purchaser thereupon made an application for withdrawal of the amount deposited by him on the ground that he was likely to lose interest thereon. The Court allowed him to withdraw the amount on his furnishing security to re-deposit the sum when required. The suit filed by the sons of the judgment-debtor was subsequently dismissed. Thereupon the auction purchaser was called upon to re-deposit the sum of Rs. 5540 referred to above. He asked for a month's time to deposit the amount whereupon the Court passed the following order on 5th January 1937 :

The petitioner with his counsel is present. Lala Karam Chand, counsel for the decree-holder, is present. Lala Karam Chand has no objection. Hence the purchase money be deposited by 30th January 1937. If it is not deposited by that date a fresh auction shall be held and the petitioner shall be responsible for the short-fall.

On the next date (20th March 1937) the surety bond filed by the auction-purchaser was brought to the notice of the Court whereupon the Court modified its previous order and directed that the surety Mohammad Din be ordered to pay the sum of Rs. 5540 in Court by 31st March 1937. From this order the auction-purchaser as well as the surety have preferred the present appeal. On behalf of the surety the main contention advanced was that the decree-holder's counsel having agreed to give time to the auction-purchaser for depositing the amount, he was absolved from liability under S. 135, Contract Act. The learned counsel for the respondent however pointed out that the bond in this case was in favour of the Court and not of the decree-holder and the time was given by the Court. Reliance was placed in support of the argument on 100 I C 762.¹ The contention of the learned counsel for the respondent appears to me to be well founded. The bond in this case was in favour of the Court and the Court had the discretion to order the auction-purchaser to deposit the amount by any date it liked. The consent of the counsel for the decree-holder was in the circumstances immaterial and I therefore hold that the surety was not absolved.

The next contention urged was that the Court having ordered on 5th January 1937 that in default of deposit by the auction-purchaser the property would be resold and that the auction-purchaser would be liable only for the short-fall, the Court had no power to review its order. The order of the Court, dated 20th March 1937, however makes it clear that the previous order was passed due to inadvertence as the bond filed by the auction-purchaser had been overlooked by the Court. This was an error patent on the face of the record and it seems to me that the Court had inherent power to review the previous order and direct the surety to deposit the amount on the basis of the bond furnished by him. As a matter of fact it appears that the auction-purchaser himself had never requested the Court to resell the property and make him liable only for the short-fall. The Court had passed the previous order suo motu through oversight and the counsel for the auction-purchaser also raised no objection to the later order. The appeal has no force and must be dismissed on the merits. In the circumstances, it is not necessary for me to discuss the preliminary objection which was raised on behalf of the respondent that the appeal was incompetent at least so far as the auction-purchaser was concerned. I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Criminal Appeal No. 719 of 1937, Decided on 9th November 1937, from order of Addl. Sess. Judge, Lyallpur, D/- 20th May 1937.

* Penal Code (1860), S. 302—Sentence—Young girl killing her newly born baby—Sentence of transportation for life is inappropriate.

Where a young girl of 15 kills her newly born baby, a sentence of transportation for life is wholly inappropriate. In England it is always assumed that a girl who commits such a murder at such a time is hardly responsible for her actions, it being well known that child-birth produces occasionally peculiar reactions in the mother. The sentence of transportation for life should be reduced to a sentence for a short period. [P 473 C 2]

Young C. J.—Mt. Talian, a young girl 15 years of age, has been condemned to transportation for life by the learned Sessions Judge of Lyallpur for the murder of her newly born baby. Mt. Talian had an illicit connexion with one man and shortly afterwards she married another. A child was born about four months after her marriage. The child was not therefore the child of her husband. It is said that in the presence of her mother Mt. Imam Bibi, and also in the presence of another woman Mt. Begum, this young girl murdered her child by strangulation. The mother of the girl was also charged with the offence, but we think fortunately for her the learned Judge acquitted her. On the evidence it would appear that both had something to do with the murder, and indeed Mt. Begum, who was also present at the time, cannot escape suspicion of complicity in the crime. The learned Judge however has found only Mt. Talian guilty and we have no reason to doubt his conclusion as to her on the evidence. The only point in the case is the question of sentence. We clearly cannot interfere in this matter. But where a young girl of 15 kills her newly born baby, a sentence of transportation for life appears to us to be wholly inappropriate. In England it is always assumed that a girl who commits such a murder at such a time is hardly responsible for her actions, it being well known that child-birth produces occasionally peculiar reactions in the mother. We suggest therefore that Government should reduce the sentence of transportation for life to a sentence for a short period.

In cases of offences under S. 366, the evidence of the girl alleged to have been abducted must be taken with a great amount of caution. [P 475 C 2]

(b) Penal Code (1860), S. 366—Young man abducting girl of marriageable age — Natural presumption is that he abducted her with intention of having sexual intercourse with her either forcibly or with her consent after seduction or after marrying her—If any other intention is alleged to exist, burden is on accused to prove it.

Even a forcible abduction does not amount to an offence under S. 366, unless there are other ingredients, namely the intention either that the girl should be seduced or forced to illicit intercourse or that she should be compelled to marry against her will. In cases of forcible abduction, there can seldom be direct evidence as to the actual intention of the abductor and that intention must be inferred from the circumstances of each case under S. 114, Evidence Act. Human nature being what it is, whenever one finds a young man abducting a girl of marriageable age, the first natural presumption must be that he has abducted her with the intention of having sexual intercourse with her either forcibly, or with her consent after seduction, or after marrying her. If he has any intention other than that which is suggested by the natural circumstances of the case, the burden lies upon him under S. 106, Evidence Act to prove that intention. [P 476 C 1, 2]

Judgment.—Ghulam Mustafa, Muhammad Shah, Suleman, Mahmud Ali, Muhammad Sadiq and Sehr Gul appeal through counsel and Muhammad Rafi from the jail against their convictions by a S. 30 Magistrate of Amritsar under S. 366 read with S. 149, I. P. C., and sentences of five years' rigorous imprisonment inflicted upon all the appellants except Mahmud Ali and Muhammad Rafi and sentences of two years' rigorous imprisonment inflicted upon them. The prosecution case was that Ghulam Mustafa, who is a student in Amritsar, was the first cousin of a girl of the name of Mt. Masuda Bano, who is also a schoolgirl attending a school at Amritsar.

She was aged about 16 or 17 and was the daughter of a respectable Mahomedan gentleman of Amritsar of the name of Mian Mehraj Din. Being first cousins, they were naturally on friendly terms with each other as is shown by the evidence in the case not only of the girl but of other relations. On 15th March 1937, Mt. Masuda Bano was going to her school which is the Stratford College for women in the civil station at Amritsar in a tonga driven by one Fazal Din, a servant of the family, and accompanied by Mt. Hayat Bibi, another servant, and a little girl called Shamim Akhtar. When she reached the gates of the College and stepped off the tonga she was seized by Suleman and Sehr Gul appellants and taken forcibly to a car which was standing by Muhammad Shah and Muhammad Sadiq were standing by with drawn swords and Ghulam Mustafa and Mahmud Ali were sitting in the car also with drawn swords. Muhammad Rafi was the hired driver of the car. As soon as they got the girl into the car, they drove it off at a very great speed. The tongawala did his best to pursue in his tonga whipping his horse into a gallop. He naturally very soon lost sight of the car but was able to observe the very important fact that the car turned on to the Grand Trunk road in the direction of Lahore and not in the direction of Jullundur or Gurdaspur.

The outrage was witnessed by another schoolgirl Mt. Savitri and a Hindu gentleman who describes himself as a businessman of the name of Lala Durga Das. Miss Sant Singh, the Head Mistress of the school, promptly informed the police and the father of the girl accompanied by some police officers set out in another car in pursuit. On reaching Lahore, they went to the Naulakha police station from where telephonic messages were sent out to the main stations along the Grand Trunk road, namely Gujrat, Jhelum, Rawalpindi, Campbellpur and Peshawar. Mr. Mehraj Din then hired a bigger and newer car at Lahore and set out along the road to Peshawar. Meanwhile the car containing the miscreants driven at immense speed had reached Jhelum. The speed at which they were driving the car is shown by the fact that although they only left Amritsar at 8.30 and had had to pass through Lahore, Gujranwala and other places and stopped at least once on the road to fill up with petrol they had got to Jhelum, a distance of 138 miles from Amritsar, in just about three hours. The Jhelum police who had received the telephonic message and were waiting on the bridge over the river Jhelum made a gallant attempt to stop the car. Whether they would have been successful or not is not apparent, but Ghulam Mustafa who was driving tried to turn the car across the level crossing of which the police had shut the gate. Seeing the gate shut he tried to turn the car round and in doing so the car fell into a ditch and overturned. The police were then able to take the seven appellants and the girl out of the car and also recovered from it a number of articles, including four swords.

The defence story is that only Ghulam Mustafa took the girl away and that she went away with him willingly, the only other person in the car being Muhammad Rafi, the hired driver. Subsequently, one Hissam Din, a servant of the girl's father, who has not been produced as a witness collected Suleman, Sehr Gul and Muhammad Shah from various places in Amritsar and set out in pursuit. The idea apparently was that as friends of Ghulam Mustafa they might be useful. They stopped in Lahore where they spent some time in finding Mahmud Ali and took him with them. When they reached Jhelum, Ghulam Mustafa had already been arrested as he had accidentally overturned his car trying to turn a sharp corner. They all went to the police station and there were arrested with the exception of Hissam Din. Muhammad Sadiq, according to his story, had come to Jhelum that day from Bhalwal and he was also arrested in the same mysterious manner by the police on his appearance at the station. Comparing the two stories, that for the defence is obviously most fantastic. The prosecution story is an unusual one as the act ascribed to these young men of fairly good position and antecedents is one of great daring and also of great folly. But that it happened as the prosecution says there seems to be no doubt, and one can only ascribe it to the influence of modern ideas of American gangsterism.

To take the prosecution first, one fact appears to me to be settled beyond any reasonable doubt and that is that the seven appellants were arrested at Jhelum at about 11.30 as stated by Saleh Muhammad, the Jhelum head constable, and Daya Ram, the witness from Jhelum. There is no reason apparent on the face of the record to disbelieve the evidence of these witnesses and there are plenty of reasons for disbelieving the counter defence story. The first of these is that the story narrated is impossible. According to the evidence of the most reliable witnesses, this Hissam Din did not start collecting these youths till about 9 o'clock at Amritsar. Having first collected one from Dr. Mehraj Din's dispensary, he then had to go to other places and collect two more. He then had to drive to Lahore where he had to go into the City to the Royal Hotel and spend some time in finding Mahmud Ali. He then had to drive off to Jhelum. Evidence has been led, and it is defence evidence too, that a telephonic message was received from Jhelum by the Nau-lakha police at Lahore, at 12.15 P. M. stating that all seven of the appellants had already been arrested at Jhelum. Now, if this message was received at Lahore at 12.15, the latest time for the arrest that can reasonably be supposed would be between 11.45 and 12. For these persons, not to have left Amritsar till considerably after 9 o'clock and then to have spent a considerable time in Lahore City looking for Mahmud Ali and then to have reached Jhelum by 11.45 or 12 O'clock is, in my opinion, a sheer impossibility. The evidence on which this case rests is mostly interested evidence or the evidence of persons who could be procured to give it at a very small expenditure. The ridiculous nature of some of it is shown by a passage in the deposition of one witness from Jhelum who, ignoring the fact that he had first said that the car was lying upside down in a disabled condition in a ditch, speaks of Mt. Masud Bano as insisting upon their immediately going on with the journey and chiding the constables for not permitting them to proceed.

Coming now to the Amritsar incident—the actual abduction—the main evidence is that of the girl herself. It is now a well settled rule in these cases that the evidence of the girl is to be taken with a great amount of caution and it could be argued that the tongawala and the female servant are also interested witnesses. Mt. Savitri, the other school girl, is ostensibly a disinterested witness; but there are signs on comparing her statement in Court with that which she made before the police that she has improved her story to her own greater credit and glory and is therefore not completely reliable. But not the slightest reason has been given for disbelieving the evidence of Lala Durga Das, who appears to be a respectable gentleman, gives a satisfactory reason for being where he was and is not shown to be unduly interested in either party. His evidence clearly proves the offence of forcible abduction of this girl. Moreover there is ample corroboration of it by other circumstances. Not only are the circumstances of the arrest of these seven young men at Jhelum extremely strong corroboration of the story told by the actual eye-witnesses of the abduction, but also there is further corroboration in the report made by Miss Sant Singh, the Principal of the school. This report was made immediately and gives an account of the affairs which is substantially the same as that given later in Court. Her report was made at 9.15 and she actually gave Mr. Morris, the Deputy Superintendent of Police, the number of the car in which the girl had been taken away. It seems to me therefore that the prosecution story as narrated by the two sets of witnesses at Amritsar and Jhelum is correct in every substantial particular.

It is clear therefore that Mt. Masuda Bano was forcibly taken away in a motor car from Amritsar against her will. This is shown by the evidence of Lala Durga Das and the other witnesses as well as her own statement for they show that she was dragged into the car struggling and crying for help. It is difficult in these circumstances to hold with counsel for the appellants that she accompanied Ghulam Mustafa willingly. A good deal has been made of the fact that at one place, according to her own statement, the car stopped to get petrol and that she had an opportunity of calling for help. But counsel appears to have a very exaggerated opinion of the courage and determination of a young girl in these circumstances, surrounded as she was by seven young men armed with swords. As her statement shows, they threatened her with the swords if she made any attempt to escape or attract attention. It is obvious that in these circumstances the wretched girl could do nothing. But even a forcible abduction does not amount to an offence under S. 366, I. P. C., unless there are the other ingredients, namely the intention either that the girl should be seduced or forced to illicit intercourse or that she should be compelled to marry against her will. In a case of this sort, there can seldom be direct evidence as to the actual intention of the abductor and that intention must be inferred from the circumstances. S. 114, Evidence Act provides that the Court may presume the existence of any fact which it thinks likely to have happened, regard being had to the common course of natural events, human conduct and public and private business, in their relation to the facts of the particular case.

Human nature being what it is, whenever one finds a young man abducting a girl of marriageable age, the first and natural presumption must be that he has abducted her with the intention of having sexual intercourse with her, either forcibly or with her consent after seduction or after marrying her. If he has any intention other than that which is suggested by the natural circumstances of the case, the burden lies upon him under S. 106, Evidence Act to prove that intention. Illus. (a) to S. 106 is clearly in point. Therefore in this case the initial natural presumption is that Ghulam Mustafa abducted Mt. Masuda Bano with the intention of having sexual intercourse with her either after having married her or not. There is however in this case the further evidence of the girl herself who stated in answer to a question by the Public Prosecutor that the appellants told her in the car that she was being taken to the frontier for the purpose of being married to Ghulam Mustafa. I am not impressed by the argument of Mr. Saleem that this statement of the girl is in any way unnatural because it appears at the very tail end of her statement. He contends that as her whole statement showed herself as not consenting to the act of the appellants, it was unnecessary for her to say so in express terms. It was obviously the duty of the Public Prosecutor in a case under S. 366 to establish the intention by direct evidence if he could, and therefore it was very proper of him at the end of the girl's statement to ask the questions to which she has given these replies, and I cannot see eye to eye with counsel in finding anything suspicious in the fact that they appear at the end of her examination-in-chief. It should be noticed that this portion of the girl's evidence is actually favourable to the appellants rather than otherwise because it enables the Court to hold that the appellants had not the more serious intention of seducing or raping her but the less serious intention of compelling her to marry one of them.

The appellant Ghulam Mustafa has indeed given a version of what his intentions were. According to him, he was taking the girl with her own consent to a visit to the archaeological remains at Taxila. (His Lordship then discussed the evidence and proceeded.) Then again counsel have laid stress upon the fact that the girl's statement was recorded under S. 164, Criminal P. C. and that the Magistrate for some reason which is not apparent added a footnote to her statement that he had warned the girl of the consequences of departing from it. But there is nothing whatever to show that this statement of the girl was taken at the instance of her father and it seems to me that it was merely a routine matter by the police. The police know by experience that in abduction cases the girl is likely to make her statement according to the wishes of whichever party happens to have control of her and probably in this case they were afraid that attempts would be made by the relations of the boy who were also the relations of the girl to get her to depart from her story. That such influences were at work is shown by the evidence which the girl's own aunts have been induced to give, and which I regretfully have to state that I believe to be false.

It seems to me therefore that the case of forcible abduction with the intention of forcing this girl to marry Ghulam Mustafa against her will is completely proved against the appellants who also as members of an unlawful assembly are all and each of them liable for any acts committed in the furtherance of the object of that assembly. But I am of opinion that the sentences passed by the learned Magistrate in this case are most excessive. No doubt the case is a serious one and is to some extent made more serious by the fact that the girl is a respectable girl and that considerable damage had been done to her reputation by the act of the appellants even though she was an innocent and unwilling party. Many of her more evil-minded acquaintances will still be refusing to believe in her innocence. But, on the other hand, the sentences inflicted are out of all proportion to the sentences which are usually inflicted in cases of this sort. Possibly, the Magistrate has been influenced by the display of force and the theatrical nature of the appellants' act; but this appears to me to have been more in the nature of reckless folly than of ordinary criminality. Added to this there are the facts that the intention which has been established was the less serious of the intentions contemplated by the section under which they are punishable and also that there is no evidence that the girl was molested in any way to any greater extent than was called for by the necessity of taking her away and making her keep quiet. In these circumstances, whilst I uphold the conviction, I reduce the sentences of Ghulam Mustafa, Muhammad Shah, Suleman, Muhammad Sadiq and Sehr Gul to 18 months' rigorous imprisonment each and that of Muhammad Rafi to nine months' rigorous imprisonment. I am unable to appreciate the learned Magistrate's reasons for holding Mahmud Ali's guilt less than that of his companions, and his sentence is accordingly reduced to the same as theirs, i. e. 18 months' rigorous imprisonment.

First Appeal No. 347 of 1936, Decided on 7th October 1937, from decree of Senior Sub-Judge, Jhang, D/- 8th June 1936.

Hindu Law — Co-parcenary — Relinquishment — Renouncement should be in favour of all co-parceners and of entire interest.

A co-parcener cannot renounce his interest except in favour of all other co-parceners. Moreover a co-parcener cannot renounce his interest in part of the joint family property. [P 479 C 1]

Addison J.—One Ram Lal died on 31st May 1935 and his widow Mt. Tulsi Bai instituted the present suit on 29th August 1935 for a declaration that she was the owner of the house in suit and that it was not liable to attachment and sale in execution of a decree obtained by defendant 1 Haji Bakhsh against Thakar Das, son of the deceased Ram Lal. Thakar Das is the son of Ram Lal by his first wife. Mt. Tulsi Bai, plaintiff, was his second wife and she has only daughters surviving by Ram Lal. Her case in the plaint was that Thakar Das fully separated from his father Ram Lal in 1912 and had no concern with Ram Lal's estate after that date. It was added that Thakar Das executed a deed of relinquishment as regards the suit house on 21st October 1929 while the will of Ram Lal dated 25th May 1924 also supported the fact that the plaintiff was the owner of the suit house. The decree-holder, defendant 1, pleaded that there was no deed of relinquishment, that Thakar Das remained a member of the joint family with his father, that if any deed was executed about the suit house it was fictitious and collusive and entered into with a view to defeat the creditors of Thakar Das. Further, the deed of relinquishment could not be in favour of one member of the joint family nor could it be in respect of part of the property. Thakar Das, defendant 2, also pleaded that he did not separate from his father in 1912. He claimed to be a member of the joint Hindu family with his father and his own sons. He added that the deed of relinquishment was fictitious and without consideration and was never acted upon. On these pleadings the following comprehensive issue was framed :

Does the house in dispute exclusively belong to the plaintiff and is not therefore liable to attachment and sale in the decree of defendant 1 against defendant 2 ?

The trial Judge held that there was no separation and that the family was a joint Hindu family. He has also held that the suit property was joint Hindu family property, that the deed of relinquishment was entered into to defeat the creditors of Thakar Das who was at the time heavily indebted and that no consideration had been established for this deed of relinquishment. Finally it was held that Thakar Das could not give up his rights in this particular item of the joint family property which was ancestral and in any case his relinquishment could not affect the rights of his sons. The suit was accordingly dismissed and the plaintiff has appealed. There is not an iota of evidence that there was any separation in 1912 and this part of the case was not pressed. The house in suit was built on ancestral land by Ram Lal from 1919 to 1921. He was then employed under Government in Quetta but it has been established that there was a considerable nucleus of ancestral property which used to be managed by Thakar Das, Ram Lal's son, and Mutawalli Ram, Ram Lal's brother. Ram Lal was receiving this income. It may be that he spent some of his own earnings as a Government servant on the construction of the house but that has not been proved, and as already stated it has been established that there was income property. The house was built on ancestral land and in these circumstances it must be held that the house formed part of the joint family property.

Though Ram Lal never separated his son, it is in evidence that he became somewhat displeased with him in 1929. Ex. P. W. 7/3 dated 6th February 1929, is a letter written by Ram Lal to Dial Das whose son married one of Ram Lal's daughters. (After discussing evidence on record their Lordships proceeded.) Another point arises in this case. Thakar Das had then sons and it is clear that he could not renounce the rights of his sons in the property in question. It is also stated in Para. 264 of Mulla's Principles of Hindu

Law, Edn. 8, that the Madras High Court has held that a co-parcener may renounce his interest in the co-parcenary property either in favour of the other co-parceners as a body or in favour of one or more of them, but the Allahabad High Court has held that a co-parcener cannot renounce his interest except in favour of all other co-parceners. The Allahabad view seems to be the better but, in any case, there is no authority that a co-parcener can renounce his interest in part of the joint family property, as was done in the present case, in favour of one or all other coparceners. This therefore cannot be taken to be a case of renunciation by a co-parcener of his share in the joint family property. The will is obviously invalid as regards the ancestral joint Hindu family property, which this house must be held to be.

Finally it was contended by the learned counsel for Thakar Das that, whether it was held that there was renunciation or not, the plaintiff had still no title as the suit property must be held to be ancestral and the father had therefore no power to will it to his wife in 1924. Thakar Das on his father's death thus stepped in as heir to his father. It is not necessary to decide this point as the appeal must fail on the grounds that there was no consideration for the deed of relinquishment, that this deed was entered into to defeat Thakar Das' creditors, and that there can be no renunciation of a portion of a co-parcenary property, while such renunciation must be in favour of all the co-parceners, which would have left Ram Lal and Thakur Das' sons as owners of the property in their capacity as members of a joint family. For the reasons given, we dismiss the appeal with costs.

Judgment. — Civil Appeals 1085 and 1086 of 1937 are connected and will be disposed of together. They arise out of two suits of a similar character, in which the plaintiffs sued for a declaration that they were the owners of the land underneath the tharas in front of the shops of the defendants and that the defendants were not entitled to make certain alterations in their shops contrary to the conditions of the sale of the sites underneath the shops made by Mr. Warburton, the predecessor-in-interest of the plaintiffs, in favour of the defendants. The defendants claimed that they were the owners of the site underneath the tharas, that the alterations and additions made by them were not contrary to the conditions of sale and lastly that the said conditions were not binding in law. The trial Court dismissed the suits. On appeal, the learned District Judge has decreed the claim to the extent of declaring that the plaintiffs were the owners of the site underneath the tharas in front of the shops of the defendants. From this decision, the defendants have preferred appeals while the plaintiffs have preferred cross-objections.

The main point for decision in the appeals is whether the site underneath the tharas has been rightly held to be the property of the plaintiffs. The finding in favour of the plaintiffs is one of fact, but it is contended on behalf of the defendants-appellants that the finding is vitiated by the fact that the learned District Judge has omitted to take into consideration some material evidence and has misconstrued some of the documents relied on by the defendants. As regards the oral evidence, attention was invited to the evidence of Sant Singh, Jagat Singh, Hira Nand and Mohammad Ismail who have deposed that the land underneath the tharas was sold to the defendants. It is true that in the printed conditions of the sale which were published in advance, it was stipulated that the site underneath the tharas would remain with the vendor, i. e. Mr. Warburton, but the evidence of the above witnesses was to the effect that at the time of the sale these conditions were modified and it was stated that the site underneath the tharas would go to the vendees. Sant Singh has deposed that he held a power of attorney and the alteration made in the conditions, as stated by him, is supported by an endorsement made by him on the receipt given to the defendants. The learned District Judge has referred to this receipt, but has found that the alteration in the conditions was made after the sale. This, however, was not the evidence given by Sant Singh and the other witnesses referred to above. The evidence was that the alteration was made at the time of the sale by auction and the endorsement merely was a piece of evidence in support of this alteration. Jagat Singh, Hira Nand and Mohammad Ismail have apparently purchased similar sites from Mr. Warburton and it might be said that their evidence is interested. But there seems to be no good reason for doubting the veracity of Sant Singh who apparently held a general power of attorney from Mr. Warburton. Nothing has been brought out in his cross-examination to throw doubt on his veracity or evidence produced to rebut his statement that he held a power of attorney. The evidence of these witnesses received further support from the testimony of Miss Warburton, daughter of the vendor, who has also supported the contention of the defendants-appellants. She has not been shown to be in any way interested in supporting the defendants.

The testimony of the defendants' witnesses also receives strong corroboration from the mutation Ex. D.2 with respect to the sale of the site of the shops. The learned District Judge has remarked that the mutation referred to the shops as a whole and not to the platforms particularly. It is difficult to understand what the learned District Judge means exactly by this remark. The learned Judge of the trial Court has pointed out that the areas given in the mutation show that the sites sold to the defendants included the land underneath the tharas. This finding of the trial Court was not upset by the learned District Judge and its correctness was not disputed before me even by the learned counsel for the plaintiffs. The mutations were followed in due course by entries in the jamabandi and there is a presumption of correctness attaching to these entries. The burden lay heavily on the plaintiffs to show that these entries were wrong and that as a matter of fact the land underneath the tharas had not been sold to the defendants. They have, however, failed to adduce any such evidence. In the circumstances, it must be held that the land underneath the tharas has been sold to the defendants and that the trial Court's decision on the point was correct. I may state here that I am confining myself in this case to the sale of the sites in favour of the defendants. The learned District Judge has referred to certain copies of judgments which indicated that the purchasers of certain other shops were not allowed the ownership of sites underneath the tharas in front of their shops. I am not however concerned with the correctness of the decision in those cases. The present case has to be decided on the evidence produced by the parties and taking into consideration the mutation Ex. D.2 along with the oral evidence discussed above, I am of opinion the trial Court's decision was correct.

So far as the cross-objections are concerned, the only point raised was that the learned District Judge was not right in holding that in view of S. 11, T.P. Act, the conditions restricting the making of alterations in the shops were void. The only objection raised by the learned counsel for the plaintiffs was that the defendants were not entitled to convert their shops into two or more shops as they had done. The restriction obviously appears to me to be in contravention of the provisions of S. 11, T. P. Act; inasmuch as when the ownership of the site of the shops was transferred to the defendants its enjoyment could not be restricted by the vendor. The learned counsel for the plaintiffs next contended that the restriction was necessary for the beneficial enjoyment of the adjacent properties. He was however unable to explain how the partition of one shop into two or more shops could be reasonably considered to affect the enjoyment of the neighbouring properties. It is also to be noted that the plaintiffs are not themselves the neighbours and no objection has been raised in this respect by the owners of the neighbouring shops. On the above findings, I accept the appeals and reject the cross-objections and dismiss the plaintiffs' suit with costs throughout.

First Appeal No. 213 of 1937, Decided on 25th January 1938, from order of Sub-Judge, First Class, Ludhiana, D/- 6th April 1937.

(a) Mortgage—Document effecting change in rate of interest does not require registration.

A document effecting a change in the rate of interest payable on a mortgage is not a change in the mortgagee's interest in land and therefore does not need registration. [P 481 C 2]

(b) Registration Act (1908), S. 17 — Mortgage of whole property—Subsequent recognition of absence of any interest created by original deed in particular portion of property does not require registration.

A dispute regarding the amount and interest due on a mortgage of a certain property was referred to arbitration. The arbitrator finding that in a suit it had been decided that the mortgagor had no interest in 5/16ths of property, gave the award that the mortgagee was to realize his amount by sale of 11/16ths of the property originally mortgaged :

Held that the award only recognized the fact that the mortgagee never had any interest in that 5/16ths of the property for the simple reason that the mortgagor had also no interest in that property. There was no creation or extinction or limitation of any right by the award. It was merely the recognition of absence of any interest created by the original deed in 5/16ths of the property and hence it did not require registration.

Judgment. — In this case a widow, Mt. Parbati, mortgaged immovable property without possession for Rs. 6500 with the respondent; the rate of interest was annas 14 per cent. per mensem with six-monthly rests. The mortgage was dated 8th February 1924. On 1st June 1935 disputes as to the amount of the mortgage and the interest were referred to Lala Brij Lal Sayal, pleader, for arbitration. The arbitrator gave his award on 12th November 1935. The amount was fixed at Rs. 17,800. The amount was to be paid within six months; in case of default, the respondent was to realize the amount by the sale of 11/16ths of the mortgaged property because it was pointed out that Mt. Parbati's rights in the encumbered property amounted only to 11/16ths as had previously been determined in a suit. The award was put into Court. An objection was raised that the award needed registration. The grounds alleged in the Court below were that the award had limited the mortgage to 11/16ths of the property instead of the whole property originally mortgaged and that further the rate of interest had been awarded not at the rate fixed in the deed but at as. 12 per cent. per mensem with annual rests and for both these reasons the award needed registration. The trial Court held that the award did not need registration for these reasons. On the other issues the Court found in favour of the respondent and passed a decree ex parte against Mt. Parbati as on the date fixed for evidence Mt. Parbati did not appear and her counsel withdrew for lack of instructions. Mt. Parbati has come in appeal and the learned counsel appearing for her has urged the same points as were urged, as mentioned already, in the Court below and has further pointed out that the award hypothecates the remainder of the property of the widow. I have no hesitation in agreeing with the trial Court as regards the points urged before it. In A I R 1919 Lah 212,¹ there is a ruling directly on the point, namely that a change in the rate of interest is not a change in the mortgagee's interest in land and therefore does not need registration.

As regards 11/16ths of the property a suit had been brought by another claimant against Mt. Parbati and it had been held that he was entitled to 5/16ths of the property. The award only recognizes the fact that the mortgagee never had any interest in that 5/16ths of the property for the simple reason that the mortgagor had also no interest in that property. There was no creation or extinction or limitation of any right by the award. It was merely the recognition of absence of any interest created by the original deed in 5/16ths of the property. As regards the last point however, the only reply by the learned counsel for the respondent was that there was nothing to show that the remaining property amounted to Rs. 100 in value. Hence there was nothing to show that the addition of interest in land by the new hypothecation fell within S. 17 (1) (e), Registration Act. The learned counsel for the appellant has not been able to show me any evidence that this hypothecation creates any interest in the immovable property of the value of over Rs. 100. I therefore dismiss the appeal with costs.

Din Mohammad J.—The suit out of which this appeal has arisen was instituted by one Mt. Resham Bibi against her husband Khuda Bakhsh for a declaration that she was no longer his wife as she had become an apostate from Islam three or four years prior to the institution of the suit. She alleged that she did not believe in God, the Qoran and the Prophet of Islam and that in fact she professed no religion. Her marriage had consequently been dissolved and the defendant could no longer treat her as his wife. The cause of action for the suit had arisen as her husband in spite of being apprised of the fact of her apostasy was bent upon asserting his conjugal rights against her and had even lodged a case under S. 498, I. P. C. in which he had claimed her as his wife.

The defendant controverted the allegation of apostasy and averred that the plaintiff had not in fact renounced Islam, that his marriage with her had not been dissolved on any account and that the plea of renunciation had been set up falsely, merely to save the accused in the case under S. 498, I. P. C.

On the pleadings of the parties the only material issue that arose was whether the plaintiff had renounced Islam. The Subordinate Judge relying on the declaration made by the plaintiff in her plaint, supported as it was by her statement in Court, came to the conclusion that she had renounced Islam and granted her the decree prayed for. The defendant appealed against that decision to the District Judge who at the hearing of the appeal put to the test the plaintiff's alleged renunciation by offering her pork and impressed by her refusal to do so as well as by the manner of her dress and speech concluded that the plaintiff's assertion was false, and holding that her mere word of mouth was not sufficient to prove renunciation and that her marriage with the defendant was still subsisting, he allowed the appeal and reversed the decree of the Subordinate Judge. From that decision the plaintiff preferred an appeal to this Court and her appeal came on for hearing before Abdul Rashid J. The appellant's counsel contended before him that the District Judge could not go behind the declaration made by the plaintiff and that in a case of apostasy the statement made by the person concerned was sufficient. On behalf of respondent, on the other hand, it was urged that in all such cases it was necessary to hold an enquiry into the alleged renunciation in order to determine whether it was genuine or otherwise, that the District Judge was consequently justified in proceeding in the manner in which he had done and that the finding of fact arrived at by the District Judge that no renunciation had taken place could not therefore be disturbed on second appeal. Certain authorities were cited on both sides but finding that none of them threw any light on the question at issue, the learned Judge recommended that the case should be referred to a Division Bench for decision.

Before us, too, the same arguments have been advanced by the parties and the same authorities relied upon. The question whether apostasy ipso facto effects cancellation of a muslim marriage, is not disputed, nor is it denied that if the plaintiff's declaration were true, it would amount to apostasy. The only question with which we are concerned therefore is whether the District Judge could ignore the plaintiff's declaration and institute an inquiry into its genuineness in order to determine the extent of her disbelief.

The earliest decision to which reference may be made in this connexion is the one reported in 132 P R 1884.¹ There one of the learned Judges composing the Division Bench in the course of his judgment remarked that the conversion must be taken to be bona fide and not colourable and the other learned Judge observed that a bona fide conversion to Christianity is an act of apostasy from Islam.

In 106 P R 1891,² the husband had in a fit of anger uttered disrespectful and abusive language regarding the law and the Prophet of Islam and the learned Judges who constituted the Division Bench observed that there was nothing to show that the husband intended thereby to abjure his religion or to deny the Prophet.

In 61 P R 1899,³ Reid and Walker JJ. after laying down the rule of the Muslim law governing such cases remarked that the repudiation in that case was not colourable but bona fide.

In 85 P R 1906,⁴ Chatterji J. who delivered the judgment of the Division Bench observed that there was no serious contention that the defendant's conversion was a colourable and not a bona fide one.

In 29 I C 857,⁵ a Division Bench of the Punjab Chief Court said that if the conversion was an accomplished fact and that if it was not proved to be a colourable transaction, the Court could not decline to give effect to it because the underlying motive was not a proper one. The learned Judges further observed that evidence showed that the woman had adopted the Christian religion not as a device or as a temporary measure but with the intention of remaining a Christian for ever, and in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, they were unable to hold that the conversion should be regarded as a colourable transaction and that it should not be acted upon.

In 71 I C 830, which is the same as A I R 1924 Lah 397,⁶ Scott-Smith J. in a case in which the plaintiff had alleged that she had renounced Islam and had repeated her allegation in her statement in Court held that the only question which had to be determined was whether renunciation had taken place.

In A I R 1928 Lah 956,⁷ Dalip Singh J. observed that it was not within the province of the Court to enquire into the genuineness or otherwise of the conversion and that if formal renunciation was accompanied by rite of baptism, it was immaterial whether her motive was a genuine conversion or a mere device to get rid of her husband.

In A I R 1934 Lah 976,⁸ Beckett J. followed A I R 1928 Lah 956⁷ and made similar observations.

In A I R 1936 Lah 666,⁹ Agha Haider J. held that so long as conversion was genuine, ulterior and even sordid motives would not affect the question.

In A I R 1937 Lah 759,¹⁰ Tek Chand J. while approving of the observations made in some of the judgments referred to above held that all the same the factum of renunciation must be proved, and in the case before him did not disturb the finding of fact arrived at by the District Judge that the apostasy of the wife was not genuine.

These are the only authorities to which our attention was directed in connection with the subject under discussion and we have now to determine what these authorities actually lay down in respect of the necessity of proving the bona fides or the mala fides of the conversion and to what extent the enquiry into these matters can proceed. Speaking for myself, I am disposed to think that wherever the Judges applied their mind to this aspect of the case and remarked that the conversion or renunciation was not a colourable transaction, they meant nothing more than that the conversion or renunciation had taken place in fact. They neither referred to the sincerity or insincerity of the conversion or to the nobility or otherwise of the motive. To my mind a person's religious belief is not a tangible thing which can be seen or touched. It is the mental condition of one's believing in certain articles of faith that constitutes one's religion and if one ceases to believe in them, which again is a mere mental condition, one automatically ceases to profess that religion which is made up of those articles of faith. Consequently, to probe further into the matter and to try to ascertain the true nature of one's disbelief is sheer intermeddling, not justifiable on any ground. In the words of Lord Macnaghten "No Court can test or gauge the sincerity of religious belief" or as put by another eminent English Judge even more forcibly "Even the devil himself knoweth not the heart of man." Renunciation of a religious faith therefore requires no other proof than a person's declaration, the only condition being that the declaration is not casual, of which the declarer may repent afterwards, but it should be attended with volition and should be such to which the declarer adheres and in which he persists. The motive of a declarer is similarly immaterial. A person may renounce his faith for love or for avarice. He may do so to get rid of his present commitments or truly to seek salvation elsewhere. But that would not affect the factum of renunciation, and in cases like the present, it is the factum alone that matters and not the latent spring of action which results therein. If, therefore, apostasy takes the form of conversion to another faith, proof of conversion in accordance with the tenets of that faith will be sufficient to indicate apostasy and if it is not accompanied by any such extrinsic manifestation, declaration as stated above will do. A genuine conversion is one which has actually taken place and if once it is proved as an accomplished fact, further enquiry is barred. In the case before us, as soon as the plaintiff declared not only in the plaint but even in her statement in Court as her own witness that she did not believe in God, the Qoran and the Prophet of Islam, she at once went out of the pale of Islam. As remarked by Plowden J. in 132 P R 1884,¹ it is impossible to be of the Mahomedan religion without the belief that the Prophet of Islam was and is the Prophet of God,

the essentiality of apostasy is said to consist in the uttering of words against the Mahomedan religion, after embracing the Mahomedan faith, which is the belief in the Prophet of Islam with respect to all that came down to him from the Almighty God.

A Muslim derives his law from the Qoran and next to the Qoran relies on the record of the Prophet's sayings (otherwise known as traditions) in so far as it is authentic and is not in conflict with the Qoran. These sources alone are treated as sacred and all others are secular and thus open to human interpretation and human criticism. Neither the Qoran nor the traditions deal with the subject under discussion and the principles enunciated by the British Indian Courts in this respect are the only equitable and expedient rules which can be enforced. It is, in my opinion, most unconscionable to compel a wife to continue to owe her marital allegiance to a person whose religion she has relinquished and whose society she abhors. A recalcitrant wife cannot be even sent to jail under the present law and minds so far estranged cannot find peace under the same roof.

I would therefore hold that the plaintiff's marriage was dissolved as soon as she became apostate and that she was entitled to the declaration prayed for.

Before I conclude, I am compelled to say, that I strongly deprecate the manner in which the District Judge proceeded to test the plaintiff's bona fides. In the first place, this amounted to an admission of additional evidence which the District Judge was not empowered to admit in this way, and secondly the method adopted by him was most objectionable. He actually allowed pork to be brought into Court and called upon the plaintiff to take it to prove the sincerity of her declaration. The least that I can say is that the District Judge should have known that her refusal to take it was not sufficient to disprove her statement. One may relinquish a faith, which is an easy thing to do, but one may not acquire at the same time a liking for those things which one has been taught to detest throughout one's life. Such method of enquiry was neither contemplated by law nor warranted by the exigencies of the case.

For the reasons mentioned above, I would allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the District Judge and restore that of the trial Court. I would however leave the parties to bear their own costs throughout.

Pandit Bashambar Das, Plaintiff and others, Defendants—Respondents.

Second Appeal No. 1380 of 1936, Decided on 5th April 1937, from decree of Additional District Judge, Lahore, Dated 22nd July 1936.

Registration Act (1908), S. 17 (2) (xi)—Purchaser out of money left with him by vendor redeeming mortgage—Receipt reciting extinction of mortgage is admissible in evidence and can be raised by purchaser as attack in his suit to enforce contract and as defence in mortgagee's suit.

Where a property is mortgaged by the owner who subsequently sells it and the purchaser redeems the mortgage out of the money left with him, the receipt reciting the fact of extinction of the mortgage is admissible in evidence on the ground that the transaction is not between original parties to the mortgage. The purchaser can enforce the contract by means of a suit and also can raise the question by way of defence in a suit brought by the mortgagee : 7 All 820 and 27 All 305, Foll. [P 486 C 1]

Harnam Singh — for Appellant.

Amar Nath Monga — for Respondent (Plaintiff).

Judgment.—Girja Singh was the owner of the land in dispute. He had mortgaged it with possession to Udham Singh for Rs. 900. The plaintiff Bashambar Das purchased this land from Girja Singh and undertook to redeem the mortgage on payment of Rs. 900, which he retained out of the consideration for the sale in his favour. Alleging that he had paid Rs. 900 to the mortgagee Udham Singh he instituted the suit, out of which this second appeal has arisen for possession of the land. The trial Court dismissed the suit holding that the document on which Bashambar Das relied in support of his allegation that he had paid Rs. 900 to Udham Singh required registration and being unregistered was inadmissible in evidence. On appeal the learned District Judge has reversed the decree of the trial Judge and has decreed the suit on two grounds : (1) that the document did not require registration because it did not on the face of it purport to extinguish the mortgage, and (2) that the document was not between the original parties to the mortgage and did not therefore require registration under the provisions of S. 17, Registration Act.

On the first point the learned Judge relied upon a judgment of this Court in 10 Lah 709,¹ but that judgment, in my opinion, does not support his conclusion because the document in that case made no reference to the extinction of the mortgage whereas in the present case the document is to the effect that the mortgagee had received the Rs. 900 which had been kept in trust with Bashambar Das and had given possession to him and had no connexion with the land in dispute which would be mutated in favour of Bashambar Das. He also added that the mortgage deed had been filed in a Civil Court in Lahore. The document on the face of it therefore does make mention of the extinction of the mortgagee's rights. This distinction does not seem to have been observed by the learned District Judge and his judgment therefore cannot be sustained on the first ground.

The second ground taken by the learned District Judge is however supported by two authorities of the Allahabad High Court in 7 All 820² and 27 All 305.³ The later judgment merely refers to the previous judgment and accepts as correct the law laid down there. In 7 All 820² several villages were mortgaged by the original owner who subsequently sold one of them and left Rs. 700 with the purchaser to redeem the village purchased by him. Rs. 700 was paid by the purchaser and an endorsement was made on the mortgage deed reciting the extinction of the mortgage. It was held that this endorsement was admissible in evidence on the ground that the transaction was not between original parties to the mortgage and that the subsequent purchaser, who paid part of the mortgage debt to redeem the village purchased by him, could enforce the contract by means of a suit and also could raise the question by way of defence in a suit brought by the mortgagee. Consequently it was held that the payment of the mortgage debt had been established and could be proved in the suit and the suit of the mortgagee was dismissed pro tanto. The principle of this judgment applies to the present case. The transaction is between persons who were not parties to the original mortgage deed and though the receipt relied upon by the respondent does recite the fact of extinction of the mortgage, if the view of the Allahabad High Court is correct, the matter could be raised both as a ground of attack in a suit brought by the purchaser and also as a ground of defence in a suit brought against him. No decision dissenting from the view taken in the Allahabad case has been cited at the bar. I consequently dismiss this appeal but leave the parties to bear their own costs throughout under the peculiar circumstances of the case.

1. Muhammad Hussain v. Karam Ilahi, A I R 1929 Lah 312=118 I C 533 = 10 Lah 709=30 P L R 717.

2. Gurdial Mal v. Jauhri Mal, (1885) 7 All 820=(1885) A W N 279.

3. Ganga Bakhsh v. Jagannath, (1904) 27 All 305=1904 A W N 266=1 A L J 693.

Lala Jiwan Ram — Petitioner.

Messrs. Motor and General Finance Ltd. Delhi and another — Respondents.

Civil Revn. No. 863 of 1937, Decided on 27th January 1938, from order of Dist. Judge, Delhi, D/- 30th April 1937.

Arbitration—Award—Objection to award—Proceedings postponed twice, as Judge busy with other work—Petitioner not present on subsequent hearing when order to proceed ex parte passed—At next hearing, application filed to set aside ex parte order—No replication filed till then nor any final order passed—Petitioner held entitled to relief asked.

An application to file an award had been made against the petitioner. The petitioner filed his objections to the award. Twice the petition had to be postponed as the District Judge was busy with other work. Subsequently, the petitioner did not appear and order to take ex parte proceedings was passed. At the next hearing and before any final order had been passed against him, the petitioner appeared and asked for setting aside the ex parte proceedings. No replication by the respondent had been filed till then:

Held that the petitioner was entitled to the ex parte proceedings being set aside. [P 486 C 2]

Order.—This is an application for revision of an order passed by the District Judge of Delhi refusing to set aside ex parte proceedings against the applicant. Originally an application to file the award had been made against the petitioner. The award had been made by an arbitrator said to have been appointed without the intervention of the Court. On 21st August 1936 the petitioner filed his objections to the award but the District Judge could not proceed with the matter because he was engaged in hearing some criminal appeal and the case was postponed to 21st November 1936 on which date it is admitted by the respondents they had to file the replication. But on that date no replication was filed indeed—none has been filed up to to-day—and it appears that the petitioner did not appear. The case however was postponed to 7th January as the Judge was otherwise busy. It also appears that notice of the change of the date to 7th January was given to the Mukhtar-i-khas of the petitioner. On 7th January however the petitioner did not appear and ex parte proceedings were taken against him and the case was postponed to 11th January. On that date the petitioner did appear and asked for the setting aside of the ex parte proceedings. The learned District Judge on an application being subsequently made refused to set aside the order.

As in the present case twice it had been postponed on 21st August and on 21st November owing to the learned District Judge being busy with other work and no replication has up to this time been filed and the petitioner appeared before any final order was passed against him, except an order to proceed ex parte against him, he was, in my opinion, entitled to the proceedings being set aside on an application to that effect being made. He did make that application and the learned District Judge was not justified under the circumstances to allow the ex parte proceedings to remain against the petitioner. I accept this petition and set aside the order of the learned District Judge and send back the case to him with direction to proceed with the proceedings relating to the filing of the award in accordance with law. The costs of this petition shall abide the result. The parties have been directed to appear before the District Judge on 1st March 1938.

Judgment.—The plaintiffs and defendants 1 to 5 are the owners of seven houses marked A to G, which abut on a common courtyard or deorhi marked H on the plan. The plaintiffs own houses A and B. Houses C and G belong to defendants 1 and 2, while houses D, E and F belong to defendants 3 to 5. Formerly, houses A to F only had doors opening in the courtyard H. House G belonged to third parties. One of the back walls of this house adjoins the courtyard, but there was no door opening in it. Sometime before the suit defendants 1 and 2 purchased house G from the original owners, and they have opened the door J in the back wall of the house opening in the courtyard. The plaintiffs have brought a suit for a perpetual injunction, directing defendants 1 and 2 to close the door marked J, and restraining them from opening any other door or window towards the courtyard. The suit was resisted by defendants 1 and 2. Defendants 3 to 5, who own houses D, E and F, which, as already stated, also open into the courtyard, did not raise any objection to the opening of the door J in the courtyard by defendants 1 and 2. The suit was dismissed by the trial Court. On appeal by the plaintiffs however the learned District Judge has granted them a decree for the injunction asked for.

It is common ground between the parties that the courtyard is the joint property of the plaintiffs and defendants 1 to 5. It is also admitted, that the doors of houses A to F have opened in this courtyard for a very long time. The question for consideration is whether defendants 1 and 2, who are co-owners of this courtyard and have now become the owners of house G, have a right to open the door in the wall of this house abutting on the courtyard. It is not denied for the plaintiffs-respondents, that defendants 1 and 2 have got a right to open a door in the wall of their house G. It is however contended that they have no right to pass through this door to the courtyard. I can see no legal foundation for this contention. As already stated, the courtyard is the joint property of the parties including defendants 1 and 2. The opening of the door J does not amount to an ouster of the plaintiffs or the other co-owners, nor does it put the courtyard to a use inconsistent with the user to which it had been put heretofore. I cannot therefore see how the plaintiffs have got any cause of action to maintain the present suit. Further, it has not been shown that the courtyard is being put to such an excessive user by defendants 1 and 2 by opening the door in question, as would warrant the issue of the injunction prayed for by the plaintiffs. In 46 P R 1868¹ it was held that where a person opens a doorway in the wall of his own house, abutting on a courtyard which is the joint property of the parties, the other co-owners have no cause of action against him unless it is proved that the opening of the door has rendered the common property less useful to the other co-sharers or has deprived them of any right which they otherwise would have had. In the present case, none of these things is established. See also to the same effect A I R 1930 Sind 34,² the facts of which were very similar to those of the present case.

The learned counsel for the respondents relied upon a single Judge's judgment of this Court reported in 84 I C 917.³ That case however was decided on its peculiar facts and did not lay down a rule of general application. Further, it was found there that the position of the door had altered the character of the plot then in dispute, which had been reserved for the common purposes of the village. In my opinion, the learned District Judge is clearly in error in decreeing the plaintiffs' suit. I accept the appeal, set aside the judgment and decree of the learned District Judge and restore that of the Court of first instance dismissing the plaintiffs' suit with costs throughout.

Court of Wards, Guru Amarjit Singh, Jullundur — Plaintiff — Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 884 of 1937, Decided on 26th January 1938, from decree of Dist. Judge Jullundur, D/- 10th April 1937.

Landlord and Tenant — Occupancy rights—Occupancy tenant mortgaging his occupancy rights with consent of landlord — Occupancy vesting in transferee after expiry of period of limitation for redemption — Such transfer of occupancy rights to transferee is binding on landlord.

Where an occupancy tenant mortgaged his occupancy right with another person with the consent of landlord, the occupancy rights vest in the transferee for the expiry of period of redemption of the mortgage. The occupancy rights having been mortgaged with the consent of the landlord, he must be deemed to have accepted the mortgage with any consequences that might result from it according to law. One of these consequences is the vesting of the mortgagor's rights in the mortgagees after the expiry of the period of limitation for redemption of the mortgage. It is open to the landlord to redeem the mortgage himself before the expiry of limitation but if he does not do so, the transfer of the occupancy right to the mortgagees on the expiry of limitation is binding on him.

Occupancy rights can be transferred under Ss. 53 and 57, Punjab Tenancy Act with the consent of the landlord. The mere fact that the landlord is not a party to a suit by the mortgagee claiming declaration of his rights makes no difference : 27 Cal 1004 (P C) ; 37 P R 1883 and A I R 1925 Bom 339, Rel. on ; A I R 1931 Lah 211 ; 8 P R 1905 (Rev.) ; 79 P R 1898 and 6 P R 1901, Dist-ing. — for Respondent.

Judgment. — The material facts of the case giving rise to this second appeal are as follows : One Ram Das, who was an occupancy tenant, mortgaged his land in favour of Lal Das on 3rd January 1871. In the year 1901 Lal Das transferred his mortgagee rights in part of the land in favour of a "Devi Doara" known as Sarandas Wala and mutation was duly effected in favour of the Devi Doara on 16th May 1901. After the death of Ram Das, the Devi Doara brought a suit against his widow, Mt. Bir Kaur, in the year 1933 for a declaration to the effect that her right to redeem the mortgage had become extinguished by lapse of time and obtained an ex parte decree on 5th December 1933. A mutation on the basis of this decree was effected in favour of the Devi Doara and the Devi Doara is recorded as the occupancy tenant of the land in question in the revenue records. Thereafter, the present suit was instituted on behalf of the plaintiff, who is the landlord, for possession of the land on the ground that the occupancy tenancy had become extinct on the death of Mt. Bir Kaur, which took place on 23rd October 1934. The plaintiff's contention was that certain acknowledgments had been made by the mortgagees which extended the period of limitation and hence the mortgagor's right had not been extinguished. The defence was that the mortgagee rights had already vested in the Devi Doara after the expiry of the period of limitation before the death of Mt. Bir Kaur, and consequently the occupancy tenancy could not be extinguished on the death of Mt. Bir Kaur. The trial Court decreed the suit and the decree was affirmed on appeal by the learned District Judge. From this decision the defendant Devi Doara has preferred this appeal.

The learned District Judge has held that the period of limitation was extended by certain acknowledgments but the learned counsel for the plaintiff respondent did not attempt to support the judgment of the learned District Judge on this point. The learned District Judge has relied on a certain jawab-i-dawa which was signed by one Hari Chand. Hari Chand was apparently the manager of the appellant Devi Doara but Devi Doara as well as Hari Chand were defendants in the suit in which the jawab-i-dawa was produced and the jawab-i-dawa appears to have been signed by Hari Chand in his personal capacity as a defendant. The learned District Judge has merely remarked that Hari Chand being also the manager of the Devi Doara, the jawab-i-dawa should be taken to have been filed on behalf of the Devi Doara as well; but the jawab-i-dawa does not purport to have been signed by Hari Chand in his capacity as the manager of the Devi Doara, and in the circumstances the learned District Judge's decision on the point is not sustainable.

The other document on which the learned District Judge's finding as to the extension of the period of limitation was based was a copy of mutation, (Ex. P. 5). The evidence, however, does not show that the report regarding this mutation was actually signed by Lal Das the mortgagee as alleged. The original report was not produced and there could be no presumption under S. 90, Evidence Act with regard to the copy of the Patwari's report which was placed on the record. The decision of the case must therefore rest on the question whether the mortgagee rights vested in the Devi Doara on the expiry of the period of limitation. It is not disputed that if the period of limitation was not extended by any acknowledgment, the period of limitation for redemption of the land expired in the year 1931. It is claimed on behalf of the appellant that on the expiry of the period of limitation, the rights of the mortgagor were extinguished and the same vested in the appellant Devi Doara. This contention receives support from 27 Cal 1004,¹ 37 P R 1883² and 27 Bom L R 467.³ On the other hand it is contended on behalf of the plaintiff that occupancy tenant's rights could not be acquired by mere lapse of time. Reliance was placed in support of this argument on S. 9, Punjab Tenancy Act and on the following rulings, namely 11 Lah 716,⁴ 8 P R 1905 (Rev.),⁵ 79 P R 1898⁶ and 6 P R 1901.⁷ S. 9, Punjab Tenancy Act does not appear to be in point. It deals apparently only with the question of a first acquisition of tenancy rights on the strength of long possession. In the present instance, the tenancy rights are claimed by the appellant on the basis of the provisions of Art. 148 and S. 28, Limitation Act. The rulings cited by the learned counsel did not involve any question of the rights of the mortgagor of the occupancy tenancy devolving on the mortgagee owing to expiry of the period of limitation. They merely go to show that on the death of an occupancy tenant without heirs the mortgage comes to an end and the landlord in such a case is entitled to take possession of the land free from any encumbrance. 8 P R 1905 (Rev.)⁵ on which some stress was laid is also clearly distinguishable. In that case the tenancy was claimed on the basis of adverse possession but the adverse possession began since the death of the last occupancy tenant when the tenancy itself became extinct. As the tenancy itself had become extinct, there was nothing left of which any adverse possession could be claimed. In the present instance, the tenancy is claimed to have devolved upon the Devi Doara before date of the death of Mt. Bir Kaur, when it is alleged to have become extinct.

No direct authority covering the point raised has been cited on either side. I am however unable to find anything in the Punjab Tenancy Act to prevent the application of the provisions of S. 28, Limitation Act to the circumstances of this case. It has been found in this case that the occupancy rights were mortgaged with the consent of the landlord and this finding has not been challenged before me. It would, therefore, follow that the landlord accepted the mortgage with any consequences that might result from it according to law. One of these consequences is the vesting of the mortgagor's rights in the mortgagee on the expiry of the period of limitation and the plaintiff must be deemed to have consented to this contingency in accepting the mortgage. The plaintiff being interested in the tenancy might have redeemed the mortgage himself before the expiry of limitation but he did not care to do so. It is true that the plaintiff was not a party to the ex parte decree declaring that the occupancy rights had vested in the Devi Doara; but this fact only entitled him to prove in this case that the occupancy rights did not devolve on the Devi Doara. No cogent reason has been, in my opinion, given in support of the plaintiff's contention that the occupancy rights did not vest in the Devi Doara. Occupancy rights can be transferred under the Punjab Tenancy Act with the consent of the landlord (Vide Ss. 53 and 57) and in the present instance, it must, I think, be held that the transfer of the occupancy rights to the Devi Doara on the expiry of limitation was binding on the landlord. I accordingly accept this appeal and dismiss the suit, but in view of all the circumstances leave the parties to bear their own costs throughout.

Letters Patent Appeal No. 160 of 1937, Decided on 22nd February 1938, from Judgment of Bhide J., reported in A I R 1938 Lah 148.

(a) Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), S. 24—It is not proper to go into question whether debts mentioned are real—Mere fact that some of the debts mentioned are fictitious would not justify order of dismissal of debtor's petition.

In the summary enquiry under S. 24, it is not proper to go into the question whether the debts mentioned are real debts but the Court has to see whether prima facie the person applying to be adjudicated insolvent is unable to pay his debts. The mere fact that some of the debts entered in the petition are fictitious would not by itself justify an order of dismissal of the petition, though it can be taken into consideration at the time of discharge. [P 491 C 1]

* (b) Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), S. 4—S. 4 comes into play only after adjudication as insolvent—Decision in summary inquiry under S. 24 as to whether debtor is entitled to present petition for adjudication is not covered by S. 4 and does not operate as res judicata.

The expression "of any nature whatsoever" in sub-s. (1), S. 4 of the Act has to be read ejusdem generis with the first expression, that is, "questions of title or priority," and such questions of title or priority can arise only after the adjudication is made. That is to say ordinarily where a debtor presents a petition the Insolvency Court will ask for proof as to his right to do so and is entitled to go into that question but it does not follow that it is a final decision on any question then arising and will act as res judicata under S. 4 of the Act. The summary enquiry under S. 24 as to whether a debtor is entitled to present a petition has nothing to do with S. 4 of the Act, which section only comes into play after adjudication in disputes between the debtor's estate represented by a receiver and the claims of one or all of his creditors: A I R 1938 All 28, Rel. on.

Addison J.—Kishori Lal applied to be adjudicated an insolvent stating his assets to be Rs. 2961 and his debts to be Rupees 11,300. He gave the names of four creditors. The petition was ultimately dismissed on the ground that Kishori Lal was able to pay his debts as three of them were bogus and the remaining debt was less than the assets shown. The debtor did not appeal against this decree but Sadhu Ram appealed to the District Judge from the finding that his debt was bogus. His appeal was very properly dismissed as the only person who could have appealed was the debtor and he did not appeal. It may be mentioned that Sadhu Ram was a witness and produced the two promissory notes in his favour executed by Kishori Lal and also produced a copy of the decree for Rs. 4400 which he had obtained against Kishori Lal. Afterwards Sadhu Ram took out execution of his decree against Kishori Lal who pleaded that the execution could not proceed as it had been found by the Insolvency Court that the debt was fictitious. The executing Court repelled this contention, but it was accepted on appeal by the learned District Judge who considered that the decision of the Insolvency Court on this question was final under the provisions of S. 4, Insolvency Act. The same view was taken by the learned Judge of this Court who dismissed the second appeal. Against his decision this appeal under the Letters Patent has been preferred.

It may be at once mentioned that the debtor Kishori Lal did not state in his insolvency petition that Sadhu Ram's debt was bogus and there was no dispute between him and Sadhu Ram on this question, the dispute having been raised by the one creditor whose debt was held to be genuine. It is difficult therefore to see that there has been any adjudication of the question which would bind Sadhu Ram and Kishori Lal. Further, it seems obvious that S. 4, Insolvency Act, covers questions arising after a particular person has been made an insolvent. This follows from the scheme of the Act. A debtor's petition is presented under S. 10, Insolvency Act which enacts that he shall not be entitled to present it unless he is unable to pay his debts and one of three other conditions is fulfilled. The particulars required in such a petition are given in S. 13 while S. 24 provides for the procedure at the hearing, the principal provision being that there must be proof that the debtor is entitled to present his petition. In the proviso to S. 24 (1) it is further laid down that where the debtor is the petitioner, he shall only be required to furnish such proof of his inability to pay his debts as to satisfy the Court that there are prima facie grounds for believing the same and the Court, if and when so satisfied, shall not be bound to hear any further evidence. It has frequently been held that in this summary enquiry it is not proper to go into the question whether the debts mentioned are real debts but the Court has to see whether prima facie the person applying to be adjudicated insolvent is unable to pay his debts; it has also been held that the mere fact that some of the debts entered in the petition are fictitious would not by itself justify an order of dismissal of the petition, though it could be taken into consideration at the time of discharge while other action could be taken against the petitioner, if considered desirable. S. 4 of the Act runs as follows:

(1) Subject to the provisions of this Act, the Court shall have full power to decide all questions whether of title or priority, or of any nature whatsoever, and whether involving matters of law or of fact, which may arise in any case of insolvency coming within the cognizance of the Court, or which the Court may deem it expedient or necessary to decide for the purpose of doing complete justice or making a complete distribution of property in any such case.

(2) Subject to the provisions of this Act and notwithstanding anything contained in any other law for the time being in force, every such decision shall be final and binding for all purposes as between, on the one hand, the debtor and the debtor's estate and on the other hand, all claimants against him or it and all persons claiming through or under them or any of them.

(3) Where the Court does not deem it expedient or necessary to decide any question of the nature referred to in sub-s. (1), but has reason to believe that the debtor has a saleable interest in any property, the Court may without further inquiry sell such interest in such manner and subject to such conditions as it may think fit.

The converse of this question came before a single Judge of the Bombay High Court in the case reported in A I R 1935 Bom 80.¹ In that case a creditor who had filed a petition under S. 9, Insolvency Act, in order to prove his debt to be subsisting, impeached a discharge receipt executed by him in favour of the debtor on the ground of fraud and it was held that the question did not fall under S. 4, Insolvency Act. That section covered only questions such as disputes between the debtor's estate represented by a receiver on the one hand and the claims of one or all of his creditors on the other together with other questions of priority or title. In order that S. 4 might apply, it was necessary that there must have been a contest between the debtor's estate and the general body of creditors. The expression "of any nature whatsoever" in sub-s. (1), S. 4 of the Act had to be read eiusdem generis with the first expression, that is, "questions of title or priority," and such questions of title or priority could arise only after the adjudication was made. That is to say, ordinarily where a debtor presents a petition the Insolvency Court will ask for proof as to his right to do so and is entitled to go into that question but it does not follow that it is a final decision on any question then arising and will act as res judicata under S. 4 of the Act.

In other words, it is clear that S. 4 comes into play after the debtor has been adjudicated an insolvent; under S. 4 the Court can then decide any question of title or priority arising between the debtor and one or more of his creditors if it considers this to be just and necessary as well as expedient. But it need not go into all of these questions as is shown by sub-s. 3 of S. 4. Under that sub-section the Court can sell the interest of the debtor, leaving the parties to fight out the extent of his interest in a regular suit before the ordinary Courts. Sub-s. (3) therefore goes to show that S. 4 applies after adjudication. Of course, if the Insolvency Court after adjudication does decide any question of title or priority, its finding would be final and the question could not be reargued elsewhere; but that does not apply to the preliminary and summary enquiry as to whether the debtor ought to be adjudged an insolvent. It was held by a Division Bench of the Allahabad High Court in A I R 1938 All 28² that the term "or of any nature whatsoever" in S. 4 is a very wide one but must however be read in conjunction with the earlier part of the section which refers to questions of title or priority and with the opening words of S. 4, "subject to the provisions of this Act." In other words, this term must be subject to the limitation of ejusdem generis.

It must therefore be held that the summary enquiry under S. 24 as to whether a debtor is entitled to present a petition has nothing to do with S. 4 of the Act, which section only comes into play after adjudication in disputes between the debtor's estate represented by a receiver and the claims of one or all of his creditors. We accordingly accept the appeal, set aside the order of the District Judge as well as of the single Judge of this Court and restore the order of the executing Court, allowing the execution to proceed. There will be no order as to costs.

First Appeal No. 16 of 1937, Decided on 26th April 1937.

Civil P. C. (1908), S. 11, O. 2, R. 2—Cause of action distinct—Gift of certain property to wife in lieu of dower—Widow remarrying after death of her husband—Suit for pre-emption by brother of her husband dismissed—Subsequent suit for declaration of title to property on ground of remarriage of widow and for avoidance of gift—Suit is not barred under S. 11 or O. 2, R. 2—Plaintiff held could not challenge validity of gift in such subsequent suit.

A Mahomedan gifted certain property to his wife in lieu of dower. After the death of the husband the widow remarried and the brother of her husband brought a suit for pre-emption alleging that the transaction was a sale and not a gift. The suit was dismissed. Subsequently he brought a suit for declaration that he had acquired a title to the property on the ground of remarriage of the widow and that the gift was null and void against him :

Held that as the plaintiff was challenging in his previous suit what the husband had done in relation to the property and as in the subsequent suit he was basing his right of ownership on what had been done by the widow herself, the reliefs in the two suits were based on two separate causes of action and the subsequent suit was not barred either under S. 11 or under O. 2, R. 2. [P 493 C 1]

Held further that the plaintiff was debarred from challenging the gift in the subsequent suit as by bringing the suit for pre-emption he should be taken to have consented to the transaction in the eye of the law : A I R 1914 Lah 460, Foll.

Judgment.—On 11th June 1932, one Nur Khan made a gift of the property now in suit to his wife Mt. Alam Khatun in lieu of her dower. On 25th June 1932, Nur Khan died leaving him surviving his widow, Mt. Alam Khatun, and a brother Hayat Khan. On 13th November 1932, Mt. Alam Khatun remarried. On 28th June 1933, Hayat Khan instituted a suit for pre-emption of the land gifted to Mt. Alam Khatun alleging that it was a sale and not a gift. This suit was decreed by the trial Court but was dismissed by the District Judge on appeal on 19th October 1934. On 23rd March 1936, Hayat Khan instituted the suit, out of which this appeal has arisen, for a declaration that he had acquired a right of ownership in the property in suit on the ground that Mt. Alam Khatun had remarried as well as for the reason that the deed of gift, dated 11th June 1932, was null and void as against him. Mt. Alam Khatun resisted the suit on various grounds and on the pleadings of the parties the following preliminary issues were framed :

(1) Whether the suit is barred under O. 2, R. 2, Civil P. C.? (2) Whether the plaintiff is in possession of the suit land and therefore competent to bring the suit in its present form? (3) Whether the previous judgment between the parties operates as res judicata in the present suit ?

The trial Court decided Issue 2 in favour of the plaintiff as he was clearly in possession of the land in suit but holding that the suit was barred both under O. 2, R. 2, and S. 11, Civil P. C., it dismissed the suit. On appeal, the District Judge reversed the decision of the Court below on Issues 1 and 3 and consequently remanded the case to the trial Court for disposal in accordance with law. It is against this decision that Mt. Alam Khatun has presented this appeal. Counsel for the appellant has contended (1) that the plaintiff was not entitled to challenge the validity of the gift inasmuch as by bringing a suit for pre-emption, he should be taken to have consented to the transaction in the eye of the law, and (2) that in any circumstances his suit was barred both by O. 2, R. 2 and S. 11, Civil P. C. So far as the first point is concerned, I have no hesitation in saying that the position urged by counsel for the appellant is legally sound. If any authority is needed for the proposition, reference may be made to a Division Bench judgment of the Punjab Chief Court reported in 78 P R 1914.¹ That case is on all fours with the present case and has never since been dissented from. Counsel for the respondent has very frankly conceded that he cannot cite any authority in which the contrary has been held. I hold therefore, that the plaintiff is debarred from challenging the validity of the gift made in favour of Mt. Alam Khatun.

On the second point however, I am not convinced that the suit is barred by any provision of law. Both the Courts below have discussed various authorities on the subject; but I do not consider that it is necessary to refer to any authority in this connexion, inasmuch as the question appears to me to be very simple, hardly standing in need of any authority to support it. The plaintiff in his previous suit challenged what Nur Khan had done in relation to the land in suit. In his present claim however he is basing his right of ownership on what has been done by the widow herself and there can be no question but that the two reliefs are based on separate causes of action altogether. It cannot therefore be urged that at the time the pre-emption suit was instituted by the plaintiff, he was bound under any provision of law to seek relief on the other ground also which had nothing to do with the ground on which he was seeking the first relief. Counsel for the appellant relied on 11 M I A 50,² 7 Lah 40³ and 36 All 476⁴ but he had to confess that none of these authorities was in point. In 11 M I A 50,² all that was laid down was that a defendant whose right to possession was attacked was bound in law to raise all defences available to him and the same principle was reiterated in 7 Lah 40³ on the authority of the same judgment. In 36 All 476⁴ a Division Bench of the Allahabad High Court had held:

2. Raghunadha Periyasoodya Taver v. Kattama Nachier, (1868) 11 M I A 50=10 W R 1=2 Sar 212 (P O).

There is nothing in law to prevent a plaintiff in a suit for pre-emption also setting up a claim for possession of the property as owner and his suit ought not to be dismissed on the ground that he has put his case in the alternative.

I am in respectful agreement with the propositions of law laid down in the judgments cited above; but in my view they are of no avail to the plaintiff in the present case. I accept the appeal to this extent, that I hold that the validity of the gift cannot now be challenged by the plaintiff, but considering that the relief based on the ground of Mt. Alam Khatun's remarriage is not barred by any provision of law, I dismiss the appeal to that extent. The trial Court will now concern itself with this issue alone and have nothing to do with the question whether the gift in question is null and void. As parties have partially succeeded before me, there will be no order as to costs in this appeal.

Din Mohammad J. — The facts of the case giving rise to this appeal are as follows: On 16th May 1927, one Parma Nand claiming to be a partner in a firm working under the style of Manohar Lal Gujral instituted a suit for dissolution of partner.

ship and accounts. On 31st May a receiver was appointed under O. 40, R. 1 Civil P. C. and authorized to take charge of timber and other assets of the firm. Up to 1929 he collected various outstandings and deposited them in Court to the credit of the firm. Among other sums so deposited, there was a sum of Rs. 1695.12.0 which had been collected by Kahan Chand, receiver. On 25th January 1929, a firm working in the name of Mul Chand-Amolak Ram brought a suit against Manohar Lal in his personal capacity and obtained an ex parte decree on 22nd February 1929. On 16th March the decree-holder took out execution and applied for attachment of the sum mentioned above. On 23rd March the sum was attached and on 11th April it was paid to one Sita Ram on behalf of Messrs. Mul Chand-Amolak Ram without any objection being raised by Manohar Lal. On 23rd April, an application was made by Parma Nand in which he made some complaints against Kahan Chand and further protested against the realization of the sum of Rs. 1695.12.0 by Messrs. Mul Chand-Amolak Ram.

On 24th April the Senior Subordinate Judge made an order that the receiver should file a suit for recovery of the said amount. On 6th October 1930, a preliminary decree was made in Parma Nand's suit and a commissioner was appointed to take accounts. On 22nd January 1932, Parma Nand once more made an application against Kahan Chand and further prayed that the commissioner be authorized to file the said suit. On 8th April the commissioner was so authorized and, on 11th April the suit was filed. The Subordinate Judge decreed the suit which, however was dismissed on appeal by the District Judge on the ground that the commissioner had no right to institute the suit. On a further appeal being made to this Court, the order of the District Judge was set aside and the case remanded for disposal in accordance with law. The Senior Subordinate Judge decreed the suit but the District Judge dismissed it on the ground that the suit was time-barred. Hence this appeal. The sole question for determination in this case is as to what Article of the Limitation Act governs the suit. Counsel for the appellant strenuously contends that the case is either governed by Art. 62 or Art. 120 and that Art. 29 has no application whatsoever inasmuch as (i) there is no wrongful seizure under legal process and

(2) at any rate there is no seizure from the possession of the plaintiff. In support of his contention counsel has referred to several authorities which are discussed below. In 61 M L J 330¹ the headnote is as follows:

In a case of alleged wrongful seizure of goods under colour of legal process a distinction must be drawn between acts done without judicial sanction and acts done under judicial sanction improperly obtained. If goods are seized under a writ or warrant which authorized the seizure, the seizure is lawful and no action will lie in respect of the seizure unless the person complaining can establish a remedy by some such action as for malicious prosecution. If however the writ or warrant did not authorize the seizure of the goods seized, an action would lie for damages occasioned by the wrongful seizure without proof of malice.

It is no doubt a case under tort but the principles enunciated by their Lordships of the Privy Council in this judgment are applicable to the facts of the present case in so far as the interpretation of the words "wrongful seizure" is concerned. To put it in a nut-shell, their Lordships seem to have laid down that a seizure under judicial sanction is not wrongful. In 21 Cal 142,² which again is a case from the Privy Council, their Lordships remarked as follows:

Even if the rule stated by the learned Judges admitted of no exception, . . . it seems to be a somewhat strong thing to hold that the appellant when he paid the Government revenue was in wrongful possession of the estate. He was in rightful possession at the time. He was in possession under authority of the highest Court in India.

From these observations also, it appears that whatever is done under the authority of a competent tribunal, cannot be called wrongful. In 30 Cal 440³ a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court held that a suit to recover the surplus proceeds of a sale held under Regulation 8 of 1819 wrongfully taken out by the defendant in execution of a decree against a third party, did not come under Art. 29, Limitation Act. In 11 Mad 345⁴ at pages 354 and 355 it is observed:

Defendant 4 contended that the money paid to him under the order of 7th June 1882, if it was wrongfully paid, was wrongfully seized within the meaning of Art. 29, Limitation Act, and therefore the plaintiff is barred from recovering the amount wrongly paid. We do not think the order for payment was a legal process within the meaning of that section.

The process meant by that Article refers to process under which seizure takes place. Here there was no seizure. The fund was in Court and was subject to the order of the Court. Art. 29 does not apply.

In 49 P W R 1910⁵ it was held that a suit to recover the money voluntarily paid into an execution Court by a defendant under the mistaken belief that he was liable to pay it on account of costs and wrongly received by the plaintiff from the said Court was governed either by Art. 97 or Art. 120 and not by Arts. 29, 62 or 96. In the course of his judgment, Rattigan J. observed :

He subsequently took out this money from the Court, but I fail to see how this act on his part can be said to be 'a wrongful seizure of moveable property under legal process'.

In 38 All 676,⁶ it was contended that Art. 29 applied to the case of money obtained from the Court by process of law inasmuch as this amounted to seizure; but this contention was repelled. In 39 All 322⁷ at p. 329, a question arose whether a sum of money deposited in Court and paid by it to certain persons amounted to seizure by them. Piggot J. who delivered the judgment in concurrence with Walsh J. remarked :

There has been some argument before us as to the meaning of the word 'seizure', and we were asked not to treat that word as precisely equivalent to 'attachment' or 'taking in execution'. It is quite possible that the word used in the Article is intentionally a wide one; but one thing seems clear, namely that 'seizure' implies the taking of something out of the possession of its owner. In the present case the money representing the price of the grain was from first to last in the custody of the Court; the Court conceived that it had realized the price of the grain and was holding it for the benefit of those persons who might hereafter be found to be entitled to it. . . . Under these circumstances I am quite satisfied that there was never any 'seizure' of this money within the meaning of Art. 29.

In 84 I C 6,⁸ which is on all fours with the present case, it was held that the suit was not governed by Art. 29 but by Art. 62 or Art. 120. Mr. Baker, Judicial Commissioner, referred to the various authorities reviewed above and held that in cases like the present there could be no wrongful seizure. In 64 I C 513,⁹ a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court held that prima facie a seizure under a writ issued by a Court was not a wrongful seizure and a suit for compensation for such a seizure was not governed by Art. 29. In the course of their judgment, the learned Judges observed:

In the present case the writ was issued by the Court and prima facie it was not a wrongful seizure. The writ was not without jurisdiction as the Court had jurisdiction over the subject-matter; nor was the writ executed against a person who was no party to the decree, nor with respect to goods outside the scope of the writ. In these circumstances, we think that Art. 29 is inapplicable to the case.

In A I R 1931 Nag 47,¹⁰ the Additional Judicial Commissioner observed that the crux of Art. 29 was in the words "wrongful seizure" and it was because the process was illegal that the seizure became wrongful so as to give a cause of action for the suit. In 38 Mad 972,¹¹ the suit was for recovery of the money drawn by the defendant from the Court and the question arose whether Art. 29 governed it. White C. J. who delivered the judgment in agreement with Sankaran Nair and Oldfield JJ. observed:

The appellant has contended that the appropriate Article is Art. 29 and that the suit is time-barred. It is not necessary to consider whether the suit is for compensation within the meaning of the Article. Assuming it is, the question is, did the attachment of the debt constitute a wrongful seizure of moveable property under legal process within the meaning of the Article. There is no doubt there was a 'legal process', but was there any seizure thereunder? I am of opinion that there was not.

As against these authorities, reliance is mainly placed on 8 Bom 17¹² and 31 Mad 431.¹³ It may be remarked, however that the Bombay judgment was considered in most of the cases referred to above but was either not followed or was held to have been wrongly decided. So far as 31 Mad 431¹³ is concerned, it is sufficient to remark that this authority was referred to in 38 Mad 972¹¹ and distinguished, two of the Judges being the same in both the cases. We are disposed to hold, therefore, that neither was there a seizure in this case nor was it wrongful within the meaning of Art. 29, Lim. Act, and that this being so the suit was well within time when it was instituted. We are supported in our conclusion by a reference to Rr. 43 and 52 of O. 21, Civil P. C. In R. 43 it is said that where the property to be attached is moveable property, other than agricultural produce, in the possession of the judgment-debtor, the attachment shall be made by actual seizure; while in Rule 52, which deals with attachment of property in custody of the Court, it is stated that the attachment shall be made by a notice to such Court, requesting that such property may be held subject to the further orders of the Court from which the notice is issued. There is thus a clear distinction between the procedure to be adopted when the property is to be seized from the judgment-debtor and when it is to be recovered from the custody of the Court.

On the grounds stated above, we allow this appeal, set aside the order of the District Judge and restore that of the Senior Subordinate Judge. We however order that from the date of the suit till the date of realization, future interest on the sum decreed will be charged at the rate of three per cent. only. The appellant will have his costs from the respondents in all Courts.

Criminal Revn. No. 1453 of 1937, Decided on 16th December 1937.

Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 510 — Paper in somebody's handwriting that Chemical Examiner's report shows that certain packets contain cocaine is not legal evidence and cannot be a substitute for Chemical Examiner's certificate.

Where all that is on the record of a case is a little scrap of paper on which it is written in somebody's handwriting that the Chemical Examiner's report shows that certain packets contained cocaine, it is not legal evidence and cannot be a substitute for the original certificate or at least for a copy of it certified by the Magistrate as being a true copy. The provisions relating to the production of a report by the Chemical Examiner in place of the Chemical Examiner's own personal appearance in Court are special provisions of the Code and must be strictly adhered to. Order.—The procedure in this case with regard to the recovery of the cocaine and the production of the necessary certificate from the Chemical Examiner has been so lax that it is impossible to uphold the conviction. In the first place, the head constable should have taken great care to see that there was no possibility of the packets recovered from Mumtaz being mixed up with the packets recovered from the present petitioner. Instead of doing so, he merely gave all the packets to a chaukidar who appears from the record of his cross-examination to be a person whose evidence in such a case would at the very least be suspicious and he does not appear to have sealed the packets up until he reached the thana. There is very little guarantee in these circumstances that the person to whom he entrusted the packets which were recovered in the two searches did not get them mixed up or even substitute fresh packets for one or more of them. This by itself might not have been a fatal objection in the present case as if all the packets recovered in the searches contained cocaine ipso facto the packets recovered from the present petitioner must have contained it.

But, on looking through the record of the case, I find in it no certificate from the Chemical Examiner to the effect that the packets in this case contained cocaine. Presumably in the other case or in some other cases there must have been some such certificate which the learned Magistrate may or may not have seen. He has not said so unambiguously in his judgment. He has merely said that the result of the Chemical Examiner's analysis shows that these packets contained cocaine. All that is on the record of this case is a little scrap of paper on which it is written in somebody's handwriting that the Chemical Examiner's report shows that these packets contained cocaine. This is not legal evidence and cannot be a substitute for the original certificate or at least for a copy of it certified by the Magistrate as being a true copy. The provisions relating to the production of a report by the Chemical Examiner in place of the Chemical Examiner's own personal appearance in Court are special provisions of the Code and must be strictly adhered to. As the case stands at present, there is no legal evidence on the record which will show that the packets recovered from the present petitioner actually contained cocaine. I therefore accept the petition and acquit the petitioner.

Decided on 27th April 1937, from decree of Senior Sub-Judge, Sialkot, D/- 20th
April 1936.

(a) Registration Act (1908), S. 17 (1) (c)— Receipt recording receipt of consideration on mortgage—Registration under S. 17 (1) (c) is necessary.

A receipt which records the receipt of the consideration for a mortgage on the date of the execution of the document, requires registration under the provisions of S. 17 (1) (c), to be admissible in evidence as a receipt: A I R 1934 Lah
970 Foll. [P 498 C 2]

(b) Registration Act (1908), S. 49—Collateral purpose—Mortgage for amount exceeding Rs. 100—Unregistered receipt evidencing payment of consideration is inadmissible in evidence as receipt for refund of consideration money as it is not collateral purpose—Receipt embodying terms of mortgage is however admissible in evidence to support claim for refund of consideration if mortgage implies personal liability.

Where the sole purpose for which an unregistered receipt is executed is to furnish evidence in writing of the payment of the "consideration on account of the creation of an interest in immovable property" exceeding Rs. 100 in value, the claim for the refund of the amount cannot be treated as a "collateral" purpose within the meaning of S. 49, and such receipt is therefore inadmissible in evidence. If however the document embodies the terms of a mortgage transaction it would be admissible to support a claim for the refund of the amount advanced, if the mortgage transaction implies a personal liability of the mortgagor to repay the amount. In the case of a usufructuary mortgage however the mortgagor is under no personal liability to repay the amount and hence the receipt is inadmissible in evidence for a collateral purpose in a suit for the refund of the consideration: A I R 1929 Nag 115 and Judgment.—The facts of the case which has given rise to this second appeal are as follows: On 28th of August 1927, Kunj Lal, defendant, purported to mortgage one-half share of 31 kanals and 19 marlas of agricultural land to Wadhawa Singh, plaintiff, for Rs. 600. At the time of the transaction, a "receipt" (Ex. P.1) was executed by Kunj Lal in favour of Wadhawa Singh. This receipt contained the terms of the mortgage, but was not registered. On 8th November 1929, mutation of the mortgage was effected in favour of Wadhawa Singh who was found to be in possession. On 2nd June 1930, Kunj Lal executed a regular mortgage deed in respect of another plot of land, 9 kanals and 9 marlas in area, in favour of Wadhawa Singh for Rs. 300.

This deed was duly registered.

In 1932 Kasturi Lal, son of Kunj Lal, brought a suit for possession of the lands covered by both the transactions, alleging that they were the property of a joint Hindu family, consisting of his father and himself, and that the former had no power under Hindu law to mortgage it without family necessity. The suit was decided by Sheik Mohammad Hussain, Subordinate Judge, on 29th May 1933. He held that the mortgage for Rs. 600 could not be proved, as its terms were embodied in the receipt (Ex. P/1), which was the sole repository of the transaction and which, being unregistered, was inadmissible in evidence. He therefore found that the mortgage in question had not been established, nor could Wadhawa Singh prove the payment of Rs. 600 aliunde. With regard to the second mortgage for Rs. 300, he held the consideration proved, but found that there was no necessity for the transaction. He accordingly granted Kasturi Lal a decree for possession of the lands comprised in both the transactions.
This judgment was upheld on appeal by the District Judge, and in execution of the decree Kasturi Lal obtained possession from Wadhawa Singh.

On 4th May 1934 Wadhawa Singh instituted the present suit against Kunj Lal for recovery of Rs. 900 which, he alleged, he had paid to the defendant as consideration for the mortgage transactions of 1927 and 1930, but which had been set aside in the suit brought by Kasturi Lal, and possession of the lands comprised therein taken away from him. Kunj Lal pleaded that the suit was barred by limitation, that the finding in the previous suit by Kasturi Lal (to which both the present plaintiff and the defendant were parties) that the payment of Rs. 600 could not be proved, was res judicata, and that, in any case, Ex. P-1 was inadmissible even for the purpose of proving the alleged payment of Rs. 600 and claiming a refund thereof. He admitted receipt of Rs. 300 as consideration for the second mortgage. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the plaintiff's claim for Rs. 600 but granted him a decree for Rs. 300 on the second transaction.

Wadhawa Singh appealed to the Senior Subordinate Judge against the dismissal of his suit for refund of Rs. 600. The learned Judge did not record any finding on the point of limitation. He held that the finding in the former suit, that the receipt Ex. P-1 was inadmissible for want of registration, operated as res judicata in this suit, and that the receipt was inadmissible even for the purpose of proving the payment of Rs. 600 by Wadhawa Singh to Kunj Lal on 28th August 1927. He accordingly dismissed the appeal. Wadhawa Singh has come in second appeal, and it has been contended on his behalf that the suit was within limitation under Art. 97, as the cause of action arose when the mortgages were held to be invalid in Kasturi Lal's suit, which was decided by the first Court on 29th May 1933, less than a year before the institution of the present suit. Mr. Mehr Chand for the respondent frankly conceded that this is so, and that the suit is not barred by limitation. He also admitted that the question as to the payment of Rs. 600 was not res judicata between the present plaintiff and the defendant for, though both of them were impleaded as defendants in the former suit, Kunj Lal did not appear and there was no contest between the two co-defendants inter se in that suit.

The next question is whether the unregistered document, Ex. P-1, is admissible as evidence of the mortgage transaction, or at any rate, of the payment of Rs. 600 by the plaintiff to the defendant. In the written grounds of second appeal, as presented in this Court, it was stated that Ex. P-1 was merely a memorandum of an already accomplished transaction, but this contention was abandoned at the hearing. It was conceded by the learned counsel, who argued the case on behalf of the appellant, that the document (which is set out in extenso in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court) contains all the terms of the mortgage and is the sole repository of the transaction. There are no words in it which might indicate that the mortgage had been effected orally at a prior date, and this fact was merely recited in Ex. P-1. It was therefore admitted by the learned counsel that this document could not be admitted to prove the mortgage. He urged, in the alternative, that the document was really a "receipt" acknowledging payment of Rs. 600 as the consideration of the mortgage. But if this is a correct description of Ex. P-1, it is clearly inadmissible under Cl. (c) of S. 17 (1), Registration Act. The latest ruling of this Court is 16 Lah 485,¹ which overruled two earlier Single Bench decisions and laid down that a receipt which records the receipt of the consideration for a mortgage on the date of the execution of the document requires registration under the provisions of S. 17 (1) (c) to be admissible in evidence. Following this decision, I must hold that Ex. P-1 is not admissible as a "receipt".

The learned counsel for the appellant urged, however, that the document can be admitted under the proviso to S. 49 (which gave statutory recognition to the judicial decisions of this Court and other Courts by the Amending Act of 1929) as evidence of any "collateral transaction not required to be effected by registered instrument." In considering this argument, it must be borne in mind that a transaction can be called "collateral" only if it is independent of, or divisible from, the transaction to effect which the law requires registration. The appellant's learned counsel stated that Ex. P-1 was either a receipt acknowledging payment of the consideration for the mortgage, or it was the repository of the terms of the mortgage, executed at the time when the transaction was effected. The question of the applicability of the proviso to S. 49 should therefore be examined in the light of both these alternatives. If Ex. P-1 is really a "receipt", the sole purpose for which it was executed was to furnish evidence in writing of the payment of the "consideration on account of the creation of an interest in immovable property" exceeding Rs. 100 in value, and consequently the claim for the refund of the amount cannot possibly be treated as a "collateral" purpose. In this view the deed is clearly inadmissible: see A I R 1929 Nag 115² and A I R 1932 Lah 655.³

transaction, entered into at the time of its execution, it would be admissible to support a claim for the refund of the amount advanced, if the mortgage transaction implied a personal liability of the mortgagor to repay the amount. This would depend on the nature and terms of the mortgage. If, for instance, the transaction was one of a "simple mortgage" or an "English mortgage", it would necessarily imply a personal covenant to repay, and the unregistered deed evidencing the mortgage would be admissible for the "collateral" purpose of enforcing the personal covenant. If, however, the mortgage is "usufructuary" or is one by way of conditional sale, and the mortgagee has taken possession of the property, the mortgagor does not, in the absence of an express or implied stipulation to the contrary, incur any personal liability. It is one of the characteristics of these kinds of mortgages that the mortgagee must look exclusively to the land for repayment of the debt. He cannot sue the mortgagor personally for payment of the debt (24 Cal 677,⁴ 1 P R 1870,⁵ Ghosh's Law of Mortgages, Vol. 1, p. 99). See also Sir D. F. Mulla's Indian Registration Act, Edn. 3, p. 84, where the law is stated as follows:

In a usufructuary mortgage the nature and terms of the security negative a personal liability, and if the deed were inadmissible for want of registration as evidence of a mortgage, it would not support a suit to recover the money advanced.

In the case before us, there can be no doubt as to the real nature of the transaction. Ex. P-1 recites that the mortgagee had been put in possession of the mortgaged land, and that he would remain in possession till redemption by the mortgagor by payment of the mortgage money in the month of Magh or Jeth. During this period the mortgagee was to receive the rents and profits accruing from the property and appropriate the same in lieu of interest. The mortgage was therefore clearly "usufructuary" as defined in S. 58 (d), T. P. Act, the relevant portions of which may be reproduced here :

Where the mortgagor delivers possession of the mortgaged property to the mortgagee and authorizes him to retain such possession until payment of the mortgage money and to receive the rents and profits accruing from the property, and to appropriate the same in lieu of interest, or in payment of the mortgage money

. . . . the transaction is called a usufructuary mortgage.

The learned counsel for the appellant cited 13 Lah 259,⁶ but that case is clearly distinguishable. There, the learned Judges found that the deed in question clearly contained a stipulation that the mortgagee could recover "the amount due from the person and other property of the mortgagor". In either view of the case therefore Ex. P-1 is inadmissible for the purpose of supporting the plaintiff's claim for recovery of Rs. 600. This being so, I am constrained to hold that the plaintiff's suit had been rightly dismissed by the Courts below. The appeal fails and is dismissed ; but having regard to all the circumstances, I leave the parties to bear their own costs throughout.

First Appeal No. 26 of 1937, Decided on 27th April 1937, from order of Dist. Judge, Lahore, D/- 4th January 1937.

Res judicata — Litigating under same title — Former suit by A against trustees of temple that certain property attached to temple belonged to him—Defendants claiming title to property in temple — Suit finally decreed in favour of A — Subsequent suit by worshippers of temple against A's heirs claiming same property as belonging to temple held barred by res judicata — Plaintiffs pleading decision in former suit was obtained collusively must prove it.

A suit was brought by A against the trustees of a certain temple that certain property attached to the temple belonged to him. The trustees defended the suit on the ground that the title in the property in suit was in the temple. The suit was finally decreed in favour of A. Later on, the plaintiffs alleging themselves to be the worshippers of the temple brought a suit against A's heirs for a declaration that the property which was the subject-matter of the former suit was the property belonging to the temple. On a contention being raised by A's heirs that the former decision operated as res judicata, the plaintiffs contended that it was obtained collusively and could not therefore be res judicata and also because they were not the successors of the trustees-defendants in the former suit :

4. Luchmeshar Singh v. Dookh Mochan Jha, (1897) 24 Cal 677.

5. Ruttonjee Cursetjee v. Hormusjee Cowasjee, (1870) 1 P R 1870.

Held that the plaintiffs being the worshippers of the temple were persons interested in it and had therefore the locus standi to sue to protect the property of the temple from being wrongfully claimed by third persons. [P 501 C 1]

Held also that though the plaintiffs were not the successors of the defendants in the former suit, the title litigated under in both the suits was the same, as they both claimed the title to the property in the temple. The plaintiffs were therefore litigating under the same title, even though the agency asserting the title in the former suit was different from the one in the subsequent suit. The suit was therefore barred by res judicata. [P 501 C 1]

Held further that the burden of proving collusion, negligence and want of bona fides on the part of the defendants in the former suit lay on the plaintiffs as they asserted that the decision in the former suit was not res judicata : A I R 1937 P C 1 Rel. on. [P 501 C 2]

Judgment. — This appeal arises out of a suit instituted by Sher Gir and Amar Gir plaintiffs-respondents, for a declaration that a certain shop and kothri described in the plaint are religious property, being attached to Shiwala Boharwala in Chauk Wazir Khan, Lahore. The suit was resisted by defendants 1 and 2, Piyare Lal and Kishen Chand, sons of Nathu Ram, who claimed the property as their own. They also pleaded that the question of title involved was res judicata by reason of the decision in a former suit. This plea was traversed by the plaintiffs, who further averred in their replication that the former suit had been brought by Nathu Ram in collusion with his co-trustees and the then mahant, all of whom were guilty of gross negligence in conducting it. The trial Judge framed a preliminary issue as to whether the suit was barred by res judicata and holding in favour of the defendants dismissed the suit without going into the merits. On appeal by the plaintiffs the learned District Judge came to a contrary conclusion. He accordingly accepted the appeal and remanded the case under O. 41 R. 23, Civil P. C., for decision on the merits.

Defendants 1 and 2 have come in second appeal and it has been contended on their behalf that the learned District Judge is in error in holding that the defendants in the previous suit were litigating in a capacity different from that in which the plaintiffs have brought the present suit and consequently the suit is barred by res judicata. Before examining this argument, it is necessary to set out a few preliminary facts. It is common ground that in the nineties of the last century a sanyasi, Hira Gir by name, was the mahant of this temple. He was succeeded by Piyar Gir, who died in 1919. His successor was Bir Gir, who died in 1932. On his death, Mohan Gir defendant 3 became the mahant. Some time before his death, Hira Gir had associated with himself three persons, Sohan Lal, Waziri Mal and Nathu Ram (father of defendants 1 and 2) as trustees of the temple, and it appears that for a number of years these persons and the mahant, for the time being, jointly continued to look after the temple and manage the properties attached to it. In 1911, mahant Piyar Gir, Sohan Lal and Waziri Mal brought a suit in the Small Cause Court against the third trustee, Nathu Ram, for recovery of Rs. 51 as arrears of rent of the shop and the kothri now in dispute, which he was alleged to have rented from the temple. In this suit a decree was passed against Nathu Ram. Shortly afterwards, Nathu Ram instituted a suit against mahant Piyar Gir and Waziri Mal and Sohan Lal, for a declaration that he was the owner of the shop and the kothri and that it did not belong to the temple. The suit was decreed by the Subordinate Judge on 31st July 1912, who held that Nathu Ram had succeeded in proving that the shop and the kothri were his private property, and that they were not attached to the temple. The other trustees, Waziri Mal and Sohan Lal appealed to the Divisional Judge, but the appeal was dismissed on 21st April 1913. A second appeal was lodged in the Chief Court but was dismissed in limine on 10th October 1913. Some time afterwards Nathu Ram died and since then his sons, defendants 1 and 2, have been in possession of the shop and the kothri.

In 1934, the present mahant Mohan Gir applied to the Municipal Committee for sanction to construct certain buildings, in which he proposed to include a portion of the shop and the kothri in dispute. Defendants 1 and 2 successfully raised objections before the Committee and the sanction was refused. On 30th March 1935, the present plaintiffs, claiming to be members of the Sanyasi fraternity and worshippers of the temple, brought the present suit for a declaration that the shop and the kothri in dispute belonged to the temple and that defendants 1 and 2 were wrongfully claiming it as their own. In rejecting the plea of bar of res judicata, the learned District Judge has held that the plaintiffs in the present suit are not litigating under the same title, under which the defendants of the suit of 1912-13 had resisted the suit of Nathu Ram. He has observed, that in that suit Piyar Gir had sued as a mahant of the Shivala and as such his position was that of "a representative of the property of the idol Shri Shivaji Maharaj, preserved in the Shivala", while in the present suit the plaintiffs do not claim as representatives of the idol, but sue "as Hindus entitled to worship at the Shivala and as members of the bhek". This reasoning is based on a misapprehension of the real nature of the two suits. The previous suit was defended by the then mahant and two of the trustees on the ground that title in the property was in the Shivala. In the present suit, the plaintiffs are also suing for a declaration that the property is attached to the same Shivala. There can be no doubt therefore that they are litigating under the same title, under which Prem Gir and the two trustees had resisted Nathu Ram's suit in 1912. It is no doubt true, that the present plaintiffs are not the successors of the mahant and the trustees who were defendants in the former suit, but this is immaterial. They allege themselves to be worshippers of the temple and as such are persons interested in it, and have a locus standi to sue to protect its property from being wrongfully claimed by third parties. Admittedly, they do not claim any personal right of their own in the property; nor have they set up a jus tertii; they sue for the benefit of the Shivala. The title litigated under is clearly the same, though the agency asserting the title in 1912 was different from that which asserts it now.

The learned counsel appearing for the respondents, after making a faint hearted attempt to support the reasoning of the learned Judge, frankly admitted that his decision could not be supported on the ground on which it proceeded. He pointed out however, that in the replication, the plaintiffs had definitely pleaded that the previous suit could not operate as res judicata, as it had been brought collusively by Nathu Ram, who was one of the trustees against the co-trustees and mahant Piyar Gir who appears to have been appointed by them, and that the then defendants did not produce all the available documentary evidence, but merely made a show of defending the suit, or at any rate, acted with gross negligence in the defence of the suit. He contends that a separate issue should have been framed by the trial Judge on the point, and the allegations investigated before the plea of res judicata could be finally decided. But the preliminary issue framed by the trial Judge was comprehensive in its terms, and it was open to the parties to produce evidence bearing on these points if they chose to do so. There was however some confusion in the rulings, as to whether the onus to prove collusion, negligence and want of bona fides lay on the party who asserted that the former decision was not res judicata, or on those who had pleaded the decision in bar of the subsequent suit. This question has since been finally settled by their Lordships of the Privy Council in A I R 1937 P C 1.¹ But as the matter had not been settled authoritatively at the time of the trial, there is some force in the contention of counsel that the plaintiffs-respondents refrained from placing on the record the materials bearing on the point, in the belief that the onus was on the defendants. I think therefore that they should have another opportunity to prove these allegations.

I accept the appeal, set aside the judgment of the learned District Judge and remand the case to the Court of first instance with the direction that it will try the issue as to whether the previous decision is not res judicata by reason of there being collusion, gross negligence or want of bona fides on the part of the defendants of that suit. The plaintiffs will first lead evidence on this issue, and then the defendants will produce evidence in rebuttal, if they so desire. If the decision of this issue goes against the plaintiffs, the suit shall be dismissed as barred by res judicata; if the Court finds otherwise, it will proceed to try the case on the merits. Court-fee on this appeal will be refunded; other costs will be costs in the cause.

Order.—This petition for revision arises out of a suit instituted by Mt. Malan Bibi against Roshan Din for recovery of Rs. 42 on account of arrears of rent of a shop bearing No. 720, situate in Lahore Cantonment. The Judge, Small Cause Court, Lahore, granted the plaintiff a decree for Rs. 33 and the defendant has preferred a petition for revision to this Court. The suit was based on a rent deed dated 29th September 1930, executed by Roshan Din defendant in favour of the plaintiff. In his written statement the defendant admitted the execution of the rent deed but stated that he was induced to execute it by means of fraud and misrepresentation practised on him by Khushal Singh, the agent of Mt. Malan Bibi, plaintiff. In his oral statement, however, Roshan Din defendant denied the execution of the rent deed. This took place on 26th June 1936. On 19th August 1936, the parties were examined again. On that date Roshan Din admitted the execution of the rent deed and pleaded fraud and misrepresentation. The Court framed four issues. After the framing of the issues, the statements of two witnesses, namely Khushal Singh and Dewa Ram, were recorded on behalf of the plaintiff. The statement of Bishan Das was recorded on behalf of the defendant. The defendant then made a statement that he had no further evidence to produce. After a consideration of the entire evidence, the Court came to the conclusion that the defendant had failed to establish that any fraud was practised on him by Khushal Singh. The rent deed, dated 29th September 1930 had been lost but the statement of Deva Ram and the entries from his register were given in evidence to prove the contents of the rent deed. On these findings a decree was passed in favour of the plaintiff.

It was urged by the learned counsel for the petitioner that a suit with respect to the rent of the shop in dispute for the months of November and December 1935, and January 1936 is pending in the Court of Mr. Teal, Subordinate Judge, Lahore Cantonment, and that as that suit was instituted prior to the present suit, the present suit ought to have been stayed under S. 10, Civil P. C., and that the lower Court had erred in proceeding to judgment in the present case. The present suit relates to rent for the months of February, March and April 1936. It was held by a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court in 36 I C 641¹ that:

The expression 'matter in issue' in S. 10 has reference to the entire subject-matter in controversy between the parties and is not equivalent to 'any of the questions in issue'. The section does not bar the trial of a suit for rent for a period subsequent to that included in the previously instituted suit for rent, although the same question may be involved in the two suits.

The defendant therefore was not entitled to have the present suit stayed under S. 10, Civil P. C. It was next contended that the case should be remanded for retrial as the trial Court had not given sufficient opportunity to Roshan Din to produce evidence on the question of fraud. In view of the statement of Roshan Din, dated 19th August 1936, there is no force in this argument. I therefore dismiss this petition for revision with costs. I have no doubt that the suit pending in the Court of Mr. Teal will be decided by him on the evidence recorded in that case. He is not in any way to be influenced by any observations contained in my judgment in the present case.

Civil Revn. No. 380 of 1936, Decided on 7th December 1937, from order of Senior Sub-Judge, Ferozepore, D/- 13th May 1936.

* Bond — Entry in bahi khata — Entry should be scrutinized — Balance struck—Entry as "baqi rahe" signed by debtor and attested by witnesses — Entry amounts to acknowledgment — Entry as "baqi dena" by debtor is agreement— If attested, it amounts to "bond" and requires stamp duty.

In each case where the entries in bahi khata are under consideration as regards their nature as a bond or as a mere acknowledgment, the entry should be carefully scrutinized. Ordinarily, a balance struck by the debtor, followed by the words "baqi rahe" and signed by the debtor would be a mere "acknowledgment," on which the stamp duty of one anna will be sufficient. In such a case, it will be immaterial that the entry is or is not attested by witness. If however the words used are "baqi dene" that would amount to an agreement and be liable to be stamped as such. If further such an entry is attested by one or more witnesses it would be a "bond" and must be stamped accordingly: 35 P R 1903 (F B), Expl.; Case law referred. [P 505 C 1]

Tek Chand J. — This is a petition for revision of the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Ferozepore, holding that an entry of Rs. 17,280 which forms the basis of this suit amounts to a bond and is therefore liable for payment of stamp duty and penalty as such. The entry is set out in detail in the judgment and it is not necessary to repeat it here. The entry is in the account book of the plaintiffs. The first portion is in the handwriting of the scribe in which it is expressly stated that "Rupees 17,280 baqi lene" from the defendants on the above account. It is then signed by the two defendant and is attested by two witnesses. Below the signature of each defendant separate writings appear in their handwritings. The first one is by Ghulam Mohy-ud-din which states that "mabligh satra hazar do sau assi rupia baqi dena. Pichhla hisab samajh liya." The writing by Atta Mohammad is to the effect: "Mub-

ligh satra hazar do sau assi rupia baqi dene mushtarqa ham donon bhayon ko hai." The entry bears a stamp of one anna only. The lower Court has held that taking the entry as a whole there can be no doubt that the instrument is a "bond" as defined in S. 2 (4) (b), Stamp Act, and should have been stamped as such. In coming to this conclusion, the lower Court has relied upon a decision of the Chief Court in 35 P R 1903.¹ That decision however is in conflict with a recent Division Bench ruling of this Court in 38 P L R 269.² In that case it was held that in order to bring an instrument within the definition of bond in the Stamp Act "there must be an express obligation to pay". An implied obligation cannot convert an acknowledgment into a bond. Therefore an acknowledgment entry attested by two witnesses and containing an implied promise to pay interest but without any express obligation to pay the amount due is not a bond." The learned Judges referred to a decision of Bhide J. in 34 P L R 417,³ in support of the same view. In 22 Cal 757⁴ also, it was held that the obligation must be denoted by express words. See also Abdul Haque's Indian Stamp Act, p. 16.

Counsel for the respondent besides relying upon 35 P R 1903,¹ referred to 33 P L R 940⁵ and 5 Lah 406.⁶ The two last-mentioned cases however did not relate to the question of stamp duty, and they do not seem to be of much assistance. In view of this conflict of authority and having regard to the importance of the question, I think the matter should be decided by a larger Bench. I accordingly refer the case to a Division Bench. An early date after the vacation should be fixed.

Judgment of Division Bench.

Tek Chand J.—The question for decision in this case is whether an entry of Rs. 17,280, which forms the basis of the suit brought by the plaintiff against the defendants, amounts to a "bond" within the meaning of S. 2 (5), Stamp Act and is liable to payment of stamp duty and penalty as such. The learned Senior Subordinate Judge has held the entry to be a "bond" and has directed the plaintiff to pay Rs. 131-14-0 as stamp duty and Rs. 1312-8-0 as penalty, before further proceedings can be taken in the suit. The plaintiff has applied for revision of this order. The entry is in the bahi of the defendants. The first portion is in the handwriting of the scribe in which it is stated that the account had been gone into and the balance recoverable from the defendants is Rs. 17,280 "satra hazar do sau assi rupia baqi lene". It is then signed by the two defendants, and is attested by two witnesses. Below the signature of each defendant separate writings appear in his handwriting. The first one is by Ghulam Mohy-ud-Din (defendant 2) and states "mubligh satra hazar do sau assi rupia baqi dene. Pichhla hisab samajh liya". The writing by Atta Mohammad (defendant 1) runs as follows: "Mubligh satra hazar do sau assi rupia baqi dena mush-tarka ham donon bhayon ko hai." The entry bears a one-anna stamp only. It appears that on the same day, another document was executed by the defendants in favour of the plaintiff in the form of a letter in which the former admitted their liability to pay interest at 12 per cent. per annum on the amount due to the plaintiff.

For the defendants, it was contended that the entry in the bahi and this letter are parts of the same transaction, and should be taken together in construing whether or not the bahi entry amounts to a "bond." The learned Subordinate Judge has held, in my opinion rightly, that the letter is not a counter-part of the entry in the bahi, and cannot be looked at for the purpose of determining as to whether the entry in the bahi is liable to be stamped as a "bond". He has however held that the entry itself, apart from the letter, contains a promise to pay and having been attested by the witnesses is a "bond". Before us, several rulings have been cited by counsel for both sides, but it is unnecessary to refer to all of them, as every instrument must be considered on its own wording and it is not possible to lay down a hard and fast rule, which might govern all cases. The word "bond" is defined in S. 2 (5) as including any instrument attested by a witness and not payable to order or bearer, whereby a person obliges himself to pay money to another.

The entry in question is attested by two witnesses and the only question is whether the defendants "obliged" themselves to pay to the plaintiff the sum of Rs. 17,280 which was the balance found due after going through the account. In other words, does the entry contain an express promise to pay the amount mentioned by the plaintiff? As stated already, the first portion of the entry is in the handwriting of the scribe and says: "Rs. 17,280 baqi lene." Below it is the endorsement by the defendants in which each of them states that "Rs. 17,280 baki dene." Taking the entry as a whole, it seems to me that it does contain an express obligation by the defendants to pay the amount to the plaintiff. This clearly follows from the use of the expression "baqi lene" by the creditor and "baqi dene" by the debtors, below the balance struck in the creditor's bahi after going through the previous account between them. See the judgment of Plowden J. in 72 P R 1879⁷ and 35 P R 1903¹; see also the observations of Dalip Singh J. in L P A 164 of 1936⁸ recently decided by the Full Bench where it was stated that a long course of rulings has held that not only on the question of interest but where the words used amount to words 'is payable' or 'to be paid' or 'to be taken' or 'to be given', 'baqi lene', 'baqi dene' etc., almost invariably such words amount to a promise to pay within the meaning of S. 25 (3), Contract Act.

See also 10 Lah 745,⁹ 10 Lah 748¹⁰ and 33 P L R 940⁵ where the same conclusion was reached. In the referring order it was stated that 35 P R 1903¹ appeared to be in conflict with two recent decisions of this Court reported in 34 P L R 417³ and 38 P L R 269.² But after examining the original records it appears that there is no real conflict. We have seen the Urdu entries in those cases and find that their wording was different. In 34 P L R 417,³ the debtor had written below the balance the words "baqi rahe". He did not use the expression "baqi dene" and it was held that this was a mere "acknowledgment" and not an agreement, and the circumstance that the entry was attested by two witnesses did not make it a "bond". As pointed out by the learned Judge, there is a clear distinction between an "acknowledgment" and an "agreement", and there being no words from which an express obligation could be inferred there was no "agreement" and therefore the entry did not amount to a bond. In 38 P L R 269² the words "baqi dene" did not occur over the endorsement by the debtor and that case also is clearly distinguishable. In each case, the entry should be carefully scrutinized. Ordinarily, a balance struck by the debtor, followed by the words "baqi rahe" and signed by the debtor would be a mere "acknowledgment", on which a stamp duty of one anna will be sufficient. As held in 34 P L R 417,³ in such a case, it will be immaterial that the entry is or is not attested by witnesses. If however the words used are "baqi dene" that would amount to an "agreement" and be liable to be stamped as such. If further such an entry is attested by one or more witnesses it will be a 'bond' and must be stamped accordingly. It must therefore be held that the decision of the learned Senior Subordinate Judge is correct. I would accordingly dismiss this petition, but would leave the parties to bear their own costs in this Court. As the time fixed by the lower Court for making good the deficiency in stamp duty and payment of penalty has long since passed, I would allow the plaintiff a period of two months from today, within which to pay the amount. Both counsel have been directed to cause their clients to appear before the Senior Subordinate Judge, Ferozepore on 10th January 1938, when a date for further proceedings before him will be fixed.

Civil Revn. No. 576 of 1937, Decided on 24th February 1938, from decree of Senior Sub-Judge, Lyallpur, D/- 28th April 1937.

(a) Stamp Act (1899), S. 12—"Effectually cancelled"—Object of cancellation is to make stamp unfit for further use in ordinary course of business — Executant of promissory note clearly initialling stamps on it—No date of initialling mentioned—Stamps are effectually cancelled.

The Legislature has not attempted any exhaustive list of the modes in which cancellation may be done in sub-s. 3 of S. 12. The object of the cancellation obviously is to make the stamp unfit for further use in the ordinary course of business, and whether this has been done in any particular case is a question to be determined on an examination of the instrument in question. The section does not lay down that the cancellation must be such that it would be impossible for a criminally inclined person to use the stamp again.

Thus, where the executant of a promissory note clearly initials his signature on the adhesive stamps on it, the mere fact that the date on which the executant initialled does not appear on any of them, does not make it "not effectually cancelled": Case law referred.

(b) Acknowledgment—Acknowledgment containing promise to pay balance due on pronote —Original pronote inadmissible—Acknowledgment can be basis of suit.

A subsequent acknowledgment containing clearly a promise to pay the balance due on a promissory note can be the basis of a suit, even though the original promissory note is not admissible in evidence: A I R 1938 Lah 503, Rel. on.

Order. — The plaintiff instituted a suit against the defendant for recovery of Rs. 214-0-9 as the balance due on a loan which the defendant had raised from him. It was alleged in the plaint, that on 5th September 1925 the defendant had executed a pronote for Rs. 512-8-0 in favour of the plaintiff, bearing interest at Rupees 12-8-0 per cent. per annum, with half-yearly rests, that the defendant had paid Rs. 653-0-9 on account on different dates, and that on 8th December 1933 he had sent an "acknowledgment letter" admitting that on that date Rs. 141-3-6 was due by him and promising to pay it on 18th January 1934. The plaintiff accordingly claimed Rs. 141-3-6 as principal and Rs. 72-13-3 as interest, or Rs. 214-0-9 in all. Along with the plaint, the pronote of 5th September 1925 and the "acknowledgment letter" of 8th December 1933 were filed. The defendant raised two preliminary objections, and pleaded them in bar of the suit. It was urged that the pronote was not properly stamped and was therefore inadmissible in evidence; and, secondly, that the suit was barred by limitation. The trial

Judge sustained the first objection and, holding that the pronote was not properly stamped, dismissed the suit, without going into the question of limitation. On appeal, the learned Senior Subordinate Judge has affirmed this decision.

The promissory note, dated 5th September 1925, bears two adhesive stamps of one anna each. On each stamp, the initials of the executant are written very clearly in his own hand, but the date on which he initialled the stamps does not appear on any of them. It has therefore been held that the stamps had not been effectually "cancelled," in the manner required by sub-s. (3) of S. 12, Stamp Act, and, consequently under sub-s. (2), the instrument must be "deemed to be unstamped." After examining the promissory note in question and hearing counsel for the parties, I am unable to accept the view of the Courts below. They appear to be under the impression that sub-s. (3) of S. 12 lays down a rigid and hard and fast rule that when an adhesive stamp has been affixed on an instrument, and the person executing it writes his name or initials on the stamp it is essential that the "true date" of his so writing must appear on the stamp, and that if this had not been done the stamp cannot be held to have been effectually cancelled. This however is not the only mode in which such a stamp can be cancelled. In sub-s. (3) itself, it is stated at the end that the stamp may be cancelled "in any other effectual manner." Reading S. 12 as a whole, it will appear that all that is legally necessary is that where an adhesive stamp is affixed on any instrument chargeable with duty, the person executing it shall, when affixing such stamp, cancel the same "so that it cannot be used again." The Legislature has not attempted any exhaustive list of the modes in which cancellation may be done. In the first part of sub-s. (3) one of such modes is mentioned, and it is then said that the executant may cancel the stamp "in any other effectual manner." The object of the cancellation obviously is to make the stamp unfit for further use in the ordinary course of business, and whether this has been done in any particular case is a question to be determined on an examination of the instrument in question. The section does not lay down that the cancellation must be such that it would be impossible for a criminally inclined person to use the stamp again.

The learned counsel for the parties have cited a large number of rulings, but I do not think it necessary to discuss them in detail, as each case was decided on its particular facts and the observations made therein must be taken to have been made in reference to its peculiar facts. The learned counsel for the respondents has relied largely upon 14 Bom 102¹ and 28 Bom 432.² The correctness of the case last mentioned was however doubted by Rattigan J. in 108 P R 1908³ and more recently these cases have been dissented from by the Bombay High Court also. In 108 I C 465⁴ at pp. 474-75, Crump J. after pointing out that the question in each case is one which is to be determined upon the facts of the case and that no one case can really be an authority for another, observed as follows:

The Legislature, I take it, says what it means and that is that the stamp in its cancelled condition cannot be used again. It does not say that the process must be so thorough that no evilly-disposed person can, in any manner, render the stamp fit for further use. Indeed, the process which the Legislature declared to be adequate in S. 12 (3) might be defeated by criminal ingenuity.

The learned Judge then referred to the English case in (1902) 71 L J Ch 766⁵ where the opinion was expressed that "lines or a cross on the stamp might amount to sufficient cancellation", and following this decision he disapproved the dicta in the previous decisions of his own Court referred to above. The Rangoon High Court considered the question at length in 3 Rang 39⁶ and there also the decisions in 14 Bom 102¹ and 28 Bom 432² were dissented from, and it was held that all that is necessary is that it should be apparent on the face of the stamp that it has once been used. This is all that could reasonably be expected from the person executing it, and is all that is in fact required by S. 12. Reference may also be made to 3 A L J 326.⁷ The learned Judges of the Courts below have referred to three Punjab cases, reported in

1. S. A. Ralli v. Caramalli Fazal, (1890) 14 Bom 102.
2. Virbhadrappa v. Bhimaji Balaji, (1904) 28 Bom 432=6 Bom L R 436.

148 P R 1919,⁸ 15 I C 202⁹ and A I R 1935 Lah 716.¹⁰ The first two of these cases however do not in any way support their conclusion. In 148 P R 1919⁸ it was observed that the question whether or not a stamp has been effectually cancelled is one purely of fact to be decided on an examination of the stamp itself. In that particular case, the stamp had been cancelled by drawing diagonal lines right across the stamp, their ends extending to the paper, and it was held that this was an effectual cancellation. In 15 I C 202⁹ lines had been drawn across the stamp and this was held to be sufficient. It was nowhere laid down in those cases, as appears to have been supposed, that it is essential that the writing on the stamp, to be effectual, must necessarily extend on to the paper. In the third case, A I R 1935 Lah 716¹⁰ the promissory note in question bore four one anna stamps, and it was held that at the time of the execution of the note only three stamps had been affixed, and that the fourth stamp was affixed subsequently. On this finding, the instrument could not be said to have been properly stamped and was therefore held to be inadmissible.

A further objection was raised that this fourth stamp, which had been found to have been subsequently affixed, was not effectually cancelled as all that had been done was that a long straight line had been drawn in faint ink, and that this line did not extend over the margin of the stamp. In the discussion on this last point, there are some observations which lend some support to the view of the Courts below. But they were really made in reference to the particular document concerned, and cannot be said to lay down any rule of universal application. In any case, the whole discussion on this point was obiter, as the fourth stamp had been found to have been affixed subsequent to the execution of the promissory note and for that reason it was not admissible in evidence. In the case before me, I have no doubt that the stamps had been effectually cancelled so that they could not be used again, and the pronote was admissible in evidence.

Before concluding, I think it necessary to remark that even if the decision of the Courts below on the question of the inadmissibility of the pronote is correct, the suit could not have been dismissed forthwith. As already pointed out, the cause of action mentioned in the plaint was the "acknowledgment letter of 8th December 1933". This letter clearly contained "a promise to pay" Rs. 141-3-6 and being itself an "agreement" it could be the basis of the suit, even though the original note were held to be inadmissible in evidence see Civil Revision No. 380 of 1936,¹¹ and the rulings cited therein. The learned Judges therefore should have gone into this aspect of the matter, before dismissing the suit, even if they were right in their view as to the cancellation of the stamp. I accept the petition for revision, set aside the judgments and decrees of the Courts below, and remand the case to the Court of first instance for disposal of the other points involved in the case in accordance with law. Costs shall abide the event. Both counsel have been directed to cause their clients to appear before the trial Court on 28th March 1938 when a date for further proceedings in the suit will be fixed.

Judgment. — On 14th March 1933, a mortgage decree for Rs. 20,417 was passed in favour of the respondent against the appellant Sardarni Kishan Kaur. In execution, the decree-holder took out proceedings for sale of three houses which had been mortgaged to him. The auction was held on 10th and 11th March 1936 and the highest bid, which was that of the decree-holder for Rs. 4700, was accepted. The judgment-debtor filed objections under O. 21, R. 90, Civil P. C. The objections have been overruled and the Subordinate

Judge has passed an order confirming the sale. The judgment-debtor appeals. Before me the sale is attacked on the ground that there were the following irregularities in publishing and conducting it: (1) that the value, or the rent, of the houses which were to be sold was not given in the proclamation of sale, or the printed handbills circulated by the auctioneer; (2) that the dimensions of the houses were not stated in the proclamation nor were the houses otherwise sufficiently described; (3) that the drum was not beaten and the auction was a hole and corner affair; and (4) that the price fetched was inadequate.

The first two objections as to the contents of the proclamation ought to have been raised before the sale and cannot be considered at this stage under the proviso to R. 90, added by the Lahore High Court under its rule-making power. Moreover, even according to the law as it stood before the amendment, a sale could not be set aside merely because of the omission to give the approximate value or rental of the properties: see 67 I C 885,¹ 11 P L R 1917² and 110 I C 339.³ The dimensions of the houses were, no doubt, not given in the proclamation, but it contained the khana shumari numbers of the houses and also gave full details of the boundaries. In the handbills, issued by the auctioneer, all these particulars were duly entered. The evidence that the drum was not beaten or that the sale was not properly conducted and was a hole and corner affair is of the flimsiest kind, and has been rightly rejected by the Subordinate Judge, with whose conclusions I entirely agree. The three houses were separately auctioned and there were eight bids for each of them, some of the bidders being persons who have now appeared as witnesses for the judgment-debtor. The price fetched no doubt appears to be inadequate, but that by itself is no ground for setting aside the sale. It has not been established that there were any illegalities or material irregularities in publishing or conducting the sale, which have resulted in substantial loss to the appellant. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Exn. Second Appeal No. 1577 of 1937, Decided on 17th February 1938, from order of Addl. Dist. Judge, Ferozepore, D/- 25th August 1937.

Charge — Creation of — Compromise deed besides continuing attachment specifically prohibiting transfer of mortgaged property by judgment-debtor — Further failure in payment of instalments fixed entitling decree-holder to realize entire decretal amount — Deed creates charge in favour of decree-holder.

Mere attachment of property, whether before or after judgment, does not create a charge on the property in favour of the attaching creditors. But where by a compromise deed not only the attachment of the property was continued but it was specifically stated that until the payment of the entire decretal amount the judgment-debtor shall not transfer the attached property by mortgage, sale or gift to any other person and that in default of payment of the instalments fixed the decree-holders would be entitled to realize the entire decretal amount from this land, a charge upon the land is clearly created in favour of the decree-holder : A I R 1914 All 187 and 32 Bom 386, Rel. on; A I R 1936 Lah 610, Disting. [P 510 C 1]

Judgment.—The appellant, Tirath Ram, instituted a suit for recovery of a certain sum of money against Partap Singh. The latter failed to appear and an ex parte decree was passed against him on 30th August 1935. The decree-holder took out proceedings in execution of the decree by attachment of certain agricultural land belonging to the judgment-debtor and by his arrest. The warrants of attachment and arrest were issued on 3rd October 1934. The next day (4th October 1934) the judgment-debtor applied to have the ex-parte decree set aside alleging that he had not been duly served in the suit. The Subordinate Judge issued notice of this application to the decree-holder and stayed the execution of the warrants meanwhile. On 24th October 1934, both parties appeared before the Subordinate Judge and presented an application stating that they had compromised and that orders be passed accordingly. The compromise was to the effect that the decretal debt would be paid in two instalments, that till the payment of the entire decretal amount the agricultural land of the judgment-debtor (34 killas), particulars of which were specified therein, would remain under attachment and that "so long as the entire decretal amount has not been paid the judgment-debtor shall not transfer by mortgage, sale or gift any portion of this property." It was also stipulated that in the event of failure to pay any instalment at the time fixed, the decree-holder would be entitled to "recover the entire decretal amount from the aforesaid property or from the person or other property of the judgment-debtor." Both parties appeared before the Subordinate Judge and verified the terms of the compromise, and the learned Judge, accepting the compromise, dismissed the application for setting aside the ex parte decree and consigned the execution to the record room.

The judgment-debtor made default in payment of the instalments, and the decree-holder restarted the execution proceedings praying that the decretal amount be realized by sale of the land mentioned in the compromise. The executing Court granted the application and ordered the sale of the land through the Collector. In the meantime, the judgment-debtor was adjudicated insolvent and the Official Receiver sent a rokbar to the executing Court asking for stay of the sale. The decree-holder filed a replication objecting to the stay on the ground that he was a secured creditor. He however stated that he had no objection to the Official Receiver being made a party to the execution proceedings as the representative of the judgment-debtor. The Court accordingly made the Official Receiver a party to the execution proceedings, and issued another warrant for sale of the land through the Collector. The sale was actually held on 9th September 1936, and the sale proceeds were forwarded by the Collector to the executing Court. The receiver again applied to the executing Court that the entire amount realized by the sale of the land be made over to him for pro rata distribution among the creditors of the judgment-debtor. Tirath Ram however claimed that he had a charge over the land, which had been created by the compromise long before the adjudication of the judgment-debtor as an insolvent and that he alone was entitled to the sale proceeds of the land. The executing Court upheld the contention of the Official Receiver and directed that the whole amount be made over to him for distribution among the creditors. This decision has been maintained on appeal by the Additional District Judge. Both Courts, in support of their decision have relied upon a Division Bench ruling of this Court reported in A I R 1936 Lah 610.¹

The decree-holder, Tirath Ram, has come in second appeal and it has been contended on his behalf that the learned Judges of the Courts below have erroneously held that there was no charge created over the land in his favour by the compromise of 24th October 1934 and that the ruling relied upon is distinguishable.

After hearing both counsel and examining the record, I have no doubt that this contention is well-founded and must succeed. It is settled law that mere attachment of property, whether before or after judgment, does not create a charge on the property in favour of the attaching creditors, but in this case there was something more. By the compromise, not only the attachment of the property was continued but it was specifically stated that until the payment of the entire decretal amount, the judgment-debtor shall not transfer the attached property by mortgage, sale or gift to any other person, and that in default of payment of the instalments fixed the decree-holders would be entitled to realize the entire decretal amount from this land. There can be no doubt, that a charge upon the land was clearly created in favour of the appellant. In this connexion, reference may be made to 36 All 201² which is analogous to the present case. There a deed stated that the executant had borrowed a sum of money from certain persons and then proceeded to refer to a certain share of the executant in a property and finally the deed contained a clause by which the executant undertook that until payment of the amount he would not transfer the property by sale, mortgage, gift or in any other way, but there was in no part of the document any expression conveying the idea of mortgage or hypothecation, nor was there any reference to any right of sale in the property. It was held by Richards C. J. that:

It was the intention of the parties to make the property mentioned therein security for the loan and interest and that the document created a charge within the meaning of S. 100, T. P. Act.

To the same effect is 32 Bom 386.³ In the case relied upon by the lower Courts, A I R 1936 Lah 610,¹ the facts were entirely different. There the decree-holder had attached before judgment certain property belonging to the judgment-debtor. Subsequently, the parties had entered into a compromise whereby the judgment-debtor promised to pay a certain sum to the decree-holders by a certain date. A clause was inserted in the deed to the effect that attachment was to continue till the payment of the amount due in full. The compromise did not contain any stipulation, that the executant would not transfer the property mentioned till the repayment of the amount in full. The learned Judges held, if I may say so with all respect, rightly that in the absence of any such stipulation no charge was created on the property in dispute in favour of the creditors. In a matter like this, each case has to be decided on its own facts; and what has to be seen is whether the words of the particular document in question make a property security for the payment of money to another. If the words expressly or by necessary implication make the property mentioned security for the payment of the money due by the executant to another person, there can be no doubt that a charge on the property is created in favour of the latter. I hold that in this case a charge had been created in favour of Tirath Ram. I accept the appeal, set aside the judgments of the Courts below and direct that the amount realized by the sale of the land in dispute be adjusted in the first instance towards the amount due to the appellant on his decree. The appellant will get his costs in all Courts from the Official Receiver.

First Appeal No. 456 of 1936, Decided on 8th December 1937, from decree of Senior Sub-Judge, Sargodha, D/- 26th August 1936.

Pre-emption — Sale of land by B to S — Suit by D for pre-emption—Only three days before suit, land sold by S to M, the son of B on notice of pre-emption—M being a student and admittedly having no means of his own — Sale by S to M held benami.

One B sold land to S. Thereupon D filed a suit for pre-emption. It appeared that only three days before the institution of the suit for pre-emption, the original vendor's son M had given notice of pre-emption to S and S had sold the land to M. M was admittedly a student learning in a college and had no means of his own whereby he could have purchased the land from S :

Held that in these circumstances the sale by S to M was benami. [P 511 C 1, 2]

(Plaintiff.)

Bhide J. — This appeal arises out of a suit for pre-emption with respect to land sold by Sardar Bakhshish Singh, defendant 1 to Sardar Khan, defendant 2, on 10th March 1934. Sardar Khan pleaded that he had already sold the land to Sardar Mahabir Singh, son of Sardar Bakhshish Singh, in recognition of his right of pre-emption as he had given him a notice that he wanted to pre-empt the land. Sardar Mahabir Singh was accordingly impleaded as a defendant. The plaintiff contended that the alleged sale in favour of Sardar Mahabir Singh was benami and that in any case he had no right of pre-emption as he and his father were members of a joint Hindu family. The trial Court has upheld these pleas and decreed the suit. From this decision Sardar Mahabir Singh has preferred the present appeal. The learned counsel for the appellant contended that the trial Court has found that the sale in favour of the appellant had taken place and in the circumstances there is no justification for holding the sale to be 'benami' merely on the ground that the purchase money had been supplied by Sardar Bakhshish Singh, the original vendor. Bakhshish Singh and Sardar Iqbal Singh, Advocate, who gave notice to the vendee on behalf of Sardar Mahabir Singh, have gone into the witness-box and have stated that the notice to the vendee was given at the instance of Mahabir Singh as he wanted to pre-empt the property, but it appears from the evidence that Mahabir Singh was only a student (his age was stated to be about 22) at the time of the transaction reading in a college at Poona and no explanation has been given why he should have thought of pre-empting the property when he had admittedly no means of his own. Mahabir Singh has not appeared in the witness-box. The notice of pre-emption was given to the vendee only three days before the institution of the present suit.

Taking into consideration all these circumstances, the finding of the learned Judge of the trial Court that the transaction of sale in favour of Mahabir Singh was a benami one appears to be amply justified. In the circumstances, it is unnecessary to go into the further question whether Mahabir Singh and his father Bakhshish Singh formed a joint Hindu family or not. I would therefore uphold the decision of the learned Judge of the trial Court and dismiss this appeal with costs.

Order. — This is a petition for revision of an order passed by the Senior Subordinate Judge of Rohtak dismissing the plaintiffs' appeal. The appeal was against a decree of the trial Judge dismissing the suit on the ground that the document on which the suit was based was inadmissible in evidence as the stamp thereon had not been properly cancelled. The document was held to be an acknowledgment of liability. The Senior Subordinate Judge agreed with the trial Judge and dismissed the plaintiff's appeal. It appears that the suit is based on a balance struck in the account-book of the petitioner. The phraseology of the account is "baqi rehe lene lekha ker ke char so tees rupiya". This is signed by the defendants. It is contended for the petitioners that the document in suit is an agreement and not a mere acknowledgment because it contains a promise to pay. This contention of the learned counsel is supported by A I R 1931 Lah 631¹ which incidentally was approved in A I R 1935 Lah 567.²

In view of this finding, it is not necessary to deal with the other two grounds taken by the petitioners that even if it were held that the document is an acknowledgment it was not open to the trial Court to entertain the objection after it had once been admitted in evidence, and further that, in any case, one of the defendants having admitted the execution of the document, it was not open to the trial Judge to hold the document inadmissible even as against him. Reliance with regard to the first objection was placed on S. 36, Stamp Act. What happened in this case was that the document was mentioned in the plaint and an issue was framed whether the document was executed by the defendant. Evidence was led by the plaintiffs and at the conclusion of oral evidence the document was sent to Phillaur for comparison of the thumb-impressions. That evidence was also in favour of the plaintiffs. It was after the evidence of the expert from Phillaur had been recorded that an objection was taken by the defendants that the document was not duly stamped. I am inclined to agree with the contention of the learned counsel for the petitioners in spite of the judgment which has been relied on by the lower Courts, which is A I R 1933 Lah 271.³ With great respect I am inclined to differ from the view taken in that case and would have referred the matter to a Division Bench were it not that the petitioners' counsel is prepared to pay penalty on the document and therefore the question does not then arise.

On the second ground also the learned Senior Subordinate Judge has gone wrong. The document having been admitted by one of the defendants could not be rejected as against him. I accept this petition, set aside the decrees of the Courts below and remand the case to the trial Court with direction to admit the document in evidence on payment of the requisite stamp duty of Re. 1 and Rs. 10 penalty by the petitioners and then to proceed with the decision of the case on the merits. Court-fee on the memorandum of appeal in the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge and in this Court shall be refunded to the petitioners. The other costs shall abide the result. Parties have been directed to appear before the trial Judge on 1st March 1938.

Judgment.—On 30th May 1901, Shadi mortgaged 3 bighas of land for Rs. 125 in favour of Prabhu Mal defendant 1. Chandan plaintiff, the grandson of Shadi, presented an application for redemption under the Redemption of Mortgages Act 1913, in the Court of Diwan Prithwi Chand, Assistant Collector, Rohtak, on 23rd September 1927, and deposited a sum of Rs. 125 for payment to the mortgagee. The Assistant Collector came to the conclusion that it was improper to order redemption of the mortgage in summary proceedings as the dispute between the parties was of a complicated nature. He held that the parties should have recourse to the Civil Court. After giving this finding he dismissed the application of the plaintiff. The suit out of which the present appeal has arisen was instituted by Chandan on 6th December 1935 for possession of the land by redemption on payment of Rs. 125. It was pleaded by the defendants inter alia that as the plaintiff had not instituted his suit within one year of the order of the Assistant Collector, his suit was barred by time under Art. 14 Lim. Act. The trial Court came to the conclusion that Art. 14 was inapplicable. A preliminary decree for redemption on payment of Rupees 125 was consequently granted to the plaintiff. The appeal preferred by Prabhu Mal, defendant, having been dismissed by the learned Senior Subordinate Judge, he has come up in second appeal to this Court.

It was contended by Mr. Achhru Ram on behalf of the appellant that the dismissal of the application of the plaintiff by the Assistant Collector amounted to an order under S. 10, Redemption of Mortgages Act. It was incumbent on the plaintiff therefore to institute a suit under S. 12 of the Act to establish his right in respect of the mortgage within a period of one year. If he failed to institute such a suit, the order of the Assistant Collector was to be regarded as conclusive. It was further urged that a suit under S. 12, Redemption of Mortgages Act falls within the purview of Art. 14, Lim. Act and the limitation for such a suit is one year from the date of the order dismissing the application under the Redemption of Mortgages Act. Reliance was placed by the learned counsel on 6 Lah 206¹ and 15 Lah 389.² In my opinion both of these rulings are distinguishable from the present case. In 6 Lah 206¹ the Collector had decided that there was no subsisting mortgage and redemption was therefore barred. The Collector has therefore decided the application under the Redemption of Mortgages Act on the merits. In 15 Lah 389² redemption was allowed by the Assistant Collector and the application was accepted on the merits. In the present case there has been no trial of the question on the merits in the Court of the Assistant Collector. A case which is practically on all fours with the present case was decided by a Division Bench of this Court, and is reported in A I R 1929 Lah 513.³ In that case it was held that the rejection of an application by a Collector under S. 9, without considering the merits of the dispute and after recording the objections raised by the defendants on the ground that the dispute cannot be settled summarily practically amounts to denial of jurisdiction by the Collector and in order to enable the plaintiff to succeed in his suit for redemption it is by no means necessary to set aside any order passed by the Collector. The suit of the plaintiff does not therefore fall within Art. 14, Lim. Act. 6 Lah 206¹ was considered and distinguished in this ruling.

In the present case the Assistant Collector definitely stated that it was improper for him to order redemption in summary proceedings, as the question was of great complexity. He directed the applicant to seek redemption in a Civil Court. In order to strike off the application he had to state that the application was dismissed. The substantive part of the order of the Assistant Collector in my opinion is not against the plaintiff. He is not therefore Criminal Revn. No. 781 of 1937, Decided on 19th April 1938, from order of Sess. Judge, Multan, D/- 8th May 1937.

* Penal Code (1860), S. 441 — Person one night passing stealthily through court-yard of one house to commit adultery in another adjoining house—He is guilty of trespass in respect of former house not under second alternative of S. 441 but under first alternative.

Where a person one night passes stealthily through the court-yard of one house with the intention of committing adultery in another adjoining house, such person is not guilty of trespass in respect of the former house under second alternative of S. 441. It cannot be said that such person had intention to annoy or insult the occupant of the former house and even if he could be supposed to have known that, if discovered his presence there might cause annoyance to any person living there, this would not make him guilty of committing trespass in that house. [P 515 C 1]

Such person is, however, guilty of trespass in respect of the former house under first alternative of S. 441, because S. 441 means that if a person enters upon the property with intent to commit an offence on that property or on any other property or with respect to a person who is or is not in possession of the property entered upon he is guilty under it. Tek Chand J.—The petitioner Mohammad Yar was convicted under S. 456, I. P. C., and sentenced to suffer imprisonment till the rising of the Court and pay a fine of Rs. 100. His appeal having been rejected by the Sessions Judge, he applied for revision to this Court. His petition was heard in the first instance by Jai Lal J. sitting in single Bench. The learned Judge accepted the findings of fact arrived at by the Courts below as correct, but referred the case to a Division Bench, as there was some conflict of judicial opinion on the questions of law involved. In view of the importance of the question, the Division Bench referred this case, along with another case (Cr. R. 1472 of 1937), for decision by the Full Bench. The facts found are that one Ilahi Bakhsh was the owner of two contiguous houses. These houses had separate entrances and separate courtyards. There was however an intervening door, through which access could be had from the courtyard of one house into that of the other. This door usually remained shut and chained. One of the houses was occupied by the owner Ilahi Bakhsh himself, and his married sister Mt. Kariman also lived with him in it. At the time of the occurrence, the adjoining house was let to one Manzur Ahmad Shah, a police constable, who was living in it with his wife. Formerly, this latter house was let to the petitioner, Mohammad Yar, who is an Ahlmad in one of the local Courts. But as he was suspected of having intimacy with Mt. Kariman, sister of the landlord Ilahi Bakhsh who, as already stated, lived in the adjoining house, the petitioner was made to vacate the house and it was let to Manzur Ahmad. After vacating the house however the petitioner continued his improper relations with Mt. Kariman and clandestinely visited her in the house occupied by her brother Ilahi Bakhsh.

On the evening of 30th January 1937, at about 9.30 P. M. the petitioner unchained the outer door of the courtyard of Manzur Ahmad's house and was passing through this courtyard in order to go to the adjoining house occupied by Ilahi Bakhsh and Mt. Kariman, with the object of having sexual intercourse with the latter when he was seen by Manzur Ahmad's wife. She raised an alarm, and the petitioner was arrested while he was still in the courtyard of Manzur Ahmad's house. These facts are no longer in dispute and the sole question is whether they fall within S. 456, I. P. C. The offence made punishable under that section is lurking house-trespass by night; this is an aggravated form of criminal trespass as defined in S. 441, I. P. C. The contention for the Crown is that the act of the petitioner is covered by both the alternatives, described in Para. 1 of S. 441, which reads as follows:

Whoever enters into or upon property in the possession of another with intent to commit an offence, or to intimidate, insult or annoy any person in possession of such property is said to commit criminal trespass.

It was contended that in entering into the courtyard of Manzur Ahmad, the petitioner had (i) the 'primary' intent to commit adultery with a married woman, Mt. Kariman, which is an offence under the Penal Code, and (ii) he had also the 'secondary' intent to annoy Manzur Ahmad Shah and his wife who admittedly were in possession of the house entered upon. It is therefore argued that the petitioner is guilty under the first as well as the second alternative. I have no doubt that the second alternative cannot possibly apply to this case. In the circumstances above-mentioned, it cannot be held that the petitioner had any intention to insult or to annoy Manzur Ahmad, his wife or any other person living in that house. His sole object in stealthily passing through the courtyard of Manzur Ahmad's house was to find access, through a back-door to the adjoining house occupied by Mt. Kariman. He did not expect to find any person in that courtyard and hoped that he would get entry into Mt. Kariman's house unnoticed. Even if he could be supposed to have known that, if discovered, his presence in Manzur Ahmad's courtyard might cause annoyance to any person living there, this would not make him guilty of committing criminal trespass in that house. This question has been discussed at length in the connected case (Cr. R. 1472 of 1937) decided today, and for the reasons given there I have no hesitation in holding that on the facts of this case the second alternative does not apply.

The petitioner's act however clearly falls within the first part of S. 441. It has been found that he entered Manzur Ahmad's house with the intention of having sexual intercourse with Mt. Kariman who lived in the adjoining house. The petitioner himself stated that Mt. Kariman was a married woman. Under the law of India, adultery is a criminal offence. S. 497, I. P. C. provides that whoever has sexual intercourse with a person, who is, and whom he knows or has reason to believe, to be the wife of another man, without the consent or connivance of that man, such intercourse not amounting to the offence of rape, is guilty of the offence of adultery, and is punishable with imprisonment which may extend to five years. The petitioner therefore entered into the house with the intent of committing an offence. It is however argued by the learned counsel for the petitioner that in order to bring a case within this section, it is essential that the intent must have been to commit an offence in the particular premises entered upon and not in a neighbouring house. In other words the learned counsel wants the word 'there' to be read after the phrase "commit an offence" in the second line of the section. I have no doubt that this contention is without force. The phraseology used by the Legislature is clear and explicit, and it is not permissible to us to add any words to it, so as to give it an extended or restricted meaning. The section, as worded, means that if a person enters upon property with intent to commit an offence on that property, or on any other property, or with respect to a person who is, or is not, in possession of the property entered upon, he is guilty under it.

I hold therefore that in this case the petitioner has been rightly convicted under S. 456, I. P. C., he having been found to have entered into the courtyard of the house in possession of Manzur Ahmad with intent to commit adultery with a married woman in the adjoining house. I consider however that the offence is only a technical one and, in the circumstances, the ends of justice would be met by maintaining the sentence of imprisonment till the rising of the Court and reducing the fine from Rs. 100 to Rs. 5. With this modification in the sentence, I would dismiss the petition for revision. •

First Appeal No. 434 of 1936, Decided on 23rd November 1937, from order of Sub.Judge, First Class, Lahore, D/. 17th November 1936.

(a) Execution—Arrest by judgment-debtor—Punjab Act 7 of 1934 and Civil P. C. Amendment Act 21 of 1936 have retrospective effect—When judgment-debtor can obtain immunity from arrest stated—Onus of proof.

Section 34 of Act 7 of 1934 (Punjab Relief of Indebtedness Act) and O. 21, R. 40, Civil P. C. read with S. 51, Civil P. C. as amended by Indian Act 21 of 1936, have a retrospective effect and give immunity to judgment-debtors from arrest unless provisions of those Acts are fulfilled. The onus under the new provisions of law lies on the decree-holder to establish on the record that the judgment-debtor has the means to pay and if no such evidence is brought on the record and it is not apparent on the record otherwise that he has such means, no presumption adverse to the judgment-debtor can be drawn. [P 518 C 1; P 519 C 1]

(b) Minor — Decree against unrepresented minor — Decree is nullity — Executing Court can refuse to execute it.

A decree obtained against an unrepresented minor is a nullity and if it is brought to the notice of an executing Court that the decree sought to be executed was obtained against a judgment-debtor when he was a minor and was not represented by guardian ad litem, it is necessary for it before it executes the decree to determine whether there is a decree which can be executed. The rule is that an executing Court can go behind a void decree: A I R 1925 Cal 907 (F B); A I R 1929 Lah 449 and A I R 1933 P C 61, Rel. on; A I R 1924 Lah 448 Doubt. [P 519 C 2]

(c) Minor—Representation—Minor impleaded as defendant with other relation — Minor held not validly represented.

Where a minor was impleaded as a defendant along with his father as well as some other relations whose interest was joint with the minor, it cannot be said that he was properly represented before the Court and that his interests were sufficiently safeguarded by the other members of his family: A I R 1930 Pat 521 and A I R 1924 P C 50, Disting. [P 520 C 1]

(d) Execution — Applications under O. 21, Civil P. C. — Provisions of Order 21 should be strictly complied — If not, application is not proper.

An application, to take effect under Order 21 should be presented in accordance with the provisions as laid down therein, and unless the Court rejects the application or calls upon the decree-holder to amend it under sub-r. (1) of R. 17, there is no proper application before the Court. [P 520 C 2]

Order of Reference

Abdul Rashid J. — On 21st January 1922, Mr. Khambatta and Mr. Taj Mohammad Nasar obtained a decree for Rs. 53,500 against Mr. Pir Taj-ud-Din, Barrister-at-law, Mrs. Pir Taj-ud-Din, Razia Sultan daughter, and Lieutenant Jalal-ud-Din, Rashid-ud-Din and Rafi-ud-Din, sons of Pir Taj-ud-Din. On 14th November, there was a partition of this joint decree between the decree-holders. As a result of this partition, Mr. Khambatta became a decree-holder to the extent of Rs. 27,000 and Mr. Taj Mohammad Nasir to the extent of Rupees

26,500. After 14th November 1922, the two decree-holders presented separate applications for execution of their respective decrees against the judgment-debtors. By his order dated 17th November 1936, the executing Court ordered the detention of Pir Taj-ud-Din, Barrister-at-law, in civil prison for a period of six months. It also ordered the attachment of the salary of Lieutenant Jalal-ud-Din and the moveable property of the other male judgment-debtors. Against this decision Pir Taj-ud-Din and Lieutenant Jalal-ud-Din have preferred an appeal to this Court. At the hearing a preliminary objection was taken by Mr. Ghulati to the effect that this appeal was incompetent. It was urged by the learned counsel that as the executing Court disposed of the respective applications of Mr. Khambatta and Mr. Taj Mohammad Nasir by its order dated 17th November 1936, two separate appeals ought to have been preferred by the judgment-debtors to this Court.

There are several complicated law points involved in this appeal, and whichever side is the loser is likely to go up in appeal under the Letters Patent as the case is one of large valuation. The Letters Patent appeal would be competent in this case without a certificate. Some of the law points which are likely to be raised at the hearing are as follows: (1) Whether the provisions of the Punjab Relief of Indebtedness Act, 1934, are applicable to the present case. (2) Whether the execution application presented against Lieutenant Jalal-ud-Din is barred by limitation. (3) Whether Lieutenant Jalal-ud-Din is personally liable in view of the fact that he was a minor at the time of the passing of the decree; and (4) whether there has been proper presentation of an application on behalf of Lieutenant Jalal-ud-Din in view of the fact that no power of attorney was obtained from him before the filing of such an application. In view of the importance of the questions involved, and in view of the fact that the filing of a Letters Patent appeal in this case would considerably delay the execution of the decrees, I refer this case to a Division Bench subject to the order of the Hon'ble the Chief Justice.

Judgment of the Division Bench

Din Mohammad J. — This appeal has arisen out of certain execution proceedings taken against the appellants at the instance of the decree-holders, Messrs. Khambatta and Nasar. The executing Court issued orders for the arrest of Pir Taj-ud-Din, Barrister-at-law, and for the attachment of the pay of Lieutenant Jalal-ud-Din and it is against this order that the present appeal has been lodged. The material facts are these: On 26th September 1920, Pir Taj-ud-Din entered into an agreement with Col. Powell for the purchase of 13 houses and a vacant site for Rs. 2,08,000. In order to raise money for this transaction, Pir Taj-ud-Din arranged to sell nine out of the 13 houses mentioned above to various purchasers and further raised a loan of Rs. 20,000 from Mr. Nasar and a similar amount from Mr. Khambatta. Out of the rest of the property one item he transferred to his wife, one to his daughter and a son Rafi-ud-Din, one in favour of his two sons Rashid-ud-Din and Jalal-ud-Din, and the remaining item of property he kept for himself. On 14th March 1921, Col. Powell executed a regular sale deed in favour of all the vendees mentioned above. As a result of this bargain, in addition to an item of property referred to above, Rs. 20,000 also fell to the share of Pir Taj-ud-Din which were deposited in the Punjab National Bank. Immediately after, two cases were launched by Messrs. Khambatta and Nasar against Pir Taj-ud-Din. One was a complaint for criminal breach of trust and the other a civil suit alleging partnership in the bargain in question. The criminal breach of trust case ultimately came to the High Court in its initial stages and, on 21st January 1922, a compromise was effected between the parties settling all their disputes.

By that compromise, Pir Taj-ud-Din had to pay a lump sum of Rs. 53,500 to Messrs. Khambatta and Nasar. Out of this sum, Rs. 10,000 were to be paid on 1st February 1922 and the balance on 1st March 1923. The whole of this sum was charged on the four items of property which had been transferred in favour of Pir Taj-ud-Din and his relations. The decree-holders were entitled to take possession of these properties as mortgagees and they could bring the properties to sale if their dues were not paid on 1st March 1923. It was further provided that if the sale proceeds of these properties fell short of the entire mortgage money, a personal decree could be obtained by the decree-holders against the male defendants, thus excluding the wife and the daughter of Pir Taj-ud-Din. On 14th November 1922, Messrs. Khambatta and Nasar effected a private partition of the rights that accrued to them under the decree, by which Mr. Nasar was to get Rs. 27,500 and Mr. Khambatta Rs. 26,000. Default having been made by Pir Taj-ud-Din, the properties under mortgage were put to sale and Rs. 38,000 were realized. After paying the necessary commission and the miscellaneous expenses incurred in connexion with the sale, Rupees 35,000 odd were credited towards the decretal amount and the balance of Rupees 19,000 remained undischarged, of which Rupees 9000 were due to Mr. Nasar and Rs. 10,000 to Mr. Khambatta.

On 7th February 1925 Mr. Nasar obtained a transfer certificate from the Court which had passed the decree and started execution proceedings against Pir Taj-ud-Din at Lahore for the amount due to him. In the course of these proceedings, he realized Rs. 4500 on different occasions. In 1932 Mr. Khambatta also obtained a transfer certificate and presented an application for execution at Lahore on 22nd April 1932. He however, did not produce the certificate before the transferee Court and the proceedings were consequently consigned to the record room on 1st July 1932. On 19th January 1933 he put in a fresh application for the same purpose. On 18th January 1934 the present application for execution was put in by Mr. Khambatta, in column 9 of which the only judgment-debtor mentioned was Pir Taj-ud-Din and in column 10 of which a prayer was made for warrants of attachment and arrest against him alone. On 27th February 1934 a warrant of arrest was issued and on 27th March 1934, Pir Taj-ud-Din was arrested but released on furnishing security. On 27th April 1934, Pir Taj-ud-Din objected that he could not be arrested on account of poverty and that the application was time barred. On 4th May 1934 certain issues were framed. On 15th June 1934 the parties agreed to refer the matter to arbitration. On 20th October 1934, Mr. Nasar presented a fresh application for the arrest of Pir Taj-ud-Din, for the attachment of Mrs. Taj-ud-Din's property and for the attachment of Lieutenant Jalal-ud-Din's pay. On 24th October 1934 necessary orders were issued in pursuance of which Pir Taj-ud-Din was arrested once more, produced before the Court and released on security.

Against this order he made an appeal to this Court which came on before a Motion Bench on 4th April 1935 and execution proceedings were stayed meanwhile. In the meantime, the arbitrators having failed to make an award, the arbitration proceedings were terminated and on 23rd February 1935, Pir Taj-ud-Din made another application under O. 21, Rule 40, Civil P. C., stating that he was too poor to pay the decretal amount and that the application for execution was time-barred. The executing Court made an order calling upon Pir Taj-ud-din to apply for insolvency, if he so chose, within thirty days. Pir Taj-ud-Din preferred an appeal from this order too. Both the appeals were disposed of by a learned Judge of this Court on 16th December 1935. By one order the executing Court was directed to act according to the provisions of O. 21, R. 40, and inquire into the objections raised by Pir Taj-ud-Din and by another order a direction was issued to the executing Court not to proceed against Mrs. Taj-ud-Din and to investigate the objections of Lieutenant Jalal-ud-Din in accordance with law. On 29th February 1936, further objections were put in, which were ultimately decided on 17th November 1936 with the result stated above.

We first propose to deal with Pir Taj-ud-Din's objections. He seeks shelter under S. 34 of Act 7 of 1934 and O. 21, R. 40, read with S. 51, Civil P. C., as amended by Act 21 of 1936. Act 7 of 1934 came into force on 19th April 1935, while the amending Act came into operation on 27th October 1936. His contention is that as both provisions related to procedure, they had retrospective effect and that he was consequently entitled to claim protection as afforded by them inasmuch as both these Acts were in force before the final order of his arrest on 17th November 1936 was made. On behalf of the respondent it is urged that as Pir Taj-ud-Din had on more than one occasion been arrested before the coming into operation of these Acts and released on furnishing security, he could not avail himself of these provisions of law. We are however inclined to agree with the contention raised on behalf of Pir Taj-ud-Din as it is well settled that no party has any vested right in procedure which must therefore be given effect to as soon as it comes into force. Under S. 34 of Act 7 of 1934, no judgment-debtor is liable to arrest for default in the payment of any money due under a decree unless the Court is satisfied that the judgment-debtor has without just cause contumaciously refused to pay the amount of the decree in whole or in part within his capacity to make payment, and the Court is further bound to give an opportunity to the judgment-debtor to show cause against the issue of a warrant of arrest. Similarly, under O. 21, R. 40, Civil P. C., as amended by Act 21 of 1936, the Court is bound to give the judgment-debtor an opportunity of showing cause why he should not be committed to the civil prison; and under S. 51 as amended by the same Act, the Court is enjoined not to order execution by detention in prison unless it is satisfied: (a) that the judgment-debtor with the object or effect of obstructing or delaying the execution of the decree (i) . . . (ii) has after the institution of the suit in which the decree was passed, dishonestly transferred, concealed or removed any part of his property or committed any other Act of bad faith in relation to his property; or

(b) that the judgment-debtor has or has had since the date of the decree the means to pay the amount of the decree or some substantial part thereof and refuses or neglects or has refused or neglected to pay the same;

(c) . . .

Under sub-r. (3) of R. 40 of O. 21, an order for the detention of the judgment-debtor in the civil prison can only be made subject to the provisions of S. 51. Reading these provisions of law together, it is obvious that at the time when the order of arrest was made, Pir Taj-ud-Din could not be arrested unless and until it was established by the decree-holder that he had after the institution of the suit dishonestly transferred, concealed or removed any part of his property or committed any other act of bad faith in relation to his property or that he had since the date of the decree the means to pay the amount of the decree or some substantial part thereof and had refused or neglected to pay the same; or, in other words, as required by S. 34 of Act 7 of 1934, without just cause, contumaciously refused to pay the amount of the decree in whole or in part within his capacity to make payment.

It is not denied that Pir Taj-ud-Din had no property at the timewhen the order of arrest was made nor is it denied that he had not dishonestly transferred or concealed or removed any part of his property or committed any other act of bad faith in relation to his property after the institution of the suit in which the decree was passed. The only argument that has been addressed to us in this connection is that the statements of the witnesses who had appeared to support the plea of his poverty are interested and that as he has been accepting briefs in certain cases, it should be presumed that he had since the date of the decree the means to pay the amount of the decree and that consequently his refusal to pay the decretal amount was without just cause and contumacious. In our opinion this is an erroneous view of looking at the matter. The onus under the new provisions of law lies upon the decree-holder to establish on the record that the judgment-debtor has the means to pay and if no such evidence is brought on the record and it is not apparent on the record otherwise that he has such means, no presumption adverse to the judgment-debtor can be drawn. On behalf of the decree-holders it is contended that as the onus had been wrongly placed on the judgment-debtor, they could not lead positive evidence to prove the financial condition of the judgment-debtor. We however consider that in view of the fact that Act 7 of 1934 was in force long before the proceedings were recorded in this case, the decree-holders had sufficient warning and should have proved their case in the manner contemplated by law. Taking the record as it stands at present, we have no hesitation in holding that there were no materials on the record justifying the rejection of the evidence adduced by the judgment-debtor as well as the order of his detention in the civil prison consequently made. Our conclusion therefore is that Pir Taj-ud-Din has no means to pay the decree nor is his refusal to pay the decretal amount contumacious and on this ground we set aside the order of the executing Court as passed against him and accept his appeal.

Coming now to Lieutenant Jalal-ud-Din's appeal against the order attaching his pay. The main contentions raised on his behalf are: (1) that he was a minor on the date when the decree was passed and consequently the decree being a nullity could not be executed against him; (2) that no proper application for execution had been made against him; and (3) that in any circumstances the application of Mr. Khambatta is time-barred having been made 12 years after the decree. In support of the contention of Lieutenant Jalal-ud-Din's minority, reliance is being placed on the statement on solemn affirmation made by Pir Taj-ud-Din, according to which Lieutenant Jalal-ud-Din was born some time in December 1904. As against this there is no statement in rebuttal. It is therefore urged that the statement made by Pir Taj-ud-Din should be acted upon in these circumstances. A copy of the Punjab Government Gazette, dated 7th October 1921, has also been produced before us, at p. 377, Part III-A, of which Lieutenant Jalal-ud-Din's result in the Matriculation Examination was published and in which he is said to have been born in December 1906. It has been very frankly admitted by his counsel that "1906" is a misprint for "1904" as is apparent from the original certificate granted to him by the Punjab University, according to which his date of birth is 5th December 1904. We have no reason to doubt the testimony of Pir Taj-ud-Din in this respect supported as it is by the public records as mentioned above. We hold therefore that Lieutenant Jalal-ud-Din was a minor at the time when the decree was made.

The question now arises, what is the effect of his minority on the decree. It is urged on his behalf that the decree was a nullity having been made against a minor who was not properly represented and that being so, the decree could not be executed against him. Counsel for the respondents, on the other hand, has contended that the executing Court could not go behind the decree and was bound to execute it as it stood irrespective of the alleged defect. Reliance in this connexion has been mainly placed on 5 Lah 54,¹ where a Division Bench of this Court has held that an executing Court has no jurisdiction to criticise or go behind a decree obtained against an unrepresented minor and that the annulment of the decree is not the function of an executing Court but with all respect we are compelled to remark that the correctness of the rule enunciated in that judgment is open to doubt. A decree obtained against an unrepresented minor is a nullity and if it is brought to the notice of an executing Court that the decree sought to be executed was obtained against a judgment-debtor when he was a minor and was not represented by guardian ad litem, it is necessary for it before it executes the decree to determine whether there is a decree which can be executed. The rule that an executing Court can go behind a void decree was laid down in 53 Cal 166² and was re-affirmed in A I R 1929

1. Lahore Bank Ltd. v. Ghulam Jilani, (1924) 11 A I R Lah 448=78 I C 460=5 Lah 54.

2. Gora Chand Haldar v. Profulla Kumar, (1925) 12 A I R Cal 907 = 89 I C 685=53 Cal 166=42 C L J 1=29 C W N 948 (F B).

Lah 449³ and we are in respectful agreement with these judgments. In 60 Cal 670⁴ their Lordships of the Privy Council remarked that a decree that is a nullity cannot be executed. Even in 31 All 572,⁵ which has been relied upon in 5 Lah 54,¹ their Lordships held that an unrepresented minor is no party to the decree which may be passed against him in that condition. If this be so, how can a decree be executed against a person who is no party to it?

It is further urged in this connexion that inasmuch as the minor was impleaded as a defendant along with his father as well as some other relations whose interest was joint with the minor, he was properly represented before the Court and his interests were sufficiently safeguarded by the other members of his family. Reference has been made to A I R 1930 Pat 521⁶ and A I R 1924 P C 50,⁷ but those cases are not to the point inasmuch as they relate to joint Hindu families and were decided on the score of Hindu law applicable to such families, while we are dealing with a case in which no question of joint family arises. We consequently hold that the decree could not be executed against Lieutenant Jalal-ud-Din. We are further inclined to hold that in Mr. Khambatta's case there was no proper application before the Court, on which action could be taken against Lieutenant Jalal-ud-Din. O. 21, R. 11, contemplates that the application should be in writing and that it should contain certain particulars which are mentioned therein. No such application was ever presented against Lieutenant Jalal-ud-Din. The only occasion when a relief was sought against him was on 22nd February 1935 when Mr. Khambatta's counsel wrongly stated that a previous order dated 23rd February 1934 had been passed against Lieutenant Jalal-ud-Din and that the same order should be revived. Counsel for the respondents contends that R. 17 of O. 21 condones the defect in this case but we are not disposed to agree with him. An application, to take effect under O. 21 should be presented in accordance with the provisions as laid down therein and unless the Court rejects the application or calls upon the decree-holder to amend it under sub.r. (1) of R. 17, there is no proper application before the Court.

On the point of limitation we consider that the judgment-debtors are on weak ground. Under S. 48 (b), Civil P. C., time runs from the date of the decree sought to be executed or where the decree directs any payment of money to be made at a certain date, the date of the default in making the payment. As we read the decree, which is a composite decree and is unfortunately very unhappily worded, it can be reasonably argued on behalf of the decree-holders that 1st March 1923 was the last date fixed for the payment of the decree and calculating from that period the application of Mr. Khambatta and that of Mr. Nasar were both well within time. On the grounds mentioned above however we set aside the order of the executing Court in relation to Lieutenant Jalal-ud-Din too and accept his appeal. The appellants will get their costs from the respondents in all the Courts.

Abdul Rashid J. — This appeal arises out of a suit instituted by P. C. Bhandari for recovery of Rs. 2069.11.0 against three defendants, namely Malcolm R. Halsey, the Punjab National Bank Ltd., and the Standard Bookstall, Quetta. In May 1932 Lt. Halsey, defendant 1, purporting to act for himself and one Lt. Greig took a loan of Rs. 2000 from P. C. Bhandari, Civil Engineer, Rawalpindi. The terms of the loan were that the principal and interest amounting to Rs. 3800 would be repaid by the debtors in 30 monthly instalments by means of post-dated cheques. The bond for Rs. 2000 purports to be signed both by Malcolm R. Halsey and Lt. P. Greig, who were then stationed at Quetta. On 26th May 1932, P. C. Bhandari paid Rs. 1000 to the Punjab National Bank Ltd., at Rawalpindi and the Bank issued a draft drawn on their branch at Quetta for payment of Rs. 1000 to Lt. Halsey and Lt. P. Greig or order. This draft was sent by Bhandari to Lt. Halsey, who appeared at the Quetta Branch of the Bank for the first time on 4th June and presented the draft for payment. At that time the draft purported to be endorsed in blank on reverse by both Lt. Halsey and Lt. Greig. Mr. Soni, the Manager of the Bank, refused to pay Rs. 1000 to Lt. Halsey as he did not know him. Subsequently however it was arranged that Mr. Lalwani, the proprietor of the Quetta Branch of the Standard Bookstall, who was known to the Bank and had a current account, should verify the endorsement of Lt. Halsey, that the draft should be endorsed in his favour by Lt. Halsey, and paid into the account of the Standard Bookstall. This was done and the draft was credited to the account of the Standard Bookstall. Mr. Lalwani then withdrew Rs. 2400 from the Bank and paid a sum of Rs. 1000 out of it to Lt. Halsey. There remained Rs. 1000 to be paid to Lt. Halsey and Lt. Greig on the loan alleged to have been raised by them. Halsey asked Bhandari to deduct from this sum the first instalment of Rs. 120 and the cost of remittance and to remit the sum of Rs. 872.8.0 to him telegraphically. On Bhandari's instructions the Rawalpindi Branch of the Punjab National Bank sent telegraphic instructions to their Quetta Branch to pay to Lt. Halsey and Lt. Greig a sum of Rupees 872.8.0. On 20th June Lt. Halsey presented a receipt for this sum purporting to have been signed both by himself and Lt. Greig and received payment of the money from the Bank.

Shortly afterwards one of the post dated cheques, which were sent to Bhandari, was dishonoured, and on enquiry it was found that the signatures of Lt. Greig on the bond, the draft and the receipt were forged. The plaintiff accordingly instituted the present suit for recovery of Rs. 2069.11.0 against Lt. Halsey, the Punjab National Bank Ltd., and the Standard Bookstall. The trial Court granted the plaintiff a decree for the whole amount against Lt. Halsey and for Rs. 1983.4.0 against the Punjab National Bank Ltd. The suit was dismissed against the Standard Bookstall. The appeal preferred by the Punjab National Bank to the District Judge was dismissed with costs. Against this decision the Bank preferred a second appeal to this Court, which was heard by a learned single Judge. The learned Judge accepted the appeal in part holding that the payment of the draft for Rs. 1000 was made by the Bank in due course within the meaning of S. 85-A and S. 10, Negotiable Instruments Act and the Bank was therefore protected and could not be held liable for this amount. The decree in favour of the plaintiff was accordingly reduced to the sum of Rupees 1198.3.8. P. C. Bhandari has filed an appeal, under Cl. 10 of the Letters Patent challenging the decision of the single Judge so far as the draft of Rs. 1000 is concerned. When Lt. Halsey appeared at the Bank on 4th June 1932, the draft already bore an endorsement in blank by Lt. Halsey and Lt. Greig. The Manager however refused to cash the draft as he did not know Lt. Halsey. He did not know Lt. Greig either. Lt. Halsey appeared at the Bank twice thereafter and on each occasion he was alone. The fact that Lt. Halsey came alone to the Bank again and again and gave no reasonable explanation of the absence of Lt. Greig should have put the Manager of the Bank on his guard. The Manager took no steps to have the signatures of Lt. Greig confirmed by any one. According to Mr. Lalwani, the Bank Manager had the following conversation with him:

The Bank Manager said as you do not know Greig personally, if Mr. Halsey guarantees his signature and you identify Halsey, the draft could be cashed. Therefore ask Halsey to guarantee the signature of Greig. * * * I asked Lt. Halsey if he would guarantee the signature of Greig as suggested by the Bank Manager and Lt. Halsey did it.

It was the Bank Manager therefore who suggested that Lt. Halsey could guarantee the signature of Lt. Greig and all that was expected of Mr. Lalwani was that he should identify Lt. Halsey. The Bank Manager took no steps to get the signatures of Lt. Greig identified. Mr. Lalwani has further stated that by writing the words "endorsements confirmed by me" on the back of the draft he meant that he confirmed the different endorsements that had been made at the back of the draft by Lt. Halsey and that he did not in any way confirm the signature of Lt. Greig. It was contended by Mr. Puri on behalf of the Bank that as the draft was endorsed in blank by Lt. Halsey and Lt. Greig the draft became payable to the bearer, that is to Lt. Halsey by virtue of the provisions of Ss. 16 and 54, Negotiable Instruments Act. This contention, in our opinion, is devoid of force. Under S. 16 if the endorser signs his name only, the endorsement is said to be in blank and such an endorsement makes the negotiable instrument payable to the bearer. The endorsement must, however, be a genuine and valid endorsement. As the draft was payable to Lt. Halsey and Lt. Greig jointly, the endorsement in blank can be regarded as a valid endorsement only if it is established that the signatures of Lt. Greig on the endorsement in blank are genuine. The Manager took no steps to verify whether the endorsement in blank on the back of the draft was made by Lt. Greig. It was further contended by Mr. Puri that under S. 85-A, Negotiable Instruments Act, where any draft drawn by one office of a Bank upon another office of the same Bank, purports to be endorsed by or on behalf of the payee, the Bank is discharged by payment in due course. The learned counsel contended that as the draft purported to be endorsed by both Lt. Halsey and Lt. Greig the Bank was discharged. The question for consideration, however, is whether the payment by the Bank can be said to be a "payment in due course" within the purview of Section 10, Negotiable Instruments Act:

'Payment in due course' means payment in accordance with the apparent tenor of the instrument in good faith and without negligence to any person in possession thereof under circumstances which do not afford a reasonable ground for believing that he is not entitled to receive payment of the amount therein mentioned.

In the present case Lt. Halsey and Lt. Greig were jointly entitled to the payment. The Manager of the Bank asked Mr. Lalwani merely to identify Lt. Halsey, and so far as the signatures of Lt. Greig are concerned he merely wanted Lt. Halsey to guarantee his signatures; in other words, the Manager of the Bank did not want Mr. Lalwani to give any guarantee regarding the signatures of Lt. Greig. As mentioned already, the facts that Lt. Halsey came alone to the Bank and had long conversations with the Manager, who had refused to pay the amount of the draft to him, and that Lt. Halsey gave no reasonable explanation of the absence of Lt. Greig, should have raised the suspicions of the Manager so far as Lt. Greig's signatures on the draft are concerned. In order to safeguard himself he ought not to have relied merely on the endorsement made by Lt. Halsey on the back of the draft that the draft had been signed by Lt. P. Greig. Under these circumstances, the payment of the draft cannot be said to have been made in good faith and without negligence. A scrutiny of the various endorsements at the back of the draft would have convinced the Manager that the words "P. Greig" in the blank endorsement were in the handwriting of Lt. Halsey. It appears from the evidence of Mr. Lalwani, whom we see no reason to disbelieve, that it was the Manager himself who had suggested the means whereby Lt. Halsey could obtain payment of the draft. If the Manager was inclined to suggest ways and means to Mr. Lalwani whereby the draft could be cashed, it was incumbent on him to tell him that he should guarantee the signatures of both Lt. Halsey and Lt. Greig. The identification by Mr. Lalwani of Halsey alone ought to have been considered insufficient by the Manager of the Bank so far as the question of the genuineness of Lt. Greig's signatures was involved. We therefore hold that S. 85-A read with S. 10, Negotiable Instruments Act does not absolve the Bank from liability in the present case. For the reasons given above we accept this appeal with costs, set aside the judgment and the decree of the learned single Judge, and restore that of the trial Court which was affirmed on appeal by the learned District Judge.

Criminal Revn. No. 1424 of 1937, Decided on 2nd February 1938, from order of Sess. Judge, Hoshiarpur, D/- 6.8.1937.

Section 133 is not intended for long-standing obstruction but for an unlawful obstruction lately built in a public place. It is only on proof of urgency or imminent danger to the public that action under S. 133 can be taken and the provisions of S. 133 should not be allowed to be used as substitute for litigation in Civil Courts. Ch. 10 of the Code deals with public nuisances and provides a speedy and summary method for dealing with them, in cases of great emergency and where there is imminent danger to public interest. Where an obstruction has been allowed to stand in a public place without objection for many years, the fact indicates there is no such emergency or imminent danger to the public interest. Young C. J.—This is a petition by the Crown for revision of the order of the Sessions Judge, Hoshiarpur, by which he affirmed the order of a Magistrate of the First Class dismissing an application by the Secretary of State for India in Council for removal of an obstruction on a public road. The alleged obstruction is a thara which was constructed about 14 years ago by the respondent and his brothers. The public road in question is situate within municipal limits, and it has been found that the respondent and his brothers, before constructing the thara, had taken the sanction of the Municipal Committee. No objection to the construction of the thara, or to its continuance, was made on behalf of the Secretary of State or by any member of the public during this long period. Nor has it been alleged, or shown, that anything has happened recently to make the existence of the thara more objectionable to the public than it might have been before. Indeed, it is by no means clear that the construction of the thara in question was "unlawful." On these facts, we agree with the Courts below that no case has been made out for the exercise of the summary jurisdiction of Criminal Courts under Ch. 10, of Criminal P. C.

The trial Magistrate in rejecting the application has followed a Single Bench decision of Addison J. in A I R 1930 Lah 361,¹ where it was laid down that S. 133 is not intended for long-standing obstructions but for an unlawful obstruction lately built in a public place. The same learned Judge has re-affirmed this view in A I R 1935 Lah 28.² On revision before us, it has been pointed out by counsel for the Crown that these rulings are in conflict with a Single Bench decision of Coldstream J. in A I R 1931 Lah 159,³ which it is urged, lays down the law correctly. After hearing counsel we are unable to accept this contention. It has been frequently pointed out that it is only on proof of urgency or imminent danger to the public interest that action under S. 33 et seq can be taken, and that these provisions should not be allowed to be used as a substitute for litigation in Civil Courts : *4 P R 1897*⁴ and 37 All 26.⁵ The view of the law taken by Addison J. is in accord with that of the Allahabad High Court in *A I R 1926 All 157*⁶ where it was held that S. 133 is not intended to be employed to avoid the necessity of filing a civil suit in regard to a construction which has been in existence for a number of years.

Coldstream J. in the case above cited, while dissenting from these rulings, thought that they appeared to import into the law on the subject conditional clauses for which there is no statutory authority. With all deference, we think that this is not so. Ch. 10 of the Code deals with "public nuisances," and as has been stated above, provides a speedy and summary method for dealing with them, in cases of great emergency and where there is imminent danger to the public interest. The fact that an obstruction has been allowed to stand, without objection, in a public place for many years itself indicates that there is no such emergency or imminent danger to the public interest. The existence of a long-standing obstruction cannot therefore without proof of something having recently happened, be considered to be a "public nuisance". We hold that the law has been correctly laid down in A I R 1930 Lah 361¹ and A I R 1935 Lah 28,² and that the Secretary of State in this case misconceived his remedy, and his application was rightly dismissed by the Magistrate and the Sessions Judge. We confirm the order of the Courts below and dismiss this petition.

Judgment.—This appeal has arisen out of an action brought by Pahlad Singh, against Sukhdev Singh, Shib Lal and Ganga Charan. The allegations of the plaintiff were that his father Shib Lal had sold 24 bighas 19 biswas of land to Sukhdev Singh for a sum of Rs. 700, that the alienation was without consideration and necessity and that he was entitled to a declaration to the effect that the sale in dispute shall not affect his reversionary rights after the death of the alienor. In the alternative Pahlad Singh asked for the possession of the land in dispute by means of pre-emption. The trial Court framed seven issues, three of them being as follows :

(5) Is the plaintiff's suit for pre-emption within time ? (6) What is the market value of the land in suit ? (7) Cannot the suit for pre-emption lie due to reasons stated in para. 13 of the written statement ?

The trial Court held that the sale was without consideration and necessity and that, according to custom, Shib Lal was not entitled to alienate his ancestral property except for necessity. On these findings the plaintiff's suit was decreed. The trial Court however did not give any finding on Issues 5 to 7. Against this decision Sukhdev Singh, defendant, preferred an appeal in the Court of the learned District Judge. The learned Judge held that the sale was for consideration and necessity, and that under the Customary law governing the parties Shib Lal had unrestricted power of alienation. The learned District Judge also did not give any finding on the issues relating to the question of pre-emption. On these findings the plaintiff's suit was dismissed. The plaintiff has preferred a second appeal to this Court. In view of the finding given by the learned District Judge, that according to the Customary law of the Rohtak District Shib Lal had unrestricted power of alienation, no question of consideration and necessity arises. Moreover in the absence of a certificate the appellant is not entitled to re-agitate the question of custom in this Court in second appeal. It has been held by a Division Bench of this Court in I L R (1937) Lah 642¹ that the interpretation of a clause in the village statement of custom involves a decision regarding the validity or existence of a custom and therefore a certificate is necessary before the question of custom can be agitated in the High Court in second appeal.

It was conceded on behalf of the respondent Sukhdev Singh that the plaintiff is entitled to an adjudication on Issues 5 to 7 which relate to the question of pre-emption. For the reasons given above I accept this appeal, set aside the judgments and decrees of both the Courts below and remand the case to the trial Court for the decision of Issues 5 to 7. The parties have been directed to appear in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Jhajjar on 24th February 1938. The appellant will pay one-half of the costs of the respondent Sukhdev Singh incurred so far in all the Courts.

Second Appeal No. 1190 of 1937, Decided on 20th January 1938, from decree of Senior Sub-Judge, Kangra at Dharmsala, D/- 18th May 1937.

Execution — Bar to — Person successfully maintaining that execution cannot proceed against him without separate suit being brought against him—Separate suit instituted against him—He cannot urge that separate suit does not lie and proper remedy is by way of execution.

The law does not permit a party, where the question is one of procedure, to urge that one form of procedure should be followed and when he has successfully maintained this and the procedure which he urged should be followed has been followed, to urge that the new procedure is wrong and the old procedure was right. This would be to stultify the law. [P 526 C 1]

Where a person, against whom an execution of a decree was taken out, successfully maintained in the execution proceedings that the execution could not proceed against him without a separate suit being brought against him, on the ground that he was a legatee and therefore not a party to the suit in which he only figured as a legal representative, he cannot subsequently be allowed to urge when a separate suit is brought against him, that the proper remedy was by way of execution and that separate suit is barred by S. 47, Civil P. Judgment. — The question for decision in this case is whether the defendant in the case having successfully maintained in execution proceedings that execution could not proceed without a separate suit being brought on the ground that he was a legatee and therefore not a party to the suit in which he only figured as a legal representative, can now be heard when the suit is brought, his objection having been upheld in the Court of Appeal, to contend that the proper remedy was by way of execution and no separate suit lies but is barred by S. 47, Civil P. C. The facts of the case are given in the judgments of the Courts below. Both Courts have held that S. 47 did apply to the facts of the present case, that the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge in the previous case holding that the remedy was by way of a separate suit was incorrect but that the plaintiff should have gone in appeal and had that order set aside, that he did not do so and the present suit was barred under S. 47, and therefore dismissed the suit. The trial Court left the parties to bear their own costs. The Senior Subordinate Judge dismissed the appeal with costs. The plaintiff has come in second appeal. It is argued on his behalf that when the question is as to the procedure to be followed in a certain dispute between the parties and one party has successfully asserted that the proper procedure is in one Court or is in one form, then it is not open to that party to urge when the procedure, which he contended was the right procedure, has been followed that the old procedure was the correct procedure and the present procedure is wrong. This is the real point in the case and no light is thrown on this point by the argument that there can be no estoppel against a statute or no estoppel on a point of law, which are both well-known propositions and do not need authority to support them.

The learned counsel for the appellant has cited A I R 1930 Cal 32¹ which supports him to the extent that where a person had made an application that a certain proceeding did not lie under the Bengal Tenancy Act he was not allowed subsequently to urge that the proceeding did lie under the Bengal Tenancy Act. This ruling is based on A I R 1924 Cal 600,² where however the facts were slightly different. In A I R

1. Hemanta Kumari Devi v. Prasanna Kumar Datta, (1930) 17 A I R Cal 32=120 I O 249=56 Cal 584.

2. Dwijendra Narain Roy v. Jogesh Chandra Dey, (1924) 11 A I R Cal 600=79 I O 520=39 C L J 40.

1929 Nag 79³ it was also held that a person who had urged that a separate suit lay could not urge that S. 47 barred the suit. That ruling appears directly in point. The learned counsel for the respondent has cited 9 Bom 458,⁴ 18 W R 185⁵ which has no bearing at all: A I R 1937 P C 114,⁶ A I R 1932 Pat 267,⁷ A I R 1930 Lah 1034⁸ at p. 1039, A I R 1929 Oudh 185⁹ and A I R 1930 Bom 135.¹⁰ These rulings mostly go no further than to lay down that there is no estoppel against a statute and no estoppel on a point of law. They are not directly in point. He has also cited 5 Mad 391¹¹ which appears to be in point and supports him, and 7 Mad 255¹² which however is distinguishable as in that case the rights of third parties were involved. On the whole I am of opinion that the law does not permit a party where the question is one of procedure to urge that one form of procedure should be followed and when he has successfully maintained this and the procedure which is urged should be followed has been followed, to urge that the new procedure is wrong and the old procedure was right. This would be to stultify the law. I would therefore accept the appeal and remand the case to the Appellate Court to deal with the issues found against the present defendant by the trial Court on which the learned counsel for the respondent wishes to rely before the Appellate Court. Costs will be costs in the case.

Criminal Appeal No. 1195 of 1937, Decided on 31st January 1938, from order of Sess. Judge, Jhelum, D/- 27th April 1937.

Mohd. Amin and Mohd. Jamil —
for Respondents.

Judgment. — This is an appeal by the Crown from the order of the learned Sessions Judge, Jhelum, setting aside the convictions and sentences of the respondents and directing that a fresh prosecution should be started against them after due compliance with the provisions of law. Mt. Ashrafan, respondent 4, had sold certain immovable property to Haidar Khan, respondent 3. One Ghulam Ahmed who is a reversioner of the husband of Mt. Ashrafan, brought a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Chakwal, for a declaration that the sale had been effected without consideration and necessity and was ineffectual against his reversionary rights. The suit was resisted by the vendee who pleaded that the money had been raised to pay certain antecedent debts. One of these debts was alleged to be due to Nand Lal, respondent 1, who was stated to have been paid out of the consideration for the sale in question. In support of this plea a pro-note (Ex. P-B), was produced, purporting to have been executed by Mt. Ashrafan in favour of Nand Lal. A receipt (Ex. P-C) was also produced. The scribe of these documents was Sita Ram, respondent 2. He was called as a witness in the suit to support this plea, but he deposed that the pro-note and the receipt had been forged by him at the instance of Haidar

Khan, Nand Lal and certain other persons. The Subordinate Judge held that consideration and necessity for the sale had not been proved and accordingly he granted the plaintiff a decree for the declaration asked for. At the same time the Subordinate Judge made a complaint to the District Magistrate for the prosecution of the persons concerned in forging the receipt. Under orders of the District Magistrate, the matter was investigated by the police, and the four respondents, Nand Lal, Sita Ram, Haidar Khan and Mt. Ashrafan, were prosecuted under Ss. 120.B, 193 and 467, Penal Code. A charge under S. 471 also was brought against Haidar Khan.

The trial Magistrate convicted all the four respondents of the offences charged, and passed different sentences against them. The convicts appealed to the Sessions Judge before whom a preliminary objection was raised that the trial was illegal as under S. 196.A, Criminal P. C. sanction of the Local Government was necessary for prosecution under S. 120.B, and that such sanction had not been obtained in this case. The learned Judge upheld this objection, and also expressed the opinion that he was doubtful as to the legality of the joinder of the charges. He accordingly set aside the conviction and sentences, and directed that a fresh prosecution be started in the matter after due compliance with the provisions of the law.

The reason given by the learned Sessions Judge in support of his decision is that under S. 196.A, Criminal P. C. the sanction of the Local Government for prosecution under S. 120.B, I. P. C. was necessary in this case, as the object of the alleged conspiracy was to commit an offence, the maximum punishment prescribed for which is more than two years. This reasoning is erroneous and is based on a misreading of the section. The part of Cl. 2 of the section, to which the learned Judge referred, relates to cognizable offences not punishable with rigorous imprisonment for a term of two years or upwards. Obviously this is not the case here, as was conceded by both counsel before us. The case however falls under the other part of Cl. (2) of S. 196.A, which bars the prosecution of two of the respondents for another reason. The object of the conspiracy alleged against the respondents was to commit a non-cognizable offence and it is provided in S. 196.A that no Court can take cognizance of such an offence unless the consent of the Local Government or of a District Magistrate empowered in this behalf by the Local Government by order in writing, was obtained. The proviso to S. 196.A however lays down that where the criminal conspiracy is one to which the provisions of sub-s. (4) of S. 195 apply, no such sanction is necessary. Under that sub-section, no sanction is necessary for the prosecution, under S. 120.B, of Haidar Khan and Mt. Ashrafan who were parties to the proceedings in the Court of the Subordinate Judge. But the proviso to S. 196.A does not cover the cases of Nand Lal and Sita Ram, who could not be prosecuted under S. 120.B without such sanction.

Counsel for the Crown conceded that this was the correct legal position. He stated however that in this case, the Crown did not now propose to proceed against any of the respondents under S. 120.B. He therefore prayed that the charge under that section be quashed against all the respondents including Haidar Khan and Mt. Ashrafan, and that the learned Sessions Judge be directed to hear the appeal of the four respondents against their conviction on charges other than the charge under S. 120.B. The learned counsel appearing for the respondents agreed that this was the proper course in the circumstances, as his clients too did not want a retrial.

We accept the appeal, set aside the order of the learned Sessions Judge and remand the case to him for decision of the appeal against the conviction of the four respondents for charges under Ss. 193 and 467, I. P. C., and the additional charge under S. 471 against Haidar Khan. The charge under S. 120.B against all the respondents is quashed. The respondents shall remain on bail to the satisfaction of the Sessions Judge till the hearing of the appeal by him.

Second Appeal No. 636 of 1937, Decided on 27th January 1938, from decree of Dist. Judge, Jhelum, D/. 13th March 1937.

Custom (Punjab)—Mair Minhas of Chakwal Tahsil in Jhelum District—Will by sonless proprietor of ancestral or self-acquired property in favour of daughter's daughter is valid.

Among Mair Minhas (Rajputs) of Chakwal Tahsil in the Jhelum District a will by a sonless proprietor of ancestral or self-acquired property in favour of his daughter's daughter is valid in presence of his brother : Case law discussed.

Addison J.—Karam, a Mair Minhas of Tahsil Chakwal in the Jhelum District, made a will on 7th July 1931 in favour of his daughter's daughter, Mt. Imam Khatun. Shortly after that he was murdered. The present suit has been brought by his brother Wali Dad for a declaration that the will was invalid by custom. The trial Court held that the ancestral property could not be bequeathed by Karam but that the self-acquired property could, and he granted the plaintiff a declaration with respect to the ancestral property. On appeal the learned District Judge has held that Karam had power in the absence of sons to bequeath his ancestral and self-acquired property to whomsoever he wished. He, therefore, accepting the defendants' appeal dismissed the suit. This second appeal has been brought by Wali Dad in this Court on the usual certificate granted under S. 41, Punjab Courts Act. The subject of the power of alienation of the Mahomedan tribes of the Jhelum District has been frequently before the Courts. Custom has always had its deepest roots in the central districts of the Punjab and it is doubtful if originally it had much hold upon the northern district of Jhelum. The riwaj-i-am of 1880 of the Jhelum District, which is given as App. 1 of the riwaj-i-am prepared by Mr. Talbot in 1901, is quite definite on this point. As regards gifts, it was said by all tribes that a proprietor could give away all or part of his property in his life-time provided he made over possession but that no one gave all his property to his daughter or a stranger in the presence of sons but no one denied his power to do so. As regards wills, all tribes except Awans said that the owner of property could dispose of it by will but in practice this was not done as the power of gift was sufficient. In 1880 therefore it is clear that there was unrestricted power of gift or will, whether the property was ancestral or non-ancestral.

According to the answer to the question

No. 78 of Mr. Talbot's Customary law of Jhelum District, Awans and all Musalman tribes of Chakwal, also Hindus except Brahmans, are reported as having said that ancestral property could not be disposed of by will, but self-acquired property could be so disposed of. Other tribes gave other replies and Mr. Talbot added a note that in spite of judicial decisions to the contrary no tribe admitted an unlimited power of bequest as regards ancestral land. He admitted the previous entry in the old riwaj-i-am and stated that Courts had often followed it but he added that he considered it incorrect. His opinion may be better explained by the circumstance that at the time he was writing, it was usually considered that there was a sort of general custom prevalent throughout the Punjab which was far from being the case. Although therefore in accordance with the statement in the riwaj-i-am of Mr. Talbot's compilation, the burden of proof may be upon the grand-daughter, that burden is practically displaced by the clear entry in the former riwaj-i-am and by the judicial decisions based on it. The subject is discussed at length by one of us in 132 I C 209¹ where most of the authorities are reviewed. Reference therefore need only be made to some of the earlier decisions.

In 122 P R 1884² it was found that by the custom prevailing among Jhanjuas of the Jhelum Tahsil, alienation of land in favour of a daughter by will was permitted.

In 93 P R 1885³ it was held that, among Mahomedan Rajputs of the Chakwal Tahsil, a proprietor without male issue could by custom make a will leaving his entire estate to his daughter to the prejudice of his near collaterals; and Mair Minhas are Rajputs.

There was however a decision in 50 P R 1902⁴ where it was held that it had not been established that a sonless Mair Mana (Rajput) in the Chakwal Tahsil was competent to alienate his ancestral property by will or gift in favour of his sister's sons in the presence of his first cousin without his consent. This decision however was not followed in 22 P R 1904⁵ where the subject was exhaustively discussed. It was found in that case that amongst Mahomedan Mair Rajputs of the Chakwal Tahsil, a gift by a sonless proprietor of half his ancestral property in favour of his daughter's son in presence of his agnatic heirs was valid by custom, while in 71 P R 1904⁶ it was held that by custom among Moghals of the Chakwal Tahsil of the Jhelum District, a gift by a sonless proprietor of the whole or a substantial part of his ancestral immovable property to his relations in the female line was valid without the consent of his agnatic male heirs.

Again in 96 P R 1907⁷ it was held that among Mair Rajputs of the Chakwal Tahsil, a gift by a childless proprietor of his entire estate in favour of two grand-nephews in the presence of other nephews and grandnephews was valid.

In 87 P R 1918⁸ it was held that by custom among Mair Rajputs of the Chakwal Tahsil a sonless proprietor was competent to devise the whole of his ancestral estate in favour of his daughter in the presence of his brother.

10 Lah 581⁹ is a similar decision with respect to Mahomedan Gujjars of the Jhelum Tahsil. There is only one other case that need be referred to, namely 5 Lah 34,¹⁰ where it was held that sonless Awans of Talagang Tahsil of the Jhelum District were not entitled to dispose of their ancestral property by will, though the Judges, who decided the case, considered that they had power to gift their ancestral property. As pointed out however in 132 I C 209,¹ the power of testation is co-extensive with the power of gift and in fact in Mr. Talbot's Customary Law no distinction is drawn between the two powers by the various tribes. In the circumstances we hold that it has been established that Karam had power to make such a will and we dismiss this appeal with costs.

Order. — Lala Mithu Lal is a petitioner for the revision of his conviction under S. 61, Act 1 of 1914. The facts of the case are as follows : The petitioner Lala Mithu Lal has a shop at Ghaziabad in the United Provinces duly licensed for the sale of liquor. His son Radhe Mohan has an ordinary grocer's shop with no license to sell liquor in New Delhi, which is some 12 miles from Ghaziabad. The excise authorities of New Delhi having been informed that Messrs. Radhe Mohan were selling liquor without license got hold of a gentleman, named Mr. Hilditch, and induced him to order from them a bottle of whisky and a bottle of gin to be delivered to him at Messrs. Radhe Mohan's shop at New Delhi. Accordingly the order was taken and when Mr. Hilditch went to get the whisky and gin it was placed in his car and he paid for it. The petitioner was present and the money in payment of the liquor was actually given to him.

The Courts below on these facts have found that the sale of liquor by the petitioner to Mr. Hilditch took place in New Delhi. This finding appears to me to be bad in law and cannot be sustained. It is necessary to examine in more detail exactly what the evidence is. Mr. Hilditch has deposed that when he rang up Messrs. Radhe Mohan he asked them to obtain for him a bottle of whisky and a bottle of gin and not to sell him these articles. He also deposed that he was told by them on the telephone that the articles would have to be brought from Ghaziabad. Accordingly one of the assistants in Messrs. Radhe Mohan's shop went to Ghaziabad by motor bus, got the liquor from the Ghaziabad shop, where he signed a cash memo for it in the name of Mr. Hilditch, brought it back, paid octroi for it at Delhi and kept it in the shop of Messrs. Radhe Mohan pending the taking of delivery by Mr. Hilditch. It is clear to me on these facts that Messrs. Radhe Mohan were merely acting as the agents for Mr. Hilditch for the purchase of this liquor from the petitioner at Ghaziabad. Mr. Hilditch's statement, to which I have referred, shows clearly that he knew that Messrs. Radhe Mohan could not provide him with the whisky and the gin themselves. This is further shown by his admission when cross-examined that he had in his possession and had seen the catalogues of Messrs. Radhe Mohan and Messrs. Mithu Lal respectively. These catalogues, which are evidence in the case, show that Messrs. Radhe Mohan did not undertake to supply liquor whereas the petitioner did. I am clear, therefore, that Messrs. Radhe Mohan through their servant, who went to Ghaziabad, were merely acting as the agents of Mr. Hilditch for the purchase of this whisky and gin from the petitioner at Ghaziabad, where the petitioner was perfectly entitled in law to sell it to Mr. Hilditch.

The mere fact that the delivery by the agent to his principal took place in Delhi and that the money was paid to the vendor in Delhi does not mean that the sale took place there. Ss. 20 and 39, Sale of Goods Act, make this perfectly clear. If any authority were needed for this proposition there is an English case (1932) 48 T L R 636¹ (two connected appeals). A similar authority is (1903) 90 L T 88.² In these cases it was held that the sale of liquor in very similar circumstances to the present took place on the licensed premises and not at the place at which the goods were subsequently delivered and at which payment was made for them. There appears to be no direct Indian authority, but the same principles are involved in 31 All 293,³ which would have been a direct authority if Messrs. Radhe Mohan had been prosecuted instead of Mithu Lal for selling this liquor in Delhi. In that case one Panna Lal was asked by the Secretary of the Jhansi Club to supply him with methylated spirits. Not having a license for the sale of methylated spirits Panna Lal obtained them from someone who had and delivered them to the Secretary of the Jhansi Club. On this it was held by the Allahabad High Court that this act could not be described as a sale by Panna Lal to the Club. The principles involved are similar to those of this case. I am therefore satisfied on the facts as found that there was no sale in Delhi. The only sale that took place was at Ghaziabad where the petitioner being fully entitled to do so by this license, sold to Mr. Hilditch through Mr. Hilditch's agents the bottle of whisky and the bottle of gin. As I have said above the fact that delivery was made in Delhi and that payment was made to the petitioner in Delhi does not alter the case. I accordingly accept this petition and acquitting the petitioner direct that the fine if paid by him be refunded.

Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab,
North-West Frontier and Delhi Provinces, Lahore — Respondent.

Civil Ref. No. 23 of 1937, Decided on 6th January 1938, made by Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, North-West Frontier and Delhi Provinces, Lahore, D/- 11th October 1937.

(a) Income-tax Act (1922), S. 10 (2), Cls. (i) and (ix) — Certain company having lease of cotton ginning factory — Agreement between company and assessee for ginning assessee's cotton — Assessee agreeing to pay to company ginning charges and certain share in the net profits in addition — Company not responsible in case of loss — Share of net profits paid to company cannot be deducted from assessee's total income either under cl. (i) or cl. (ix).

Certain company took on lease a cotton ginning factory and the assessee entered into an agreement with the company for the ginning of his cotton. It was stipulated between them that besides the ginning charges which were fixed in the agreement, the company would be entitled to one-third of the net profits calculated after making certain deductions. In the case of loss no sum was to be paid to the company nor was the company liable to any contribution on that account. In the accounting year the assessee paid to the company certain sum towards ginning charges and in addition paid certain sum as one-third of the net profits earned by the assessee. The assessee claimed to deduct the latter sum from his total income on the ground that it came under cl. (i) or cl. (ix) of S. 10 (2) :

Held that the share in the net profits which was a fluctuating item could not be treated as rent within the meaning of cl. (i) : A I R 1937 P C 189, Rel. on. [P 531 C 2; P 532 C 1]

Held further that the sum claimed to be deducted was an appropriation of profits after they had been earned and not an admissible expenditure incurred for the purpose of earning those profits : Case law discussed. [P 533 C 1]

(b) Income-tax Act (1922), S. 10 (2) (iii) and S. 66 (5) — Question whether advance by partner is loan to partnership or increase in capital is question of fact — High Court cannot interfere with Income-tax Officer's finding on it.

It is a question of fact whether the advances made by a partner is a loan to the partnership or an increase in the capital of the firm, and when once the Income-tax authorities have held that it was by way of an increase in the capital of the firm and not a loan independent of the partnership capital the High Court has no authority to interfere. [P 533 C 1]

Kripa Ram Bajaj — for Petitioner.

S. M. Sikri for J. N. Aggarwal —
for Respondent.

Din Mohammad J. — This is a case stated by the Commissioner of Income-tax under sub-s. (3) of S. 66, Income-tax Act. The two questions that were formulated by this Court for the opinion of the Commissioner were couched in the following terms :

(1) Whether the sum of Rs. 22,429 paid by the assessee to Jagan Nath Syal and Company, under the agreement between the assessee and Jagan Nath Syal and Company, is a legitimate deduction under S. 10 (2), cls. (i) and (ix) of the Income-tax Act and (2) whether the assessee is entitled to deduct Rs. 2109, and Rs. 2622, paid to Fateh Chand Jai Ram Das and Shanti Sarup respectively, as interest on capital alleged to have been borrowed from them by the assessee ?

In the opinion of the Commissioner both questions should be answered in the negative and we have no hesitation in agreeing with him. The sum involved in question No. 1 was paid by the assessee to Jagan Nath Syal and Company, hereinafter called the company, in the following circumstances : The company took on lease a cotton ginning factory and the assessee entered into an agreement with the company for the ginning of his cotton. It was stipulated between them that besides the ginning charges, which were fixed in the agreement, the company would be entitled to one-third of the net profits calculated, after deducting all ginning charges at the above mentioned rates and all other expenses connected with sale and purchase of cotton and seed, insurance, interest at six per cent. per annum travelling, food of workers and employees, staff salaries, etc., bad debts and irrecoverable items.

In case of loss no sum was to be paid to the company nor was the company liable to any contribution on that account. In the accounting year the assessee paid to the company Rs. 68,000 odd towards ginning charges and in addition Rs. 22,429 were paid to it which represented one-third of the net profits earned by the assessee after making the necessary deductions specified in the agreement. It is the latter sum which the assessee claims to deduct from his total income and the income-tax authorities have refused to allow him to do so on the ground that it was covered neither by Cl. (i) nor Cl. (ix) of sub-s. (2) of S. 10, Income-tax Act. It is a well-settled principle that if any deduction is claimed, it is for the assessee to prove that that deduction is legally allowable to him. If he fails to do so, the amount so claimed is liable to be assessed. It is obvious that Clause (i) of sub-s. (2) of S. 10 does not cover the amount and it is significant that throughout the proceedings before the income-tax authorities prior to the issue of mandamus by this Court the assessee never based his claim on that clause. Had the sum in dispute been rent, it could easily have been so expressed in the agreement entered into between the assessee and the company. This however was not done nor can a fluctuating item like this be treated as rent. The following observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in 5 I T R 270¹ are pertinent in this respect :

1. Indian Radio and Cable Communications Co. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay Presidency & Aden, (1937) 24 A I R P C 189=5 I T R 270=I L R (1937) Bom 591 (P C).

Circumstances of greater importance are that the sum payable may be small or great or nothing — a most unusual feature in the case of rent — and that it is impossible to presume or infer that the half share of profits is being paid only as rent, or as a similar payment, in consideration merely of the use of the plant.

We hold therefore that the sum in dispute could not be deducted as rent paid for the premises in which the assessee carried on his business. It now remains to be seen whether it is "expenditure (not being in the nature of capital expenditure) incurred solely for the purpose of earning such profits or gains." Here too, as remarked above, we are inclined to agree with the Commissioner that the payment of the sum in dispute was an appropriation of profits after they had been earned and not an admissible expenditure incurred for the purpose of earning those profits. In a case reported in 5 I T R 270,¹ their Lordships of the Privy Council had occasion to consider a somewhat similar matter and observed as follows :

The sum is in truth made payable as part of the consideration in respect of a number of different advantages which the appellants derive from the agreement and not all of them can be shown to be of a purely temporary character. The agreement as a whole is much more like one for a joint adventure for a term of years between the appellant company and the Communications company than one for a lease for that period

Their Lordships recognize the difficulty which may often exist in deciding whether expenditure, not in the nature of capital expenditure, has been incurred solely for the purpose of making or earning 'income, profits or gains' and they agree that it may be impossible to formulate a test which will always suffice to discriminate between the expenditure which is and which is not allowable for the purpose of income-tax but in the present case they have little hesitation in coming to the conclusion that the proposed deduction is not allowable.

In that case the Communications Company and the Radio Company entered into an agreement to the effect that their businesses in India should be combined and conducted by the Radio Company for a certain number of years. The Communications Company agreed to deliver all the plant, machinery, fittings, etc., of their business in India to the Radio Company to be used by the latter during the period of the agreement and the latter agreed to pay one-half of its net profits for each of its financial years to the Communications Company. It was this half share of the net profits which was claimed by the Radio Company as a permissible deduction.

In 5 I T C 363,² again a case that went to the Privy Council, their Lordships held that in computing the assessable profits or gains of the assessee's business no allowance was deductible in respect of the half share of the net profits payable by the assessee to the French Colonial Government. Lord Macmillan, who delivered the judgment, observed as follows :

It is claimed for the Company that when it makes over to the Colonial Government their half of the net profits it is making an expenditure incurred solely for the purpose of earning its own profits. The Court below has unanimously negatived this contention and in their Lordships' opinion has rightly done so. A payment out of profits and conditional on profits being earned cannot accurately be described as a payment made to earn profits. It assumes that profits have first come into existence. But profits on their coming into existence attract tax at that point and the revenue is not concerned with the subsequent application of the profits.

In two subsequent cases, his Lordship threw further light on these observations and tried to explain as to what his real import was in using these words. In (1932) 16 Tax Cas 293³ at p. 331, his Lordship remarked :

When therefore, in the passage referred to by the Attorney-General in the *Pondicherry case*² I said that 'a payment out of profits and conditional on profits being earned cannot accurately be described as a payment made to earn profits', I was dealing with a case in which the obligation was, first of all, to ascertain the profits in a prescribed manner, after providing for all outlays incurred in earning them, and then to divide them.

In 64 I A 215,⁴ his Lordship once more adverted to the *Pondicherry case*² and observed as follows :

In the *Pondicherry case*² the assesseees were under obligation to make over a share of their profits to the French Government. Profits had first to be earned and ascertained before any sharing took place.

His Lordship further added :

Their Lordships recognize, and the decided cases show, how difficult it is to discriminate between expenditure which is, and expenditure which is not, incurred solely for the purpose of earning profits or gains. In the present case their Lordships have reached the conclusion that the payments in question were not expenditure so incurred by the appellants. They were certainly not made in the process of earning their profits; they were not payments to creditors for goods supplied or services rendered to the appellants in their business; they did not arise out of any transactions in the conduct of their business. That they had to make those payments no doubt affected the ultimate yield in money to them from their business, but that is not the statutory criterion. . . . In short, the obligation to make these payments was undertaken by the appellants in consideration of their acquisition of the right and opportunity to earn profits, that is, of the right to conduct the business, and not for the purpose of producing profits in the conduct of the business.

In the present case also, the assessee had the advantage of securing a monopoly of ginning his own cotton and this was a substantial advantage that he had gained. We are even prepared to go further and say that in the present case the company and the assessee had started a quasi partnership business in which the company had to receive certain definite sums as ginning charges and had in addition to receive certain profits after making certain deductions and not to be responsible for any losses. The profits were to be paid to the company after they were earned and as such they cannot in any way be treated as an expenditure which the assessee had to incur for earning them. The second question can be disposed of on the short ground that it is a question of fact whether the advance made by a partner is a loan to the partnership or an increase in the capital of the firm, and when once the income-tax authorities have held that it was by way of an increase in the capital of the firm and not a loan independent of the partnership capital, we have no authority to interfere. We accordingly answer both questions in the negative. The assessee will be liable to pay the costs of this reference to the Commissioner.

Second Appeal No. 1411 of 1937, Decided on 25th February 1938, from decree of Dist. Judge, Lyallpur, D/- 13th August 1937.

Civil P. C. (1908), S. 60 — Compensation money in hands of Collector awarded under Land Acquisition Act is not liable to attachment.

Compensation money awarded under the Land Acquisition Act is not liable to attachment at the instance of the creditors of the persons whose lands have been acquired until the amount is tendered to them under S. 31 of Land Acquisition Act. The money in the hands of the Collector is money belonging to the Government until the tender is made and no relationship of creditor and debtor can be said to have been established between the Collector on the one side and the owners of the lands on the other. S. 60, Civil P. C., does not therefore apply to such a case and the amount in the hands of the Collector cannot be attached by creditors holding money decrees against the persons to whom the compensation has been awarded : A I R 1924 Mad 521 and (1901) 2 K B 199, Rel. on. [P 534 C 1]

Har Bhajan Das — for Appellant.

Mohd. Monir, Assistant to Advocate-

Abdul Rashid J.—Some land belonging to Fauja Singh, defendant 3, and Vir Singh, defendant 4, was acquired by the Secretary of State for India in Council under the Land Acquisition Act. Sundar Das, defendant 1, and Mathura Das, defendant 2, had two money decrees against Fauja Singh and Vir Singh. After the award had been made by the Collector and before the money was tendered to defendants 3 and 4 under S. 31, Land Acquisition Act the decree-holders got the money attached. The Secretary of State thereupon instituted the suit out of which the present appeal has arisen for a declaration that the compensation money in his hands due to defendants 3 and 4 could not be attached in execution of the money decrees obtained by defendants 1 and 2 against defendants 3 and 4. The suit was dismissed by the trial Court. On appeal the learned District Judge decreed the claim. Against this decision Sundar Das, defendant, has preferred a second appeal to this Court.

Section 31, Land Acquisition Act lays down that on making an award under S. 11, the Collector shall tender payment of the compensation awarded by him to the persons interested, entitled thereto according to the award, and shall pay it to them unless prevented by some one or more of the contingencies mentioned in sub-s. (2) of that section. If there is no person to receive the money or if the persons entitled to the money do not consent to receive it, the Collector is bound to deposit the amount of the compensation in the Court to which a reference under S. 18 would be submitted. It is further provided that a person, who receives the money otherwise than under protest, is not entitled to have a reference made to the District Judge under S. 18 of the Act. If however he receives the money under protest, he does not lose his right of having a reference made under S. 18. The provisions of this section make it clear that until the tender is made, the money belongs to the Government, and that the Collector has got to carry out his duty of making the tender to the persons interested, as the receipt of the money by the owner of the land without protest takes away certain rights, which would accrue to him if he receives the money under protest. The Land Acquisition Act is a complete Code in itself, and until the tender is made, the person whose land has been acquired, does not become a creditor or the Collector a debtor. Reference may be made in this connexion to a Division Bench ruling of the Madras High Court reported in 78 I C 82,¹ where it was laid down that the compensation money payable under the Land Acquisition Act is payable under that Act and that Act only. Any rights in respect of it are creatures of the statute and nothing else. It was held in (1901) 2 K B 199,² in respect of surplus assets of a company in liquidation, that when it is the duty of some officer of the Court to distribute money, which is in his hands, in a particular way, the relation of debtor and creditor is not constituted between him and the person who is entitled to all or some part of the money, which is in his hands. He is an officer of the Court and his duty is to the Court, and no debt is created which can be the subject-matter of attachment against him as garnishee.

It is clear from the authorities quoted above that the money in the hands of the Collector is money belonging to the Government until tender is made to defendants 3 and 4, and that no relationship of creditor and debtor can be said to have been established between the Collector on the one side and the owners of the land on the other. In these circumstances S. 60, Civil P. C., has no applicability. For the reasons given above, we affirm the decision of the learned District Judge and dismiss this appeal. Having regard to all the circumstances we order that the parties will bear their own costs in this Court.

(Per Full Bench) : 17 P R 1908 Cr, Overruled.

It must depend on the facts of each case, as to whether an intent to annoy the person in posses-

Where an accused enters at night the complainant's house with intent to have intercourse with the unmarried and sui juris daughter of the complainant by invitation, the accused cannot be said to have the 'primary' or even the 'subsidiary' or 'secondary' intent to annoy the person in pos-cautions to keep his entry secret. The mere fact that he knew, or ought to have known, that, if

Order of Reference.

Blacker J. — The learned Judge who admitted this petition remarked in his admitting order that the case was obviously highly suspicious and after hearing counsel and perusing the record I think that this estimate has been completely justified. It is clear to my mind that the petitioner's story is the truer one. The prosecution witnesses are not to be relied upon as they have been manifestly disingenuous in attempting to conceal the fact that the appellant was not only a relation of theirs but a boy who was on friendly terms with members of their family, not only with the girl in question but also with her brother. In fact the complainant who was attempting to deny that the boy had

was forced to admit, when a photograph was shown to him, that that photograph was of the funeral of another son of his, taken as recently as three years ago, in which the petitioner is shown as taking a prominent part. But quite apart from this, there is also the evidence of a defence witness, Wazir Ullah, who is equally related to both the parties. His evidence has been dismissed by the trial Magistrate on the ground that he is penniless. Actually he has merely stated in cross-examination that the house in which he lived is mortgaged and that his father's land has either been sold or mortgaged. This is far from meaning that he is absolutely penniless because he was not asked whether he had any other income. But even if he were penniless, this does not mean that he is an unreliable witness. Many a man is poor because he is honest and it seems to me no ground for discrediting his evidence. This witness deposes to the terms of intimacy between the petitioner and the family of the complainant.

On the other hand the story for the prosecution to my mind bears all the hallmarks of a fabricated story. The learned Magistrate was asked to visit the spot, but for some reason he refused to do so. This was an unfortunate decision because it was a type of case in which the visiting of the spot was most desirable. The prosecution witnesses have given evidence that the bars of the door leading into the apartment in which the petitioner is stated to have been found, were torn open. It seems extraordinary that if the petitioner effected his entry into the room in this way, he made no noise about it which would have awakened the inmates. It seems to me far more probable that this door was left open as is indicated by a passage in the first information report to the effect that the front door of the house was left open because one Wazir Ahmad, complainant's brother, had gone to the cinema that night and was expected to come home late. It has not been explained by the prosecution where Wazir Ahmad was sleeping that night, but the presumption appears to be that he would be sleeping in what is described as the male apartment where the other male members of the family were sleeping and in which the petitioner was alleged to have been found. And if the front door was open the presumption is that this door would also be left open for him to get into his bedroom. This would also account for the very clumsy piece of evidence about the finding of a closed lock. It is difficult to understand why this lock was closed if the petitioner broke it open. Again it is difficult to accept the story that the petitioner was discovered because he crawled under the bed of one Nawab Din and then woke Nawab Din by bumping him from underneath. If the petitioner's object was to commit theft I cannot see how he could facilitate that object by crawling under Nawab Din's bed. A thief breaking in at night would go stealthily to the place where the property to be stolen was, which according to the evidence was in an inner room. The necessity of these fabrications is apparent. If the petitioner's story is true that he went to the house at night on the invitation of Mt. Razia and had been caught by the members of the family at her cot, they would, to save their family honour, clearly suppress that story and have to invent another story to take its place. The improbabilities to which I have referred show that they have tried to invent such story and have invented it clumsily.

The counsel for the Crown has suggested that an adverse inference must be drawn against the petitioner because he did not put either Razia Begum or Nazir Ahmad, her brother, in the witness box. But it would have been absurd to have done so, because in the circumstances of the case no reasonable person would expect them to give evidence in his favour any more than the boy Sleem Ullah has done. On the other hand there seems to be no reason to reject the evidence of D. W. 1, Abdul Aziz, who is certainly not shown to have had any motive for giving false evidence, and he deposes that a small boy, whom he does not know, actually came and told the petitioner that he was wanted by 'apa' by whom he meant Mt. Razia. It seems to me therefore that the petitioner's story is clearly the truer one and that he crept into the house late at night on the invitation of this girl who, as the evidence shows, occupied a room by herself. To reach this room he had to pass through the male apartment. He was there surprised presumably by Nawab Din and to save the family honour the story of his burglarious entry was invented.

The question however still remains whether he is guilty of any offence or not. The offence of criminal trespass has to be done with the intent either of committing an offence or of intimidating, insulting or annoying. As Mt. Razia was not a married girl there was clearly no offence to be committed, and the only possible criminal intent which could be attributed to the petitioner was that of annoying the inmates by having an illicit connexion with their female relation. There is a considerable divergence of view in the decisions whether in such cases it is impossible to hold that there was an intent to annoy. The learned counsel for the Crown has argued that the intent to annoy would be a sort of subsidiary intent because, if discovered, the act which the petitioner committed was bound to annoy the occupants of the house. But it is clear that annoyance could only result from discovery and it must be patent that discovery was the last thing that the petitioner wanted or intended. Is it possible to hold that the last thing that a man intends to happen is his intention even if the epithet "subsidiary" is tacked on to it? It has also been argued that a man must be held to intend the natural result of his act, but in this case the consequences, which might make the act criminal, depend upon an intervening contingency which the petitioner himself is clearly anxious to avoid. Such consequences can only be described as a possible result of his act, not as a natural result.

My own view therefore is that no offence has been committed, but as in view of the divergence of opinion a similar question has recently been referred by Jai Lal J. in Criminal Revn. No. 781 of 1937¹ for the decision of a Division Bench. I would also recommend that this case be laid for decision before the same Bench.

Judgment of the Full Bench

Tek Chand J.—The facts of the case, which has given rise to this reference are as follows: On the night of 13th April 1937, Abdul Majid, petitioner, who is a lad 19 years of age, was found in the house of Abdul Raoof (P. W. 1) in Sialkot. It was alleged by the prosecution that he had come there with the intention of committing burglary. His defence was that he had a liaison with Mt. Razia Begum, the unmarried daughter of the complainant, who lived in the same house and had a separate room for herself; that on the night in question he had come to visit Mt. Razia Begum by invitation, but that while he was passing through the room occupied by some other inmates of the house he was found out and arrested. The Courts below rejected his defence and found him guilty under S. 456, I. P. C., holding that he had entered the house with the intention of committing burglary. On revision, the case came up before Blacker J., sitting in Single Bench, who held that the case for the prosecution "bore all the hallmarks of a fabricated story". After discussing the evidence, he came to the conclusion that it had not been proved that the petitioner had entered the house with the object of committing burglary. On the other hand, his findings were that the petitioner had crept into the house late in the night on the invitation of Mt. Razia, with whom he intended to have sexual intercourse, and that to reach her room he had to pass through the male apartments and was there surprised by P. W. Nawab Din, and that to save the family honour the story of his burglarious entry was invented. On these findings, the question arose as to whether the petitioner was guilty of the offence of criminal trespass as defined in S. 441, I. P. C. That section reads as follows:

Whoever enters into, or upon, property in the possession of another with intent to commit an offence or to intimidate, insult or annoy any person in possession of such property, or having lawfully entered into or upon such property, unlawfully remains there with intent thereby to intimidate, insult or annoy any such person, or with intent to commit an offence, is said to commit 'criminal trespass'.

It was conceded for the Crown that the girl being unmarried and sui juris, it was not a criminal offence to have intercourse with her with her consent and therefore the case did not fall within the first part of paragraph 1 of the section. It was however contended that the second part of the paragraph applied, as in entering the house in the possession of Abdul Raoof and Nawab Din, the petitioner had the intent to "annoy" the persons in possession of the property entered upon. It was not denied that the "primary" intent of the petitioner in entering the house was to have intercourse with the girl, but it was urged that in the circumstances, he must be held to have the "secondary or subsidiary" intent of annoying the inmates of the house, for he must have known that, if discovered, the act which the petitioner committed, i. e. his entering the house, was bound to annoy the occupants of the house. Blacker J. was not inclined to accept this argument, as it appeared clear from the facts that the alleged annoyance could only result from discovery and it was patent that discovery was the last thing that the petitioner wanted or intended and therefore in the circumstances it was not possible to hold that "the last thing that a man intends to happen is his intention even if the epithet 'subsidiary' is tacked on to it". As however the contention for the Crown was supported by some judicial decisions of the Punjab Chief Court and other Courts, the learned Judge referred the case to a Division Bench. The Division Bench, not being satisfied with the correctness of these decisions, has referred the case to a Full Bench.

Before us, the case has been argued at considerable length. Of the rulings on which counsel for the Crown relies, the one directly in point is 17 P R 1908 Cr,² the facts of which are very similar to those found in the present case. In that case, it was held that the entry in the complainant's house with the intention of having illicit intercourse with his widowed sister amounted to criminal trespass within the meaning of S. 441, Penal Code inasmuch as the particular object could not be obtained except by causing great annoyance to the brothers of the widow, who were the persons in possession of the house. The question was not discussed at any length, but the decision was based upon an earlier Full Bench ruling of the Chief Court in 12 P R 1906 Cr,³ in which it had been held that when a person, claiming a title to immovable property, whether his title is good or bad, enters without any legal justification upon property in the established possession of another, he must be inferred to have had an intent to annoy the person in possession within the meaning of S. 441, Penal Code, even though he had no primary desire to annoy, and his only object was to obtain possession for himself. In that case the learned Judges discussed S. 441 at great length and in the course of the discussion Clark C. J. who delivered the majority judgment, referred (at p. 58) to the case of a person carrying on an intrigue with an unmarried daughter of the person in possession of the property entered upon, and in that connexion he observed as follows :

A is carrying on an intrigue with B's unmarried daughter. A at night comes into B's house and goes into his daughter's bed-room, there being a high probability that he will be discovered. I should be strongly disposed to hold that there was an intent on B's part to annoy A. B knew that he was likely to be discovered, and without any excuse did an act which was bound to annoy A. I think he should be held to have intended the natural consequences of his act.

This view was adopted in 17 P R 1908 Cr,² above referred, and the accused was convicted under S. 456, I. P. C. This case has since been followed in several other cases. In some other cases, however, the correctness of this decision has been doubted. In A I R 1925 Lah 23=81 I C 239⁴ Martineau J., sitting in Single Bench, held that to constitute criminal trespass there must be an entry into or upon property in the possession of another person, with one of the intents mentioned in S. 441, I. P. C. Mere knowledge that the entry is likely to "annoy" a person in possession of the property is not sufficient to constitute criminal trespass, and that a case in which the entry will inevitably cause annoyance to a person in possession must be distinguished from one in which there is only a possibility of annoyance being caused. It was further observed that there was no presumption that a person intends what is merely a possible result of his action, or a result which, though reasonably certain, is not known to him to be so. Applying these principles, the learned Judge held that if an accused person succeeds in showing that his presence in the house was in consequence of an invitation from, or by the connivance of an unmarried woman living in the house, with whom he was carrying on an intrigue, and that he desired that his presence there should not be known to the person in possession, he cannot be convicted of criminal trespass. The question arose again in A I R 1926 Lah 600=96 I C 871,⁵ decided by Harrison and Dalip Singh JJ. The facts found in that case were that the accused had entered into a house in order to carry on an intrigue with the owner's unmarried daughter, who was aged 19, after taking every precaution to avoid discovery. It was held by the learned Judges that it could not be said that he intended to cause annoyance to the person in possession of the house, and he was not therefore guilty of an offence under S. 448, Penal Code. Reliance was placed by counsel for the Crown upon 17 P R 1908 Cr,² but the learned Judges expressed their dissent with it and observed that :

Where the inevitable consequence of a certain act is clear, it must be presumed that the person doing the act had a "secondary" intention of bringing about that consequence; but it was a very different thing from saying that a man must be taken to intend any consequence which may result, however remotely, from his conduct.

In reference to the facts of the case before them they observed that :

The accused having taken every precaution to avoid discovery, it could not be said by any sort of distortion of the meaning of the word 'intention' that he either intended, or expected, that his conduct would cause annoyance by being made public. On the other hand, his conduct proved, that 'the last contingency that he expected, or anticipated, or intended, was discovery, and he had taken the natural and obvious precautions to avoid such discovery'.

The same view had been taken by the Allahabad High Court in 38 All 517.⁶ In this case Sundar Lal J., held that an accused person, though he may have known that, if discovered, he is likely to cause annoyance to the owner of a house, cannot be said to have intended either actually or constructively, to cause such annoyance. Accordingly, it was held that where a person entered a house with intent to have illicit intercourse with a woman, who was a widow and of age, he was not guilty of an offence. The Punjab ruling, 17 P R 1908 Cr,² was expressly dissented from. This decision of Sundar Lal J. was considered by a Division Bench of the Allahabad Court in 40 All 221.⁷ The learned Judges (Piggott and Walsh JJ.) endorsed the view that if the accused succeeds in showing that his presence in the house was in consequence of an invitation from, or by the connivance of a female living in the house, with whom he was carrying on an intrigue, and that he desired that his presence there should not be known to the person in possession, then he cannot be convicted of criminal trespass. They held, however, that :

If it is shown that the person in possession of the house has expressly prohibited the accused from coming to the house, an intent to annoy may be legitimately inferred.

They observed that in cases in which an accused person has forcibly or clandestinely entered a house, which he knew to have been definitely closed and barred against him by the owner thereof, it might not be a sufficient answer to a charge of criminal trespass for the accused to say that he personally hoped that the owner would remain in ignorance of the fact of his entry. The Court may find on the facts that the intention to insult or annoy, under such circumstances was so clearly inherent in the acts of the accused as to form an essential part of the purpose with which entry into the house was effected. On this point the remarks of the learned Judges of the Bombay High Court in 26 Bom 558⁸ are certainly pertinent. The Patna High Court has also reached the same conclusion in 4 Pat 459.⁹ It was held in that case that if the intent was to carry on a peaceful intrigue with an unmarried woman no offence was committed, but if the object of the entry was to force an intrigue upon a woman in the house and to have a forcible intercourse with her, the intention will necessarily be to insult or annoy and the act would fall under S. 441, I. P. C. The Madras High Court also has taken the same view in 19 Mad 240¹⁰ which has since been approved by a Full Bench of that Court in 41 Mad 156.¹¹ In that case it was pointed out that :

It is one thing to entertain a certain intention, and another to have the knowledge that one's act may possibly lead to a certain result. The section (441) defining criminal trespass is so worded as to show that the act must be done with intent and does not, as other sections do (e. g. S. 425), embrace the case of an act done with knowledge of the likelihood of a given consequence.

With great respect, I agree with the view of the law expressed in these cases and find myself unable to follow the decision in 17 P R 1908 Cr² or to accept, without reservation the dictum of Clark C. J. in 12 P R 1906 Cr³ on which it was based. It is, of course, not possible to lay down any hard and fast rule, governing all cases. It must depend on the facts of each case, as to whether an intent to annoy the person in possession of the property entered upon can, in the circumstances, be reasonably inferred. But I find it impossible to hold that on the facts as stated in 17 P R 1908 Cr,² which are almost identical with those found in the case before us, the accused could be said to have the 'primary' or even the 'subsidiary' or 'secondary' intent to annoy the person in possession, from whom he had taken all possible precautions to keep his entry secret. The mere fact that he knew, or ought to have known, that, if discovered, his presence in the house might cause annoyance to the owner or other inmates of the house, is by itself not sufficient to bring his case within S. 441, I. P. C. For the foregoing reasons, it must be held that on the facts as found by Blacker J., in this case, it cannot be held that on the night in question the petitioner entered Abdul Raoof's house with intent to commit an offence or to annoy any of the persons in possession of the house. He has therefore been wrongly convicted of an offence under S. 456, I. P. C. I would accordingly accept his petition for revision, set aside his conviction and sentence and acquit the petitioner.

Where a Hindu dies leaving behind him his own widow and the widow of his predeceased son an adoption by the widow of the son during the lifetime of the father's widow is not valid. The son, whose widow makes the adoption, having died during the lifetime of his father, the estate vests in the widow of the father and she cannot be divested of the estate by any act of the son's widow who at the time of the adoption holds no position in the family and is merely entitled to a pittance: Case law discussed. [P 542 C 1, 2]

Din Mohammad J. — The suit giving rise to this appeal was instituted on 24th

January 1933, by the five plaintiffs Lala Piare Lal, Lala Mahabir Parshad, Lala Ram Chand, Rai Sahib Joti Prashad and Lala Bulaqi Das against the defendant, Lala Hem Chand, for possession of a house described as Jain Dharamsala, situate at Katra Mashru in the town of Delhi. It was alleged in the plaint that in 1907 one Janki Das, the father of Ram Chand, plaintiff 3, purchased the house in suit for Rs. 5500 with the intention of dedicating it as a Dharamsala and that he spent Rs. 4500 more in making the necessary improvements in the building and converting it into a Dharamsala, and that since then the house had been used as such. Until his death in 1909, Janki Das acted as manager of the said institution, and since then his son Ram Chand had been discharging those functions. In January 1931, the defendant took the house on temporary loan for using it on the occasion of his daughter's marriage and that he refused to vacate it subsequently. The management of the institution had been made over to the Jain Orphanage Society, Delhi, and that consequently plaintiffs 1 and 2 had joined in the suit by virtue of the resolution passed by the said Society on 14th December 1931. Plaintiffs 4 and 5 represented the Digamber Jain brotherhood to which the institution belongs. The date of the cause of action was given as 15th June 1932, when the defendant had refused to vacate the house. Almost all the allegations made in the plaint were denied by the defendant and in addition it was averred that the house in suit was owned by the defendant and that the plaintiffs had no cause of action against him. It was further added that even if the building was held to be a Dharamsala, the plaintiffs had no right to it. The alleged dedication by Janki Das was also repudiated. The plaintiffs put in their replication on 26th June 1933, traversing all the pleas raised by the defendant. A dispute having arisen as to the value of the house in suit for the purposes of court-fee a local commissioner assessed it at Rs. 14,000 and on this sum the requisite amount of court-fee was paid. On the pleadings of the parties, the following issues were framed :

(1) Did Janki Das purchase the house in dispute and dedicate it as a Dharamsala in 1907 ? (2) Has the property in dispute been used as a Jain Dharamsala from the time of its building in or about 1907 ? (3) Did defendant temporarily borrow the use of the Dharamsala in 1931 ? (4) Was plaintiff 3 the duly constituted Manager of the Dharamsala and is he competent to sue? (5) Is the Jain Orphanage Society the duly constituted Manager of the Dharamsala and competent to sue? (6) Are plaintiffs 4 and 5 competent to bring this suit? (7) To what relief are plaintiffs entitled?

In the course of the evidence it transpired that one Lala Sri Ram, a legal practitioner of Delhi, executed a will on 23rd March 1892, by which he left a house in Katra Mashru and Rs. 5000 for charity. This house is different from the one now in suit. On 30th April 1892, Lala Sri Ram made a codicil, amending the previous will in respect of certain property left for charity. In October 1892, Lala Sri Ram died, leaving him surviving Mt. Durgi, his own widow, and Mt. Bugli, the widow of his predeceased son, Piare Lal. On 19th November 1892, Janki Das obtained a probate of both the wills made by Lala Sri Ram. In 1894 while Mt. Durgi was still alive, Mt. Bugli adopted the defendant Hem Chand. On 3rd April 1907, Janki Das purchased the house in suit from one Badri Das and it was stated in the sale deed that Janki Das had made the purchase with the money left by Lala Sri Ram vakil for the purpose of building a Dharamsala. The defendant was present at the time when the document was registered. The building operations started in February 1908 and when the house was completely renovated it was consecrated as a Dharamsala and to the defendant's knowledge an inscription was made on the house, saying, "Dharamsala B. Siri Ram Vakil Jaini, 1909." Janki Das died and the management of the Dharamsala was taken over by his son Ram Chand. The other house mentioned in Lala Sri Ram's will was also managed by him. This state of affairs continued until the defendant came into possession of the property in 1931.

On the facts mentioned above, the contentions, raised by the plaintiffs before the trial Court were that the property having been dedicated as a Dharamsala no rights of private proprietorship were left in it, that the defendant's adoption by Mt. Bugli at the time when the property actually vested in Mt. Durgi was invalid, and that on both grounds the defendant was liable to ejectment. The defendant contended that as the case disclosed in the evidence of the parties was not stated in the plaint, the plaintiffs should not be allowed to contest their claim on the grounds mentioned above. He further challenged the will on the ground of uncertainty and indefiniteness and claimed the property for himself as the grandson of Lala Sri Ram. The Subordinate Judge however condoned the defects in the pleadings and allowing the parties to raise all those points which arose from the evidence led by them respectively decided the suit on those lines. He came to the conclusion that the defendant's adoption was valid under the Hindu law and that the defendant was entitled to succeed to all the property of his adoptive father, whether ancestral or self-acquired. (It may be mentioned here that Lala Sri Ram was claimed to be the grandfather of the defendant and not the father.) He was further of the opinion that the so-called trust was invalid and that the defendant's accepting it as a valid trust and allowing construction of the house in dispute out of the sale proceeds of Lala Sri Ram's property situate at Pahar Ganj did not debar him from contesting the present suit, especially as estoppel had not been clearly pleaded. Inasmuch as the will made by Lala Sri Ram was void and inoperative so far as the property in suit was concerned, its user as a Dharamsala was immaterial. The defendant being in possession of the house could not be ousted by any person not holding a superior title. He accordingly dismissed the suit with costs. The plaintiffs have appealed.

Counsel for the appellants has contended that (1) the defendant's adoption was invalid inasmuch as at the time of his adoption his adoptive mother, Mt. Bugli, held no position in the family and that by her adoption she could not divest Mt. Durgi of the estate that she held; (2) that, in any circumstances, the defendant who had acquiesced in the construction and dedication of the building as a Dharamsala could not after the lapse of more than 20 years be allowed to claim the property as his own. Even if the will was void for uncertainty, the amount spent on the purchase of the site and the construction of the Dharamsala could at the worst be treated as an unauthorized expenditure on the part of Janki Das and that as the defendant's remedy to recover that amount from Janki Das has expired, he cannot follow the property which now vests in the Jain community and treat it as his private property. In addition to these contentions the counsel maintained that both the plaintiff Ram Chand and his assigns, plaintiffs 1 and 2, were entitled to institute the suit, but as the defendant has not seriously challenged this position we do not propose to deal with this matter. Coming now to the legal issue raised as to the validity of the defendant's adoption, we find that the matter is not free from difficulty. In 10 M I A 279,¹ one G empowered his wife to adopt a son in case he died childless. He afterwards had a son B. Two years after the birth of his son he re-affirmed the power conferred on his wife and permitted her to adopt a son for the purpose of performing religious rites if the son who was already in existence died. Subsequently G died and B succeeded to his estate. A few years after G's death B also died leaving him surviving only a widow, who succeeded as heir to him. Some time after B's death, his mother exercised the power given her by the instrument mentioned above and adopted a son to her husband. Their Lordships of the Privy Council held that the adoption by G's widow was in the circumstances of the case void.

In 8 Cal 302,² the principles enunciated in the judgment cited above were re-affirmed by their Lordships of the Privy Council and it was decided that the son's widow having acquired a vested interest, a new heir could not be substituted for her. The facts of that case were similar to the facts of the previous case. In 10 Mad 205,³ their Lordships of the Privy Council approvingly referred to the two previous judgments mentioned above and held that the power of the father's widow to adopt a son to him is brought to an end upon the vesting of the estate in the son's widow. In 57 Bom 157⁴ which was decided on the 4th November 1932, the question that arose for decision before their Lordships of the Privy Council was, whether according to the law prevalent in the Marhatta country of the Bombay Presidency a Hindu widow, whose husband was undivided at the time of his death, and who had not the express permission of her husband, could adopt a son to him without the consent of the surviving coparceners. The parties were governed by the Mitakshara law, and on question on which the Mitakshara is silent, by the law as expounded in Nilakantha's Mayukha. After discussing almost all the authorities available on the subject, their Lordships came to the conclusion that the correct view of the law was that expressed in 5 Bom H C R A C 181⁵ and that the adoption in question was not invalid on the ground that it was made by the widow without the express permission of her husband and without the consent of the surviving coparceners. Their Lordships then turned to the other contention raised on behalf of the respondent to the effect that the last surviving coparcener at the date of the death of J was N and that the adoption having been made after the death of N was invalid. Their Lordships however repelled this contention on the ground that the adoption was not made after the extinction of the coparcenary but during its subsistence.

In 12 Pat 642⁶ it was decided that in a case where a Hindu was survived by a widow as well as by an infant son who had succeeded to the impartible zamindari held by his father but had died unmarried, the son's mother could validly adopt a son to continue the line although the zamindari was not vested in her. It was alleged in that case that according to the custom of the family, females were excluded from inheritance and that an adoption made a week after the death of the last male owner by his mother was invalid. Both Courts in India had found that the custom alleged was established and that the adoption was invalid on the ground that the mother could not exercise her power to adopt so as to divest the estate vested in the plaintiff. The parties were governed by the Benares School of the Mitakshara law. It was contended before their Lordships of the Privy Council that when once the estate had vested in an heir of the last male holder other than the adopting widow, the power of adoption was at an end. It was further urged that where the husband from whom the power to adopt was derived left a son to succeed to him and that son attained full legal capacity to continue the line, the power of his mother was equally at an end, and that this would be the case whether the family was separate or joint. Their Lordships while discussing the propositions stated above, first discussed the foundation of the doctrine of adoption and remarked that that doctrine was based upon the duty which every Hindu owes to his ancestors to provide for the continuance of the line and the solemnization of the necessary rites, and that if that duty had been passed on to a new generation, capable itself of the continuance, the father's duty had been performed and the means provided by him for its fulfilment spent. In dealing with the legal aspect of the case, their Lordships examined the older case referred to above as well as some recent cases mostly of their own Board and eventually came to the conclusion that the mother's power of adoption under her husband's authority was not exhausted at the death of her son and that the adoption was valid. In 59 Bom 360⁷ the authority mentioned above was followed and the decision given on the same lines.

Counsel for the appellants has contended that the recent Privy Council judgments are not in point inasmuch as they proceed on their own facts and do not justify a conclusion in the present case that the defendant's adoption was valid as here the son, whose widow, Mt. Bugli, made the adoption, had died during the lifetime of his father and that the estate vested in the widow of the father and that consequently Mt. Durgi could not be divested of the estate that she held by any act of Mt. Bugli. He mainly relied in this connexion on the principles deducible from the three older judgments of their Lordships of the Privy Council alluded to above. As against this, counsel for the respondent has urged that in the face of the principle enunciated in 12 Pat 642,⁶ the adoption under the Hindu law served the purpose of continuing the line and solemnizing the sacred rites. The adoption by Mt. Bugli could not therefore be challenged as invalid, especially when Mt. Durgi, in whom the estate vested, had in a way acquiesced in it.

On giving full consideration to the arguments addressed to us, we have arrived at the conclusion that the adoption of the defendant by Mt. Bugli at a time when she held no position in the family and was merely entitled to a small pittance cannot be held to be valid. Mt. Bugli's husband had died during the lifetime of his father and the only legal heir existing on the death of the father was Mt. Durgi. There could be no continuance of the line therefore by any act done by Mt. Bugli inasmuch as the heir who could take any effective steps to achieve that object was Mt. Durgi and none else. A case exactly on all fours with the present case has not so far arisen but our conclusion is justified by the principles we can deduce by way of analogy from the cases cited at the Bar. The matter of devolution of property may be a secondary consideration as remarked by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 12 Pat 642,⁶ but where the primary consideration does not exist, the secondary consideration in itself gains importance. Just as in 10 M I A 279,¹ 8 Cal 302² and 10 Mad 205³ which have not been dissented from in 12 Pat 642,⁶ the power of the father's widow to adopt was held to have terminated on the vesting of the estate in the son's widow, in the present case the power of the son's widow, if any, to adopt at the time when the property vested in the father's widow can safely be said to have come to an end. We accordingly hold that the adoption of the defendant was in the eye of the Hindu law invalid.

Even on the merits of the case, we are disposed to think that the respondent's claim cannot be maintained. As stated above, he was present at the time when the property in suit was purchased with the avowed object of building a Dharamsala. Besides, it was with his knowledge and implied consent that the building was consecrated as a Dharamsala. During the course of more than twenty years that this building remained in the charge of Janki Das and on his death in that of his son, Ram Chand, the defendant had never once claimed the property as his own or objected to its being treated as dedicated property. It was for the first time in 1931 that he obtained the possession of the property with the permission of the then manager and that too for a purpose for which the building was mainly intended. It was only when he had thus come into possession of the property by a clever trick played upon a simple minded manager who could not foresee the intentions which had actuated him that he set up a title in himself and took shelter under a legal defect in Lala Sri Ram's will. We consider that even if the defendant could be treated as a validly adopted son of Piare Lal the circumstances brought upon the record point to the conclusion that it was he who had made the dedication not only in consenting to the purchase of the property with the money left by Sri Ram for charitable purposes but also in agreeing to the construction of the property with the sale proceeds of the property belonging to Sri Ram. From whatever aspect therefore the case is considered, the respondent has not a leg to stand on. We accordingly accept this appeal, set aside the judgment of the Subordinate Judge and decree the plaintiffs' suit with costs throughout.

 Decided on 17th January 1938, from order of Sess. Judge, Sialkot, D/- 19th October 1937.

(a) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 342—Violation of S. 342 is illegality.

If S. 342 has been violated it is an illegality and not a mere irregularity. [P 543 C 2]

* (b) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 342—Warrant case—Examination of accused after further cross-examination of prosecution witnesses under S. 256 but before defence is not illegal.

The further examination of the prosecution witnesses under S. 256 is not a part of the prosecution case: A I R 1923 Mad 609 (F B), Rel. on ; Case law referred. [P 544 C 2]

But the further cross-examination is not part of the defence and the defence for which the accused is called on within the meaning of S. 342 starts after the further cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses: A I R 1936 All 319, Dissent.

Hence in a warrant case, which should be regarded as comprising three-stages—prosecution, further cross-examination of prosecution witnesses and defence, the examination under S. 342 can be held either immediately after the close of the first stage or immediately before the beginning of the third stage or for the matter of that at any time between these two points. [P 545 C 1]

(c) Penal Code (1860), Ss. 149 and 34—Ss. 149 and 34 though not identical may in some cases overlap.

It is true that S. 34 and S. 149 are not identical in terms but there are cases in which they do overlap. Hence, even where S. 149 is found not to apply, yet if accused had the common intention of causing hurt to their victim and therefore if hurt was caused by any of them they are all liable under S. 34 for the hurt that was caused.

Order. — Four persons, Mohammad Nawaz, Ghulam Hussain, Khair Din and

Kharait, are petitioners for the revision of their conviction on appeal by the learned Sessions Judge of Sialkot under Ss. 324 and 325, I. P. C. A preliminary objection has been taken by counsel for the petitioners that the mandatory provisions of S. 342, Criminal P. C., have not been complied with in this case. The procedure adopted in this case was that the learned Magistrate examined 14 prosecution witnesses up to 14th May. These witnesses were duly cross-examined as they gave their evidence. He then framed a charge and on the next date of hearing, a number of the prosecution witnesses were recalled under S. 256, Criminal P. C., and subjected to further cross-examination. He then examined the petitioners and after doing so recorded their defence evidence. It is contended on the part of the petitioners that
 S. 342 requires that he should have examined the accused immediately after the close of the prosecution case and before the further cross-examination under S. 256 and that his failure to do so has vitiated the trial. It is clear that if S. 342 has been violated it is an illegality and not a mere irregularity. This point has been set at rest by several authorities of this Court though it has been held that in revision it is not always necessary for this Court to interfere.

The question however is whether there has been non-compliance with S. 342 in this case. The point for decision is what is the correct stage of the trial of a warrant case at which the accused should be examined. It has apparently been held by some Courts that the correct time is when the further cross-examination as well as the examination of the prosecution witnesses is over and immediately before the defence.
 But this is not the view of this Court. In 4 Lah 61¹ it was held that an examination held before the further cross-examination was a proper compliance with the law.
*A I R 1926 Lah 154*² and A I R 1929 Lah
*371*³ are further authorities of this Court following 4 Lah 61.¹ The authorities relied upon in support of the contrary view are actually authorities for the proposition that was closed, a further examination is obligatory after the close of the further cross-examination under S. 256. This was held in A I R 1928 Lah 230⁴ which followed 7 Lah 564⁵ and also 1 P R 1918.⁶ I am however unable to read into the judgment in A I R 1928 Lah 230⁴ any words which make it an authority for the proposition that the proceedings under S. 256 are a part of the examination of the prosecution witnesses. The judgment does not clearly state what procedure was followed in that case, but in 7 Lah 564⁵ and 1 P R 1918⁶ what happened was that the accused was examined after some of the prosecution witnesses only had been examined under S. 252, Criminal P. C., and was not again examined after the remaining witnesses had been examined under this section. No real authority of this Court has been cited for the proposition that if the accused is examined after all the evidence has been taken under S. 252 it is obligatory to examine him again after the proceedings had been taken under S. 256. One judgment quoted is A I R 1934 Lah 648,⁷ but with due deference this does not appear to me a real authority for the proposition. The order of the Hon'ble Judge in that case is a very brief one merely accepting the reference. Only the petitioner was represented.

The learned Sessions Judge in his order of reference appears to have misunderstood 4 Lah 61¹ which consists of two parts first, the proposition that the proper place for the examination of the accused is after the examination of the prosecution witnesses under S. 252 and therefore there is no necessity to examine him again after the further cross-examination under S. 256 and secondly, the further proposition largely by way of an obiter dictum that even if the proper stage was after S. 256 had been complied with there was only a curable irregularity. It was the latter proposition, namely that there was only a curable irregularity which has been disapproved. The view therefore of this Court appears to be firmly established that the proper time for the examination of the accused under S. 342 is after the witnesses have been examined under S. 252. But there appears to be no authority for going further and holding that they must necessarily be examined before the further cross-examination under S. 256. In fact to hold this would be impossible for very often the proceedings under S. 256 overlap the proceedings under S. 252 as in cases where the Magistrate acting under S. 254 charges after having heard only some of the prosecution witnesses. Then the further cross-examination of those witnesses under S. 256 follows and after it is over the examination of the rest of the prosecution witnesses under S. 252 is resumed and concluded. In such a case it would be impossible to comply with S. 342 after complying with S. 252 but before complying with S. 256.

It is clear from the authorities which I have quoted that this High Court does not consider the further examination of the prosecution witnesses under S. 256 to be a part of the prosecution case and this view, which has also been held by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court in 46 Mad 449⁸ appears, if I may say so with due deference, to be obviously correct. But to uphold the contention of counsel for the petitioners in the present case, it will be necessary to hold that the proceedings under S. 256 are a part of the defence. If they are part of the defence, then S. 342 requires that the examination of the accused should be held before the case is called on for his defence. In one judgment, A I R 1936 All 319,⁹ it appears to have been held that the further cross-examination is part of the defence but for reasons which I shall presently give I venture to dissent from this view. In the Madras Full Bench case to which I have referred above, there are some words which might suggest that the Hon'ble Judges were regarding this further cross-examination as part of the defence but it is nowhere clearly stated that it is so. That judgment, like the three Lahore judgments to which I have referred above, is really an authority for the proposition that if the accused has been examined after the conclusion of the prosecution case under S. 252 he need not be again examined after the further cross-examination under S. 256. But the question whether the proceedings under S. 256 can be regarded as part of the defence can, I think, be determined by reference to that section itself read with S. 342. The important and relevant words in S. 342 are, "after the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined and before he is called on for his defence". S. 256 lays down first, that the accused is to be asked whether he wishes further to cross-examine any of the prosecution witnesses and if so that those witnesses are to be re-called and cross-examined. After that the evidence of any remaining prosecution witnesses is to be taken and then occurs the sentence, "the accused shall then be called upon to enter upon his defence and produce his evidence". These words clearly imply that the defence for which the accused is called on within the meaning of S. 342 starts after the further cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses and that all that S. 342 requires is that the examination of the accused shall take place before the defence witnesses are actually heard, or if no defence evidence is produced, before the defence arguments.

The trial of a warrant case should according to this view be regarded as comprising not merely two stages, prosecution and defence, but three stages, prosecution, further cross-examination of prosecution witnesses and defence. If this is so, then it is clear that S. 342 does not lay down any particular moment of time but a period of time within which the examination can be held. If the trial of a warrant case were regarded as having only two stages—prosecution and defence—then S. 342 would have to be interpreted as indicating a particular moment of time, namely that intervening between the close of the first stage and the beginning of the second. If however, as appears to me to be the correct view, there are three stages, then the examination under S. 342 can be held either immediately after the close of the first stage or immediately before the beginning of the third stage or for the matter of that at any time between these two points. It would however be inconvenient in most cases to interrupt the further cross-examination of the witnesses to examine the accused. That being my view, I hold that there has been no illegality in this trial as the provisions of S. 342 have been complied with. The examination of the accused was after the prosecution witnesses had been examined under S. 252 and before the accused had been called upon his defence within the meaning of the last words of S. 256.

Coming now to the merits, there appear to me no grounds for differing from the finding of the learned Sessions Judge. One point has been raised by counsel for the petitioners and that is that having found that Ss. 148 and 149 did not apply, the learned Sessions Judge should have acquitted two of the petitioners because there was no offence left. The learned counsel, however, has forgotten the existence of S. 34, I. P. C. It is true that S. 34 and S. 149 are not identical in terms but there are cases in which they do overlap and the present is one of them. It is clear that the finding of the learned Sessions Judge, with which I am unable to disagree is that the petitioners had the common intention of causing hurt to their victim and therefore if hurt was caused by any of them they are all liable under S. 34 for the hurt that was caused. The learned Sessions Judge on consideration of the evidence and after giving due weight to all the circumstances in favour of the accused i. e. the delay in making the first information report has found it established that the four petitioners were present and took part in the beating of Miran Bakhsh and they had the common intention of causing hurt to him. In my opinion they have been rightly convicted and the sentences not being excessive I dismiss the petition.

Commissioner of Income-tax —

Respondent.

Civil Ref. No. 24 of 1937, Decided on 19th January 1938, referred by Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, North West Frontier and Delhi Provinces, D/- 22nd October 1937.

(a) Income-tax Act (1922), S. 66 (3) — High Court, under S. 66 (3), has no jurisdiction to entertain question not raised in application to Commissioner under S. 66 (2).

The jurisdiction of the High Court, under S. 66 (3) is confined only to those matters which are contained in the application made to the Commissioner under sub-s. (2) of S. 66 and it is only in relation to such matters that the refusal of the Commissioner to state the case can be investigated by the High Court. Consequently if a point is not raised before the Commissioner, his refusal to state the case cannot be declared to be unjustified or, in other words, his decision cannot be pronounced to be incorrect. Hence, where the question whether the assessment made under S. 23 (4) was arbitrary was not raised in the application under S. 66 (2) the High Court has no jurisdiction to entertain that question. Apart from this if the assessee were permitted to raise questions touching the merits of the assessment before the High Court for the first time under sub-s. (3) of S. 66, it would amount to allowing him to appeal against an assessment, an appeal against which is expressly forbidden. [P 546 C 2 ; P 547 C 1]

* (b) Income-tax Act (1922), Ss. 23 (4) and 66 (3) — Assessment under S. 23 (4) — High Court cannot interfere merely by virtue of its general inherent jurisdiction.

The jurisdiction exercised by the High Court under the Income-tax Act is a special jurisdiction and is consequently circumscribed within the limits specified in the Statute. The power of revising, reviewing or interfering in any other manner with an assessment made under S. 23 (4) being nowhere conferred upon the High Court expressly or impliedly by the Income-tax Act, no such power can be exercised merely by virtue of the general inherent jurisdiction of the High Court, if any : *A I R 1931 Lah 87 (F B) ; A I R 1931 Rang 194 (F B) and A I R 1937 P C 133, Explained. Din Mohammad J. — This is a case stated under sub-s. (3) of S. 66, Income-tax Act. The question formulated by this Court was couched in the following terms :

Whether in the circumstances of this case the assessment of the petitioner was not made arbitrarily, recklessly or capriciously, without the Income-tax Officer exercising his 'judgment' in the matter, and is it not liable to be set aside.

The Commissioner has questioned the jurisdiction of this Court in entertaining a question which was not raised in the application submitted by the assessee to the Commissioner under sub-s. (2) of S. 66. It may be necessary to state the facts shortly in order to appreciate the force of this objection. The assessee did not make a return under sub-s. (2) of S. 22, nor did he comply with the terms of the notice issued under sub-s. 4 of the same section. Thereupon the Income-tax Officer made the assessment to the best of his judgment under sub-s. (4) of S. 23. The assessee applied under S. 27 for the cancellation of this assessment, but his application was disallowed. He then presented an appeal under S. 30, but the appeal, too, was dismissed. He subsequently moved the Commissioner under sub-s. (2) of S. 66, but the Commissioner refused to interfere with the assessment, on which the assessee put in an application in this Court with the result that the question referred to above was formulated and the Commissioner was required to state the case thereon. The question whether the assessment was arbitrary, reckless or capricious was never raised at any stage of the proceedings before the income-tax authorities and it is on this ground that the Commissioner has questioned the jurisdiction of this Court and has relied in this connexion on the wording of sub-s. (3) of S. 66. The material portion of this subsection reads as follows :

(3). If on any application being made under sub-s. (2), the Commissioner refuses to state the case on the ground that no question of law arises, the assessee may apply . . . to the High Court, and the High Court if it is not satisfied of the correctness of the Commissioner's decision, may require the Commissioner to state the case and to refer it. . . .

The Commissioner contends that the jurisdiction of the High Court is confined only to those matters which are contained in the application made to the Commissioner under sub-s. (2) of S. 66 and it is only in relation to such matters that the refusal of the Commissioner to state the case can be investigated by the High Court. Consequently if a point is not raised before the Commissioner, his refusal to state the case cannot be declared to be unjustified, or, in other words, his decision cannot be pronounced to be incorrect. We consider that there is much force in this contention and we have arrived at this conclusion not only on the wording of sub-s. (3) of S. 66, but on consideration of the whole scheme of the Act. It is clear that no appeal is allowed from an assessment made under sub-s. (4) of S. 23. The only course open to an assessee, who is assessed under that sub-section, is to approach the Income-tax Officer in the first instance under S. 27 and to ask for the cancellation of the assessment made against him. In case of refusal of the Income-tax Officer to accede to his request, he can move the Assistant Commissioner under sub-s. (1) of S. 30. All that he can contest before these authorities is the matter arising under S. 27 and no other matter can be raised either before the Income-tax Officer or before the Assistant Commissioner. Similarly, all that can be mooted before the Commissioner is the matter arising out of the appellate order of the Assistant Commissioner and no more. If the assessee were permitted to raise questions touching the merits of the assessment before the High Court for the first time under sub-s. (3) of S. 66, it would amount to allowing him to appeal against an assessment, an appeal against which is expressly forbidden. We accordingly hold that no mandamus could issue to the Commissioner on the point at issue.

Counsel for the assessee concedes the legal position as explained above, but he contends that there is an inherent power vested in this Court to interfere in cases of gross injustice or capricious assessments. In support of his contention he relies on 12 Lah 129,¹ 9 Rang 281² and I L R (1937) Nag 191.³ But in our opinion, none of these judgments lends any support to him. Read carefully these judgments rather go against his contention. In 12 Lah 129,¹ a case decided by five Judges of this Court, the main judgment was delivered by Sir Shadi Lal C. J. While discussing a similar question raised before him, he observed at page 144 of the report :

It is true that a finding of fact recorded by him (Income-tax Officer) cannot be impeached even when it is not based upon any material, nor is it open to the High Court to say with respect to a particular case that the assessment has been made contrary to the rules of justice and good conscience.

No doubt he added :

The High Court is however entitled to make a pronouncement upon the meaning of S. 23, sub-s. (4), and to lay down that the Income-tax Officer cannot be said to make an assessment to the best of his judgment, if he is not guided by the dictates of justice and fair play. As assessment resting upon the whim and caprice of the Income-tax Officer cannot be elevated to the dignity of an assessment made to the best of his judgment.

But it is obvious that these remarks were merely intended to impress upon the minds of the Income-tax Officers that while making assessments to the best of their judgment they should not be whimsical or capricious and not that the learned Judge had jurisdiction in the matter; nor did he interfere with the assessment. The conclusion at which he arrived is really contained in the earlier passage quoted above. In 9 Rang 281,² Page C. J. had observed at page 294 of the report :

If the word (arbitrary) is taken to mean that the Income-tax Officer, regardless of information in his possession, deliberately, recklessly or fraudulently has made an assessment under S. 23 (4) which he knows that he was not justified in making, in such circumstances and assuming that the assessee has failed to obtain redress as provided in the Act, I should not be prepared to hold, as at present advised, apart altogether from the provisions of the Income-tax Act, that this Court does not possess jurisdiction in virtue of its inherent prerogative powers to order the Income-tax Officer to do his duty.

The conclusion at which he arrived however is stated at page 302 of the report in the following words :

Under S. 66 (2) the assessee as therein provided may require the Commissioner of Income-tax inter alia to refer to the High Court any question of law arising out of an order of the Assistant Commissioner under S. 31, and if the Commissioner refuses to state a case on the ground that no question of law arises under S. 66 (3) on the assessee's application the High Court may require the Commissioner to state the case and to refer it. Inasmuch as the question whether an assessment made by the Income-tax Officer under S. 23 (4) is valid or not is not a question of law that arises or can arise out of an order of the Assistant Commissioner passed under S. 31, it follows that such a question cannot be made the ground for an order by the High Court under S. 66 (3) requiring the Commissioner to state a case.

His conclusions were concurred in by the other four colleagues of his who heard the case with him. Three of them merely said that they agreed, while Dunkley J. appended a separate note to the main judgment, throwing further light on these conclusions. In I L R (1937) Nag 191³ (corresponding to 5 I T R 170) their Lordships of the Privy Council observed :

Their Lordships find themselves in agreement with the views expressed by the High Court at Rangoon in 9 Rang 281.²

It is on this passage that counsel for the assessee has laid much stress and has argued that inasmuch as their Lordships of the Privy Council had agreed with the views expressed by the High Court at Rangoon, they impliedly accepted the views of Page C. J. as stated above in respect of the inherent jurisdiction vested in the High Court to interfere in such matters. We are not however disposed to interpret this passage in the manner suggested by the assessee's counsel. All that this passage conveys is that their Lordships were in agreement with the conclusions at which the High Court had arrived and those conclusions made no reference to the inherent jurisdiction of the High Court. The interpretation that we place upon the passage quoted from the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council finds support from the fact that their Lordships stated in an earlier part of the judgment that if the assessee was given no relief under S. 27, the assessment stood as it was. Reference in this connexion may be made to 7 I T C 173⁴ In that case it was held that the High Court had no power under S. 66 (3) to require the Commissioner of Income-tax to state the case on the question whether the assessment, being purely arbitrary and based on no materials whatever, was justified in point of law. The jurisdiction exercised by the High Court under the Income-tax Act is a special jurisdiction as remarked by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 4 I T R 323⁵ at page 339 and is consequently circumscribed within the limits specified in the Statute. The power of revising, reviewing or interfering in any other manner with an assessment made under S. 23 (4) being nowhere conferred upon the High Court expressly or impliedly by the Income-tax Act, no such power can be exercised merely by virtue of the general inherent jurisdiction of the High Court, if any. In view of our decision on the preliminary objection raised by the Commissioner, the question need not be answered; but even if it were permissible to us to consider the merits of the case we would have had no hesitation in holding that the order was neither arbitrary nor reckless nor capricious, and would thus have answered the question formulated by this Court in the affirmative. The assessee will pay the costs of this reference to the Commissioner of Income-tax.

Civil Revn. No. 151 of 1937, Decided on 2nd December 1937.

Civil P. C. (1908), S. 115, O. 37, R. 3— Order under O. 37, R. 3 giving leave to defend conditionally is interlocutory order and does not amount to 'case decided' — No revision lies against it — High Court cannot interfere even though it is assumed that it is not interlocutory order—Trial Court has full discretion in matter of granting leave—Wrong exercise of discretion does not amount to material irregularity in exercise of jurisdiction.

An order passed by a Court under O. 37, R. 3 giving leave to defendant conditionally is an interlocutory order and does not amount to a 'case decided' within the purview of S. 115 so as to be open to revision. [P 549 C 2]

It is not open to the High Court to interfere in revision with such order, although it is assumed that it is not an interlocutory order. Under R. 3, O. 37, the trial Court is entitled to refuse leave to defend or to give leave to defend unconditionally, or to give leave to defend conditionally and in giving such leave the trial Court cannot be said to have acted illegally or with material irregularity in the exercise of its discretion. A wrong exercise of discretion cannot amount to a material irregularity in the exercise of jurisdiction: A I R 1924 Lah 425 and A I R 1936 Mad 246, Rel. on; A I R 1930 All 758; A I R 1929 Mad 841; A I R 1935 Mad 302; (1900) 85 L T 262 and A I R 1935 Mad 43, Disting. [P 550 C 1]

Abdul Rashid J. — The suit, which has given rise to this petition for revision, was instituted by Nanhe Mal Sanwal Das, bankers, on 13th January 1937, under O. 37, Civil P. C. for recovery of Rs. 2521-5-0 on the basis of a hundi. Defendant 1 applied for leave to appear and defend the suit. After going into the affidavit filed by the defendant, the trial Court came to the conclusion that triable issues arose in the case. The Court was however of the opinion that there was grave suspicion as to the bona fides of the defence raised. The defendant was given leave to defend if he deposited the amount in suit and costs in Court by 1st March 1937. Against this decision defendant 1 has preferred a petition for revision to this Court, on the ground that the trial Court ought to have given him leave to defend unconditionally. This petition for revision came up for hearing before Dalip Singh J. on 2nd July 1937. He has referred the case to a Division Bench for decision. The first question for consideration is whether the order of the trial Court is an interlocutory order in the suit, or whether the proceedings regarding leave to defend should be considered as ancillary to the suit. If the order of the trial Court is to be regarded as an interlocutory order no revision lies to this Court as held by a Full Bench in 5 Lah 288.¹ It was contended by Mr. Jagan Nath Aggarwal, on behalf of the petitioner, that an application for leave to defend the suit is not an application in the suit and that such an application is a step in the ancillary proceedings pending before the Court with reference to the suit on the basis of a hundi. The learned counsel relied on a Division Bench ruling of the Allahabad High Court reported in 52 All 927² where it was held that the dismissal of an application for leave to sue as a pauper amounts to a 'case decided' within the meaning of S. 115, Civil P. C., and a revision lies therefrom if there are proper grounds for a revision.

In my opinion this authority does not support the contention of the learned counsel in any way. When an application for leave to sue as a pauper is dismissed by the Court, the matter is altogether brought to an end and the plaintiff is entirely out of Court. The application to sue as a pauper ripens into a suit only when it is granted. If the application is dismissed no suit can be said to have been instituted at all. Reference was also made by the learned counsel to A I R 1929 Mad 841.³ In this case it was held that where on a summary suit the Court grants only conditional permission to defend, despite its finding that there is a defence which has to be considered, the case is revisable. This is a very short judgment of a single Judge of the Madras High Court. It does not consider the question whether the order of the Court giving conditional permission to the petitioner to defend the case on giving security is an interlocutory order. In A I R 1935 Mad 302⁴ it was held that if there is a triable issue in the case, the Court ought to grant leave to defend without requiring the defendant either to pay the amount claimed or to furnish security therefor. This decision was also given by a single Judge. The question whether the order of the trial Court was an interlocutory order was not considered in any detail. The only observations made by the learned Judge on this question were as follows :

The Subordinate Judge seems to assume that in every case he ought to demand security. Anyhow his order does not show that he applied his mind to the matter and considered the question whether in the particular case there is a triable issue. In these circumstances as the amount involved in the suit is a very heavy amount and as the result of the lower Court's order may be substantial injustice, I am of opinion that a material irregularity has been committed by the trial Court.

The above-mentioned rulings of the Madras High Court cannot be taken to lay down that the order giving permission to defend conditionally is not an interlocutory order and comes within the meaning of the words "case decided" as used in S. 115, Civil P. C. In A I R 1936 Mad 246⁵ Varadachariar J. observed as follows :

It will certainly not be a reasonable interpretation of Cl. 2, R. 3, O. 37 of the Code to say that it contemplates only two courses, either a grant of leave unconditionally or a refusal of leave. At the time when the question of granting leave comes up, the Court has not before it the full materials on which it can come to a satisfactory conclusion on the merits of the proposed defence, and if it thinks that there is something to be said in defence, what in the present case the lower Court describes as a 'plausible defence,' it may be inclined to grant leave but only on condition of giving security.

The language of R. 2, O. 37, Civil P. C., makes it clear that orders passed by the Courts under R. 3, are interlocutory orders. R. 2 lays down that all suits upon bills of exchange, hundis or promissory notes may, in case the plaintiff desires to proceed hereunder, be instituted by presenting a plaint in the form prescribed. Cl. 2 of the same Rule lays down that in any case in which the plaint and summons are in such forms respectively, the defendant shall not appear or defend the suit unless he obtains leave from a Judge as hereinafter provided so to appear and defend. The suit having been instituted in the prescribed form the application by the defendant for leave to defend is an application in the suit which was instituted by presenting a plaint in the prescribed form and which must be regarded as a pending suit until the passing of the decree or the dismissal of the suit. I am therefore of the opinion that the order of the trial Court giving leave to defend conditionally is an interlocutory order and does not amount to a "case decided" within the purview of S. 115, Civil P. C.

The next question for consideration is whether this Court is entitled to interfere in revision with an order of the trial Court which gives leave to the defendant to defend conditionally, assuming the order not to be an interlocutory order. The learned counsel for the petitioner relies on a ruling of their Lordships of the House of Lords reported in 85 L T 262.⁶ He contends that the provisions of Rr. 1 to 6 of O. 14 of the Rules of the Supreme Court were identical with the provisions of O. 37, Civil P. C., and that if triable issues arise in a case, leave to defend is given unconditionally in England. The facts of the reported case were that the defendant had signed a memorandum of charge and two promissory notes with a co-defendant who did not contest his liability to secure an advance and further moneys. He received an indemnity from his co-defendant and stated that he had been told that he incurred no liability by signing and that he had signed the memorandum and two promissory notes relying on that representation. The respondents brought their action for £3295, the amount due from the defendant and his co-defendant. On an application under O. 14, the Master ordered the amount to be paid into Court within seven days, with judgment if the sum was not so paid. This order was affirmed on appeal by the Judge at Chambers and by the Court of Appeal. The defendant appealed to the House of Lords and it was held that the defendant ought to have been given leave to defend unconditionally. The reported case is distinguishable from the present case in so far as in the reported case their Lordships were dealing with an appeal. It was open to them to substitute their own discretion for the discretion exercised by the first Court. In a petition for revision under S. 115, Civil P. C., this Court can interfere only if the trial Court has exercised jurisdiction not vested in it by law, or has failed to exercise jurisdiction so vested, or has acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity. Under R. 3 of O. 37 the trial Court was entitled to refuse leave to defend or to give leave to defend unconditionally or to give leave to defend conditionally. In giving leave to defend conditionally the trial Court cannot be said to have acted illegally or with material irregularity in the exercise of its jurisdiction. A wrong exercise of discretion cannot amount to a material irregularity in the exercise of jurisdiction.

Reference was also made by Mr. Jagan-nath Aggarwal to 58 Mad 116.⁷ That was a case in which an appeal was preferred to a Division Bench from a judgment delivered by a single Judge on the Original Side. It was held therein that if a defendant sets up a defence in his affidavit in support of his application for leave to defend which, if he should succeed in proving, would entitle him to succeed in the suit, then the Master or the Court before whom the application comes has no discretion whatever in the matter and that unconditional leave to defend should be granted because a triable issue has been raised by the defendant and it is not open to the Master or anybody else other than the trial Judge to go into the merits and discover whether the defence set up is true or false. The question whether the order of the trial Court granting leave conditionally is subject to revision by the High Court was not and could not be considered in that case. I am accordingly of the opinion that in the present case no question of the illegal or irregular exercise of jurisdiction by the trial Court arises, and that the order of the trial Court is therefore not open to revision under S. 115, Civil P. C. For the reasons given above I would dismiss this petition for revision with costs.

that two gifts of land made by Imam Din in favour of his sister's son and a collateral respectively would not affect their reversionary rights upon his death. The trial Judge dismissed the suits and the District Judge dismissed the appeals. He has however granted a certificate under S. 41, Punjab Courts Act for second appeals to this Court on the question of custom involved. This judgment will dispose of both appeals which are Nos. 741 and 785 of 1937. The answer to question 84 (A) of the Customary law of the Jullundur District compiled in 1914 is to the effect that the Arains and Awans of the Jullundur Tehsil say that in the absence of a male issue they can alienate by gift the whole or part of their property in favour of their relations without the consent of their legal heirs. This is definite enough but the answer to question 90 (A) throws some doubt upon the question. That question was as to whether a father could make a gift of his property to his daughter, his daughter's son, his sister or her sons or his son-in-law and the answer given is that all tribes in the Jullundur Tehsil admitted that a father could gift his self-acquired property to his daughter, to his daughter's sons, to his sister or her sons, or to his son-in-law even in the presence of sons or near kindred but could not make a gift of his ancestral property without the consent of sons or near kindred. The Awans and Arains of Jullundur Tehsil are not specially noted as objecting to this reply, though the answer given to question 90 (A) seems to be in part contradiction of the answer given to question 84 (A) so far as they are concerned. It may be noted here that the parties are Arains of Jullundur Tehsil.

In 24 P R 1905¹ it was held that the defendants had failed to prove that by custom among Arains of the Jullundur Tehsil a sonless proprietor was competent to gift his ancestral property to his sister's son in the presence of his male agnates. That decision appears to be in favour of the appellants but was given before the present Customary law was compiled. In 127 P R 1907² it was held that by custom among Awans of the Jullundur District a childless proprietor was not competent to make a free and absolute gift of his ancestral land to strangers and non-relations in the presence of his male agnates. In 57 I C 248,³ however another Division Bench held on the Customary law that among Awans of the Jullundur Tehsil a gift by a sonless proprietor of ancestral land partly to his sister's son and partly to his mother's sister's son was valid. They relied upon 127 P R 1907² as stating that though Awan proprietors had by custom undoubtedly large powers of disposition, these powers did not extend to gifts to complete strangers. The learned Judges, who decided that case, had apparently in view the terms of the Customary law. The Judges, who decided 57 I C 248,³ therefore, held that as given in the answer to question 84 (A), Awans of the Jullundur Tehsil in the absence of male issue could transfer the whole or part of their property in favour of their relations without the consent of their legal heirs. The case before us is similar as the Arains of the Jullundur Tehsil gave the same answer as the Awans.

It would seem that the compiler of the Jullundur Customary law put down too many questions with regard to gifts so that the questions overlap. Question 90 (A) and its answer as to gifts to daughters, etc. overlap question 84 (A). It is most probable that the Arains and Awans of Jullundur Tehsil thought that they had given a full answer to question 84 (A) and for that reason they are not again specifically mentioned in the answer to question 90 (A). We hold, therefore, that the riwaj-i-am allows such gifts of ancestral land made by sonless proprietors to relations. Instances of such gifts have also been relied upon by the Courts below. On the evidence, therefore, the suits were properly decided and we dismiss these appeals with costs.

vant for purpose of inquiry, Income-tax Officer is final arbiter and not assessee—Income-tax Officer calling for production of all account books—Assessee producing some but withholding others—This amounts to non-compliance with S. 22 (4) even if Income-tax Officer utilizes account books actually produced.

It is the requirement of the Income-tax Officer which is to be satisfied by the assessee under sub-s. (4) of S. 22 and not what the assessee thinks the Income-tax Officer should, in the circumstances of the case, have required. In other words the final arbiter of what is required is the Income-tax Officer and not the assessee. It would therefore be entirely for the income-tax authorities to determine what evidence they consider relevant for the purposes of their enquiry and to contend that a certain piece of evidence which they considered to be relevant was not relevant at all to the matter at issue would be in a way to encroach upon their domain. Similarly, if an Income-tax Officer calls for all the previous accounts relating to the various businesses conducted by the assessee, but the assessee withholds some of them and the Income-tax Officer utilizes the accounts produced by the assessee in making his estimate, it cannot be argued that those accounts which were not produced by the assessee were not required for the purpose of the assessment. The withholding of some of the account books which the assessee had been called upon to produce amounts therefore to a non-compliance with the terms of the notice issued under sub-s. (4) of S. 22 and entails all the penalties laid down in sub-s. (4) of S. 23: A I R 1931 All 417, Disting.; A I R 1929 Mad 60, Rel. on. [P 553 C 1, 2]

(b) Income-tax Act (1922), S. 23 (4)—Income-tax Officer calling upon assessee to produce all account books—Assessee withholding some—Income-tax Officer can make assessment under S. 23 (4) even if he bases assessment of next year on same account books produced by assessee in previous year.

What happens in a subsequent year cannot be taken to be a criterion for what should have happened in the previous year, and if an order made by the Income-tax Officer is not open to objection on any legal ground, it cannot be set aside merely on the ground that in any subsequent year he himself, or his successor, did what he refuses to do previously. [P 552 C 2; P 554 C 1]

Where therefore an Income-tax Officer calls upon the assessee to produce all the account books but the assessee withholds some, the Income-tax Officer is entitled to make assessment under S. 23 (4) even if he bases the assessment of the next year on the same material in the account books produced by the assessee in the previous year. Kirpa Ram Bajaj — for Petitioners.

J. N. Aggarwal and S. M. Sikri —
for Respondent.

Din Mohammad J.—This is a petition under sub-s. (3) of S. 66, Income-tax Act praying for the issue of a mandamus to the Commissioner to state the case of the petitioner and to refer it to this Court. Originally 11 questions were formulated in the petition but the petitioner's counsel has now confined himself to the two questions stated below: (1) Whether there has been any non-compliance with the terms of the notice issued to the petitioner under sub-s. (4) of S. 22; and (2) whether in view of the fact that the assessment for the next year was based on the same material in the account books which were produced before the Income-tax Officer, the Income-tax Officer and the Assistant Commissioner were legally competent to assess the petitioner under sub-s. (4) of S. 23.

The facts giving rise to the two questions propounded above are as follows. The assessee is a Hindu undivided family trading in hardware at Ludhiana and in the neighbouring States. He submitted the usual return for 1932-33 on which he was duly assessed on 2nd November 1932. In the course of assessment proceedings for the year 1933-34 it transpired that the assessee's income for 1932-33 had escaped assessment and that it had further been assessed at a low rate. The Income-tax Officer, who was then dealing with the case, thereupon issued a notice under S. 34 and called upon the assessee to submit a fresh return in relation to the assessable income. The assessee submitted a return but it was found to be incomplete. Thereupon, a notice under sub-s. (4) of S. 22 was served on the assessee requiring him to produce all the account books relating to the various concerns in which the assessee was interested. With this notice only a partial compliance was made inasmuch as a large number of books dealing with the old accounts of certain concerns belonging to the assessee were withheld. Consequently the Income-tax Officer made an assessment to the best of his judgment under sub-s. (4) of S. 23, but in order to arrive at the figure on which the assessment should be made, he referred to the account books which had been produced by the assessee and utilized certain materials appearing in those account books in arriving at his conclusion. The assessee made an application under S. 27 but the application was rejected by the Income-tax Officer on 14th February 1936, and an appeal against that order also failed. On a petition being made under sub-s. (2) of S. 66, the Commissioner came to the conclusion that no issue of law arose and consequently dismissed the petition.

The main contention of the assessee is that most of the books which were not produced were irrelevant to the inquiry and that even their absence had not been felt by the Income-tax Officer inasmuch as he was in a position to make the assessment on information furnished by the account books which were actually produced and that consequently it could not be said that there was any non-compliance with the terms of the notice issued under sub-s. (4) of S. 22. In support of his contention he has relied on 5 I T C 142;¹ but neither does the contention raised by the assessee appear to us to be sound nor does the authority relied on by him advance his case any further. Sub-section (4) of S. 22 empowers the Income-tax Officer to serve on any person contemplated by the sub-section a notice requiring him to produce such accounts or documents as the Income-tax Officer may require. Sub-s. (4) of S. 23 enacts that if any person fails to comply with all the terms of a notice issued under sub-s. (4) of S. 22, the Income-tax Officer shall make the assessment to the best of his judgment. Reading these two provisions of law together, the only conclusion that can reasonably be deduced is that it is the requirement of the Income-tax Officer which is to be satisfied by the assessee under sub-s. (4), S. 22 and not what the assessee thinks the Income-tax Officer should in the circumstances of the case have required. In other words, the final arbiter of what is required is the Income-tax Officer and not the assessee. If therefore there is any non-compliance with any of the terms of the notice issued under sub-s. (4) of S. 22, the assessee makes himself liable to be assessed under sub-s. (4) of S. 23. To put any other construction on the clear wording of the statute as contained in sub-s. (4), S. 22 or sub-s. (4) of S. 23 would amount to substituting the assessee for the income-tax authorities to determine what materials are necessary to be produced in order to enable the Income-tax Officer to arrive at a just estimate of an assessee's income. This could never have been the intention of the Legislature while enacting these provisions.

In 5 I T C 142¹ the Income-tax Officer had based his assessment on the actual entries in the books produced by the assessee and had come to the conclusion that there was no extra income on which the assessee should have been assessed or that such income could have been discovered by the production of those books which had not been produced. Here however, the circumstances are quite different, and the Income-tax Officer has repeatedly observed that the profits have been concealed and that the non-production of some of the books required by him is deliberate. That case therefore is distinguishable on the grounds stated above. It may be that as remarked by the learned Judges in that case, "the word 'require' really means require as a piece of relevant evidence" and that it does not mean "that the Income-tax Officer should ask for documents or account books which he does not think to be relevant at all"; but, as observed in the same judgment, an Income-tax Officer is entitled to call for documents which in his opinion would furnish him with relevant material for assessment of tax. It is a well-established rule of law that the income-tax authorities are the sole arbiters of facts and that the conclusions reached by them on questions of facts are not liable to be disturbed by any outside authority. It would therefore be entirely for the income-tax authorities to determine what evidence they consider relevant for the purposes of their enquiry and to contend that a certain piece of evidence which they considered to be relevant was not relevant at all to the matter at issue would be in a way to encroach upon their domain.

Similarly, if an Income-tax Officer, after calling for the previous accounts relating to the various businesses conducted by the assessee, utilizes the accounts produced by the assessee in making his estimate, it cannot be argued that those accounts which were not produced by the assessee were not required for the purpose of the assessment. An Income-tax Officer may refer to the accounts produced in order to arrive at an estimate of the assessable income or he may look into the accounts in order to justify his conclusion as to the falsity of the accounts submitted by the assessee; but, in our view, it is going too far to say that if an Income-tax Officer utilizes any account books in arriving at his estimate, those were the only relevant accounts which were necessary for his purpose and that he was not justified in asking for any other account books. The withholding of some of the account books which the assessee in this case had been called upon to produce amounted therefore to a non-compliance with the terms of the notice issued under sub-s. (4) of S. 22 and entailed all the penalties laid down in sub-s. (4) of S. 23. In support of this conclusion reference may be made to 3 I T C 290² at page 297.

The second question can be disposed of on the short ground that what happens in a subsequent year cannot be taken to be a criterion for what should have happened in the previous year, and that if an order made by the Income-tax Officer is not open to objection on any legal ground, it cannot be set aside merely on the ground that in any subsequent year he himself, or his successor, did what he refused to do previously. We accordingly answer both questions suggested by the assessee in the affirmative and dismiss this petition. The Commissioner will however get his counsel's fee from the assessee which we estimate at Rs. 50.

Second Appeal No. 341 of 1937, Decided on 23rd November 1937, from decree of Dist. Judge, Lyallpur, D/- 18th February 1937.

(a) Custom (Punjab) — Widow — Widow on succeeding to husband's tenancy acquiring proprietary rights—She acquires them as absolute owner.

Where a widow, on succeeding to the tenancy held by her deceased husband on peasant terms, purchases the proprietary rights from the Government, she does not acquire them as a life estate for the benefit of her reversioners; she does so in her own capacity and is absolute owner: A I R 1914 Lah 509 and A I R 1916 Lah 100, Rel. on; Case law referred. [P 556 O 1]

(b) Custom (Punjab)—Widow — Widow has full power over income of estate held by her as widow — Property acquired out of such income is her own separate property.

Under Customary law in the Punjab, a widow has full power over the income of the estate which she holds as a widow and can do with it what she likes. If she acquires any property out of that income, it is not an accretion to her husband's estate but her own separate property. [P 556 O 1]

Addison J. — A square of land in Chak No. 99 R. B. in Tahsil Jaranwala of the Lyallpur District was granted to Mian Singh, Jat, the husband of Mt. Raj Devi, plaintiff 1, as a tenant on abadkari or peasant terms. Mian Singh died as a tenant. Subsequent to his death his widow, Mt. Raj Devi, who succeeded to the tenancy, purchased the proprietary rights in August 1933 from the Government. Thereafter she gifted the land in favour of plaintiffs 2 to 4 by means of a registered deed, dated 24th August 1933. The defendants are reversioners of Mian Singh and resisted possession. Accordingly the plaintiffs have brought the present suit for possession of the land. The pleas of the defendants were to the effect that Mt. Raj Devi acquired proprietary rights only as a representative of her deceased husband and not as an absolute owner and that therefore she had only a widow's estate in those rights. It was further contended that the money paid for the acquisition of the proprietary rights was money derived from the income of the property in suit which she held as a widow under Customary law and that, therefore, the property in the land was an accretion to the estate of her deceased husband. Following numerous decisions of this Court, the pleas of the defendants were rejected by the trial Judge and the lower Appellate Court and a decree for possession given. Against this decision the defendants have preferred this second appeal.

There is a mass of authority in favour of the view that under Customary law a widow thus acquiring proprietary rights acquires them as an absolute owner whether the grant is a peasant or yeoman grant. In the peasant grants, as a matter of fact, no provision was made for more than acquisition of occupancy rights though in the yeoman grants provision was made both for occupancy rights and proprietary rights on payment of certain sums and on fulfilment of certain conditions. This however does not affect the merits of the appeal. The first case which we need refer to is 8 P R 1915.¹ That was a case somewhat similar to the present and it was held that the widows when they paid the necessary sums to the Government became ipso facto owners of the land in their own right and could not be dispossessed therefrom. An absolutely similar case is 129 P R 1916² while 5 P R 1918³ was decided on the same reasoning though the facts were slightly different. In it the sons acquired the proprietary rights on payment though their father was the original Government tenant and had acquired occupancy rights. It was held that as the sons acquired the proprietary rights, the land was self-acquired in their hands, though their father was the original grantee and had acquired occupancy rights therein.

Similarly in A I R 1921 Lah 315,⁴ a decision by Sir Shadi Lal C. J. and Wilberforce J., it was held that the land in the widow's hands was her self-acquired property as she had acquired the proprietary rights and the reversioners had therefore no power to control her acts. 2 Lah 195⁵ is a case where the father was the grantee and the sons acquired proprietary rights from Government. It was held that the land was not ancestral in the hands of the sons. In 6 Lah 134⁶ it was held that the widow acquired the occupancy rights for herself and not as representative of her deceased husband and that her right to dispose of such self-acquired property was unlimited. This was a case where the husband was the original tenant but had not acquired occupancy rights before he died. The reasoning is the same as in the other cases. A I R 1931 Lah 417⁷ is an extreme case. The grantee died before acquiring proprietary rights and mutation was effected in the names of his three sons and the widow of his predeceased son in equal shares, it being noted that the widow would hold the tenancy till death or re-marriage. Subsequently the Deputy Commissioner passed an order conferring proprietary rights in the tenancy on the deceased and directed the land to be mutated in the names of the three sons and the widow as full owners in equal shares. It was held that, as regards the one-fourth share, the widow must be considered to be an absolute owner, having full right to devise her share as she liked. This was a decision by Harrison and Tek Chand JJ.

The last case which we need refer to is A I R 1934 Lah 485.⁸ That was a case where the widow under Customary law was in possession of her husband's estate and acquired certain property by the exercise of the right of pre-emption which she had in her capacity as holding the land as a widow. It was not proved that the pre-emptive price was paid from the husband's estate and it was held that the property so acquired did not form part of the husband's estate. In the judgment of Monroe J. occur the following remarks :

Mr. Badri Das has admitted to us that there is no direct authority in his favour and it seems to me that unless the principle of *Keech v. Sandford*⁹ is part of the Customary law of the Punjab the conclusion contended for by Mr. Badri Das would not follow. If that principle were part of the Customary law there would long ago have been some statement in the authorities to that effect.

There is much force in the remarks quoted, for, custom depends on what has been done in the past and there is no authority except possibly one case which helps the appellants in a way. It is true that under Hindu law (see A I R 1925 Lah 2)¹⁰ an accretion made by an heiress partakes of the estate to which it is added, but the question whether any property is an accretion to the estate of the deceased husband is one of intention on the part of the heiress to augment that estate by treating it as a part thereof, though in the absence of anything appearing to the contrary any purchase made out of the income of an estate may be presumed to be an accretion thereto under Hindu law. Similarly 65 I C 305¹¹ was a decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in somewhat similar terms. That also was a case under Hindu law.

It was contended however that the decision in A I R 1932 Lah 144¹² was in favour of the appellants. That was a case standing by itself where the first instalment of the purchase money was paid by the son of the grantee before he died. On the son's death his widows were entered as having inherited his rights in equal shares as a life estate and they paid the remaining instalments. It was held in the peculiar circumstances of that case that the widows had only a life estate in the land when purchased outright. That case however stands by itself and is not an authority in a straightforward case like the present, which is undoubtedly governed by the other authorities referred to. The course of decision on this question in the Punjab has been uniform and it cannot be held that under Customary law a widow acquires under the Colonization of Government Lands (Punjab) Act 5 of 1912 the proprietary rights in the land from Government as a life estate for the benefit of the reversioners. She does so in her own capacity and is absolute owner. This was the only ground of appeal argued and there is obviously no force in the first ground of appeal to the effect that the District Judge was wrong in law in holding that the doctrine of graft and the principle of S. 90, Trusts Act were inapplicable to the present case. A Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court held in 43 All 374¹³ that a Hindu widow in possession of her husband's estate, who acquired certain property through the exercise of her right of pre-emption which she had in that capacity, but did not pay the pre-emptive price from her husband's estate, held the property so acquired as her own separate property and that S. 90, Trusts Act had no application. Under Customary law, a widow has full power over the income of the estate which she holds as a widow and can do with it as she likes and we know of no case where it has been held that if she acquired property out of that income it was an accretion to her husband's estate and not her own separate property. Under Customary law it is necessary to prove that such a custom exists, and it is now too late in the day to put forward any such plea which, moreover, is not supported by any evidence. For the reasons given, we dismiss this appeal with costs.

Criminal Appeal No. 1282 of 1937, Decided on 4th January 1938, from order of Addl. Sessions Judge, Amritsar, D/- 12th November 1937.

(a) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 164 — Accused volunteering to make confession — Magistrate recording confession but not appending certificate — Magistrate deposing as to having gone through formalities — Confession held admissible.

The accused on being produced before a Magistrate for an order of remand stated that he wanted to make a confession and the Magistrate had his handcuffs removed and gave him ten minutes' time to reflect and then recorded the confession. The certificate required by S. 164 was not appended to the confession but the Magistrate was examined as a witness and had deposed that he had satisfied himself that the confession was being made voluntarily and that he had told the accused that he need not make any confession to him and that if he made one it would be used against him :

Held that the confession was admissible in evidence. [P 557 O 2]

(b) Penal Code (1860), S. 302 — Sentence — Accused's wife of loose character giving birth to child begotten through another man—Accused, feeling insulted on his being congratulated by fellow villagers, killing his wife—Lesser penalty held sufficient.

The deceased, who was the wife of the accused was of a loose character and was turned out by the accused; while living with her parents, she conceived from a stranger and came back to the house of the accused in a state of pregnancy and gave birth to an illegitimate child in his house; and the accused being chafed by his fellow villagers who "congratulated" him on the birth of a son, murdered the deceased :

Held that it was not a case in which the extreme penalty of law should be imposed and that the ends of justice would be met by a sentence for transportation for life. [P 558 O 1]

A. R. Kapur — *for Appellant.*R. C. Soni for Advocate-General —

Tek Chand J. — Kartar Singh, Jat of mauza Sarai Amanat Khan Tehsil Tarn Taran, Amritsar District, has been convicted of the murder of his wife Mt. Amar Kaur and has been sentenced to death. At the same trial, he has also been convicted under S. 326, I. P. C., for having caused grievous hurt with a dangerous weapon to an illegitimate son who had been born to Mt. Amar Kaur fifteen days before the occurrence. For this latter offence, Kartar Singh has been sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for seven years. Mt. Amar Kaur was married to the appellant seven or eight years ago. Subsequently she became of loose character and was discarded by the appellant and was sent back to her parent's village. He himself appears to have given up worldly affairs and began to reside in the local Gurdwara, and is stated to have led the life of a devout Sikh. Mt. Amar Kaur's parents tried once or twice to bring about a reconciliation but as the appellant continued to hear stories about her loose character he declined to receive her back. About nine months before the occurrence, Mt. Amar Kaur conceived from some other person while living in her parents' village. Shortly afterwards her parents brought her back to Sarai Amanat Khan and left her in the appellant's house. There she gave birth to a son about 15 days before she was killed. The appellant felt insulted at the birth of an illegitimate child in his own house, and resented people congratulating him on the birth of a "son".

It is alleged that on the night between 9th and 10th August 1937, the appellant came to his chaubara and invited Mt. Amar Kaur to come there to help him in lifting a bundle of wheat. Accordingly she came into the chaubara, and the appellant stabbed her in the abdomen with a kirpan. She fell down wounded and began to groan. The appellant then stabbed the child and went back to the Gurdwara. The cries of the wounded persons attracted some neighbours, who brought the village physician Nabi Bakhsh (P. W. 7). In the meantime, some relations of the appellant had also come, and brought him back from the Gurdwara to his own house. Hakim Nabi Bakhsh dressed the wounds of Mt. Amar Kaur and the child. On his arrival, Nabi Bakhsh asked Mt. Amar Kaur as to what had happened and she replied that the appellant, who was sitting nearby, had thrust a kirpan into her abdomen. Nabi Bakhsh then addressed the appellant and asked him: "Bhai, what have you done"? The appellant replied: "She has suffered the consequences of her acts and I will suffer the consequences of my acts." Mt. Amar Kaur died shortly after sunrise. The child was removed to the hospital, where it remained till the 22nd when it died, the cause of death, according to the Civil Surgeon, who performed the post mortem examination, being "weakness and malnutrition." There is no direct evidence of the crime. The prosecution however rely upon the extrajudicial confession made by the appellant before Hakim Nabi Bakhsh and two of the village lambardars, Wassan Singh (P. W. 4) and Kartar Singh (P. W. 13). In addition to this, there is the confession made by the appellant before Khan Fazal Qadar Khan, Magistrate, Second Class, on 11th August 1937. The learned Additional Sessions Judge has accepted these confessions as true.

Before us, the learned counsel for the appellant has argued that the recorded confession before the Magistrate is inadmissible in evidence as it was not made voluntarily and the requirements of S. 164, Criminal P. C., were not complied with. We see no force in these contentions. It appears from the statement of the Sub-Inspector that the appellant was produced before the Magistrate in order to get a remand. When he was brought before the Magistrate the appellant stated that he wanted to make a confession. On this the Magistrate had the handcuffs removed, gave him ten minutes' time to reflect, and then recorded the confession, (Ex. P. W.), and after recording it remanded him to the judicial lock-up. The certificates required by S. 164 are not appended to the confession (Ex. P. W.), but the Magistrate has been examined as a witness and has deposed that he had satisfied himself that the confession was being made voluntarily, that he had told the appellant that he need not make any confession to him and that if he made one, it might be used against him. There is no reason to disbelieve the sworn testimony of the Magistrate. We hold therefore that this confession is admissible in evidence. But even if the recorded confession be left out of consideration there is no reason to doubt the genuineness of the extra-judicial confession made by the appellant before Hakim Nabi Bakhsh and the two lambardars, Wassan Singh and Kartar Singh. All these witnesses have given clear, consistent and convincing evidence, and no reason has been suggested to doubt the veracity of any one of them. We accordingly hold that the appellant killed Mt. Amar Kaur with a kirpan and that he also stabbed the child. He has therefore been rightly convicted under S. 302 of the murder of Mt. Amar Kaur and under S. 326 for causing grievous hurt with a dangerous weapon to the child.

There remains the question of sentence. There is no doubt that Mt. Amar Kaur was a person of loose character and that while living in her parents' village she conceived from a stranger and came to the appellant's house in a state of pregnancy. This was naturally resented by the appellant. She then gave birth to an illegitimate child in his house, and he was chafed by his fellow villagers who "congratulated" him on the birth of a son. In these circumstances, we think that this is not a case in which the extreme penalty of the law should be imposed on him. We think that the ends of justice will be met by imposing a sentence of transportation for life. We accordingly maintain the conviction but commute the sentence of death to one of transportation for life. To this extent the appeal is accepted. The sentence of seven years' rigorous imprisonment under S. 326 for causing grievous hurt to the child is confirmed. The two sentences will run concurrently.

Judgment.—Plaintiff Abdullah Shah sued in this case for possession of one-half share in a house, which had been given to his daughter Mt. Rabia Begam in lieu of dower at the time of her marriage with Mohammad Yakub. The house was actually gifted in lieu of dower in favour of Mt. Rabia Begam by Mt. Latifan, mother of Mohammad Yakub. Mt. Latifan in her turn had obtained the house from her husband Mohammad Wain and Mahammad Wain had purchased it from Mt. Zainab on 14th August 1900. On the death of Mt. Rabia Begam, the plaintiff Abdullah Shah claimed that he was entitled to one-half of the house according to Mahomedan law. The trial Court decreed the suit. On appeal, it was urged on behalf of the defendants that Mt. Latifan had never acquired any valid title to the house. One of the points raised in this connexion was that Mt. Latifan's husband, Mohammad Wain, had purchased the house after the date on which he was married to Mt. Latifan, when it is alleged to have been gifted by him to her. The date of the marriage of Mohammad Wain with Mt. Latifan, as given in the kabinnama and in the deed of gift in favour of Mt. Rabia Begam, is 25th Zilhaj Hijri 1318 and the corresponding date is given as 17th May 1900. The learned District Judge therefore held that as Mohammad Wain purchased the house on 14th August 1900, he could not have been in a position to make a gift of it on 17th May 1900. On this ground he accepted the appeal and granted the plaintiff only a decree for possession of 1/16th share of the house, as he considered that the gift could be upheld to this extent on other grounds. From this decision Abdullah Shah has preferred a second appeal.

The main ground which was urged before me was that even if the findings of the learned District Judge were accepted as correct, the defendants were estopped from pleading that Mt. Latifan had not acquired a valid title to the house; because even if Mohammad Wain was not an owner of the house at the time of the gift in favour of Mt. Latifan, he did become an owner subsequently and in the circumstances he and his representatives were clearly estopped from pleading that Mt. Latifan did not acquire a valid title to the house. In support of his contention, S. 115, Evidence Act, and the illustration thereto were relied on. The learned counsel for the respondents on the other hand contended that the plea of estoppel was never raised in the Courts below and therefore the appellant was not entitled to take it in second appeal. But the facts on which the plea is based are on the record and the learned counsel for the appellant has urged it on the footing of the findings of the learned District Judge himself. In the circumstances I see no reason why it should not be entertained in second appeal: cf. 8 Rang 223¹ at page 228.

It is not disputed that the parties are the representatives of Mohammad Wain and Mt. Latifan respectively. It was urged by the learned counsel for the respondents that it was not distinctly pleaded that any deception was practised on Mt. Latifan in this respect. But it is not necessary for the purpose of S. 115 that any fraud or deception should be pleaded. If it is found that any representation was intentionally made by one party and it was acted upon by the other party, the rule of estoppel will apply. In the present instance it seems clear that Mt. Latifan would not have accepted the house in lieu of her dower if Mohammad Wain had not represented that the house was his property. I therefore hold that the defendants are estopped from contending that Mt. Latifan was not the owner of the house when she gifted it to Mt. Rabia. On this finding the plaintiff must succeed.

I may note further that it appears from the calendar that as a matter of fact the actual date corresponding to 25th Zilhaj 1318 Hijri is 15th April 1901 and not 17th May 1900 as given in the deed of gift and deed of dower, (Exs. D-1 and D-2). The learned District Judge's finding was thus based on an erroneous statements as to the corresponding dates in these documents. The correct corresponding date has been verified from the authorized calendar of the Chief Court for the year 1901 and there appears to be a mistake in giving the date in the deed of gift as well as in the kabin-nama. The learned counsel for the respondents contended that this point also was not taken in the Courts below; but I think that the Court is entitled to take judicial notice of this fact. In view of the above findings it is unnecessary to consider the other issues. I accept the appeal and setting aside the decree of the learned District Judge restore that of the trial Court with half the costs throughout. I am not awarding full costs to the appellant as he did not take up the main pleas on which he has succeeded in second appeal at the very outset.

Company—Winding up — Defendant holding share in company registered in Indian State and residing in British India not appearing before State Liquidation Court and not submitting to its jurisdiction—Call order made against him by Liquidation Court is without jurisdiction and cannot be enforced as such in British India.

In a personal action, a decree pronounced by a Court of a foreign state in absentem, the defendant not having submitted to its authority, is by international law a nullity: 22 Cal 222 (PC) and 158 I C 24, Rel. on. [P 560 C 1]

Where the defendant, who is a share-holder in a company registered in an Indian State and is a resident of British India, does not appear before the State Liquidation Court, before which the liquidation proceedings in respect of the company are started, and does not submit to the jurisdiction of the Liquidation Court, a call order made against him by the Liquidation Court, in absence of an express agreement in the Articles of Association that the disputes with the share-holders should be settled by the State Court, is without jurisdiction and cannot be enforced as such in British India. It is necessary that the liquidator suing the defendant in British India should prove all necessary facts to establish his liability. It is also necessary, in order to allow the plaintiff to succeed, that the call order for the particular amount was necessary and just. The mere fact that the call order was made does not amount to such proof: (1908) 1 K B 302 and A I R 1933 Mad 112, Rel. on; (1874) 9 Ex 345, Expl. [P 560 C 2]

dation had not proved that notice was given to the defendant when the call order was made, 11 Bom 241² being followed in this respect. The lower Appellate Court dismissed the appeal from this decision, and a single Judge of this Court dismissed the second appeal. The reason given by the single Judge however was not that of want of notice but because there was no evidence to show on what grounds the balance due on the shares was being called. Against this decision this appeal under the Letters Patent has been preferred. The general law is not in doubt. In a personal action a decree pronounced by a Court of a foreign state in absentem, the defendant not having submitted himself to its authority is by international law a nullity : see 22 Cal 222³ and 158 I C 24.⁴ In the present case, the defendant did not submit himself to the jurisdiction of the Liquidation Court of Baroda.

It was contended however on behalf of the appellant that the fact that the defendant was a share-holder in a company, registered in Baroda, which was thus subject to the Baroda Court, rendered him subject to the jurisdiction of the Baroda Court and (1874) 9 Ex. 345⁵ was cited as establishing this proposition. This authority however as now held, does not go further than to lay down that where in the Articles of Association it was agreed that the share-holders would be subject to the jurisdiction of the French Courts, only in these circumstances the French Courts had jurisdiction over him in his absence and the judgment passed by them could be enforced by the English Courts. This is clear from (1908) 1 K B 302.⁶ That is a case where there was a partnership between the defendant and others in Australia. A certain decree was passed against the defendant in his absence after he had returned to England. It was held that the defendant, not being domiciled in Western Australia, nor resident there at the date of the action in the Supreme Court of that Colony, and not having appeared to the process or expressly agreed to submit to the jurisdiction of that Court, was not bound by its finding or decree; and that the action in England which was based on that finding and decree could not be maintained. The exact effect of the Exchequer case was there defined. These decisions were followed by a Division Bench in A I R 1933 Mad 112,⁷ where it was said that by the fact of entering into a partnership in a foreign country a person does not bind himself to submit to the jurisdiction of the Courts of that country, in regard to matters arising in connexion with that partnership and the judgment was held to be without jurisdiction as the defendant had not appeared or submitted to the jurisdiction of the foreign Court. It was not contended in the appeal before us that the articles of association contained an express agreement that disputes with shareholders should be settled by the Baroda Court.

The defendant did not submit to the jurisdiction of the Baroda Liquidation Court nor did he appear there and there is no question that he is a resident of British India and has all along been so. On the authorities, therefore, it must be held that the call order against the defendant made by the Baroda Liquidation Court was made without jurisdiction and cannot be enforced as such in British India. It is therefore necessary that the Liquidator should prove all the facts necessary to establish the liability of the defendant. This was practically said when the case was first before this Bench where it was pointed out that the suit was in the form of an ordinary action. It is stated in the call order that the defendant was served to appear before the Liquidation Court in Baroda, but there is no evidence on the record to establish that a call of Rs. 20 per share was necessary and just. In order to allow the plaintiff to succeed in this action, as pointed out by the learned single Judge, this should have been established. The mere fact that a call order was made does not amount to such proof. In the circumstances therefore, we dismiss this appeal but make no order as to costs.

First Appeal No. 282 of 1937, Decided on 24th February 1938, from decree of Addl. Sub-Judge, First Class, Lahore, D/- 9th July 1937.

* Insurance — Life insurance — Policy of insurance laying down that policy would become void if person assured commits suicide within one year from date of policy — Assured committing suicide after 18 months—Assignee of policy is entitled to recover amount due under policy.

Where one of the conditions in a policy of insurance is that the policy is to become void if the person assured causes his own death before the policy has been in existence for one year and the assured commits suicide after a period of about 18 months, a person to whom the policy has been assigned by the assured is entitled to recover from the Insurance Company the amount due under the policy. In India the committing of suicide in itself is not a crime, which would disentitle the assignee from making a claim under the policy as would be the case in England: (1937) 2 All E L R 243, Disting. [P 562 C 2]

Abdul Rashid J.—The material facts of the case for the purposes of this appeal may be shortly stated. Mool Chand, the father of Kanhaya Lal plaintiff, took out a policy of life insurance from the Northern India Insurance Company on 1st June 1932. The terms of the policy were that Rs. 5000 were payable on the death of Mool Chand if the death occurred before 1st June 1937. A further sum of Rs. 5000 was payable if the death occurred before the 47th birthday of the assured. In the event of the person whose life was assured dying by his own hand before the policy had been in existence for one year, the policy was to be void and all premiums were to be forfeited. On 22nd November 1932 Mool Chand assigned the policy in favour of his son Kanhaya Lal. On 9th August 1933 the assured committed suicide in a hotel at Lahore. Kanhaya Lal being the assignee of the policy taken out by his father demanded Rs. 5000 from the Insurance Company. On their failure to pay the amount, he instituted the present suit for recovery of Rs. 5357 on the basis of the policy. The defendant company pleaded inter alia that Mool Chand had committed suicide with the deliberate object of securing payment from the defendant and other Insurance Companies with which he had insured his life during the years 1931 and 1932 for a sum of Rs. 25,000, that the act of the deceased was a speculative and wagering one, and that the contract with the defendant was therefore void. The trial Court held that Mool Chand had sufficient means to pay the premiums due on the different policies taken out by him, that he committed suicide on discovering his wife Mt. Jassa Bai committing adultery with Bhai Piara Lal, timber merchant, and that as Mool Chand killed himself after the lapse of one year from the date of the issue of the policy the plaintiff was entitled to maintain the action. On these findings a decree for Rs. 4905-11-0 was granted to the plaintiff against the defendant. Against this decision the Northern India Insurance Company has preferred an appeal to this Court while cross-objections relating to the disallowance of the costs and interest by the trial Court have been preferred by Kanhaya Lal plaintiff.

It appears that Mool Chand deceased had insured himself with the Bombay Life Assurance Company for Rs. 4000 in the year 1933. He had taken out a policy for Rs. 16,000 in the year 1931 from the Jupiter General Insurance Company. In 1932 as mentioned already, he had insured himself with the defendant company for a sum of Rs. 5000. The annual premium payable on the policy in dispute was only Rupees 125. The trial Court after going into the entire evidence came to the conclusion that up to the time of his death Mool Chand was in a position to pay the premiums on the different policies taken out by him. On 22nd January 1932 Mool Chand separated the plaintiff from himself as the plaintiff's step mother Mt. Jassa Bai did not get on with the plaintiff and his wife. From the allotment of shares at the time of partition it appears that property worth Rs. 3400 fell to the share of Mool Chand and his second son Chuni Lal, and property worth Rs. 1300 was given to the plaintiff. This fact clearly shows that the plaintiff was in a position to pay the premiums on the policy in dispute at the time when he took out the policy. The three letters found on the person of the deceased at the time of his death (Exs. P-1 to P-3) addressed to the Superintendent of Police, the District Magistrate, Lahore, and the plaintiff Kan-haya Lal respectively show that the plaintiff became disgusted with life on 8th August 1933 when he found his wife, Mt. Jassa Bai, in a compromising position with Bhai Piara Lal, timber merchant at Multan. He returned to Lahore immediately without attending the marriage ceremony of the son of Ram Chand, station master. The shock of the unfaithfulness of his wife was too great for him and he decided to end his life by poisoning himself by taking potassium cyanide.

The principal argument addressed by the learned counsel for the appellant was that the plaintiff was not entitled to any relief as the descendants of Mool Chand could not be allowed to benefit as a result of the crime committed by their father. Reliance was placed by the learned counsel on the case in (1937) 2 All E L R 243.¹ In that case the assured person committed suicide and it was held that as suicide was a felony under the English law, the descendants of the assured were not entitled to recover the sum assured. In our opinion the authority referred to above is inapplicable to the present case. In their judgment the learned Judges were careful in pointing out that under the English Common law the committing of suicide was a felony, and that it was clear that the assured had deliberately killed himself in order to enable his estate to collect the insurance money. Had the assured not killed himself the policies would have automatically expired in two or three minutes as the assured had no means of raising the premiums. The learned Judges examined a number of American cases also and observed as follows :

Whatever the position may be in the United States, where each state, by legislative or judicial action of its own, can, it seems, determine the legality of a policy which, expressly or by implication, provides for payment of the policy moneys in whole or in part in the case of suicide, sane or insane, we cannot, we think, consistently with the law of England as we understand it, hold that the respondent can successfully maintain her claim.

It was further observed that :

It may be that both ecclesiastical and civil penalties have been mitigated or abolished, but the criminal law still remains. Only the Legislature in this country can change the law in this matter, if it should so will. While the law remains unchanged, the Court must, we think, apply the general principle that it will not allow a criminal or his representative to reap, by the judgment of the Court, the fruits of his crime.

In India the committing of suicide is not a crime. Attempted suicide is punishable under S. 309, I. P. C., while abetment of suicide is punishable under S. 306. The committing of suicide in itself is not and cannot be regarded as a crime in India. In this respect the English Common law is inapplicable to India as the criminal law of India is the creation of Statute. The Judges in the English case took care to point out that there may seem a hardship in holding that the appellant company is in law not compellable to pay the amount due on the policy but that it was impossible to hold otherwise, consistently with the Common law as prevailing in England. The contract between the parties was embodied in the policy of insurance. Owing to condition No. 8 the policy was to become void if the person assured caused his own death before the policy had been in existence for one year. In the present case the assured killed himself after a period of about 18 months. In these circumstances there is no reason why the contract entered into by the Insurance Company should not be enforced in favour of the plaintiff. For the reasons given above we dismiss this appeal with costs. We also dismiss the cross-objections preferred on behalf of the plaintiff. Parties will bear their own costs so far as the cross-objections are concerned.

Second Appeal No. 983 of 1936, Decided on 29th September 1937, from decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Hissar, D/- 19th June 1936.

Custom (Punjab) — Rohtak District — Daughters excluded from inheriting property either ancestral or self-acquired — Widow has no power of alienation—Riwaj-i-am challenged — Onus of proof.

According to the entry in the riwaj-i-am of the Rohtak District a daughter has no right to succeed to her father's landed property, whether ancestral or self-acquired, and a widow has no right to alienate her husband's property whether ancestral or self-acquired. When such entry is challenged the burden is heavy on the party to prove that the entry in the Riwaj-i-am is wrong. [P 563 C 1]

Judgment. — This second appeal arises out of a suit instituted by the respondents, the reversioners of Hamira, for a declaration that a gift of land made by Mt. Jawahran, widow of Hamira, in favour of her daughter Mt. Gulab Bai would not affect their reversionary rights. The suit has been decreed by the trial Judge and the appeal of the daughter and the widow has been dismissed by the learned Additional District Judge. The District Judge, however has granted a certificate under S. 41 Punjab Courts Act for a second appeal. The question of custom which according to the certificate is involved in the case is whether a daughter has a right to succeed to her father's self-acquired landed property in preference to collaterals within the fifth degree. The property in suit has been found to be self-acquired of Hamira and it appears that the entry in the riwaj-i-am of the Rohtak District to which the parties originally belonged is that a daughter has no right to succeed to her father's landed property whether it be ancestral or self-acquired and also that a widow has no right to alienate her husband's landed property whether ancestral or self-acquired. The burden was therefore heavy on the defendants, Mt. Jawahran and Mt. Gulab Bai, to prove that the entry in the riwaj-i-am is wrong. No evidence has been produced to establish this. Some evidence was led at the trial that among the Rajputs, to which caste the parties belong, a resident son-in-law is entitled to succeed to the property of his father-in-law. It does not, however, appear that it was proved that Ranjit, the husband of Mt. Gulab Bai, was a resident son-in-law as that term is understood in the Customary law. But it is not necessary to give a definite finding on this question because I find from the grounds of appeal to the District Judge that the appellants did not raise this question.

It is contended before us that the trial Court did not give sufficient opportunity to the appellants to produce their evidence and refused to receive some documentary evidence which was tendered to it and also that proper issues have not been framed. It is not however shown that any issue which arose on the pleadings of the parties has not been framed, nor is there any affidavit before us to show at what stage and what evidence, documentary or otherwise, was tendered in the trial Court which was not accepted. In my opinion, there is no force in this appeal and on the evidence it is impossible to hold that the presumption which arises on account of the entry in the riwaj-i-am has been rebutted. I would dismiss this appeal with costs.

Civil Revn. No. 528 of 1937, Decided on 10th November 1937, from decree of Judge, Small Cause Court, Delhi, D/- 8th April 1937.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 30 — Joint Hindu family business must sue and be sued in name of its members.

There is no rule of law which lays down that a suit brought in the name of a joint Hindu family business should be brought in the name of the firm. Order 30 does not apply to a joint Hindu family firm as the rights and liabilities of such a firm are not exclusively regulated by the Contract Act. Such firm must sue and be sued in the name of its members: A I R 1933 Bom 304; A I R 1925 Bom 527 and A I R 1934 Cal 810, Rel. on.

D. N. Aggarwal — for Respondents.

Order.—The order of the lower Court dismissing the suit on the preliminary point that the suit is not maintainable as the firm had not been registered is manifestly wrong and must be set aside. The plaintiffs are two brothers, Debi Sahai and Pirbhu Lal, sons of Seri Niwas. They instituted a suit for recovery of Rs. 500 alleged to be due from the defendants on foot of a bahi account. The suit was originally brought in the name of Debi Sahai and Pirbhu Lal, described as proprietors of the firm Debi Sahai Pirbhu Lal. Subsequently the plaint was amended and the suit was by "Debi Sahai and Pirbhu Lal, members of a joint Hindu family, proprietors of the firm Debi Sahai Pirbhu Lal". In the body of the amended plaint it was clearly stated that the business of the plaintiffs is the joint Hindu family concern and that the plaintiffs are its owners as members of the family. In support of his order dismissing the suit in limine the learned Judge has given two reasons: (i) that "if a joint Hindu family firm is suing, the plaint ought to have been in the name of that joint family firm", and (ii) that as the firm was started recently after the death of the father of Debi Sahai and Pirbhu Lal, the firm could not be treated as a joint Hindu family firm.

There is no rule of law which lays down that a suit brought in the name of a joint Hindu family business should be brought in the name of the firm. O. 30, Civil P. C., does not apply to a joint Hindu family firm as the rights and liabilities of such a firm are not exclusively regulated by the Contract Act. It has been held that such a firm must sue and be sued in the name of its members: see A I R 1933 Bom 304,¹ A I R 1925 Bom 527² and 61 Cal 975.³ The first ground therefore is wholly untenable. As regards the second ground, the learned Judge seems to think that a joint Hindu family firm can come into existence only if the business has descended from father to son. This assumption is obviously wrong. There is no provision of law which prohibits the members of a Hindu coparcenary to start family business out of joint funds at any time, after the death of their father or other ancestor. In this case the evidence clearly shows that the present business had been going on since Sambat 1889 as a joint family concern. S. 5, Partnership Act specifically excludes a Hindu undivided family concern from the provisions of the Act relating to registration of partnerships. The suit as brought was not defective for want of the certificate of registration and has been erroneously dismissed. I accept the petition for revision, set aside the judgment and decree of the Court below and remand the case to it for decision on the merits. Court fee on this petition will be refunded. Other costs will be costs in the cause.

First Appeal No. 392 of 1936, Decided on 15th December 1937, from decree of Senior Sub-Judge, Mianwali, D/- 15th July 1936.

Transfer of Property Act (1882), S. 53 — Fraudulent transfer — On considering facts transfer held made with intent to defeat creditors and not with intention to prefer one creditor to another.

It is not correct perhaps to say that there is any distinction between consideration which should be valid for the purposes of the Contract Act but not valid for the purpose of S. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act. [P 565 C 2]

A decree-holder in execution of his decree attached land belonging to the judgment-debtor. One T objected to the attachment on the ground that the land in dispute had been leased to him before the attachment. According to him the terms of the lease were that the period of the lease was for 20 years and certain sum was reserved as annual rent which was not to be paid to the lessor but to his creditors in discharge of debts due to them by the lessor. These creditors had not obtained any decree, in other words, there was not any genuine pressure being put upon the judgment-debtor to prefer these creditors. Besides this there was no evidence showing that the judgment-debtor had given possession to the lessee and moreover there was no proof whether the annual rent which was to be paid to the creditors had actually been so paid:

Held that in these circumstances the transfer was with intent to defeat and delay the creditors and it was not a case of preferring or favouring one creditor at the expense of another. The transfer was therefore void as against the decree-holder within the meaning of S. 53. [P 565 C 2; P 566 C 1]

Dalip Singh J. — On 29th June 1934, one Chandi Shah obtained a decree against Maliks Surkhru and Shahadat. In execution of this decree he attached part of the land belonging to the said Maliks on 25th March 1935. One Tej Bhan objected to the attachment, alleging that the land in dispute had been leased to him on 21st March 1935. According to Tej Bhan the terms of the lease were that the period of the lease was for 20 years and a thousand rupees was reserved as annual rent. This annual rent was not to be paid to the lessors, the Maliks, but was to be used to discharge the debts due to three alleged creditors of the Maliks, namely Daulat Ram, Asa Ram and Khilla Ram. The debt of Daulat Ram amounting to something over ten thousand rupees was to be discharged in full first, then the debt of Asa Ram was to be discharged and lastly the debt of Khilla Ram was to be discharged. This lease had been registered subsequent to its execution and is printed at page 127 of the paper book. Tej Bhan further claimed that on 10th May 1935 mutation had been ordered of the said land in his favour. The mutation order is printed at page 131. The objections of Tej Bhan were dismissed by the executing Court and he has now brought a declaratory suit under O. 21, R. 63, Civil P. C., on the same grounds, namely that there was a valid transfer in his favour prior to the attachment. The contesting defendant, Chandi Shah, has contended that the said transfer was a fraudulent and fictitious one made with intent to defeat creditors and therefore was void as against him under S. 53, T. P. Act. The trial Court held that the debts alleged to be due to Daulat Ram, Asa Ram and Khilla Ram were genuine debts but it held that as Tej Bhan was a stranger therefore though there might be consideration 'good' within the meaning of the Contract Act as between the lessors and Tej Bhan, there was no good consideration for the lease within the meaning of S. 53, T. P. Act. Further it held that the said lease was made with intent to defeat and delay creditors and a variety of reasons was given in the judgment for the Court holding this opinion. The trial Court accordingly dismissed the suit with costs and the plaintiff has come in appeal.

In appeal the learned counsel for the appellant contends that the lease was for consideration which was not inadequate and as the debts were genuinely due to the alleged creditors therefore the lease should be treated as if it were a transfer favouring one creditor possibly at the expense of another but that it could not be said that the lease was with intent to defraud the general body of creditors. It is unnecessary to enter into the somewhat difficult question as to whether the authorities which have held that a transfer to a genuine creditor, which reserves no right to the judgment-debtor, cannot be held to be in fraud of creditors, should or should not be extended to the case where the transfer is not in favour of a creditor but to a third party. The circumstances of this case leave no doubt in my mind that the transfer in this particular case was with intent to defeat and delay creditors and it was not a case of favouring or preferring one creditor at the expense of another. It is no doubt not correct perhaps to say that there was no good consideration for the transfer or that there is any distinction between consideration which should be valid for the purposes of the Contract Act, but not valid for the purpose of S. 53, T. P. Act. The fact however remains that the position of Malik Surkhru and Malik Shahadat was as follows : They were owing a decretal amount to Chandi Shah and various other creditors. The particular creditors named in this lease deed had not obtained any decrees. It appears that on 21st March 1935 Chandi Shah went to the patwari and obtained a fard of the land in dispute. It is alleged that Abdur Rehman, son of Malik Surkhru, was present at the time but whether he was present or not, it seems clear on the record that the patwari himself was siding with the Maliks. On that very date the lease in favour of Tej Bhan was executed. The coincidence of the date is, to say the least of it, curious. Again it is not clear why the Maliks should have preferred to pay off these creditors, who had not obtained decrees, instead of the creditors who had obtained decrees ; in other words, there was not any genuine pressure being put upon the Maliks to prefer these creditors, which might lead one to believe that the transfer was bona fide.

Again it is strange, as remarked by the trial Court, that these creditors, who were vitally concerned in this transaction if it was a bona fide one, were no parties to the lease, nor was any document taken from them agreeing that they should look henceforward for payment of their debts to Tej Bhan and not to the Maliks at all. As pointed out again by the trial Court, if this arrangement with Tej Bhan was to be construed literally, the debts of Asa Ram and Khilla Ram would be long barred by limitation before the time came to pay off their debts at all, and if Tej Bhan refused to pay their debts at that time, there would be no way of enforcing the debts under the lease. It therefore seems to me clear that as regards two of these creditors the transaction by no means secured payment of their debts. Further it is not at all clear why, if there was any desire to pay off these creditors, one of them was not selected to be the lessee rather than a person like Tej Bhan. It appears again from the record that Tej Bhan has friendly relations with the Maliks. The defendant Chandi Shah alleges that he is their karinda. He himself admits that he does their writing work for them whenever called upon to do so. But I agree with the trial Court in holding that there is considerably more connexion between Tej Bhan and the Maliks than has been admitted by Tej Bhan.

Again, the evidence to show that Tej Bhan was given possession of this property under the lease is as pointed out by the trial Court by no means satisfactory. It consists of nothing more than the evidence of the patwari supported by Khasra girdawaris, and as pointed out by the trial Court, the patwari has throughout behaved as a partisan and the khasra girdawaris and his oral statement are insufficient to prove that possession really passed to Tej Bhan under the lease. Again there is no real proof of the payment of Rs. 1000 to Daulat Ram under the terms of the lease. It is no doubt correct that a receipt executed by Daulat Ram has been produced and Daulat Ram states that he received Rupees 1000. No written record of the payment has been kept nor has Tej Bhan produced any accounts to show that this money was paid to Daulat Ram by him. It is therefore at any rate plausible as urged by the defendant Chandi Shah that Tej Bhan is a mere screen for the Maliks and that actually the Maliks are still in possession and getting the benefit of the produce. In these circumstances it does not seem possible to hold that this transaction was with the intent of benefiting any creditor at all, assuming that the finding of the trial Court that the debts of Daulat Ram, Asa Ram and Khilla Ram were genuine debts is correct. I am therefore of opinion that the transaction was in fraud of the creditors with intent to defeat and delay them and was void as against the creditor Chandi Shah within S. 53, T. P. Act. I would therefore dismiss the appeal with costs.

Second Appeal No. 88 of 1938, Decided on 31st March 1938, from decree of Dist. Judge, Rawalpindi, D/- 15th October 1937.

Court-fees Act (1870), S. 17—Sale by mortgagee of his rights under mortgage—Balance of mortgage money not being paid, suit by vendee against mortgagor and his surety and in alternative against vendor—Causes of action against original mortgagor and that against vendor are not distinct so as to attract S. 17—Mortgage found void—Vendor must refund money received by him under sale of mortgagee rights.

A mortgage was executed by a person who was minor at the time of executing it. The mortgagee assigned his rights under the mortgage to another person for certain consideration. On failure to pay the balance the assignee brought a suit against the mortgagor and his surety and in the alternative claimed a decree against the assignor if the amount was not recovered from the mortgagor and his surety. The suit against the original mortgagor was dismissed as the mortgage was void, he being minor at the time of its execution :

Held that the cause of action against the assignor was not distinct but a part and parcel of the cause of action against the original mortgagor. Section 17, was therefore inapplicable: A I R 1924 Nag 169, Disting.; 40 P L R 33, Rel. on.

Held further that as the mortgage in favour of the assignor was found a nullity, the consideration for the sale by him in favour of the assignee failed. The assignor must therefore refund the money received by him for the sale of the mortgagee rights.

Judgment.— On 16th August 1930, Feroz, defendant 1, executed a mortgage deed in favour of Shiv Ram, defendant 3, for a sum of Rs. 125 with respect to a house. Fazal Din, defendant 2, who is the elder brother of Feroz, signed this mortgage deed as a surety. The mortgagor and the surety undertook to pay interest at the rate of Re. 1-8-0 per cent. per mensem. Shiv Ram assigned his rights under this mortgage in favour of Ghulam Mohammad by means of a registered deed on 10th November 1934 for Rs. 150. Defendants 1 and 2 paid Rs. 22 and Rs. 70 to Shiv Ram on account of interest. On their failure to pay the balance the present suit was instituted by Ghulam Mohammad, assignee, for recovery of Rs. 161 from Feroz and Fazal Din. In the alternative the plaintiff claimed a decree against Shiv Ram in case his case against Feroz and Fazal Din was not decreed. The trial Court held that Feroz was a minor at the time of the execution of the mortgage deed and that the mortgage transaction was therefore absolutely void. On that finding the plaintiff's suit was dismissed. Against this decision the plaintiff preferred an appeal in the Court of the learned District Judge. The learned District Judge agreed with the trial Court that no decree could be passed against Feroz, defendant 1, who was a minor at the time of the execution of the mortgage deed. The learned District Judge however decreed the plaintiff's claim against Fazal Din who had stood surety for his brother. The alternative claim put forward by the plaintiff against Shiv Ram was also dismissed. Against this decision the plaintiff has preferred a second appeal to this Court, his sole prayer being that he should be awarded a decree against Shiv Ram, defendant 3, the only condition attached to the decree being that it shall be executed only if the decretal amount cannot be recovered from Fazal Din.

A preliminary objection was taken on behalf of Shiv Ram, respondent, to the effect that the plaintiff had not paid full court-fee in the trial Court and the lower Appellate Court. It was urged that the cause of action against Feroz and Fazal Din was distinct from the cause of action against Shiv Ram and that under S. 17, Court-fees Act separate court-fee was payable in respect of each cause of action. Reliance was placed in this connexion on A I R 1924 Nag 169.¹ In my opinion, this ruling is distinguishable from the present case. In the reported case the relief claimed against the tenant was the return of the consideration that he had received for surrendering the tenancy. The relief claimed against the person in possession was possession of land on the ground that he was a trespasser. The suit therefore embraced two distinct subjects. The first relief claimed was based on a contract while the second cause of action came into existence because the land in dispute had been wrongfully taken possession of by a trespasser. Cause of action comprises every fact which a plaintiff is bound to prove in order to succeed in a suit. In the present suit the mortgage by Feroz in favour of Shiv Ram and the sale of mortgagee rights by Shiv Ram in favour of the plaintiff constitute the cause of action against Feroz and Fazal Din. The cause of action against Shiv Ram is the sale of the mortgagee rights in favour of the plaintiff. The cause of action against Shiv Ram is therefore a part and parcel of the cause of action against the original mortgagor. I am therefore of opinion that S. 17, Court-fees Act is inapplicable to the facts of the present case. Reference may be made in this connexion to a ruling of this Court reported in 40 P L R 33.² The preliminary objection, in my opinion, is not well founded.

On the merits the appeal must succeed. S. 65, Contract Act lays down that when an agreement is discovered to be void or when a contract becomes void any person who has received any advantage under such agreement or contract is bound to restore it or to make compensation for it, to the person from whom he received it. The mortgage has been declared void ab initio. Therefore Shiv Ram had no rights under the mortgage, but he purported to sell the rights that he had under the mortgage in favour of the plaintiff. If the mortgage in favour of Shiv Ram was a nullity it must be held that the consideration for the sale by Shiv Ram in favour of Ghulam Mohammad, plaintiff, has failed. If the consideration has failed the vendor must refund the money received by him to the vendee for the sale of the mortgagee rights. For the reasons given above, I accept this appeal and grant the plaintiff a decree for Rs. 150 against the estate of Shiv Ram in the hands of Jog Raj and Parma Nand alias Nand Lal, respondents 3 and 4. This decree will be executed against the estate of Shiv Ram. Any amount that may be realised by the decree-holder from Fazal Din will be deducted from the decretal amount so far as the estate of Shiv Ram is concerned. Having regard to all the circumstances I order that the plaintiff and the representatives of Shiv Ram will bear their own costs throughout.

Addison J. — This was a suit by the Jain Kanya Pathshala under O. 21, R. 63, Civil P. C. for a declaration that the property attached and sold in execution of the decree of defendant 1 against defendant 2 was liable to a previous mortgage in its favour. The mortgage deed is dated 21st July 1927 and was executed by defendant 2 in favour of defendant 6, who gifted the mortgage rights to the plaintiff Pathshala. Defendants 3 to 5 were the purchasers of the property at the court auction. The suit was dismissed on the ground that the Court had no jurisdiction to entertain a claim or objection under O. 21, R. 58, after the sale in execution had taken place, and thus no declaratory suit under O. 21, R. 63, Civil P. C. lay. The suit for a declaration therefore could only fall under S. 42, Specific Relief Act and as further relief was possible, the suit being in reality one to enforce a mortgage deed, the trial Court called upon the plaintiff to amend the plaint. This was not done and it was accordingly rejected under O. 7, R. 11, Civil P. C. Against this decision this appeal has been preferred.

The objection was put in by the Pathshala under O. 21, R. 58, after the sale in execution had taken place but before confirmation of the sale. This however makes no difference as the sale was confirmed later and title therefore passed to the auction-purchasers from the date of the sale. In favour of the appellant there is a Single Bench judgment of the Madras High Court (55 Mad 251¹) to the effect that a Court has jurisdiction to consider a claim even when it is made after the sale. The same view has been taken in 1 N L R 167² by the Additional Judicial Commissioner, while a Division Bench of the Sind Judicial Commissioner's Court came to the same conclusion in A I R 1933 Sind 198.³ On the other hand, a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court in 15 I C 53⁴ held that it was not competent for an executing Court to proceed with a claim application under R. 58 of O. 21, Civil P. C. after the execution sale had actually taken place, and a single Judge of that Court came to the same conclusion in A I R 1926 Cal 468.⁵ Similarly, a Division Bench of the Patna High Court in A I R 1924 Pat 76⁶ held that after the sale had taken place the attachment was ipso facto determined and the Court had no longer any jurisdiction to try the claim case under O. 21, R. 58. A single Judge of the Rangoon High Court followed the Calcutta decisions in 5 Rang 751.⁷ Further the arrangement of the Civil Procedure Code shows that a claim under O. 21, R. 58, should precede the sale. It is true that by sub-r. (2) of that Rule a Court is not bound to postpone the sale pending the investigation of the claim but usually it should do so except where it is of opinion that the claim is frivolous or vexatious or meant to delay the execution proceedings. After the sale has taken place the only objection that can be taken to it is provided in O. 21, R. 90 on the ground of a material irregularity or fraud in publishing or conducting the sale. In these circumstances, we are of opinion that the view of the Calcutta, Patna and Rangoon High Courts is to be preferred.

A case decided by a Division Bench of the Patna High Court in 1 Pat 159⁸ is particularly relevant. It was held there that a person in possession of property under a usufructuary mortgage is not entitled to object under O. 21, R. 58, Civil P. C., to the attachment of the property at the instance of a person who holds a decree against the mortgagor, and therefore when such an objection has been made and disallowed, R. 63 does not debar the objector from making an application under R. 100. It was said there that his position as a mortgagee did not entitle him to come to Court and argue that the property was not liable to attachment. This case was followed by a Full Bench in 16 Pat 54.⁹ It was there laid down that an attachment of the mortgaged property could mean only an attachment of the equity of redemption, being the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor and that the mortgagee therefore had no right to object to such an attachment, his interest being paramount and unaffected by the auction sale. The case before us is that of a mortgagee in possession and it is clear therefore that he can take the necessary steps under Rr. 100 and 103 of O. 21 at the proper stage, and of course the mortgagee is always at liberty to bring the usual suit for the sale of the property under mortgage. The decision of the trial Court was therefore correct whether we merely take the view that the objection was incompetent, having been lodged after the sale which was subsequently confirmed or whether we hold that the plaintiff being mortgagee in possession, his proper remedy is to wait and take action under Rr. 100 and 103 of O. 21 at the proper time, provided always that he does not in the meantime bring a suit to have the property sold. For the reasons given above we dismiss this appeal but make no order as to costs.

Criminal Misc. No. 76 of 1938, Decided on 22nd March 1938, for transfer from Magistrate, First Class, Rohtak.

Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 526—Complainant in cognizable case applying for transfer of case—Application opposed by Crown—Application cannot be granted—That Magistrate lives in house of accused held no ground for transfer.

Although the complainant in a cognizable case is entitled to apply for transfer under S. 526, his rights are subordinate to those of the Crown and in the case of conflict between the two, the right of the Crown must prevail. An application for transfer by a complainant will not therefore be granted when it is opposed by the Crown : A I R 1926 Lah 156, Rel. on. [P 570 C 1]

The fact that the Magistrate lives in the house of the accused which he has rented before the case was instituted is no ground for transfer at the instance of the complainant, especially where the Crown opposes the transfer petition. [P 570 C 1]

Order.—A riot took place at Rohtak in October 1937, wherein one man was killed and ten others were seriously injured. As a result of this riot a case under S. 307 and some other sections of the Penal Code was lodged against 14 persons. This case is pending in the Court of Mr. Zafar-ul-Haq Khan, Magistrate, First Class, Rohtak. In February 1938, an application was presented by one Sita Ram in the Court of the District Magistrate, Rohtak, praying that the case referred to above may be transferred from the Court of Khan Zafar-ul-Haq Khan to some other Court of competent jurisdiction. Sita Ram is one of the injured persons. During the investigation his statement was taken by the police and his injuries were also got examined by the doctor. The District Magistrate rejected the application of Sita Ram. Sita Ram has accordingly preferred an application to this Court praying that the case mentioned above may be taken away from the Court of Mr. Zafar-ul-Haq Khan and entrusted to another Court.

This application is opposed by the Crown. Sita Ram being one of the injured persons, may perhaps be regarded as a complainant though the case is a cognizable one. It has however been held by this Court in 6 Lah 541,¹ that though the complainant in a cognizable case is entitled to apply for transfer under S. 526 of the Code, but his rights must be subordinate to those of the Crown, and in the case of conflict between the two, the right of the Crown must prevail. I am in respectful agreement with the view adopted in this ruling. Ten persons were injured in this riot. If the wishes of each one of these persons are to be taken into account in preference to the attitude taken up by the Crown, utter confusion is likely to result. If the prosecuting agency is of the opinion that it will not get fair and impartial justice in the Court of some Magistrate it is always open to the Crown to present an application for the transfer of the case. If the Crown is opposing the transfer it is evident that the prosecution have no reasonable apprehension that justice will not be done. On the merits the only ground of any importance is that the Magistrate lives in a bungalow which is owned by the father of one of the accused persons. In a town a landlord has no financial hold on the tenant. The landlord lives in Calcutta and the Magistrate took the house on rent long before the present case was instituted in his Court. The rent was fixed before the riot took place. In the circumstances of this case and in view of the fact that the Crown is opposing this petition for transfer I hold that no adequate grounds for transfer have been made out. I therefore dismiss this application.

Second Appeal No. 147 of 1938, Decided on 19th April 1938, from decree of Dist. Judge, Hoshiarpur, D/. 6th November 1937.

Limitation—Mortgage — Default of interest for three years giving right to sue for entire amount — Interest paid only after eleven years — Mortgage suit brought more than twelve years after payment of interest—Payment held gave fresh start but could not revive three years default clause.

A mortgage bond provided that interest thereon would be paid every year and in default of payment of three years' interest the mortgagee would be entitled to sue for entire amount. Eleven years after the execution of the bond some interest was paid and a separate bond was executed for remaining interest. A suit on mortgage bond was brought more than twelve years after this payment and execution of bond and it was sought to avail of the three years default clause in the mortgage bond to bring the suit in time :

Held the payment of interest only gave another starting point of limitation and the three years' clause could not be revived, so as to bring the suit within limitation : A I R 1921 All 192 and A I R 1922 All 524, Ref.; 27 Bom 1 (FB), Disting.

Judgment. — This appeal has arisen in the following circumstances. A mortgage bond for Rs. 430 was executed by Bhagat Ram and Anant Ram in favour of Ralla Ram on 14th April 1910 and it was stipulated therein that the mortgagee would be entitled to realise Rs. 12.14.6 by way of interest every year and in case three years' interest was not so paid, the mortgagee would be entitled to recover the whole amount by sale of the mortgaged property. It is common ground that no interest was paid as agreed upon and that the payment of interest was for the first time made on 28th December 1921, when a bond for Rs. 141.13.0 was executed by the mortgagors in favour of the mortgagee for interest due up to 14th April 1921. No interest was paid subsequent to this period and on 15th April 1936, the mortgagee instituted the present suit for recovery of Rs. 500 by sale of the property mortgaged. Several defences were raised to this suit but we are mainly concerned with the question of limitation. The trial Court held that although Art. 132, Limitation Act applied, the clause relating to default revived on 28th December 1921 when a bond for the payment of interest was executed and consequently the money became due not on the date when the bond was executed but on the expiry of three years from that date. The suit was accordingly decreed. On appeal the District Judge also took the same view and dismissed the appeal. The mortgagors have presented the present appeal from that decision of the District Judge.

Counsel for the parties agree that the question is bare of authority and that the case is one of first impression. Counsel for the appellants however has relied upon A I R 1921 All 192¹ and A I R 1922 All 524² by way of analogy. In A I R 1921 All 192,¹ it was held by a Division Bench that limitation must run from the date of the first default in the case of a bond which provides that if the borrower made default in the payment of any instalment of interest, the lender could sue for the whole amount, although a period was fixed for re-payment if the borrower repaid regularly according to the terms of the bond. In A I R 1922 All 524,² the mortgagor had covenanted to pay interest year by year and the principal within three years of the date of execution and in case of default of the payment of the annual interest he had empowered the mortgagee, without waiting for the expiration of the period fixed for payment of the principal, to realize the amount due for the principal and interest from the hypothecated property. It was held in these circumstances that the privilege of deferring payment of the principal was conditional on the punctual payment of the annual interest and that the whole amount, principal and interest, became due on default of payment of the interest for the first year.

Counsel for the respondent refers to 27 Bom 1,³ but I do not consider that it helps him in any manner. In that case a decree directed that the decretal amount should be paid by yearly instalments and further provided that in case of default being made in the payment of any two consecutive instalments the mortgagee should recover possession of the mortgaged property. Default was made in the first two years but the instalments were paid later by the mortgagor and accepted by the mortgagee. The mortgagor further paid subsequent instalments but again failed to pay two consecutive instalments. On these facts it was held by a Full Bench of the Bombay High Court that having regard to the payment and acceptance of instalments the parties had been remitted to the same position as they would have been in if no default had occurred. Jenkins C. J. however added that it is a fundamental proposition of law that payment and acceptance of overdue instalments cannot by themselves prove a waiver; the point is one to be determined on the circumstances of each case. Moreover, in 31 Cal 83⁴ it was held that where an instalment bond gives the creditor the right to sue for the whole amount due under the bond on default of payment of a single instalment, there is no waiver of that right by acceptance of part of an overdue instalment, or by receipt of interest. It may also be remarked that the case in both the Courts below was fought on the ground of S. 20, Lim. Act only and no question of waiver was specifically pleaded or put in issue. S. 20, Lim. Act is clear on the point that a fresh period of limitation is to be computed from the time when the payment was made and this being so, no question of further extension of time by a period of three years, as provided in the case of original default, arises in this case. Default did take place during the first three years and the cause of action arose on 14th April 1913. Subsequent payment of interest merely gave the mortgagee a fresh start but the terminus a quo could not be altered from what it was provided in the section itself. The mortgagee therefore had only 12 years from the date of the bond dated 28th December 1921 within which to sue and as he did not sue within that period his suit was clearly time-barred. I accordingly accept the appeal, set aside the decree of the District Judge and dismiss the suit with costs throughout.

The application of the rule of res judicata by the Courts in India should be influenced by no technical considerations of form but by matter of substance within the limits allowed by law. The raison d'être of the rule is to confer finality on decisions arrived at by competent Courts between interested parties after genuine contest; and to allow persons who had deliberately chosen a position to reprobate it, and to blow hot now when they were blowing cold before would be completely to ignore the whole foundation of the rule. It cannot be denied that an issue may be res judicata between co-plaintiffs as well as co-defendants, and although for an issue to be res judicata between co-plaintiffs, there must be a real contest between them, when the interests of various plaintiffs are common, and no question of adopting two conflicting positions as between themselves arises, the decision arrived at by the united efforts of all will bind them for ever, especially when the only person concerned in holding the opposite position has had a full fight : A I R 1916 P C 78 and 21 Mad 8, Rel. on. [P 574 C 1]

Din Mohammad J. — The facts bearing upon the question of law involved in this case are these. Nanak and Wazira were descended from the same common ancestor, Rup Chand. Nanak's son Ram Bhaj is alive and has two sons, Matu and Indar. Wazira had two sons, Gobinda and Jangu. Gobinda's only son Rulya predeceased his father, leaving a widow, Mt. Ganeshi and one Shiv Ram claimed to be an adopted son of Gobinda. Jangu had a son, Ruldu, who died leaving a widow, Mt. Shankri. In 1923 Matu and Indar instituted a suit for a declaration that a will made by Gobinda of a one-half share of his property to Shiv Ram should not bind them after the death of Gobinda's widow and that of his widowed daughter-in-law, Mt. Ganeshi. A question arose as to whether Shiv Ram was or was not an adopted son of Gobinda and a finding was given against him. In 1932 Mt. Shankri alienated a part of her estate to one Jamil Dad Khan and this alienation was contested by both Shiv Ram and Mt. Ganeshi. Again a question arose as to whether Shiv Ram was an adopted son of Gobinda and thus entitled to sue. It was found that the adoption had taken place but it was held that this adoption could not be successfully urged in view of the finding in the previous case that Shiv Ram was not an adopted son of Gobinda.

In 1934 the same Mt. Shankri sold another piece of land to one Ahmad Said Akhtar, a brother of the previous alienee, Jamil Dad Khan. Thereupon Ram Bhaj, father of Matu and Indar, instituted the suit out of which the present appeal has arisen challenging both the alienations made by Mt. Shankri. The question of Shiv Ram's adoption again came in issue along with the usual pleas of consideration and necessity. The Subordinate Judge held that the adoption of Shiv Ram no longer existed and consequently the presence of Shiv Ram did not debar the plaintiff from maintaining the suit ; that the alienation in favour of Jamil Dad Khan was not for consideration and that in favour of his brother Ahmad Said Akhtar was not for necessity. He consequently made a decree in favour of the plaintiff in terms of the relief prayed for. Both the vendees appealed to the District Judge who in a judgment, which is not very clear, held that the judgment in the case of Matu and Indar did not operate as res judicata and that the adoption of Shiv Ram was in existence. He accordingly allowed the appeal and dismissed the suit without going into the question of consideration or necessity. Ram Bhaj has appealed. The only question that falls for determination in this case therefore is whether the finding in the case of Matu and Indar operated as res judicata on the question of Shiv Ram's adoption. Counsel for the appellant has referred to a large number of authorities which lay down that the suit by a reversioner is always in a representative capacity and that a finding arrived at in that suit binds all members of the reversionary body and all those who derive their title from them. In 38 Mad 406,¹ their Lordships of the Privy Council observed :

A suit to set aside an adoption is brought by the presumptive reversioner in a representative capacity and on behalf of all the reversioners. The act complained of is to their common detriment, just as the relief sought for is for their common benefit.

1. Venkata Narayana v. Subbammal, (1915) 2 A I R P O 124=29 I O 298=38 Mad 406=42 I A 125 (P O).

2. Janaki Ammal v. Narayanaswami Iyer, (1916) 3 A I R P O 117=37 I O 161=39 Mad 634=43 I A 207 (P O).

47 All 883,³ again a case of the Privy Council, the head-note reads as follows :

When in a suit by the nearest reversioner against a Hindu widow relative to her deceased husband's estate, an issue is finally determined, the issue is res judicata under the Code of Civil Procedure 1908, S. 11, and Explan. 6, in any subsequent suit by another reversioner. The above rule applies where the plaintiff in the first suit was the nearest reversioner save for one who from poverty was not in a position to sue for the protection of the estate. It is not material that the plaintiff in the second suit does not claim through the plaintiff in the first.

In 103 I C 454,⁴ a Division Bench of this Court held that a decree dismissing a suit by the next reversioner is, unless mala fides can be established, binding upon all other reversioners. In 59 Cal 636,⁵ one of the principles enunciated in connexion with Explan. 6 to S. 11 reads as follows :

Where the plaintiff or the defendant sues or is sued in a representative capacity, which attaches to him under the general law, the decision binds the entire body whom he represents.

In 44 All 19,⁶ a Full Bench composed of Sir Pramada Charan Banerji, Tudball and Sulaiman JJ. held that a suit by a reversioner for setting aside an alienation made by a Hindu widow in possession is brought by him in a representative capacity, that is, as representing the whole body of reversioners, for the protection of the estate. A decree in such a suit is therefore binding not only between the reversioner who brought the suit and the transferee but also as between the whole body of reversioners on the one hand and the transferee or his representative in title on the other. In 41 Mad 659,⁷ a Full Bench of the Madras High Court composed of five Judges held that a suit by a reversioner to set aside an alienation by a Hindu widow is a representative suit on behalf of all her reversioners then existing or thereafter to be born. In 10 Lah 613,⁸ Harrison and Tek Chand JJ. held that it is well settled that a suit for a declaration by a reversioner to contest an alienation made by a widow in possession is a representative suit on behalf of all the reversioners and a decree fairly and properly obtained against the reversioner in such a suit binds not only him but the whole body of reversioners on the one hand and the alienee or his representative on the other. The principle deducible from the authorities cited above admits of no doubt. A suit brought by a reversioner is for the benefit of all the reversioners entitled to sue and just as any finding given in favour of a reversioner benefits all members of the reversionary body, a finding arrived at against him injures everybody concerned.

We have now to determine to what extent does this principle affect the present case. In the first suit the plaintiffs were two reversioners, Matu and Indar, and the chief contesting defendant was Shiv Ram, whose adoption was in dispute. On the basis of the principles enunciated above, the finding arrived at in that case against Shiv Ram's adoption benefited as well as bound not only the plaintiffs in that suit but the entire reversionary body including Ruldu. It was on this ground that in the second suit brought by Shiv Ram against an assignee of a part of Ruldu's estate, the assignee was held competent to take advantage of the previous finding which his assignor despite his not being a party to the suit could have utilized. In the present suit, one of the reversioners is the plaintiff, and the representatives of another reversioner are the defendants, and the question is, whether as between the reversioners inter se, the finding against Shiv Ram's adoption will hold good. The District Judge is of opinion that it does not, inasmuch as the previous judgment was not a judgment in rem. This no doubt is so, but he has ignored the fact that S. 41, Evidence Act is not the only section which lays down a bar by judgment. S. 40 comes first and gives effect to every such bar as has been introduced by the law of procedure. One such bar is the rule of res judicata and if this principle, whether based on S. 11, Civil P. C., or otherwise, applies, the present suit will be maintainable regardless of the fact that S. 41, Evidence Act does not govern the defence. The suit is, as stated above, between persons on whose behalf the previous plaintiffs in a contest with Shiv Ram obtained a finding against his adoption. Further, one of the assignees in the present case as representing the estate of Ruldu successfully resisted Shiv Ram on the basis of that finding. Should Ruldu's estate be allowed to repudiate now what it fought for and achieved before? The answer is clearly in the negative. It may be that the bar does not exactly fall within the terms of S. 11, Civil P. C., but that is immaterial. It is well settled that that section is not exhaustive and that the bar operates as much on general principles as on the wording of the section. As remarked by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 43 Cal 694⁹ at p. 706:

The application of the rule (of res judicata) by the Courts in India should be influenced by no technical considerations of form but by matter of substance within the limits allowed by law.

The raison d'être of the rule is to confer finality on decisions arrived at by competent Courts between interested parties after genuine contest; and to allow persons who had deliberately chosen a position to reprobate it and to blow hot now when they were blowing cold before would be completely to ignore the whole foundation of the rule. It cannot be denied that an issue may be res judicata between co-plaintiffs as well as co-defendants, and although it is laid down in certain judgments that for an issue to be res judicata between co-plaintiffs, there must be a real contest between them, with all respect we are disposed to consider that when the interests of various plaintiffs are common, and no question of adopting two conflicting positions as between themselves arises, the decision arrived at by the united efforts of all will bind them for ever, especially when the only person concerned in holding the opposite position has had a full fight. Reference may in this connexion be made to 21 Mad 8¹⁰ decided by Benson and Boddam JJ. In that case A sold land to B of which he was not in possession. Afterwards both A and B sued to recover possession but failed on the ground that A had no title. B then sued A to recover the purchase money with interest. It was held that A was not entitled to give evidence of his alleged title in view of the decision in the previous case. We are conscious of the fact that Ruldu was no party to the previous case, but in our view the same principle applies to a representative suit.

10. Krishnam Namblar v. Kannan, (1898) 21 Mad 8.

We have no hesitation in holding therefore that on general principles the issue relating to Shiv Ram's adoption could not be re-agitated at the instance of Ruldu's representatives, and that Ram Bhaj had consequently a locus standi to sue. We accordingly accept the appeal, reverse the decision of the District Judge, and remand the case to him under O. 41, R. 23, Civil P. C., for disposal of the remaining questions raised before him. Court-fee on the appeal will be refunded, and other costs will be costs in the cause. Parties have been directed to appear before the lower Appellate Court on 27th May 1938.

Second Appeal No. 1617 of 1937, Decided on 16th February 1938, from decree of Dist. Judge, Gujranwala, D/- 6th October 1937.

Specific Relief Act (1877), S. 42 — Declaratory suit—A in execution against B trying to attach C's property—A's attempts failing twice—Suit by C against A for declaration of his rights to his property held maintainable.

A in execution of his decree against B tried to attach property of C alleging that B and C were joint. The attachment failed twice because C alleged that he was independent of B. Ultimately C finding that as he was entitled to his rights in his property and that not only that A was interested to deny it but denied it on two occasions, he filed a declaratory suit against A for declaration of his rights:

Held C's suit was maintainable and he was not bound to wait until A attached his property and until C's objection to attachment was dismissed by Court when he could file a suit under O. 21, R. 63, Civil P. C. [P 575 C 2].

Judgment. — The appellant Nand Lal obtained a money decree against Hans Raj, defendant 2. In execution of this decree he got a warrant issued for attachment of moveable property of the judgment-debtor which he undertook to point out in the judgment-debtor's shop at Gujranwala (hasab nishan dehi digridar). He took the bailiff to a shop in a bazar in Gujranwala, which was being carried on by Kharaiti

Lal and Chaman Lal, brothers of Hans Raj. These persons told the bailiff that the shop belonged to them, and that the judgment-debtor Hans Raj was separate from them and was not a partner in it, nor were any goods belonging to him kept in the premises. The bailiff made enquiries from the neighbours who supported the allegation of Kharaiti Lal and Chaman Lal. He then returned without attaching any goods. The decree-holder made another attempt to have the warrant executed by attachment of goods in the shop, but the plaintiffs stood their ground again, and the bailiff seeing a signboard bearing the plaintiffs' names, did not proceed to attach the property. There was however a scuffle on this occasion followed by a criminal prosecution. A few days later Kharaiti Lal and Chaman Lal instituted a suit for a declaration that they were the exclusive owners of the firm Kharaiti Lal Chaman Lal, that the judgment-debtor, Hans Raj, had no concern with it, nor had he any goods of his own lying in the shop, and that none of the assets of the firm was liable to attachment and sale in execution of the decree of Nand Lal against Hans Raj. The suit was resisted by Nand Lal who pleaded that Hans Raj was in fact joint with the plaintiffs and in any case they had no cause of action to get the declaration prayed for.

The trial Judge held that the repeated attempts of the defendant to get the goods in the shop attached afforded a good cause of action to the plaintiffs for a declaratory suit. On the merits, he found, after a detailed examination of the evidence, that it had not been proved that Hans Raj was joint with the plaintiffs or that he had any interest in the goods in the shop. On these findings, he decreed the suit. The defendant appealed to the District Judge, who has affirmed the findings of the trial Court on both points and has affirmed the decree.

On second appeal, it is urged that the suit is premature; and that the futile attempts made by defendant 1 to have the moveables in the shop of the plaintiffs attached do not afford them a good ground for maintaining a suit for a declaration under S. 42, Specific Relief Act. It is argued that the plaintiffs should have waited till some of the goods in their shop had been actually attached, and then they should have filed objections under O. 21, R. 58, Civil P. C. and if the executing Court had dismissed the objections, then, and not until then, would they be entitled to sue for a declaration of their title. In my opinion this contention is without force. A suit for declaration under S. 42 can be maintained inter alia if the plaintiff is "entitled to any right as to any property"; and the defendant "has denied or is interested to deny" the plaintiffs' right. In the present case both these conditions are fulfilled. The plaintiffs claim to be the sole owners of the firm Kharaiti Lal Chaman Lal and of the goods in the shop of the firm. The defendant Nand Lal has been denying their exclusive right to such property, and alleging that Hans Raj was a partner in the firm and that the goods in the shop, or some of them, belonged to Hans Raj, he has attempted to attach such goods. The attempt failed once, but was repeated again. There was thus not merely an assertion of a hostile title, but an attempt to seriously infringe the plaintiffs' rights. On these facts the plaintiffs clearly had a cause of action to sue for declaration under S. 42. It was not necessary for them to wait till their goods had actually been attached, their business stopped or, at any rate, partially impaired, and then to sue under O. 21, R. 63, Civil P. C. I agree with the Courts below in holding that the suit was maintainable in the form in which it was brought. The learned counsel for the appellant attempted to challenge the finding of fact that the plaintiffs were the exclusive owners of the shop, but this finding is supported by legal evidence on the record, and cannot be impugned in second appeal. No other point was argued. The appeal fails and is dismissed; but in the circumstances, the parties are left to bear their own costs throughout.

Second Appeal No. 40 of 1938, Decided on 7th March 1938, from decree of Dist. Judge, Hissar at Gurgaon, D/- 8th October 1937.

Punjab Tenancy Act (16 of 1887), S. 5 (1) (a)—Daughter or sister of last male holder cannot acquire occupancy rights.

A daughter or a sister of the last male holder of land can under no circumstances be said to have fulfilled the conditions of S. 5 (1) (a), even if she has been continuously in possession of land for 30 years without paying any rent therefor. Under the Punjab Tenancy Act a daughter or a sister can never acquire any occupancy rights. It is only a widow who can acquire occupancy rights under Cl. (b) of S. 59 (1). [P 576 C 1]

Judgment.—Section 5, sub-s. (2), Punjab Tenancy Act lays down that if a tenant proves that he has continuously occupied land for 30 years and paid no rent therefor beyond the amount of the land revenue thereof and the rates and cesses for the time being chargeable thereon, it may be presumed that he has fulfilled the conditions of Cl. (a) of sub-s. (1). Mr. Sri Ram Sud, Assistant Collector, First Grade, held on 27th March 1923, that Mt. Devalia had continuously occupied the land for 30 years before 10th January 1922, and that she had not paid anything to the landlord beyond the amount of land revenue and the rates and cesses, and that therefore it must be presumed that she had fulfilled the conditions of Clause (a) of sub-s. (1) of Sec. 5. Under Cl. (a) of sub-s. (1) of S. 5 a person can be declared to be an occupancy tenant only if on 1st November 1887 he had held land for more than two generations in the male line of descent through a grandfather or granduncle, and for a period of not less than 20 years. It is clear that a daughter or a sister of the last male holder of land can under no circumstances be said to have fulfilled the conditions of S. 5 (1) (a), Punjab Tenancy Act, even if she has been continuously in possession of land for 30 years without paying any rent therefor. Under the Punjab Tenancy Act a daughter or a sister can never acquire any occupancy rights. It is only a widow who can acquire occupancy rights under Cl. (b) of S. 59 (1). The acquisition by Mt. Devalia of occupancy rights was therefore clearly an acquisition as a widow.

The learned counsel for the appellants contended that there were observations in the judgment of Mr. Sri Ram Sud, which showed that Mt. Devalia had been given occupancy rights not as a widow but in her personal capacity. He further contended that even if the Revenue Court had made a blunder in conferring occupancy rights on Mt. Devalia in her own right, that judgment was binding on both the parties and the question was res judicata. The obvious reply to this argument is that the appellants have chosen to come into Court as plaintiffs under S. 59, Punjab Tenancy Act, and they must prove their right to succeed to Mt. Devalia under S. 59. Cl. (a) of S. 59 (1) is of no assistance to the plaintiffs-appellants as they are not the male lineal descendants of Mt. Devalia in the male line of descent. They are her male lineal descendants, but Mt. Devalia being a woman, they cannot be said to have descended from the last tenant in the male line of descent. If the Assistant Collector in granting occupancy rights to Mt. Devalia made a blunder that blunder could not be rectified, nor could Mt. Devalia be prevented from deriving any benefit that may accrue to her from that blunder, but the present plaintiffs, after the death of Mt. Devalia, cannot prejudice the rights of the landlord in the present suit, because no rights accrued to them by the judgment of the Assistant Collector, dated 27th March 1923. For the reasons given above, I dismiss this appeal. Having regard to all the circumstances however I order that the parties shall bear their own costs throughout.

Criminal Misc. Petn. No. 79 of 1938, Decided on 14th April 1938, for transfer from Magistrate, First Class, Gujrat.

Criminal Trial—Transfer of case—Application for transfer based on communal motive is not maintainable — But Magistrate trying case committing errors of procedure and his action likely to raise apprehension of partiality—Case should be transferred.

A Magistrate is not barred by reason of belonging to one community or the other from trying cases between members of two communities. But where he commits errors of procedure during the trial and his action is very likely to raise an apprehension in the mind of petitioners that they are not going to get an impartial trial, the case should be transferred. Order. — This is an application for the transfer of a case, Crown v. Lal Singh and Others from the Court of Syed Ghulam Mohy-ud-din Shah, Magistrate, First Class, Gujrat, to some other Court. The main grounds that are urged in support of this application are two: (1) that in a cross case in which the present petitioners were complainants and some of the present prosecution party were the accused under S. 302, Penal Code, the learned Magistrate, as soon as he became seised of this case, admitted the accused to bail without recording any reasons as he was in law bound to do; (2) that the learned Magistrate framed charges against the accused in the case, which is the subject-matter of this application, for having caused hurt to one Piran Ditta although at that stage of the case Piran Ditta had given no evidence and none of the witnesses had stated that Piran Ditta had been injured by anybody. There is no burking the fact that the real motive behind this transfer application is obviously communal. The petitioners are Sikhs: the other side are Muslims, and the Magistrate is a Muslim. Added to this is the fact that the case ought normally to have gone to the Magistrate of the Ilaka who is a Sikh, but it was sent to the present Magistrate by the order of the predecessor of the learned District Magistrate.

If the communal motive were the only one, I should most emphatically refuse to entertain this application for transfer as I cannot consider it to be in any way a tenable proposition that a Magistrate is barred by reason of belonging to one community or the other from trying cases between members of those two communities. But when a Magistrate finds himself placed in such a position, it is incumbent upon him to exercise the greatest tact and discretion in handling the case, and here we find the Magistrate has been guilty of two errors of procedure. I do not think that there is actually any communal bias in his mind but the effect of these must be considered on the mind of the petitioners, and it is impossible for them to ignore the fact that the effect of these two errors in procedure has been against their interests. In the circumstances therefore it seems to me to be impossible to escape the conclusion that the petitioners have an apprehension which, in the case of persons of their mentality, cannot be considered to be unreasonable that they are not likely to get an impartial trial. Therefore it seems to me that this case must be transferred, and I accordingly accept the petition and direct the case to be transferred to the Court of some other Magistrate. I would repeat, in passing this order which I pass with considerable reluctance that there appears to be no ground for thinking that the present Magistrate really is biased against the petitioners, and the order is passed because of circumstances which appear to be sufficient to give the petitioners reason for thinking that he may be so biased.

First Appeal No. 390 of 1936, Decided on 16th December 1937, from decree of Senior Sub-Judge, Jhelum, D/. 12th May 1936.

Companies Act (1913), S. 235—Proceedings against directors under S. 235 for misfeasance—Subsequent suit against them for compensation for misfeasance and fraud is incompetent on principle of res judicata.

If the company is being wound up the remedy against a delinquent director whether for negligence, fraud or misfeasance is under S. 235, Companies Act. Where such proceedings have been taken against a director, subsequent suit against him for compensation for fraud or misfeasance is incompetent on the principle of res judicata. Such suit is also time-barred under Art. 36, Lim. Act, if brought more than two years after the date of misfeasance and S. 18, Lim. Act cannot help the plaintiff if it is not established that the knowledge of his right was kept from him by means of fraud.

Shamair Chand and R. C. Manchanda— for Appellant.

M. L. Puri, and J. G. Sethi and Malik Barkat Ali — for Respondents 1 and 2 to 6 respectively.

Addison J.—A suit was brought by Nanak Chand of Chakwal against eight persons for recovery of Rs. 6500 by way of compensation and damages. It was alleged that the defendants opened a bank by name "Indian States Bank, Limited, Agra," and agreed to become directors of the bank; that on 8th March 1930 they registered the memorandum and articles of association and on 27th May 1930 published under their signatures the prospectus, whereby they invited the public to purchase shares of the bank; and that the necessary certificate from the Registrar, Joint Stock Companies, Lucknow, was obtained on 6th August 1930 by fraud, although prior to that they had commenced working and had been selling and allotting shares. It was alleged that the prospectus contained false and misleading matter. Further, it was alleged that the defendants appointed Harbans Lal of Khushab as Superintendent of the Punjab branches of the bank and also appointed him as their agent to open a branch at Chakwal and that the plaintiff believed the fraudulent and misleading assertions of Harbans Lal and considered the prospectus to be a true and correct one; he therefore purchased 100 shares and paid Rs. 2500 on 28th October 1930 as application money, and on 12th December 1930 Rs. 2500 more as allotment money; that Harbans Lal promised to the plaintiff that the Chakwal branch would continue to function for a year and that this promise was confirmed by defendant 7, one Vidyarthi. The bank however closed its doors on 5th September 1931 and went into voluntary liquidation on 21st September 1931 and an order for compulsory liquidation was obtained from the Allahabad High Court on 18th December 1931 when an Official Liquidator was appointed. It was further stated that the books were incorrectly kept, that the allotment of shares to the plaintiff was made without authority, that the Chakwal branch was closed before one year and that the defendants had contravened the provisions of Ss. 100, 101 and 102, Companies Act and committed fraud and misfeasance and were therefore liable to pay to the plaintiff compensation and damages to the extent of Rs. 5000 with interest thereon at Rs. 7 per cent. per annum, thus making the total claim of Rs. 6500. It was admitted in the plaint that misfeasance proceedings had been taken against the defendants in the Allahabad High Court which gave its decision in April 1934 that fraud and misfeasance were disclosed in this judgment, and that the plaintiff came to know this in January 1935. The cause of action, according to the plaint, arose on 28th October 1930, 24th November 1930 and in January 1935 at Chakwal. Accordingly the plaintiff brought the present suit.

The plaintiff omitted to state in the plaint that he himself was a joint tortfeasor along with the defendants. Misfeasance proceedings were also taken against him in the Allahabad High Court where he compromised on payment of Rs. 10,000. His statement in the Allahabad High Court shows that he also committed fraud and misfeasance. He wrote applications and pronotes for his friend Sita Ram to whom payment was made without any security whereas the plaintiff knew that Sita Ram was practically insolvent. It may be mentioned here that the plaintiff was a local director of the Bank at Chakwal. Obviously the plaintiff was using the branch at Chakwal and Dudial for his own ends. He got his son employed there: he connived at payments to Sita Ram; he concealed material particulars. The trial Judge dismissed the suit and the plaintiff has appealed.

On Issue 8, which was as follows: "was the plaintiff misled by any misrepresentation of any of the defendants or their agent in applying for shares", the trial Judge has held in the negative. It appeared to the trial Judge that the plaintiff was induced to become a local director by Harbans Lal in order to obtain payment of Rs. 20 per meeting. In his agreement with Harbans Lal nothing was mentioned about the prospectus. The trial Judge held that he was mainly induced to become a director and to take shares in order to advance his own ends. His agreement with Harbans Lal, who was an ordinary employee of the Bank, was not such an agreement as would make the directors liable as Harbans Lal had no power to enter into it. The trial Judge has further held that the suit is incompetent seeing that misfeasance proceedings were taken against the defendants under S. 235, Companies Act in the Allahabad Court, where the plaintiff himself was proceeded against under that section. On general principles of res judicata the trial Judge stated that he could not be allowed to bring a suit after such proceedings. It was further held that the suit was barred by limitation, being governed by Art. 36, Lim. Act and that S. 10 of the Act did not extend limitation as there were numerous authorities to the effect that directors were not trustees. Further, the plaintiff knew what was going on at the end of 1931 when he himself went to Allahabad in connexion with the liquidation proceedings. There was no question therefore of his coming to know about fraud and misfeasance early in 1935 after the Allahabad High Court's judgment in 1934.

It was contended before us that a separate suit lay as well as proceedings under

S. 235, Companies Act. The plaintiff has based his cause of action on S. 100, Companies Act and there is no question that any liability under that section has to be decided by the Court having jurisdiction under the Companies Act and it has been so decided. The law on this point is clearly stated at p. 216 of Palmer's Company Law, Edition 15, where it is said :

The civil remedy of a company against a delinquent director, whether for negligence, fraud, misfeasance, or breach of trust, is whilst the company is a going concern by action (that is by suit). If the company is being wound up, the remedy is, except where the parties are not amenable to the winding up jurisdiction, under S. 276, English Act (which corresponds to 235 of the Indian Act), commonly known as the misfeasance section, which gives power to the Court in a summary way to order any director or officer of the company who has been guilty of misfeasance to replace the moneys misapplied or to pay compensation.

Such an application may be made by either the official receiver or the liquidator or a creditor or contributory. We do not doubt that the same is the law in India where the scheme of the Act is the same; otherwise there would be no finality attaching to liquidation proceedings. In fact, the plaintiff has had the effrontery to come to the Civil Courts after he himself had been penalized under S. 235, Companies Act. S. 229, Companies Act shows that in the winding up of a company the same rules shall prevail and be observed as in the case of insolvency proceedings. We therefore hold that this suit is incompetent, while we are further in agreement with the finding of the trial Judge that in the case of the plaintiff no misrepresentation has been established, his motive for joining the company not being the false representation of the directors but his own greed to acquire money dishonestly. The suit is also barred by limitation which under Art. 36 is two years from the date of malfeasance, misfeasance or nonfeasance. If there was any malfeasance, etc., it took place in 1930. S. 18, Lim. Act cannot help the plaintiff as he was not by means of fraud kept from the knowledge of his right or the title on which it was founded. His action may be based on fraud but it is not established that the knowledge of his right was kept from him by means of fraud. He himself was as fraudulent as anyone else. The suit is thus long time-barred. It may here be mentioned that defendant 2, Nawab Jamshed Ali Khan, withdrew his name from the directorate in August 1930 before the plaintiff joined the company. He certainly cannot be made liable. These were the only questions agitated before us and we dismiss the appeal with costs one set to respondent 1 and one set to defendants 2 and 3 who alone were represented before us.

Civil Revn. Petn. No. 428 of 1937, Decided on 28th October 1937, from decree of Judge, Small Cause Court, Delhi, D/. 25th February 1937.

Contribution—Suit for—Parties putting forward joint false defence—Costs awarded to opposite party—Anyone can claim contribution in costs paid—Liability should be proportionate.

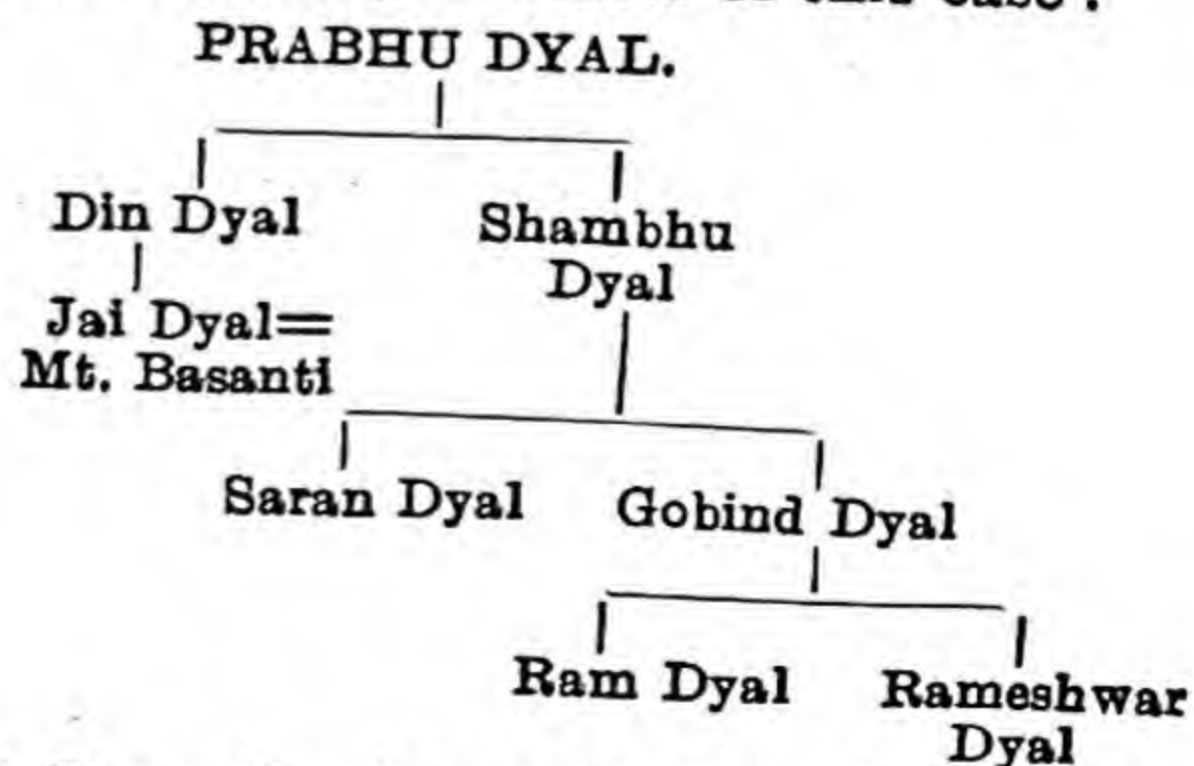

Where different sets of defendants had jointly put forward a false defence in a previous case and had been ordered to pay the costs of the opposite party, any of them is entitled to maintain a suit for contribution against the others: A I R 1935 Mad 347; A I R 1923 All 67 and (1894) A C 318, Rel. on. [P 580 C 2]

In the absence of any direction to the contrary in the decree, the costs should be apportioned among the sets equally. [P 580 C 2]

Judgment.—This revision petition arises out of a suit brought by Dal Chand against Saran Dyal for recovery of Rs. 289-2-9 as contribution for costs, which had been allowed by the High Court in a certain litigation in which they both were defendants along with certain other persons. The trial Court has decreed the suit. The defendant Saran Dyal has come in revision. The following pedigree-table will be helpful in understanding the facts of this case:

Mt. Basanti, widow of Jai Dyal, alienated certain property in favour of Dal Chand and Mangli. One Ram Roop, as representing the Hindu public of Delhi, brought a suit under Order 1, R. 8, Civil P. C., for a declaration to the effect that the said property had been made waqf by the ancestors of Jai Dyal and that Mt. Basanti had no right to alienate it to Mangli and Dal Chand. In this suit the following persons were impleaded as defendants: (1) Saran Dyal; (2) Gobind Dyal [sons of Shambhu Dyal]; (3) Mangli; (4) Dal Chand (vendees); (5) Ram Dyal; (6) Rameshwar Dyal [sons of Gobind Dyal].

Of these (1), (2), (5) and (6) were the heirs of Mt. Basanti, vendor, who had died in the meantime, and defendants (3) and (4) were the vendees in possession. The suit was dismissed by the trial Court, the parties being left to bear their own costs. On appeal by Ram Roop, the High Court reversed this decision and granted the plaintiff the declaration prayed for with costs throughout. In execution the plaintiff realized his costs from Dal Chand, vendee, only. Dal Chand has now brought a suit against Saran Dyal for contribution, claiming one fourth of the costs of the previous litigation which he had to pay to Ram Roop. The lower Court has decreed the suit.

On revision, Mr. Shamair Chand for the petitioner has pointed out that both the vendors and the vendees had put similar defences in the previous litigation denying the waqf nature of the property. He has also drawn attention to the finding of the High Court that the vendees had purchased the property with the knowledge that it was waqf. He urges therefore that the vendors and the vendees were both in the position of joint tort-feasors, and that on their failure in that litigation, one of them cannot sue the others for contribution in respect of the amount of costs paid to the successful party. In support of this contention the learned counsel has cited 7 Mad 89.¹ This decision and several other earlier cases proceeded upon the principle laid down in (1799) 16 R R 810.² The authority of that case however is considerably shaken if not altogether annihilated by the later decision of the House of Lords in (1894) A C 318,³ where it was held that in such cases the foundation of the plaintiff's claim rested on the joint decree which had been passed against the plaintiff and the defendant in the former litigation and which had created a civil debt. It was pointed out that in view of the joint decree, the action could not be regarded as one to enforce a right to "contribution in the case of a delict proper". Following that decision, it has been held recently by the Courts in this country that where different sets of defendants had jointly put forward a false defence in a previous case and had been ordered to pay the costs of the opposite party, any of them is entitled to maintain a suit for contribution against the others: see 45 All 99,⁴ A I R 1927 Mad 790⁵ and A I R 1935 Mad 347.⁶

The first contention raised by Mr. Shamair Chand is unsustainable. The next point raised is whether the petitioner Saran Dyal is liable to pay one fourth of the total amount of costs which had been realized from him in execution of the joint decree. That decree did not specify in what proportion the costs were to be paid by the various defendants. As stated already, there were two sets of defendants in that case; (1) Mangli and Dal Chand, vendees; and (2) Saran Dyal and Gobind and Ram Dyal and Rameshwar Dyal, sons of Gobind Dyal (heirs of the vendor). In the absence of any direction to the contrary in the decree, the costs should be apportioned among these sets equally; the vendees being liable to pay one-half and the other defendants one-half. Among the vendors inter se Saran Dyal represented one branch of the heirs of Mt. Basanti, and Gobind Dyal and his minor sons Ram Dyal and Rameshwar Dyal the other branch. Saran Dyal was therefore liable to pay one fourth of the entire amount, and this is what the plaintiff Dal Chand had claimed from him in this suit and for which the lower Court has passed a decree against him. The petition for revision fails and is dismissed with costs.

First Appeal No. 346 of 1936, Decided on 30th November 1937.

Custom (Punjab)—Applicability—Pawalis of Bhera held not governed by custom but by Mahomedan law.

Where a person asserts that he is governed by custom, it is incumbent upon him to prove that he is so governed and further to prove what that custom is: A I R 1917 P C 181, Foll. [P 581 C 2]Held that Pawalis of Bhera in Shahpur District are not proved to be governed by custom but by Mahomedan law. [P 582 C 1]Mehr Chand Mahajan and Shiv Charan Gosomey — *for Appellants.*P. A. Bahl — for Respondents.

Abdul Rashid J. — The following pedigree table shows the relationship of the parties :

Imam Bakhsh died sonless in October 1929, and his land was mutated in favour of his widow Mt. Sattan. She died in December 1934. The present suit was instituted by the plaintiffs on 27th August 1935. The allegations of the plaintiffs were that they being nephews of Imam Bakhsh deceased, were entitled to succeed to his property consisting of agricultural land and houses, to the exclusion of the defendants who were Imam Bakhsh's brother's grandsons, in accordance with the provisions of Mahomedan law. Mohammad Rafiq defendant pleaded, inter alia, that Imam Bakhsh was an Awan and not a Pawali as asserted by the plaintiffs, that the parties were governed by Customary law and that he and Mohammad Siddiq were therefore entitled to one-half of the property. Mohammad Siddiq did not appear and contest the plaintiffs' suit. The trial Court framed the following issues:

(1) Whether the parties follow Customary law, whereunder the parties are entitled equally to the property in dispute? (2) Whether under Mahomedan law the plaintiffs exclude the defendants?

The trial Court held that the parties were governed by Customary law, and on that finding dismissed the plaintiffs' suit. The plaintiffs have preferred an appeal to this Court. It has been held in 45 Cal 450¹ that when a person asserts that he is governed by custom, it is incumbent upon him to prove that he is so governed and further to prove what that custom is. Two witnesses were produced on behalf of the defendants, namely Khuda Bakhsh (D. W. 1) and Allah Bakhsh (D. W. 2). They stated that the Pawalis of Bhera were governed by Customary law. This evidence is worthless. Reliance was placed on behalf of the defendants on three documents, Exs. D/2, D/3 and D/4. D/3 is a copy of a judgment passed by Mehta Jagan Nath, Munsif, Bhera, on 15th October 1884. In this case Hashmat, the uncle of Fazal, Pawali of Bhera, claimed that he was an heir to his nephew in respect of his residential house and a number of shops. The defendants were the sister and the sister's sons of the last male-holder. The plaintiff prayed that an enquiry might be held by Court and he further showed his readiness to have the case decided under Mahomedan law. The plaintiffs' suit was decreed on the ground that he was entitled to succeed to his nephew to the exclusion of his married sister and her sons under Customary law. Ex. D/2 is a copy of a judgment dated 11th July 1887. In this case there was a contest between the nephew of the last male-holder and his married daughter. The case was decided in favour of the nephew solely because it had been decided in Hashmat's case that the Pawalis of Bhera were governed by Customary law. The third instance (Ex. D/4) consists of a judgment of Sardar Teja Singh, District Judge, Shahpur at Sargodha, in the case in Mt. Rajan v. Raja, etc. This case was decided on the strength of the decisions given in the two cases cited above.

Pawalis are not a notified agricultural tribe in the Shahpur District. All the tribes that were consulted at the time of the preparation of the Customary law of the Shahpur District in the year 1896, are mentioned in the preface. Pawalis are not one of the tribes that were called at the time of the preparation of the riwaj-i-am. In our opinion the defendants have failed to establish that they are governed by custom. In the year 1867 one Imam Pawali of Bhera brought a suit (Ex. P/11) for partition of certain ancestral property. The case was decided in accordance with the provisions of Mahomedan law after an award to that effect had been obtained from the arbitrator. Ex. P/10 refers to a case that was decided in April 1890 and the parties to which were Pawalis of Bhera. The case was decided in accordance with the Mahomedan law after an award had been obtained from an arbitrator to that effect. Ex. P/9 is a copy of a judgment in the case in Karam Din v. Mohammad decided on 3rd June 1890 in accordance with the provisions of Mahomedan law. The parties to this litigation were also Pawalis of Bhera. The plaintiffs have also tendered some oral evidence. This oral evidence is as valueless as the evidence tendered by the defendants. In view of the conflicting nature of the documentary evidence, we hold that it has not been established that the parties are governed by custom. The case must therefore be decided in accordance with the provisions of Mahomedan law. For the reasons given above, we accept this appeal, set aside the judgment and the decree of the lower Court and decree the plaintiffs' claim. Having regard to all the circumstances, we leave the parties to bear their own costs throughout.

Order. — The plaintiffs-respondents instituted a suit for a declaration that a certain site, described in detail in the plaint, was owned by them and defendants 10 and 11 and that defendants 1 to 9 had no right in it. They also prayed for an injunction restraining defendants 1 to 9 from obstructing the plaintiffs from constructing a wall on a portion of the site marked A B on the plan and from discharging their water on the site in dispute. The suit was contested by defendants 1 to 9, of whom defendants 5 and 6 were minors under the guardianship of their brother, defendant 4. After the trial of the suit had proceeded for some time, an application was presented before the Subordinate Judge on 22nd July 1937, praying that the whole suit be referred to the arbitration of a local pleader. The application was signed, amongst others, by the mukhtar of defendant 4. In the application however it was not stated that two of the defendants were minors, nor was the sanction of the Court for making the reference to arbitration asked for or granted by the Court. Indeed it appears to have been overlooked at the time, that some of the defendants were minors. The learned Judge granted the application and referred the suit to arbitration.

On 30th August 1937 the arbitrator filed his award in the Court in favour of the plaintiffs. To this award, objections were filed by the major defendants and the two minor defendants separately. The former set of defendants alleged that the arbitrator was guilty of misconduct. They however failed to substantiate their contention. On behalf of the minors, it was contended that the award was bad as there was no proper reference on their behalf, sanction of the Court not having been asked for or granted as required by law. Counsel for the plaintiffs conceded that this was so and that there was no valid reference, or legal award against these defendants. The plaintiffs then put in an application that they be allowed to withdraw the suit against the minor defendants with liberty to bring a fresh suit against them. The application was opposed by the minor defendants but it was granted by the learned Subordinate Judge. He further held that the award against the major defendants was separable from that against the minor defendants, and he accordingly corrected the award under Para. 12 of Sch. 2 and granted the plaintiffs the decree prayed for against the major defendants.

The defendants have come in revision and the first contention raised on their behalf is that the learned Judge had no jurisdiction to allow the suit to be withdrawn against the minor defendants under O. 23, R. 1, Civil P. C., with permission to bring a fresh suit against them. I have no doubt that this contention is well founded and must succeed. R. 1 of O. 23 lays down that permission may be granted to the plaintiff to withdraw from a suit, or abandon part of his claim, with liberty to institute a fresh suit in respect of the subject-matter of the suit, or such part of a claim, where the Court is satisfied (a) that a suit must fail by reason of some formal defect, or (b) that there are other sufficient grounds for allowing the plaintiff to institute a fresh suit for the subject-matter of a suit or part of a claim. In this case, it is conceded by the learned counsel for the plaintiffs-respondents that there was no formal defect, by reason of which the suit must have failed, nor has any other sufficient ground, ejusdem generis, been shown for allowing the plaintiffs to institute a fresh suit against the minor defendants. In these circumstances it is obvious that O. 23, R. 1 was inapplicable, and the order of the learned Judge allowing the suit to be withdrawn against the minor defendants with liberty to bring a fresh suit against them is illegal: see A I R 1938 All 56,¹ A I R 1935 Pat 251,² A I R 1928 Mad 1085³ and 9 All 168.⁴

This being so, the question arises whether the learned Judge could have "corrected" the award under Para. 12 of Sch. 2 and passed a decree in favour of the plaintiffs against the major defendants only. The answer to this question depends on whether the award of the arbitrator as against the major defendants was separable from that against the minor defendants. Looking at the award, as well as the claim of the plaintiffs, there can be no doubt that neither the claim nor the award were separable in the manner suggested. Defendants 1 to 9 are joint owners of the portion marked red in the plan, and in the plaint the relief was claimed jointly against them as such. In these circumstances, it is difficult to see how a perpetual injunction could have been granted against some of the joint owners only, in a suit to which the remaining owners were not parties. I hold that the award was not separable and could not have been "corrected" in the manner done by the learned Judge. Mr. Barkat Ali contended however that the original reference to arbitration cannot be held to be invalid so far as the minor defendants are concerned, as the mukhtar of their guardian ad litem, who had a common interest with them, had signed the petition for making the reference to arbitration. But the view of the law which has been uniformly taken since 1912 in the Chief Court and this Court is that unless leave of the Court has been expressly obtained and recorded, the arbitration proceedings are voidable at the option of the minor: see 95 P R 1912⁵ and 145 P R 1919.⁶ In this case the minors have exercised their option in avoiding the proceedings and the plaintiffs themselves have conceded that the minors could not be held to have joined in the reference and that the proceedings before the arbitrator and the arbitration were null and void against them.

On these findings I am constrained to hold that the award should have been set aside in its entirety and the decree of the learned Judge based on the "corrected" award against the major defendants cannot be sustained. I accept the petition for revision, set aside the decree of the Court below and direct that the suit be restored at its original number and tried by the Subordinate Judge in accordance with law from the stage at which it was when the reference to arbitration was made. Having regard to all the circumstances I leave the parties to bear their own costs of these proceedings. Both counsel have been directed to cause their respective clients to appear before the Senior Subordinate Judge, Jullundur, on 25th April 1938 when a date for further proceedings will be fixed.

Judgment. — The land in dispute is situate in mauza Kambali, tehsil Kharar, District Ambala, and was owned by one Jiwna, a Sandhu Jat of the village. Jiwna died many years ago without wife, children or near agnatic relations. The land devolved on his sister Mt. Manglan who remained in possession till her death in May 1933. On her death the revenue authorities sanctioned mutation of the land in favour of defendants 1 to 12 who are collaterals of Mt. Manglan's husband. The four plaintiffs who are Jats of the Sandhu got and are proprietors in the village managed to take possession of the land. In November 1935 the plaintiffs brought a suit for a declaration that they were the owners in possession of the land in dispute alleging that they had succeeded to the land in dispute as heirs of Jiwna. They based their right of inheritance on three grounds: (1) that they were his collaterals; (2) that they belonged to the same got and (3) that they were the descendants of the founder of the village and as such had a right to succeed against defendants 1 to 12 who, it was alleged, were mere trespassers. The suit was contested by defendants 1 to 8 and 10 to 12 who denied all the allegations. The suit was dismissed by the Subordinate Judge and his decree has been affirmed on appeal by the learned District Judge. After hearing counsel at length and examining the record, I see no force in this appeal. The plaintiffs produced no evidence whatever to support their allegation that they were collaterals of the deceased Jiwna. The first ground on which they claimed to be the heirs therefore fails.

They no doubt are Sandhus and are of the same got as Jiwna but this circumstance cannot give them any right to succeed to his property even though he has left no issue or near relations: 100 I C 917¹ and 68 P R 1892.² The third ground was that the plaintiff as the descendants of the founder of the village had a right to succeed. Neither Court below has recorded a clear finding on this point and it was urged by the learned counsel for the appellants that the case should be remanded for the purpose. As the parties have led all available evidence on the point, I did not think it necessary to prolong the litigation by ordering a remand but allowed counsel to address me on the evidence on the record. For the appellants reliance is placed upon the kafi-yat dehi which shows that the village was founded by two persons, Gurbakhsh, a Sandhu Jat, and Massa, a Basanti Jat. It is claimed that the plaintiffs are the descendants of Gurbakhsh. There is however no proof on the record in support of this claim. Moreover the kafi-yat dehi shows that subsequent to the foundation of the village several other persons acquired land in this village. It is therefore clear that the original common bond was broken and there is no compact or homogeneous community in the village. On these facts the plaintiffs can have no possible claim to succeed to the property of Jiwna. They raised no objection to Mt. Manglan succeeding on Jiwna's death. The property must be regarded as Mt. Manglan's own acquisition and in the absence of her issues or other near relations of her own, her husband's heirs cannot be said to be mere trespassers. The plaintiffs' claim was therefore rightly disallowed. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

1. Duni Chand v. Lekhu, (1927) 14 A I R Lah 255 = 100 I C 917.

2. Mahomed Rafi v. Khazan Singh, (1892) 68 P R 1892.

First Appeal No. 332 of 1937, Decided on 22nd April 1938, from decree of Sub-Judge, First Class, Lahore, D/- 14th April 1937.

(2)—Original suit pending at commencement of Act of 1935—Appeal — Province cannot be impleaded as respondent.

An appeal is merely a continuation of the proceedings within the meaning of sub-s. (2) of S. 179. Hence, if the original suit was pending at the commencement of Act of 1935, the Province cannot be impleaded as a respondent in appeal and the only respondent is therefore the Secretary of State within the meaning of sub-s. (2) of S. 179.

(b) Specific Relief Act (1877), Ss. 54 and 57
—Grant by Government of license to supply electricity—Grant of license is not contract so as to give rise to perpetual injunction—Assuming it to be contract, grant of license does not imply any negative covenant on part of Government not to start similar work to supply electricity during currency of license—Start of work to supply electricity by Government therefore does not give ground for granting injunction in favour of licensee.

The deposit of Rs. 500 under R. 11 of the rules under the Electricity Act is not only not a consideration for the license but it is not even a fee for the license. It is merely a fee for the application. Similarly the sum which is deposited as security is to be refunded by Government and therefore that also is not a consideration. Therefore the grant of license to supply electricity is without consideration and cannot be held to be a contract. It is possible to go even further than this and to contend that the right to sell electric current is not property within the meaning of S. 54 and that therefore it is extremely doubtful whether an injunction can be granted at all under S. 54. Even assuming that this license is a contract or is a matter in respect of which an injunction could be granted, it is impossible to read in it any negative agreement that the Government in granting the license shall refrain from taking any particular action. The Government has the inherent power to generate and supply electricity under this Act if it so wishes. Hence there is no negative covenant either express or implied which can be read into the terms of the license so as to lay upon the Government an obligation to refrain from supplying energy within the area of the license.

* (c) Government of India Act (1935), S. 150—Provision of electric supply is a purpose of India or part of India.

Possibly under the Act of 1919 it might have been held that the generation and supply of electric current was not one of the purposes of the Government of India within the meaning of S. 20 of that Act. But under S. 150 of the Act of 1935, a public utility service such as the provision of electric supply is a purpose of India or of a part of India : 28 Bom 314 and 38 Cal 754, held no longer good law.

Blacker J.—This appeal is from the judgment of a Subordinate Judge of the First Class at Lahore, dismissing the suit of the plaintiff-appellant for a declaration and an injunction. The facts of the case are that on 25th November 1912 the Punjab Government by a Gazette Notification granted to the Peoples Bank of India Limited, Lahore, a license to supply electrical energy within the municipal limits of Lahore. This license was known as "The Lahore Municipal Electric License, 1912." It was granted to the Peoples Bank on 25th November 1912 but was assigned by it on 28th October 1913 with the permission of Government to the Lahore Electric Supply Company, the present appellant. This license provided inter alia that the area in which it should operate would be the limits of the Lahore Municipality and it also laid down the prices which should be charged for the electrical energy supplied. It also laid down the term of the license as thirty years. It was amended in 1927 and was thereafter known as "the Lahore Electric License 1912 as amended 1927." The amendments of 1927 are not relevant to the case as although the area was extended, the whole of the municipal limits was still comprised in it. The Company worked this license and is still working it. It supplied energy generally to the public in Lahore but did not supply it to the Lahore Junction Station of the North Western Railway or to the Mughalpura Workshops of the same Railway. The electrical energy used there was generated by the North Western Railway itself in its own power station. On 5th January 1932 the Punjab Government issued a notification that the Punjab Government (Ministry of Local Self-Government) had applied for a license to supply electrical energy in a certain area which included area of the license of 1912. Objections were called for within three months and the plaintiff Company did put in objections on 9th February 1932.

In spite of these objections, on 20th July 1932 a notification was issued under R. 17 of the 1922 rules under the Electricity Act granting a license to the Punjab Government (Ministry of Local Self-Government) to be known as "The Punjab Districts Electric License 1932." License was granted to the Ministry to supply energy within an area which consisted of a number of civil districts including the District of Lahore. Negotiations had been going on between the plaintiff Company and the North Western Railway with regard to the supply of electrical energy to the Lahore Railway Station and the Mughalpura Workshops by the plaintiff Company which already supplied energy for the railway stations at Badami Bagh and Shahdara. But on 3rd October 1934 the Chief Engineer of the Public Works Department, Electricity Branch, intimated that the Punjab Government as licensees intended to supply energy to the North Western Railway under the license of 1932 and were not prepared to admit that the plaintiff Company had any ground for contesting the legality of the action taken. On 11th January 1935 the plaintiff Company sent a notice to the defendants and on 22nd February 1936 filed the present suit. In the plaint it was claimed amongst other things that it was a necessary implication of the license granted to the plaintiff that the licensor had covenanted that he shall not himself do anything by setting up a rival business to cause loss or injury to the plaintiff's business. It was pleaded that the Punjab Government (Ministry of Local Self-Government) was neither a separate Government nor was co-equal with the Punjab Government as a separate entity, nor was it as such a juristical person apart from the Local Government and that therefore the Ministry of Local Self-Government as such had no power to enter into a contract or to spend for the purposes of trade any amount out of the revenues of India.

It was further contended that the license of 1932 was wholly invalid in law, first because it was ultra vires of the licensor as the licensor and the licensee could not be identical; secondly as the licensee was not a juristical person and finally as it was not open to the Local Government or to any section of it to engage in any trade or business or to apply the revenues of India for any purpose other than the purposes of the Government of India alone. These pleadings were controverted by the defendants.

The findings of the learned Subordinate Judge were: (1) that the Ministry of Local Self-Government was not a person within the meaning of the Electricity Act; (2) that the license granted to the Ministry for Local Self-Government on 5th January 1932 was invalid; (3) that the Mandi Electricity Scheme, which was the scheme which was being worked under this license, was within the competence of Government as a public utility scheme; (4) that the license in favour of the plaintiff did not preclude another license in the same area and that the plaintiff had no monopoly, and (5) that the Government could do itself what it permitted others to do, that is to say, it could supply electrical energy without any license. The lower Court accordingly held that the supply to North Western Railway was not a setting up of rival business, and dismissed the entire suit with costs. In appeal before us Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru for the plaintiff-appellant argued two main points. The first was that assuming that the Punjab Government could carry on a business, it was not open to them to carry on the same business in the same area as was covered by the appellant's license. The second was that under the Government of India Act of 1919, which was in force in 1932, it was not open to the Punjab Government to carry on any trade or business or to invest the public revenues in any other manner than that allowed by the statute. As a corollary to this, the counsel argued that even under the present Government of India Act, which came into force before judgment had actually been delivered by the lower Court, the position was the same.

Before dealing with these points raised by counsel for the appellant, it is necessary to deal with a preliminary question regarding the frame of the suit and of the appeal. The original suit was against the Secretary of State in Council and the Punjab Government (Ministry of Local Self-Government). It is not clear how, if, as pleaded by the plaintiff and found by the lower Court, defendant 2 was not a juristic person, any injunction could possibly be granted against it. Learned counsel was not able to give any satisfactory reply on this point, but it is not of any great importance now as the position has changed. Part 3 of the Government of India Act, 1935, came into force on 1st April 1937 whilst the suit in the lower Court was still pending and defendant 1, "the Secretary of State in Council," became under the provisions of S. 179 (2) of the Act "the Secretary of State." The Secretary of State was rightly impleaded as a respondent to this appeal but two other respondents were also impleaded, namely "the Government of the Punjab" and "the Province of the Punjab." The learned counsel for the appellant has admitted that respondent 2 was superfluous and his name is accordingly struck out of the appeal. With regard to respondent 3, "the Province of the Punjab," the learned counsel has relied upon S. 179 (1) of the Act which lays down that any proceedings which, if the Act had not been passed, might have been brought against the Secretary of State in Council, may, in the case of any liability arising before the commencement of Part 3 of the Act, be brought against a Province, or at the option of the person by whom the proceedings are brought, against the Secretary of State. It seems difficult to accept learned counsel's argument that this sub-section applies to the present case as the original suit was still pending at the commencement of the Act and the appeal was merely a continuation of the proceedings within the meaning of sub-s. (2) of the same section. I am therefore of the opinion that the Province cannot be impleaded as a respondent in this appeal and that the only respondent is therefore the Secretary of State within the meaning of sub-s. (2), S. 179. The result of this is a curious one because if we had to grant the injunction we could have only granted it against the Secretary of State who is not now a person who has any concern with the subject-matter of the appeal and any injunction granted against him would have been superfluous and infructuous.

Coming now to the first point on which learned counsel relies, it was argued by him that under S. 57, Specific Relief Act an injunction could be granted to perform a negative agreement, express or implied, not to do a certain act, which was contained in a contract embodying an affirmative agreement with regard to which the Court was unable to compel specific performance. This statutory provision of the law is clear and learned counsel did not advance his case any further by the authorities which he has cited before us. None of those authorities went beyond the clear words of the statute. In each of them there was some contract and the Court was able to find either that there was or was not an express or implied negative covenant and granted or refused to grant an injunction accordingly. In fact in one of the cases cited by him, (1897) 75 L T 528,¹ it was remarked by Lindley L. J., that if you can extract from a contract of this kind a negative covenant which is sufficiently clear and definite to enable you to put your finger upon it, and state exactly what a man is not to do, that is as good as a covenant absolutely and clearly negative in terms. That appears to be the principle which must be applied in this case. Is it possible to lay one's finger upon the license and say definitely that there was something in it which the Punjab Government had agreed not to do? However before coming to this point it is desirable to see whether the license is a contract at all. It was argued for the appellant that it was not a bare license but a license with a grant. This may be so but even if it is a license with a grant, it still requires the support of a consideration to make it a contract. Three circumstances were argued on behalf of the appellant as constituting such consideration. One was the fee of Rs. 500 referred to in para. 3 of the plaint which was one of the paragraphs admitted to be correct in his replication by the defendant. The learned counsel for the Crown however said that in admitting this paragraph as correct, the defendant was not understanding it as an assertion that this Rs. 500 was a consideration for the contract. This appears to be correct as a reference to Rule 12 of the Rules under the Electricity Act would show. Under Rule 11, before an application is considered a sum of Rs. 500 has to be deposited in the treasury. Rule 11 (2) further lays down that this fee is liable to be retained by Government even though no license is granted. It is therefore not only not a consideration for the license but it is not even a fee for the license. It is merely a fee for the application. The second circumstance relied upon is the existence in the license of certain stipulations as to the prices to be charged for the energy supplied. These however cannot be regarded as a consideration and are merely terms of the license. Similarly the sum of Rs. 5000 which was deposited as security, is to be refunded by Government and therefore that also is not a consideration. Therefore this grant was without consideration and cannot be held to be a contract. It is possible to go even further than this and to contend that the right to sell electric current is not property within the meaning of S. 54, Specific Relief Act, and that therefore it is extremely doubtful whether an injunction could be granted at all under Section 54.

But to turn to the question of the existence of the negative covenant, even assuming that this license was a contract or was a matter in respect of which an injunction could be granted, it is impossible to read in it any negative agreement that the Government in granting the license shall refrain from taking any particular action. It is contended by counsel that the mere grant of the license by itself necessarily implies that during its currency the licensor would not do anything himself which might be destructive of the license or prejudicial to it. Not only is it very difficult to see any such stipulation in the license, but it is also clear on the facts that what the defendant has done, namely to start supplying energy himself, is in no way destructive of the appellant's rights under the license or prejudicial to them. S. 3, sub-s. (2) (e), Electricity Act, makes it perfectly clear that this license is no monopoly in favour of the plaintiff-appellant. All that he is permitted to do is to generate and supply electricity at certain rates and there is no specific or implicit condition that he shall have an exclusive right to do so within the area named. Moreover there are several sections of the Electricity Act itself which show that the Act itself contemplates that the Government may itself, if it so wishes, generate and supply electricity. Prima facie it would appear more or less axiomatic that if a person can grant a license to another person to do a thing he has the inherent right to do that thing himself. But it is only necessary to refer to S. 5 (d) of the Act which gives the Provincial Government the option of purchasing an electrical undertaking, to S. 49 which clearly refers to energy supplied by works belonging to any Government in British India and to S. 30, Cl. (3) which in laying down certain restrictions upon persons other than licensees, with regard to the transmission or use of energy, lays down that the provisions of this section shall be binding on the Crown. It seems perfectly clear therefore then that the Government has the inherent power to generate and supply electricity under this Act if it so wishes. I am of opinion therefore that there is no negative covenant either express or implied which can be read into the terms of the license so as to lay upon the Government an obligation to refrain from supplying energy within the area of the license of 1912 as amended in 1927.

The second point raised by counsel has now to be considered, namely that the Punjab Government cannot carry on trade or business or invest the public revenues in any other manner than that allowed by the Government of India Act, 1919. In support of this argument reliance was placed on S. 20, Government of India Act of 1919 which runs as follows:

The revenues of India shall be received for and in the name of His Majesty, and shall, subject to the provisions of this Act, be applied for the purposes of the Government of India alone.

The words "Government of India" have been defined in 28 Bom 314² as meaning "the superintendence, direction or control of the country." This definition was approved and followed in 38 Cal 754.³ It may be suggested with the very greatest deference that this definition does not carry the matter very much further. It is a case of defining one term by using three other terms which are themselves equally in need of definition. No doubt in view of that definition, the Judges in the two particular cases cited were able to hold that the matter before them did not come within the scope of "the superintendence, control and direction of the country" of India but that is not of much assistance in deciding whether the present matter does or does not so come. It is argued on behalf of the respondent that the provision of electricity by means of what is known as the Mandi Scheme is a public utility service and as such one of the legitimate activities of the Government of the country. This view certainly has a good deal of common sense in it and even if by a strict interpretation of the terms the generation and supply of electrical energy by Government in this country is considered to be a trade or business, so equally are the activities of the Post-Office, the Telegraph Office, the various State-owned railways, the Salt Department, the Irrigation Branch of the Public Works Department and many other activities which could be named. If the Mandi Scheme is ultra vires of Government, it would appear that all these other activities are equally ultra vires. An attempt was made on behalf of the appellant to distinguish some of these activities on the ground that with regard to them the Government had a monopoly and was not in competition with any private person. It is difficult to see, however, that the mere fact that a trader has a monopoly makes his trade any less a trade. It is true that in one of the cases cited before us, i. e. (1927) 1 Ch D 196,⁴ it was held by Lawrence J. that the Post-Office was not a trade as it was a business which in no sense could be said to be competing with any private individual. This decision was however appealed against and although the appeal was dismissed, there are words in the judgments of the appeal Judges, particularly in that of Warrington L. J., which tend to show that this argument of Lawrence J. was not relied upon. Warrington L. J. in particular decided the case against the plaintiff on the ground that although the business of a sub-postmaster might, as an abstract proposition, be said to be a trade, it was clearly not such a trade as was conceived by the parties when they entered into that particular covenant. This therefore is not a very clear authority for the attempt to distinguish a business activity of Government from a trade by saying that Government has a monopoly. In any case it is not clear how this could apply, for instance, to a case of a State-owned railway which under normal conditions certainly does compete with private individuals who carry passengers and goods by road from points connected by rail. To hold therefore that any such activity of Government is barred by the Government of India Act, 1919, would be to give to the statute what appears to be a very unreasonable meaning.

It could be contended that the statute was referring back to the statute of 1833 by which the East India Company was forbidden to engage in trade. The trade in which the East India Company used to engage was apparently a trade of which the profits were taken by private individuals who were the shareholders of the Company and did not go into the revenues of the State. But there is again an equal difficulty in taking this as the criterion, because if that were so, Government could legitimately engage in any trade or business such as the selling of grocery or haberdashery as long as the profits went back to the revenues of the country. This seems to be just as sweeping as the other aspect of the matter. A third possible solution of the question would be to hold that the primary intention of Government should be regarded. If Government's primary intention is purely to make money then it is a trade. If its intention is to supply a public need and merely to recoup its costs in doing so, then it would not be a trade. But this discussion is to a considerable extent academic in the present case as since the suit was instituted the constitutional law on the subject has become clearer. Possibly under the Act of 1919 it might have been held that the generation and supply of electric current was not one of the purposes of the Government of India within the meaning of S. 20 of that Act. But different language is now used in the Act. S. 150 of the Act of 1935 runs as follows :

No burden shall be imposed on the revenues of the Federation or the Provinces except for the purposes of India or some part of India.

I am of opinion that a public utility service such as the provision of electric supply is a purpose of India or of the Punjab which is a part of India. But if there is still any doubt upon the matter, further light is thrown by Ss. 154 and 155. S. 154 lays down that property vested in His Majesty for purposes of the Government of the Federation shall generally speaking be exempt from all taxes imposed by a Province, and S. 155 lays down that the Government of a Province shall not be liable to Federal taxation in respect of income accruing, arising or received in British India, provided that where a trade or business of any kind is carried on by the Government of a Province in any part of British India outside that Province, nothing in the section shall exempt that Province from any Federal taxation in respect of that trade or business. This proviso clearly shows that the Act contemplates that a Provincial Government may engage in trade or business. It is impossible to appreciate the argument of the learned counsel for the appellant that there is necessary implication that the Local Government shall only engage in trade or business outside its own border. It appears a fortiori that if it may invest its revenue in trade or business outside its own borders, it may certainly do so within its own borders. But the greatest significance of this section is that by expressly providing for the carrying on of the trade or business by the Government of India it makes it clear that the law laid down in 28 Bom 314² and 38 Cal 754³ is no longer valid.

In conclusion it is merely necessary to state one other point and that is that no damages have been proved by the appellant to have been incurred by him by the action of the respondent. To sum up therefore it appears in this case that the license of 1912 was not a contract, and that the action of the respondent with regard to it did not give any ground for a perpetual injunction under S. 54, Specific Relief Act. Even if it were a contract, it is impossible to find in it any negative covenant by the licensor that he would refrain from any act with regard to it. Secondly even if under the Act of 1919 the action of the Local Government in engaging in this business of the supply of electrical energy was ultra vires, it is not ultra vires under the Act of 1935 and therefore no declaration is possible and no injunction can be made restraining the Government from carrying on their business. The appeal therefore fails and is dismissed with costs.

It is however now necessary under S. 205, Government of India Act for this Court to record a finding whether the case involves a substantial question of law as to the interpretation of the Act and if the finding is in the affirmative, to grant a certificate and if the finding is in the negative, to withhold a certificate. The only question of law which is really involved in this case is whether under the Act of 1935 the Government is precluded from engaging in any undertaking of a commercial nature such as the generation and supply of electricity. The law on the point appears to be perfectly clear and I therefore do not consider that any substantial question of law is involved within the meaning of the section and I therefore do not consider it necessary to grant a certificate.

Amar Nath — Surety — Respondent.

Exn. First Appeal No. 285 of 1937, Decided on 14th January 1938, from order of Sub-Judge, First Class, Karnal, D/- 28th June 1937.

(a) Limitation Act (1908), Arts. 181 and 182—Decree for possession—Execution stayed pending appeal on furnishing of security for mesne profits—Appeal dismissed—Execution against surety held governed by Art. 182 and not by Art. 181.

Although a decree is not passed against a surety, it may still be executed against him by reason of S. 145, Civil P. O., and the limitation for an application for execution of a decree against him is laid down by Art. 182, Limitation Act and the decree-holder cannot break away from that Article. [P 592 C 2]

Execution of a decree for possession of certain lands was stayed pending appeal on the judgment-debtor furnishing security for mesne profits till disposal of appeal. The surety executed a bond undertaking to pay mesne profits to a certain extent if the appeal was dismissed. On the dismissal of the appeal, the decree-holder sought execution against the surety to the extent mentioned in the bond :

Held that the application was one for the execution of an order of a Civil Court under S. 145,

Civil P. C., and was governed by Art. 182 and not by Art. 181, Limitation Act: A I R 1922 Lah 208, Applied; A I R 1933 Oudh 209; A I R 1933 Lah 876 and A I R 1936 Mad 801, Disting.; A I R 1927 Lah 346, Ref. [P 592 C 2]

(b) Execution—Order in execution—Record consigned to record room and attachment maintained—Effect is that application is dismissed and attachment is vacated.

Where in execution of a decree, Court ordered that "record be consigned to the record room and the attachment be maintained," the order howsoever worded means that the execution application is dismissed and that attachment has terminated. Judgment. — On 28th January 1925, Nanu Mal obtained a decree for possession of certain lands and houses against Balak Ram High School and Gaushala, Panipat. The defendants preferred an appeal to the High Court, and asked for stay of execution of the decree. On 29th April 1925, Jai Lal J. passed the following order on their application:

Notice. In the meanwhile the execution to be stayed on the petitioner giving security to the satisfaction of the executing Court that he will restore the property in suit and refund the mesne profits to the respondent, if so ordered by the Court.

On 8th May 1925, Amar Nath executed a bond undertaking to pay mesne profits to the extent of Rs. 10,000 in case the defendants' appeal was dismissed by the High Court. This bond was accepted by the executing Court the same day. On 27th February 1930 the appeal preferred by the defendants was dismissed by the High Court. On 25th January 1933, Nanu Mal presented an application for execution stating that mesne profits to the extent of Rs. 10,000 should be realized from Amar Nath, the surety. Amar Nath raised a number of objections. These objections were considered by the executing Court and an order was passed on 11th August 1934, to the following effect:

Thus for the period in question the mesne profits would certainly be over Rs. 10,000 and the surety's counsel clearly admitted this in his arguments. I need not therefore discuss the other evidence on this issue. For all these reasons, I hold that the surety is liable on his bond whose limit is Rs. 10,000 and for the full amount of that limit. He will also pay the costs of this enquiry.

Amar Nath presented an appeal against this order which was dismissed by Agha

Haidar J. on 8th March 1935. On 4th February 1936, the application for execution presented by Nanu Mal on 25th January 1933 was consigned to the record room. The order of the executing Court was in the following terms:

The statement of the counsel for Nanu Mal is to the effect that attachment may be maintained but that the case may be consigned to the record room. As there is hope of a compromise I consign the record to the record room and maintain the attachment.

On 12th February 1936, another application was presented by Nanu Mal asking for execution to the extent of Rs. 10,000 against Amar Nath, the surety. The concluding words in this application were that "the previous application for execution had been consigned to the record room on 4th February while the attachment was maintained. The previous applications may be restored and execution may be proceeded with in accordance with law." The executing Court has held that this application is barred by limitation under Art. 181, Lim. Act. Against this decision Nanu Mal has preferred an appeal to this Court.

It is common ground between the parties that if Art. 181, Lim. Act applies to the present application, it is barred by limitation, and that the application is within time if Art. 182, Lim. Act is applicable. Art. 181 is a residuary Article and would apply only if the present application does not fall within the purview of Art. 182. It was contended by the learned counsel for the respondents that Art. 182 is applicable only to the execution of decrees or orders of any Civil Court which are passed antecedent to the presentation of the application for execution. It was urged that the decree of the High Court in favour of Nanu Mal was merely a decree for possession of land and houses. It did not contain a provision that the defendants would be liable for mesne profits. According to the learned counsel therefore there was no decree or order of a Civil Court of which the execution was sought by means of the applications dated 25th January 1933, and 12th February 1936. The contention of the learned counsel for the respondents was that execution of an order or decree does not stand on the same footing as the enforcement of an agreement, and that the executing Court was merely enforcing the agreement, whereby Amar Nath became a surety against him by demanding the sum of Rs. 10,000 from him. As there was no decree or order of a Civil Court against Amar Nath for the payment of Rs. 10,000 prior to 25th January 1933, or 12th February 1936, the present application did not fall under Art. 182. In support of this contention, the learned counsel relied on A I R 1933 Oudh 209,¹ A I R 1933 Lah 876² and A I R 1936 Mad 801.³ In my opinion none of these rulings is applicable to the facts of the present case. In A I R 1933 Oudh 209,¹ Art. 181 was applied as the application for execution did not fall under any one of the seven clauses of Art. 182. A I R 1936 Mad 801³ deals specifically with rules framed by the Madras High Court under its rule-making power for the ascertainment of mesne profits. The question involved in A I R 1933 Lah 876² was whether any limitation at all was applicable to applications for ascertainment of mesne profits and it was observed that such applications would fall under Art. 181, Lim. Act. Art. 182 was not considered at all.

The surety is liable for the payment of Rs. 10,000 under the provisions of S. 145, Civil P. C., which lays down that where any person has become liable as surety for the payment of any money, or for the fulfilment of any condition imposed on any person, under an order of the Court in any suit or in any proceeding consequent thereon, the decree or order may be executed against him, to the extent to which he has rendered himself personally liable, in the manner herein provided for the execution of decrees, and such person shall, for the purposes of appeal, be deemed a party within the meaning of S. 47. The surety bond of Amar Nath to the extent of Rs. 10,000 was accepted by the executing Court on 8th May 1925. On that date the Court passed an order in the following words: "Zamanat-nama manzur hai." By virtue of S. 145, Civil P. C., this order can be executed against the surety even though the amount of mesne profits may have to be ascertained during the course of execution proceedings. As mentioned already, the executing Court passed an order on 11th August 1934 holding that mesne profits were more than Rs. 10,000 and that the surety was liable to pay

Rs. 10,000 to Nanu Mal. This order was affirmed on appeal by the High Court. This order is also antecedent to the presentation of the present application for execution. I am therefore of the opinion that the present application is one for the execution of an order of a Civil Court under S. 145, Civil P. C. Reference may be made in this connexion to A I R 1927 Lah 346⁴ where it was held that where execution of a decree for possession of immovable property is stayed on the judgment-debtor giving security for mesne profits accruing from the date of the decree up to the disposal of an appeal therefrom, the order means that such mesne profits would be realized in the execution proceedings and that no further proceedings by way of a separate suit would be necessary.

Clause 7 of Art. 182 applies in the present case and recourse cannot therefore be had to Art. 181 which is a residuary Article. It was held in A I R 1922 Lah 208⁵ that although a decree is not passed against a surety, it may still be executed against him by reason of S. 145, Civil P. C., and the limitation for an application for execution of a decree against him is laid down by Art. 182, Lim. Act and the decree-holder cannot break away from that Article. The facts of that case were not very similar to the facts of the present case, but the principle underlying that ruling is fully applicable. The learned counsel on both sides referred to a large number of other authorities but I consider it unnecessary to deal with them as they are clearly distinguishable. The learned counsel for the appellant also addressed lengthy arguments to the effect that the first application of Nanu Mal dated 25th January 1933 had not been dismissed but had merely been suspended, and that that application could be revived, as a request to that effect was made by means of the application dated 12th February 1936. I am not in agreement with the contentions of the learned counsel on this point. I hold that the application dated 25th January 1933 was dismissed by the executing Court on 4th February 1936, that the attachment terminated with the dismissal of the application and that it was not possible to revive this application. For the reasons given above I accept this appeal, set aside the order of the executing Court dated 28th June 1936 and direct the Court to proceed with the present execution application dated 12th February 1936 in accordance with law. Having regard to all the circumstances I order that the parties will bear their own costs throughout.

Civil Revn. No. 129 of 1938, Decided on 14th April 1938, from order of Dist. Judge, Delhi, D/- 23rd October 1937.

Civil P. C. (1908), S. 145—Surety—Attachment—Notice to surety is essential—Notice can be given either by Court passing decree or by Court to which it is sent for execution.

There must be notice to the surety of some kind before his property can be attached in execution of the decree, attachment of the surety's property without notice being ultra vires. It is immaterial however whether such notice is given by the Court which passed the decree or the Court to which it is sent for execution: A I R 1929 Lah 205 and 29 Bom 29, Rel. on. [P 593 C 2]

Order. — Rahim-ud-Din obtained an ex parte decree against the judgment-debtors in the Small Cause Court, Delhi. One of the judgment-debtors, Maharaj Kishore, applied to have the ex parte decree set aside and his application was entertained on condition that security was forth coming for satisfaction of the decree in case his application should be unsuccessful. The ex parte decree was not set aside. The decree-holder realized part of this decree from his judgment-debtors and then applied to the Small Cause Court to transfer the decree to the Court of a Subordinate Judge, Fourth Class, for further execution. A transfer certificate was granted by the Judge, Small Cause Court, the balance of the decretal amount outstanding being shown to be Rs. 344 and it was also made clear that the execution of the decree was transferred as against the three judgment-debtors and the surety Kidar Nath. After the transfer certain immovable property of the surety was attached. The surety at this stage appeared and objected that the Subordinate Judge, Fourth Class, had no power to execute the decree against him. The transferee Court held that the decree had not been fully satisfied and that the surety admitted that he was liable under the terms of his bond, but refused to execute the decree against him on the ground that it had no jurisdiction to do so. Against this decision this petition for revision has been preferred to this Court.

Under the terms of S. 145, Civil P. C., a surety is undoubtedly liable and the decree or order may be executed against him, provided that such notice as the Court thinks sufficient has been given to the surety. In the present case no notice was given to the surety as to why the decree should not be executed against him. His property was at once attached. It was held by me in *A I R 1929 Lah 205*¹ that there must be notice to the surety of some kind before his property can be attached in execution of the decree, attachment of the surety's property without notice being ultra vires. I also pointed out that it was optional for the executing Court to allow the decree to be executed against the surety or against the original judgment-debtors, this question depending upon various elements. In *A I R 1929 Lah 205*¹ the executing Court was also the original Court. It was held however by a Division Bench in *29 Bom 29*² that it was immaterial whether such notice was given by the Court which passed the decree or the Court to which it was sent for execution. I see no reason to differ from this decision.

In the result I accept this petition, set aside the order of the transferee executing Court and hold that the transferee Court has jurisdiction to execute the decree against the surety, but that it should in the first instance issue notice to him to show cause why this should not be done. I have directed the parties to appear before the transferee executing Court on 16th May 1938. On that date the notice required by law can be handed to the surety and an adjournment allowed him to show cause. He may be able to induce, after receiving the notice, the judgment-debtors to pay the amount or he may be able to point out to the Court that the judgment-debtors have ample unencumbered property which can be easily got at. The question of his liability under the surety bond does not arise as he has admitted that he is liable. With these remarks the record will be sent back to the Subordinate Judge, Fourth Class, Delhi, who is executing the decree. The parties will bear their own costs here.

Criminal Appeal No. 95 of 1938, Decided on 24th March 1938, from order of Addl. Sess. Judge, Lahore at Ferozepore, D/- 20th January 1938.

(a) Criminal Trial—Motive—Motive is to be judged by reasonable standards.

Motive for a crime has to be judged by reasonable standards, though what may appear insufficient for one may be a compelling spring of action for another. [P 597 C 2]

* (b) Criminal Trial — Confession — Magistrate taken by Sub-Inspector in charge of investigation of murder to witness the accused discover dead body — Magistrate instead taking charge of investigation and recording confession in instalments — Sub-Inspector merely looking on — Genuineness of confession is doubtful.

Where in a murder trial a Magistrate, who accompanied the Sub-Inspector in charge of the investigation to witness the accused discover the dead body, instead of doing what he was brought to do, took charge of the investigation and taking the accused away recorded the confession of the accused in instalments, while the Sub-Inspector looked on till the post mortem examination, when the latter proceeded to inquire and take a note of what the accused had stated to the Magistrate :

Held that the behaviour of the Sub-Inspector and the Magistrate was so abnormal that it cast a good deal of doubt on the genuineness of the confession. [P 599 C 1]

(c) Criminal Trial—Confession — Oral proof of confession that could be recorded is inadmissible.

Oral proof by a Magistrate of a confession which he could have recorded is inadmissible, for when the Legislature has prescribed a particular mode of proof, no other method will suffice : A I R 1936 P C 253, Foll. [P 601 C 1]

(d) Criminal Trial—Confession—Whole confession unreliable — Discovery too is unreliable.

Where the confession as a whole is unreliable, the discovery which is but a part of that confession should also be held to be unreliable.

Ram Lall J.—Five persons, Akbar and his brother Mahbub, sons of Badr Din, Ilam Din and his brother Muhammad Din, sons of Bali, who is a tenant of Badr Din, and Hidayat, a servant of Badr Din, were tried by the learned Additional Sessions Judge of Ferozepore for the alleged murder of one Muhammad Said, a young lad of 15, the son of Muhammad Din, a Sub-Inspector of Police, posted at the time of the occurrence at Okara in the Montgomery District. The occurrence is stated to have taken place on 11th August 1937 at village Rukhanwala to which the accused persons belong and which is situated at a distance of about three miles from village Sattoke in the Ferozepore District which is the original home of Mohammad Din, Sub-Inspector, and where the deceased had come during his holidays from school. The learned Judge acquitted Mahbub, Mohammad Din and Hidayat, convicted Akbar and Ilam Din under S. 302 and sentenced each of them to death. They have appealed through Mr. D. C. Ralli and Sardar Sahib Jhanda Singh has appeared in support of the conviction. The prosecution case as put forward finally in the Court of the Additional Sessions Judge is very short and simple but so many peculiar incidents came to pass during the different stages of the evolution of this story that it is worthwhile setting out the main facts in some detail.

It is said that on 10th August in the afternoon the deceased borrowed a bicycle from Jamal Din, P. W. 11, promising to return it the next morning. The deceased went on this bicycle to village Charagh Din Wala to visit one Siraj Din, a relative of his, who was lying seriously ill and who died that very night. The way to Charagh Din Wala lay along a canal minor on which is situated village Rukhanwala where Badr Din, father of Akbar, appellant owns lands. The deceased boy is alleged to have travelled part of the way with Inayat Khan, P. W. 16, who was also on a bicycle. At R. D. 76 where Badr Din has some lands under cultivation they were accosted, according to Inayat Khan, by Akbar and Ilam Din, appellants, and Roshan. They dismounted and on Akbar's inquiry Muhammad Said deceased informed him that he was going to visit Siraj Din and would return by the same route next morning as he had to return the bicycle at 9.30 A.M. to the owner thereof. It is stated by Inayat that the two actually made an appointment to meet the next morning at the same place and take some light refreshments (lassi). The next day Muhammad Said was seen by Chiragh Din (P. W. 17) at a place about 7 miles from Chiragh Din Wala on his way back home at about 8.45 A.M. Chiragh Din inquired from him about Siraj Din and was told that Siraj Din had died. This according to the prosecution witnesses was the last that was seen of Muhammad Said alive.

When the boy did not return to Sattoke, inquiries began to be instituted but without success. On 15th August the disappearance of the boy was reported to his father at Okara and he took a week's leave and came into Sattoke at 3 or 4 P.M. on the 18th and immediately sent a Rukka to the police station at Luliani within the jurisdiction of which village Sattoke is situated. The Sub-Inspector in charge of the thana arrived in Sattoke that very evening, put up with Muhammad Din in Sattoke and commenced investigation. This Sub-Inspector Pandit Radhka Narain (P. W. 22) remained in charge till 26th August when he handed it over to D. W. 1 Mumtaz Ahmad Khan. It is the evidence of Pandit Radhka Narain that the first clue about the murder was the statement of Hukam Din Lambardar, an uncle of the accused, on 20th August 1937 which has been proved as Ex. P. J. and has been treated as the first information report in the case. This document recites that while searching for the missing boy Hukam Din came to village Rukhanwala where he spent the night of the 19th. On the morning of the 20th he mentioned the disappearance to a person who is related both to Badr Din and to himself, whereupon this person offered to give information if Hukam Din took an oath that his name would not be disclosed at any stage. Under this seal of secrecy he told Hukam Din that Akbar, appellant, wished to marry a girl to whom the deceased had been engaged and because of this motive, Akbar and Mahbub, Ilam Din and Mohammad Din and Hidayat had killed Muhammad Said, that the corpse would be recovered and that enquiry should be made from Akbar. On getting this information Hukam Din started towards the Abadi and came upon Dulla who was on his way to the railway station as the sun was rising and narrated to him what he had heard, but without giving him the name of the informant. The two then walked together towards Sattoke when they happened to meet Ilam Din, appellant, and his young brother Muhammad Din from whom they made enquiries and Ilam Din after a brief conversation confessed that he along with Akbar, Mahbub, Muhammad Din and Hidayat had murdered Muhammad Said on the morning of 11th August on the Ram Thamman canal minor at the instance of Akbar and had buried the corpse. Mohammad Din supported what Ilam Din said and also confessed that he had joined in the murder. At this stage Dulla went off to catch his train and Hukam Din came to village Sattoke and reported what he had heard to the Sub-Inspector. He says he did not bring Ilam Din or his brother with him so that the other suspects might not come to know of what they knew.

When the Sub-Inspector had recorded this information, he went to Rukhanwala and after making enquiries from Ilam Din arrested him. He was satisfied that Ilam Din would be prepared to recover before a Magistrate the corpse of Mohd. Said, but he made, so he says, no enquiry from the accused whether or not he would be prepared to repeat his confession before a Magistrate. Either this statement, however strange, must be true, or the Sub-Inspector made no enquiry at all from the accused himself for he went straight to Kasur and made an application, Ex. P. B., asking that a Magistrate be deputed to witness the discovery of the corpse of Mohd. Said which the accused Ilam Din had agreed to point out to him from the "adjoining sugarcane field of Akbar, son of Badar Din". On this application, Lala Pran Nath, Magistrate, First Class Kasur, came with the Sub-Inspector and reached the place where Ilam Din was detained on the canal minor near the sugarcane field in question at about 4 P. M. It is worthwhile considering what information was available to the investigating authorities at this stage and what was the natural course of conduct that could be expected of them, in order to judge the action that they are proved to have taken. The first thing that is obvious is that though for 11 days no clue of any kind was available, suddenly on the morning of 20th the whole mystery was revealed, the motive disclosed, the identity of the culprits known, two confessed, and the whereabouts of the body discovered. The reaction of the lambardar to whom the confessions were made by Ilam Din and of Din Mohammad, are somewhat curious; and the action of the Sub-Inspector on this still more curious. In this connexion I would first consider the implications of the statement Ex. P. J.

If what is stated in P. J. be correct then an uncle of the deceased, who is himself a lambardar, suddenly stumbles on information which is of vital importance and within a few minutes of this happens to meet two of the culprits each of whom confesses to him and yet he takes no step to detain the confessing accused. The explanation offered is that he did not bring Ilam Din to Sattoke, a distance of not more than three miles, because he was afraid the other accused would come to hear of it, does not appear to me to be satisfactory. On the other hand to leave these two accused alone was most likely to apprise the others of what was happening. In the second place the sugarcane field in which the body was buried was very close to the place where the accused confessed and yet the lambardar did not take the trouble to have the field indicated to him. In the third place the person who gave the original information to Hukam Din, witness, has not been produced and his name was mentioned only when Hukam Din appeared as a witness in Court. In the fourth place, the information that the deceased had made an appointment to meet Akbar and others on the 11th morning must already have been known through Inayat and that the boy had been seen on the morning of the occurrence at 8.45 P. M. on his bicycle getting on to the bank of the Ram Thaman Rajhab, i. e. very near the place of murder, must have been known through Haji Charagh Din, P. W. 17, who himself belongs to Sattoke. In addition, the fact that Akbar, Mahbub and three others had been seen together at the alleged time and place of murder must have been known through Charagh Din, P. W. 18, and Nur Mohammad, P. W. 19, and yet no enquiry was made from these persons till Hukam Din is told of the murder under a vow of secrecy. The deceased was the son of a Sub-Inspector of Police, and belonged to a family which on the record is shown to be influential in the neighbourhood; the field of enquiry had been restricted and yet no clue was found for nine days. This does lead to the inference that the evidence on the point of the clue is not above suspicion. In the fifth place, from the point of view of the accused, it is strange that immediately on being questioned Ilam Din and his brother should both have confessed to a village lambardar who is a near relative of the deceased, when they, in common with the whole countryside, must have known that no clue had been discovered up to date. The association of Dulla, P. W. 20, in this incident also appears to me to be suspicious and I shall deal with the credibility of this witness later when discussing the merits of the confession. It is sufficient at this stage to say that he was not examined by the police till 26th August and explains his absence by saying that he was away from his village for some days, but as I will show later, he can give no sensible explanation of his visit to Lahore and Kasur during this period. In the sixth place, the motive is stated to be the desire of Akbar to obtain the hand of Mt. Nazir Begum who was engaged to the deceased and that because of this Akbar forced the others to join him in this crime.

It appears to me from the foregoing discussion that if the story as put forward now be correct, then enquiries should have been made from Akbar and others much earlier, that if in fact no clue was known, Hukam Din was not a likely person to whom Ilam Din and his brother would confess immediately on being questioned, and that, if they did, one would expect Hukam Din to take both of them with him straight to the Sub-Inspector who was then at a distance of 3 miles only, and if necessary, Dullah and Hukam Din would have taken the confessing accused by force after getting from them the whereabouts of the corpse. Turning now to the reactions of the Sub-Inspector. He is told for the first time in an important case that two accused are confessing and mentioning the names of three others and also offering to show where the corpse had been buried. He arrests Ilam Din but does not arrest Mohd. Din who was produced before him with two others two days later. The implication is clear that either the statement of Hukam Din and Dullah is false that both accused were confessing, or the Sub-Inspector sadly neglected his elementary duty to arrest and question Mohammad Din, accused. In the second place any Sub-Inspector of experience would have got the accused to point out the corpse then and there in the presence of respectable persons, and would have made efforts to apprehend the other persons named by Ilam Din and at least to lock up their houses. Instead of this obvious course he goes to Kasur to get a Magistrate not according to his own statement to record a confession but to witness the accused discovering the dead body. He says:

Ilam Din never stated before me that he wanted to make a statement of confession before a Magistrate. . . . I never applied that the Magistrate should record the statement of accused Ilam Din. I did not know as to whether the accused wanted to or was prepared to make a statement of confession before a Magistrate.

The reason why the Sub-Inspector is making this statement appears to me to be obvious. If the accused was willing to make a statement to a Magistrate, he should straightway have taken him to a Magistrate but he did not do so. The conduct of the Sub-Inspector in this respect lends colour to the contention of learned counsel for the defence that the whereabouts of the body were already known and that is why the Sub-Inspector waited to get a Magistrate to witness the formal discovery rather than do this part of the investigation himself, and further that the accused was not in fact willing to confess and that this is the reason why he was not taken to record his confession, or Mohammad Din arrested and his confession recorded, or an attempt made to lock up the houses of the other suspects. If the story for the prosecution be true, the conduct of the Sub-Inspector appears to me to be highly incompetent and suspicious.

Before considering what further action was taken by the police and the Magistrate who was brought to the spot at 4 P. M. on the 20th, I think it will be convenient to examine the broad features of the confession as given in Ex. P. J. and in the statements of Hukam Din and Dulla, witnesses. The first feature is the motive. The point of note in this connexion is that all facts constituting the motive were already within the knowledge of the relatives of the deceased. With the knowledge that some at least of these relatives and friends must have heard that Akbar had met the deceased on the 10th and had asked him to meet him again the next morning on his way home, no enquiry was made from Akbar. This shows that the motive was not strong enough to excite suspicion in the mind of the family of the deceased. The motive has a basis in an engagement that according to Mohammad Din, P. W., the father of the deceased, took place at least five years previous to the occurrence, but since then Akbar had married and had got a son: vide the statement of Karam Din, P. W. 8. In the circumstances it appears to me that any annoyance that Akbar might have felt at the betrothal of Mohammad Said must have worn off, and certainly would not be such as to impel him to murder an innocent boy. If the motive is weak qua Akbar, it hardly affects his young brother and the sons of his father's tenant or their servant. To my mind it is unthinkable that because of such a motive Akbar, who was apparently maintaining friendly relations with the deceased and whose father Badr-ud-Din according to the statement of the deceased's father actually visited him at Okara on the 18th should have compelled his young brother of 17 and the sons of his father's tenants to commit an offence of this character. Motive after all is a matter of guess work on the part of those who did not take part in the offence and what may appear insufficient to me, may be a compelling spring of action for another but it has to be judged by reasonable standards. Neither Akbar, judged by any such reasonable standard, would force the other four to join him, nor would the other four yield to this pressure. Not only does the motive appear to me to be wholly inadequate but in so far as it is put forward in the confessions as the only motive disclosed by Akbar the confessions appear to me on this point to be false.

The next main feature of these alleged confessions is the manner of executing the murder. As I have shown before according to the statement of Inayat, P. W. 16, Akbar, Ilam Din and Roshan knew that the deceased would be returning presumably alone on 11th August along the Ram Thaman minor and would pass near the fields of some of the accused. It seems to me to be unlikely in the highest degree that in order to murder a boy of 15 who was unsuspecting and unarmed and who was expected to be alone, Akbar should collect a band of five persons and by threats or otherwise coerce these four, including two lads of 16 or 17 to join him in this enterprise. It would be more natural for him to have carried out this job alone and there is very little doubt that no more than one man was required either to murder or to dispose of the body. The more the people who are taken into confidence, particularly when they are unwilling and without a personal interest in the motive, the more dangerous does the plan become. This unnatural mode of executing a simple plan appears to me to cast considerable doubt on the whole story.

It has been seen that the Sub-Inspector in charge of the investigation went to fetch a Magistrate after leaving Ilam Din on the Ram Thaman minor near the field where the body was buried, without arresting Mohammad Din or attempting to arrest the others or lock up their houses. Mr. Pran Nath Bhalla, Magistrate, First Class, P. W. 13, accompanied the Sub-Inspector who also took the precaution of carrying back with him Dr. Mohammad Afiat Khan, P. W. 1, the Assistant Surgeon of Kasur. The party reached the Ram Thaman minor at 4 P. M. and met Ilam Din, accused, who was detained there. The Magistrate instead of doing what he had been brought to do, viz. to witness the accused discover the dead body, apparently takes charge of the investigation and takes Ilam Din with him in a lorry to a rest house about half a mile away and there proceeds to record his statement under S. 164, Criminal P. C. The procedure of the Magistrate appears to me to be most extraordinary. At Kasur no request was made to him to record a confession. The Sub-Inspector according to his own statement did not know, nor had even enquired from Ilam Din whether he would be prepared to make a confession and therefore the idea of recording a confession must have originated with the Magistrate himself. When the Magistrate first came into contact with Ilam Din, accused, he put no question to him from which it could appear to anyone that he wanted to record a confession. On this point the Sub-Inspector makes the following statement :

The Magistrate did not make any enquiries from the accused in my presence. So I cannot tell why he took him to the rest house. I did not request the Magistrate to take the accused to the rest house. I did not try to find out why the Magistrate was taking the accused away. My idea at the time was that the Magistrate was taking him away in order to inquire from him about the place which he wanted to indicate.

This last idea must clearly be wrong because in Ex. P/B itself, in which the Sub-Inspector asked for the services of a Magistrate, he himself stated that the "corpse was buried in an adjoining sugar-cane field of Akbar, son of Badr Din." The Magistrate himself does not specifically say how the idea of recording a confession under S. 164 presented itself to him. He merely states that he met the accused almost opposite the place where the body was eventually found and took him to the rest house, where he got his handcuffs removed and, as the accused was prepared to make a statement, he gave him half an hour to decide whether or not he would confess. He goes on to say that after the statement had been recorded, he dictated to the Sub-Inspector the substance of the statement made to him by the accused as the Sub-Inspector "wanted to know orally what the accused had said." The first remarkable thing that strikes me in this connexion therefore is that the Magistrate should have undertaken the burden of the investigation without even a request from the Sub-Inspector. The second equally remarkable thing that appears on the evidence is that the Sub-Inspector allowed himself to disappear in the background till the confession had been recorded, the body recovered, and he then tried to find out what the accused had said. The third and still more remarkable circumstance is the method of recording the confession. This was as follows : The Magistrate who says he "knew no fact of this case when he recorded the confessional statement of Ilam Din accused" meets him near the place where the body is buried and without attempting to get the accused to discover the corpse, separates him from the Sub-Inspector and takes him to the rest house in a motor lorry. At the rest house he gets his handcuffs removed and has a talk with him alone in a room and when he is satisfied at 4.15 P. M. that the accused is prepared to make a statement after the usual warning prescribed by law, he leaves him to ponder over the matter for half an hour and resumes his examination of the accused at 4.45 P. M. and subjects him to a number of questions again which he incorporates in his memorandum, Ex. P.C/1 and proceeds to record his statement at the rest house. This statement is Ex. P.C/2. Thereafter the accused is alleged to have said "accompany me and I will show you the place where we all buried the corpse of the deceased." He then puts the accused with him in a lorry and goes with the Assistant Surgeon, Maula Bakhsh lambardar of Okara and dispenser of the Kasur Dispensary to the place where the accused pointed out the place where some clothes of the deceased were burnt and the body buried. This information is incorporated in a memorandum which is Ex. P.C/3. At the end of all this is appended the usual certificate that the confession is a true record of what was stated and that it was made voluntarily. This certificate is Ex. P.C/4 and this is then followed by Ex. P.C/5 which is a memorandum recording the discoveries of the corpse, ashes and a broken bicycle. At the end of this memorandum there is a note that the accused was ordered to be sent to the judicial lock-up and the confession sent to the Ilaka Magistrate. Apparently the Magistrate recorded this confession at different places and at different times and the record thereof is one document which comprises Ex. P.C to Ex. P.C/5, which last was written during the post mortem examination. Having done all this a recovery fard, Ex. P/D, is prepared and signed by the Magistrate himself.

It is noteworthy that the Sub-Inspector is absent throughout all these proceedings, and apparently arrived only during the post mortem examination to enquire and take a note of what the accused had stated to the Magistrate. It appears that the investigation had been conducted by the Magistrate from 4 P. M. onwards and the Sub-Inspector merely looked on. Whatever be the explanation, it shows to my mind that both the Sub-Inspector and the Magistrate had mistaken their true and appropriate functions. I am unable to believe the Sub-Inspector when he says that he did not know that the accused was prepared to confess to the Magistrate, nor can I bring myself to believe that the Magistrate without any suggestion from any person took the accused to a canal bungalow and recorded his confession in the manner in which he says he recorded it. It seems to me that both these officials are deliberately suppressing a good deal of information as to what they did that afternoon and why they did it. The behaviour of both has been so abnormal that it casts a good deal of doubt on the genuineness of such a confession recorded in instalments.

This confession, Ex. P.C/2, recites that one Fattu met the deceased on the 10th and came to know that the boy would be returning the next morning along the canal bank, and then a plan to murder was made. To carry out this plan five persons assembled together and killed the boy with a spear and a kandhali blow, buried his dead body and his bicycle in the sugarcane field of Badr Din. The most remarkable feature of this confession is that the accused implicates five persons as the murderers, viz. Umar Din, Roshan, Fattu, Akbar and (himself) Ilam Din. The first three of these were not implicated in the confession which Ilam Din is alleged to have made that very morning to Hukam Din and which is incorporated in Ex. P/J, nor were the first three challaned by the police. It is obvious from this that either this confession, or the earlier confession, if not both, are false, and in the circumstances neither can be acted upon with any degree of safety. That these confessions are worthless is shown by another circumstance. The first confession of Ilam Din to Hukam Din and Dulla is, in my opinion, not admissible in evidence as being induced by the promise of a temporal advantage, for Dulla stated to the committing Magistrate that he and Hukam Din asked Ilam Din to disclose the true facts and "we would do nothing against them." This confession is not relied upon by the prosecution itself because no action was taken against Umar Din, Fattu and Roshan. Both these confessions therefore should be eliminated from consideration.

But two important matters in connexion with these confessions cannot be left without further comment. After the confession had been recorded, the Magistrate ordered that the accused should be sent to the judicial lock-up but this order was not complied with. Lala Pran Nath Magistrate's evidence makes it clear that a note to this effect was recorded (vide Ex. P.C/5) during the post mortem examination; at this time the Sub-Inspector Radhka Narain was present as he took down in his own hand the substance of the confession. The Magistrate says that the accused was left at the spot in the custody of the police with a written direction that he should be taken to the judicial lock-up at Kasur. It follows from this that the Sub-Inspector must have been given this direction. The Sub-Inspector on the other hand says that the Magistrate did not give me any written order that the accused Ilam Din was to be sent to the judicial lock-up nor do I remember that he had given any oral order. The accused Ilam Din was not kept in a judicial lock-up.

This Sub-Inspector relinquished charge of the thana on 26th August 1937 and was succeeded by Mumtaz Ahmad Khan, D. W. 1. On 2nd September 1937 an application, Ex. D/G, was made to a Magistrate at Kasur complaining that the accused were all being kept in police custody and it was prayed that the police should be ordered to put the challan in Court. It is strange that the Sub-Inspector Radhka Narain should be ignorant of the order of the Magistrate ordering Ilam Din to be taken to the judicial lock-up. It is obvious that either the Sub-Inspector defied the order and is now telling a lie, or that he did not care to acquaint himself with an order which should necessarily have been made after a confession had been recorded. Again in this instance the Sub-Inspector appears to have acted either dishonestly or with gross negligence.

The suggestion of the defence is that the accused were all kept in the custody of the police in order to induce one or other of them to accept the King's pardon. There is good evidence on the record to show that attempts in this direction were being made. In the first place Sub-Inspector Mumtaz Ahmad who assumed charge of the investigation says as D. W. 1 that Ilam Din was taken to Lahore with the object of tendering a pardon to him but he expressed his unwillingness to obtain such a pardon. This happened on 4th September, two days after the application, Ex. D/G referred to above, and while Ilam Din, accused, was admittedly in police custody. Again Mr. Pran Nath Bhalla, P. W. 13, says that an accused other than Ilam Din was produced before him some days after he had recorded Ilam Din's confession, but that other accused refused to make a statement and apparently no record of the proceedings was prepared. This is a forcible indication to my mind, that a good deal of what was happening in the course of the investigation has been concealed from the Court, and it is impossible to regard this investigation therefore with confidence. Nothing material seems to have been done on 21st August, but on the 22nd Akbar, Mohammad Din, Mahbub and Ilam Din are stated to have made oral confessions to one Sardar Bahal Singh, a Zaildar and Honorary Magistrate, Second Class, of Kasur, who had joined the investigation and was in fact an attesting witness to some of the recoveries alleged to have been made that day. Hidayat, accused, was still absconding. The statement of Sardar Sahib Bahal Singh deserves close examination because it appears to me to throw considerable light on the manner in which this investigation was conducted. This witness says that the Sub-Inspector had asked him to talk to the three accused Akbar, Mohammad Din and Mahbub, and he talked to each of them separately. First Akbar confessed to having given the spear blow, then Mahbub stated to him that he had dismantled the bicycle of the deceased and then Mohammad Din confessed to having helped in burying the body. Thereafter Akbar took a party to his village and produced a blood-stained spearhead in a leather scabbard from his father's haveli and two dangs from a manure-heap in the courtyard of the adjoining haveli. One of these dangs was a "kandhali" which was stained with blood and into the other the spearhead mentioned above could be screwed. This gentleman's statement to the police on 22nd August 1937 has been proved and exhibited as Ex. D/C. This is a short statement and is in the following words :

I have made enquiries from Akbar, Mohammad Din, Ilam Din and Mahbub, one by one. They have confessed their guilt before me. Akbar accused is prepared to give the lethal weapons and the iron kassis. I have satisfied myself in this behalf.

This witness was examined in the Court of the committing Magistrate but the record of the committing Magistrate shows that there is no mention in his statement of these confessions. I am not prepared to believe the explanation of the witness that the committing Magistrate did not record this portion of his statement as he probably considered that it was inadmissible and that is the reason why the witness himself did not object when the statement was read out to him. In the second place when it was pointed out to the witness in cross-examination that in his statement to the police he did not give the details of what the accused were alleged to have stated to him, and which he deposed to in Court, he said that the Sub-Inspector had omitted to record these details. The witness made no memorandum of what the accused told him and it is difficult to believe that the Sub-Inspector omitted to record the details if they were given to him. Not content with charging the Sub-Inspector with having omitted to write down his statement fully, he goes on to say that the Sub-Inspector had wrongly recorded in Ex. D/C that Ilam Din also had confessed to him. The Privy Council has held in the recent case in 17 Lah 629¹ that oral proof by a Magistrate of a confession which he could have recorded is inadmissible, for, when the Legislature has prescribed a particular mode of proof, no other method will suffice. Apparently Sardar Sahib Bahal Singh is not authorized to record statements under S. 164, Criminal P. C., and therefore it could be urged that an oral confession to him could be deposed to. Whether this is sufficient to distinguish the Privy Council decision or not, it is not without suspicion that such a Magistrate was introduced into the case to get round the effect of this decision. On the merits of the statement itself, I am not prepared to believe Sardar Sahib Bahal Singh when he says that the Sub-Inspector added to or subtracted from his statement and three of the assessors found that Sardar Sahib Bahal Singh's evidence was false. I am myself inclined to agree with this opinion, and the Additional Sessions Judge disregarded the evidence of the witness on the point, as I shall do.

The next step in the investigation was the recoveries alleged to have been made by Akbar on the 22nd from his father's haveli. The evidence of the Sub-Inspector is that as soon as Akbar was produced before him on the 22nd he undertook to produce the weapons of assault. I have already commented at length on the failure of the Sub-Inspector to get hold of this accused among others for three days, and one is not left without a suspicion in these circumstances that the accused was not "produced before" the Sub-Inspector till he was ready to discover articles. The Sub-Inspector says the accused produced a spear-head, a gandali and a dang into which the spear-head could be screwed from the haveli of his father, from a straw heap and a manure heap respectively. The haveli is a cattle shed and the places of concealment would ordinarily be easily accessible to anyone. The explanation of the accused himself is that the weapons were really discovered by the Sub-Inspector in his presence and the recovery falsely charged to him. Whether this be so or not, it appears to me strange that this accused person should have preserved these ordinary articles in a blood stained condition for 11 or 12 days. The most curious part of the affair is that Hakam Din, P. W. 21, says that he was told by Khan Bahadur (who himself has not appeared as a witness) that he heard the accused "deliberating together with the purpose of removing the dead body because the police were on the spot." If the accused were anxious to remove the dead body, they would have destroyed or at least washed the weapons of offence and not allowed them to stay in easily accessible places. In the circumstances I am not inclined to take the evidence of recoveries seriously against the appellants.

The evidence for the prosecution can be conveniently classed under six separate heads: (a) the motive; (b) the oral confessions of Ilam Din and Mohammad Din to Dulla and Hakam Din, P. Ws. 20 and 21; (c) the confession Exhibit P. C. of Ilam Din to Lala Pran Nath, Magistrate, recorded under S. 164, Criminal P. C.; (d) the recovery of the dead body at the instance of Ilam Din, which has been regarded by the Magistrate as an integral part of his recorded confession; (e) the oral confession of four accused persons to Sardar Sahib Bahal Singh on 22nd August; and (f) the recoveries of the weapons of offence at the instance of Akbar, appellant. I have already shown that the motive suggested could not possibly be regarded as adequate and inasmuch as it is put forward in the confessions, it must be untrue. This item of proof should therefore be disregarded altogether.

I have also shown that neither the oral nor the recorded confessions can be acted upon with any degree of safety and both must be ignored. The oral confession is inadmissible as having been induced by the persons to whom it is alleged to have been made, if it was made at all. The proof of the confession rests on the statements of Dulla and Hakam Din. Dulla could give no sensible explanation of his presence at the spot where the confession was made. He says that he was on his way to a railway station to catch a train for Lahore where he had a debt to collect. It is not clear why he should have left for the station so early. Dulla was not examined by the police for several days and his explanation is that he was not in his village. To the committing Magistrate he said that he returned to Kasur (from Lahore) the following day. He had also stated there that the purpose of his visit to Lahore was to obtain some certified copies and made an application for these after taking with him the agent of a Kasur lawyer. At the trial he admitted that he had no case in which he required copies, though to the police he had stated that he had to attend at Lahore on a particular date in connexion with a case. It is obvious that when the witness could not substantiate the original story of having to go to Lahore for a case, he has now invented a new story. If the story be incorrect, his failure to appear before the police for several days becomes very damaging to his statement. I have already shown that the omission by the relations of the deceased and by the police to make enquiries from the accused persons, who must have been the objects of suspicion if the prosecution evidence is true is extremely suspicious. P. W. 19 Nur Mohammad makes this suspicion all the stronger when he says that his own suspicions were excited when he in company with Chiragh Din, P. W. 18, saw the accused sitting together on the minor and when the disappearance of the boy was known he went to village Sattoke and actually made the suggestion that inquiries should be made from the accused persons. If this statement of the witness be true, it is not intelligible why the statements of this witness and his companion were not recorded by the police till 21st August.

The oral confessions, I have already shown, are not believable for the reason that the story told therein is unnatural, both in its conception, its execution and still more in the time and manner in which the confessions were made, as also because of the person to whom they were made. The confessions are not believable for the further reason that neither the lambardar nor the Sub-Inspector acted in the manner in which a normal person would be expected to act in the circumstances. I am clearly of the opinion therefore that apart from the question of admissibility, the oral confessions cannot be relied upon and should therefore be ignored. Item 3 of proof is still less convincing from the point of view of the prosecution. The Magisterial confession is a strange document in itself, having been recorded in instalments at different places. It gives the names of a set of murderers three of whom are considered innocent by the prosecution and this fact alone condemns this document. I have shown that this document was recorded in circumstances which are clouded with suspicion and by a Magistrate in whose favour the Sub-Inspector had abdicated his functions. I consider that the prosecution cannot derive any benefit from this item of proof which too should be discarded. With this also goes item 4, viz. the discovery of the body by Ilam Din. If the confession as a whole is unreliable, the discovery which is but a part of that confession should also be held to be unreliable. It may well be that the place where the body was found was already known and the recovery was fastened on to a person who was under suspicion, or it may be that the place of concealment was known to Ilam Din but, in the circumstances, this fact, even if established, is not enough to bring home a charge under S. 302 or S. 201, I. P. C. Item 5 of proof, viz. the alleged confessions to Sardar Sahib Bahal Singh, is in my view, perhaps the most unsatisfactory feature of this investigation. I have shown already that the statement of Sardar Sahib Bahal Singh cannot be believed and the Additional Sessions Judge has not relied upon it. The last item is the recovery of weapons and this too appears to me not to be above suspicion as shown before.

The net result is that there is not a single item of proof which is not tainted with suspicion. I am of the opinion that the conduct of those concerned with the investigation, particularly the two Magistrates and the Sub-Inspector, has been such that it would not be fair either to the police force or to the Magistracy as a whole to allow matters to rest here. In the interest of these services it appears to me that the attention of the Punjab Government should be called to their conduct with a recommendation that a further enquiry with a view to taking departmental action is called for. For the reasons that I have detailed above I would accept the appeal and order the release of both appellants.

Young C. J.—I concur and have nothing to add.

Execution Second Appeal No. 1376 of 1937, Decided on 24th January 1938, from order of District Judge, Karnal, D/- 14th July 1937.

(a) Punjab Relief of Indebtedness Act (7 of 1934), S. 36—Limitation for having adjustment certified expiring before Act coming into force—Executing Court can still give effect to such adjustment.

In the Punjab, sub-r. (3) of O. 21, R. 2, Civil P. C., has been repealed by S. 36, Punjab Relief of Indebtedness Act, and the effect of this repeal is that where a judgment-debtor pleads in execution of the decree a payment or adjustment in whole or in part out of Court, the executing Court must go into the question although the judgment-debtor has not taken advantage of the permission given to him by O. 21, R. 2 (2) to apply to the Court to issue a notice to the decree-holder for certification: A I R 1938 Lah 126, Rel. on; A I R 1936 Lah 842, held Overruled. [P 603 C 2]

Hence, even if the limitation for having the adjustment certified had already expired before coming into force of Relief of Indebtedness Act the Court can give effect to this adjustment.

(b) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 21, R. 2—Compromise making over certain decrees owned by judgment-debtor to decree-holder — Balance agreed to be paid by instalments—In default decree-holder to execute decree for each instalment as it fell due—Provision held did not amount to substitution of new decree for old one.

A compromise stated that four decrees amounting to certain sum which were the property of the judgment-debtor, had been made over to the decree-holder in partial adjustment of his claim. The balance was to be paid by means of three instalments and if the judgment-debtor failed to pay these instalments the decree-holder would be entitled to execute his decree for each instalment as it fell due:

Held that so far as the provision regarding three instalments was concerned it could not be said that it amounted to substitution of a new decree for the old decree. The compromise was therefore adjustment. In any case, under Cl. (2) of O. 20 R. 11, Civil P. C., even after the passing of the decree the Court could fix instalments with the consent of the decree-holder: A I R 1931 Lah 608 and A I R 1934 Lah 679, Disting.

Judgment.—There are only two points involved in this appeal. Firstly, whether S. 36, Punjab Relief of Indebtedness Act, is applicable to the present execution proceedings in view of the fact that the compromise between the parties embodying an adjustment took place on 24th January 1934, when the Punjab Relief of Indebtedness Act had not come into force. Mr. Qabul Chand for the appellant contended that as the Relief of Indebtedness Act came into force on 19th April 1935, and as the limitation for having the adjustment certified had already expired on 24th April 1934, the Court could not give effect to this adjustment. This contention is unsustainable in view of a Division Bench ruling of this Court reported in 40 P L R 14.¹ It was held in that case that, in the Punjab, sub-r. (3) of O. 21, R. 2 has been repealed by S. 36, Punjab Relief of Indebtedness Act and that the effect of this repeal is that where a judgment-debtor pleads in execution of the decree a payment or adjustment in whole or in part out of Court, the executing Court must go into the question although the judgment-debtor has not taken advantage of the permission given to him by O. 21, R. 2 (2) to apply to the Court to issue a notice to the decree-holder for certification. The learned District Judge relied on *A I R 1936 Lah 842*² which is a Single Bench ruling of this Court. This Single Bench ruling has been definitely dissented from by the Division Bench ruling referred to above. It was open to the judgment-debtor therefore to rely on the adjustment embodied in the compromise, dated 24th January 1934. The learned District Judge, after going into the evidence, has given a finding to the effect that the compromise as it stands was agreed to between the parties. This finding of fact cannot be interfered with in second appeal.

The second point urged by the learned counsel for the appellant was that a compromise can be held to be an adjustment only when all the terms thereof have been fulfilled by the judgment-debtor, and that a compromise which substitutes one decree for another, cannot be given effect to. Reference was made in this connexion to *A I R 1931 Lah 608*³ and A I R 1934 Lah 679.⁴ In my opinion the facts of the reported cases were very different from the facts of the present case. In the present case, the compromise stated that four decrees amounting to Rs. 1700, which were the property of the judgment-debtor, had been made over to the decree-holder in partial adjustment of his claim. The balance of Rs. 380 would be paid by means of three instalments and that if the judgment-debtor fails to pay these instalments the decree-holder would be entitled to execute his decree for each instalment as it falls due. So far as the sum of Rs. 1700

4. Hukam Chand v. Sadaq, (1934) 21 A I R Lah 679=148 I C 446.

is concerned, it must be taken to have been paid to the decree-holder at the time of the compromise on 24th January 1934. So far as the provision regarding three instalments is concerned, it cannot be said that it amounts to substitution of a new decree for the old decree. In any case, under Cl. (2) of O. 20, R. 11 of the Civil Procedure Code even after the passing of the decree the Court can fix instalments with the consent of the decree-holder. In the present case the compromise was signed by the decree-holder. He therefore agreed to the payment of Rs. 380 to him by means of three instalments. For the reasons given above, I am of the opinion that there is no force in either of the contentions raised by the learned counsel for the appellant. I therefore dismiss this appeal with costs.

Sardar Singh — Plaintiff — Appellant.

Messrs. Nawal Kishore Kharaiti Lal of Cheera Khana, Delhi and others — Defendants — Respondents.

Letters Patent Appeal No. 8 of 1938, Decided on 9th March 1938, from decree of Bhide J. in S. A. No. 644 of 1937, D/- 25th November 1937.

Civil P. C. (1908), Sch. 2, Paras. 20, 15 (c) — Grounds for invalidity in Para. 15 (c) do not cover matters of procedure and not raised before arbitrator — Application under Sch. 2, Para. 20 — Objection that applicant was partner of opposite party and so could not claim specific amount—Point decided against opposite party by trial Court but no decision of High Court obtained on that point — No such objection raised before arbitrator — Separate suit for dissolution of partnership against applicant by opposite party—Award held could not be challenged in suit — Decision on question whether parties were partners did not operate as res judicata.

The grounds of invalidity of an award contemplated in Para. 15 (c) refer to those matters which apparently go to the root of the award and matters which merely pertain to procedure and have not been agitated before the arbitrator are not covered by it. [P 605 C 2]

In proceedings on an application under Sch. 2, Para. 20 an objection was raised on the ground that the party applying was a partner of the opposite party and consequently could not make a demand for a specific sum of money. No such objection was raised before the arbitrator. The opposite party did not persist in obtaining a decision on this point from the High Court, after it had been decided against him by the trial Court. The opposite party brought a separate suit for dissolution of partnership and rendition of accounts against the applicant. The defence was that the decision on the question whether the opposite party was a partner of the applicant operated as res judicata :

Held that it was open to the opposite party to agree to the reference, although it was being sought by a partner, and to have the mutual adjustment of account made in a separate proceeding. Not having raised any objection before the arbitrator on the score of partnership to the claim put forward by the applicant, he could not afterwards challenge the award on the ground that it had been obtained by one partner against another for a specific sum. [P 605 C 2]

Held also that the objection in Sch. 2, Para. 20, Civil P. C. proceeding was not covered by Sch. 2, Para. 15 (c) and so the mere fact that opposite party did not persist in its objection did not debar it from contesting the question in the suit for dissolution of partnership. There the question was directly and substantially in issue and on it hinged the decision of the whole case. [P 605 C 2; P 606 C 1]

Bagwat Dayal and J. N. Aggarwal — for Respondents (Defendants 1 and 4 respectively).

Din Mohammad J.—This Letters Patent Appeal has arisen in the following circumstances : On 28th March 1933, the firm Nawal Kishore Kharaiti Lal through one Babu Mal on the one side and Sardar Singh and Mithu Mal, proprietors of the firm Mithu Mal Company on the other, made a reference to arbitration without the intervention of a Court on which an award was made by the sole arbitrator, Hazari Mal, on 4th April 1933. It may be remarked that Mithu Mal after whom the second firm is called is the same Mithu Mal who is a son of Kharaiti Lal. Later, an application was made under Para. 20, Sch. 2, Civil P. C., that the award be filed in Court. This application was resisted by Sardar Singh on various grounds. He contended inter alia that first Babu Mal, who had signed the reference, on behalf of the firm Nawal Kishore Kharaiti Lal, was not a person authorized to make the reference and consequently the reference was illegal and secondly, that no specific sum could be claimed from him or the firm which he represented inasmuch as the firm Nawal Kishore Kharaiti Lal as such was a partner of the firm Mithu Mal Company and the sum demanded if recoverable at all could only be claimed in the partnership account. The trial Court, while holding that the partner of the firm Mithu Mal Company was Mithu Mal in his individual capacity and not the firm Nawal Kishore Kharaiti Lal, dismissed the application on the ground that Babu Mal was not a person authorized to make the reference in question. From that order an appeal was preferred to this Court which came on for hearing before Abdul Rashid J. He did not agree with the Court below on the point decided against the firm Nawal Kishore Kharaiti Lal and allowed the appeal. He however pronounced no decision on the other point referred to above as it was not agitated before him by the respondents' counsel. Against his order a Letters Patent Appeal was presented but it was dismissed in limine.

In the meantime, on 22nd May 1934, Sardar Singh had lodged a suit for the dissolution of partnership and rendition of accounts against the firm Nawal Kishore Kharaiti Lal along with Kharaiti Lal, Babu Mal and Mithu Mal in their own names. In that suit the defendants contended that the question whether the firm Nawal Kishore Kharaiti Lal was a partner of the firm Mithu Mal Company could not be tried inasmuch as it could have been raised before the arbitrator in the first instance and could also have been taken in objections when an application was made for filing the award. The Subordinate Judge, First Class, upheld the bar of res judicata on both the grounds stated above. On appeal the District Judge maintained the decision of the Court below solely on the ground that the question at issue had been raised in the course of objections to the award and decided against Sardar Singh. A further appeal was preferred to this Court against the order of the District Judge which was disposed of by Bhide J. He came to the conclusion that although S. 11, Civil P. C., did not apply in terms, the general principles of res judicata were applicable and that inasmuch as Sardar Singh did not succeed in his plea to the same effect before the Court ordering the award to be filed, he could not be allowed to re-open the matter in the regular suit. Hence this Letters Patent Appeal.

Counsel for the appellant has criticized the judgment of Bhide J. on three grounds: (1) that the question whether the firm Nawal Kishore Kharaiti Lal was a partner of the firm Mithu Mal Company was not relevant to the arbitration proceedings or to the proceedings under Para. 20, Sch. 2; (2) that both the parties to the reference having joined in making the reference the award made thereon could not be declared to be invalid even if the firm making the application was a partner of the opposite party and that consequently an objection on that score was not covered by Para. 21 read with Para. 15 (c), Sch. 2, Civil P. C., and (3) that in any circumstances the Explanation to S. 11, Civil P. C., which was technical in its character could not be invoked in this case even if it were possible to hold that the general principles of res judicata applied. The crucial point in this case is whether the words "otherwise invalid" as contained in Para. 15 (c) can be so interpreted as to include an objection raised on the ground that the party applying under Para. 20 was a partner of the opposite party and consequently could not make a demand for a specific sum of money. If it is once found that the objection set forth above is not contemplated by Para. 15 (c), the question of res judicata loses its importance.

Could a decree obtained in a regular suit in similar circumstances be declared to be a nullity or avoided otherwise in appeal? The answer is clearly in the negative. First, it is not all suits for specific sums of money between the partners that are barred: see Lindley on Partnership (Edn. 10), page 652, and Singhal's Law of Partnership in British India, page 363. Secondly, even if a suit for a specific sum of money by one partner against another is not competent, it is open to the partner who is being sued to waive this objection and to allow the decree to be passed. Once having done so, he cannot afterwards challenge the decree on the ground of the incompetency of the suit. Similarly, it was open to Sardar Singh to agree to the reference, although it was being sought by a partner, and to have the mutual adjustment of account made in a separate proceeding. Not having raised any objection before the arbitrator on the score of partnership to the claim put forward by the firm Nawal Kishore Kharaiti Lal, he could not afterwards challenge the award on the ground that it had been obtained by one partner against another for a specific sum. The grounds of invalidity of an award contemplated in Para. 15 (c) in our view refer to those matters which apparently go to the root of the award and matters which merely pertain to procedure and have not been agitated before the arbitrator are not covered by it. If therefore Sardar Singh did not persist in obtaining a decision on this point from this Court on appeal, even after it had once been decided against him by the trial Court, he is not debarred from contesting the matter in the present suit. Here the question is directly and substantially in issue and on it hinges the decision of the whole case. The decision on a matter which could not or should not have been raised before does not operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit.

In face of this finding it is not necessary to decide whether the proceedings under Para. 20 could be called a 'former suit' within the meaning of Expln. 1 to S. 11, Civil P. C. Holding therefore that the question at issue can be raised in this suit we allow the appeal, set aside the judgment of the learned single Judge of this Court and remand the case to the trial Court for disposal in accordance with law. In the peculiar circumstances of the case there will be no order as to costs before us.

First Appeal No. 256 of 1937, Decided on 28th April 1938, from decree of Sub-Judge, First Class, Rawalpindi, D/- 9th March 1937.

(a) Punjab Pre-emption Act (1 of 1913), Sec. 22 (5) (b)—Time once fixed cannot be extended.

The Legislature must be intended to mean what it has plainly expressed, and consequently there is no room for construction. It matters not in such a case what the consequences may be. Where, by the use of clear and unequivocal language capable of only one meaning, anything is enacted by the Legislature, it must be enforced, even though it be absurd or mischievous. The underlying principle is that the meaning and intention of a statute must be collected from the plain and unambiguous expression used therein rather than from any notions which may be entertained by the Court as to what is just or expedient. Had the Legislature intended to empower the Court to extend time under sub-s. (5) (b) it would have conferred this power in explicit terms. Hence the Court has no power to extend the time once fixed by it under sub-s. (5) (b) of S. 22 : (1909) 78 P R 1909 and 18 I C 458, Ref. [P 607 C 2]

(b) Pre-emption—Equities are not involved—Subordinate Court exercising its powers in legitimate manner — Court of appeal would ordinarily not interfere.

In a case of pre-emption, where artificial rights brought into existence by the Legislature are used to defeat the legal rights of persons dealing with property, no equities are involved and if a subordinate Court exercises its legitimate powers in legitimate manner, a Court of Appeal would be loath to interfere unless any strong or cogent reasons exist justifying interference. Mehar Chand Mahajan and R. L. Chawla — for Appellants.

Din Mohammad J.—The only question involved in this appeal is whether the order of the Court below dismissing the plaintiffs-appellants' suit for pre-emption for non-compliance with an order made under S. 22 (5) (b) is legally maintainable. The facts are these. Rai Bahadur Buta Singh died on 5th September 1920. He was succeeded by his four sons, Harnam Singh, Jaidev Singh, Atma Singh and Hardial Singh. Of these Harnam Singh died on 28th November 1923, leaving him surviving a son, Jasbir Singh. On 1st June 1929, the property belonging to Jasbir Singh and his three uncles mentioned above was placed under the superintendence of the Court of Wards. The Court of Wards by three different transactions, one of which was completed on 18th September 1933, and the other two on 18th May 1934, transferred a considerable area of land to Sardarni Karam Devi, widow of Rai Bahadur Buta Singh, for Rs. 1,37,000 in all. Thereupon the four sons of Jaidev Singh instituted a suit for pre-emption on the ground of relationship with the wards on whose behalf the Court of Wards had effected the transfers. Prior to the institution of the suit the land in question appears to have been transferred to more than 200 persons, all of whom were impleaded as defendants in the case.

Under Sec. 22 (1) the plaintiffs were required to give security for the payment of the entire sum stated above and they produced one Ram Chand Chadha as a surety on their behalf and his security bond was accepted by the Court. On 19th June 1936, Sardarni Karam Devi, who had been impleaded as a defendant in the case, made an application under S. 22 (5) (b) pointing out to the Court that the security furnished had become insufficient inasmuch as Ram Chand had gone on the verge of insolvency and praying that the plaintiffs should be called upon to furnish fresh security. It was further prayed that in view of the circumstances of the case and the "doubtful value" of the security bonds, an order should be made requiring the plaintiffs to deposit in Court a sum equal to one-fifth of the value of the property in suit. The plaintiffs put in their reply on 13th July traversing the allegations made by Sardarni Karam Devi. They however expressed their willingness to furnish fresh security if so required, at the same time resisting the prayer for cash deposit. The case dragged on for some time and eventually on 11th February 1937 the Court made an order that fresh security should be given on 18th February. On 14th February the plaintiffs made an application asking the Court to extend the period for furnishing security. This application came for hearing on 18th February when it was resisted by Sardarni Karam Devi and Sardarni Sant Kaur who was a rival pre-emptor. The Court after hearing arguments on the question refused to extend the time prayed for and dismissed the suit for non-compliance with its order under S. 22 (5) (b). Hence this appeal by the plaintiffs.

Counsel for the appellants has contended that the Court below was authorized in law to extend the time and that its decision that it was not so authorized is contrary to law. He has relied in this connexion upon 78 P R 1909¹ and 75 P R 1913,² but in our view these judgments are of no use to him in this matter, inasmuch as whatever the interpretation that could be put on the old provisions of law, here the question is how to interpret the amended law which came into existence in 1913, presumably on account of the two judgments referred to above. It may be remarked that prior to the enactment of the Pre-emption Act, 1 of 1913, which is now in force, Act 2 of 1905 laid down the law relating to pre-emption in the Punjab. Under S. 19 of that Act the Court was empowered to require the plaintiff to furnish security or to make a cash deposit within such time as was fixed by it. Subsequent to the enactment of that statute, a question arose as to whether the Court was empowered to extend the time so fixed, if the plaintiff had not been able to comply with the order of the Court within the fixed time. In 78 P R 1909,¹ a Division Bench of the Punjab Chief Court composed of Johnstone and Rattigan JJ. held that it could under certain circumstances. A similar rule was laid down in 75 P R 1913² in a suit which had obviously been instituted prior to 1913. In 1913 the law as to the making of deposits and filing of securities was amended along with the general amendment of the statute and Sec. 22, Pre-emption Act then replaced S. 19. In sub.s. (4) of S. 22, a clear authority was conferred upon the Court by the insertion of the words "or within such further time as the Court may allow." In the course of that amendment, a fresh provision of law was added in the shape of sub.s. (5) (b) providing for those cases where the security furnished had become void or insufficient. In that case the words used were "within a time to be fixed by the Court" and the other words referred to above, viz. "or within such further time as the Court may allow" which had been deliberately inserted in sub.s. (4) on account of the two judgments referred to above, were not repeated. The conclusion is obvious that the intention of the Legislature was not to confer the power of extending time in the latter case as it was in the former and that consequently no Court can arrogate to itself the power which does not vest in it by virtue of any clear provision of law. It is a well recognized canon of interpretation that :

The Legislature must be intended to mean what it has plainly expressed, and consequently there is no room for construction. It matters not in such a case what the consequences may be. Where by the use of clear and unequivocal language capable of only one meaning, anything is enacted by the Legislature, it must be enforced, even though it be absurd or mischievous. The underlying principle is that the meaning and intention of a statute must be collected from the plain and unambiguous expressions used therein rather than from any notions which may be entertained by the Court as to what is just or expedient. (Maxwell on the Interpretation of Statutes, pp. 3 and 4.)

Had the Legislature intended to empower the Court to extend time under sub.s. (5) (b) it would have conferred this power in explicit terms as it had done in sub.s. (4). The omission cannot be due to inadvertence as the Legislature was alive to the importance of the question. We have no hesitation in holding therefore that the Court below had no power to extend the time once fixed by it under sub.s. (5) (b) of S. 22. The only question that now falls for determination is whether the time fixed by the Court for filing the security was so unreasonably inadequate as to justify our interference on that ground. We have already stated above that the insufficiency of the security furnished by the plaintiffs was brought to their notice through Court as far back as June 1936 and although the plaintiffs repudiated the allegation of insufficiency made against Ram Chand, they knew, or with little diligence could have known, full well as to what his financial position was and they had at least eight months within which to prepare themselves for the contingency that was sure to arise. They cannot therefore complain that they were taken by surprise or that the Court was unduly harsh in allowing them only one week within which to furnish a fresh security. In a case of pre-emption, where artificial rights brought into existence by the Legislature are used to defeat the legal rights of persons dealing with property, no equities are involved and if a Subordinate Court exercises its legitimate powers in a legitimate manner, a Court of Appeal would be loath to interfere unless any strong or cogent reasons exist justifying interference and it is obvious that there are no such reasons in this case. We accordingly maintain the order of the Court below and dismiss this appeal with costs.

Exn. Second Appeal No. 25 of 1938, Decided on 2nd March 1938, from order of Senior Sub-Judge, Rohtak, D/. 2nd October 1937.

Execution—Attachment—Exemption—Judgment-debtor agriculturist—Property exempted coming to legal representatives of judgment-debtor after his death — Property retains its immunity from attachment.

Property which is exempted from attachment because the judgment-debtor is an agriculturist retains its immunity from attachment even after the death of judgment-debtor, even though the property goes into the hands of the legal representatives who are not agriculturists. Exemption attaches to the property itself and not to the person holding it for the time being. And a finding that the property is exempt from attachment obtained in an execution against the judgmentdebtor operates as res judicata in subsequent execution against his legal representative: A I R 1936 Lah 895; A I R 1924 P C 202; A I R 1929 Lah 470 and A I R 1931 Lah 6, Rel. on.

Din Mohammad J. — This appeal has arisen in the following circumstances: In 1933 the firm Gurparshad Dewat Ram obtained a decree against one Dulle, a Jat of Mahem, for payment of certain sum of money. On 27th April 1935 the firm started execution proceedings and got three houses belonging to Dulle attached. On 1st June 1935 Dulle claimed exemption on the grounds stated in cl. (c) of the proviso to sub-s. (1), S. 60, Civil P. C. On 30th August 1935 the execution Court holding that Dulle was an agriculturist and that the houses were covered by cl. (c) of the proviso to sub-s. (1), S. 60, set aside the said attachment. Some time afterwards Dulle died and was succeeded by his son, Kishen Chand, and the widow of his predeceased son, Mt. Sahjo. The decree-holder firm again got the same houses attached and the legal representatives of the deceased judgment-debtor put in objections claiming exemption under S. 60, Civil P. C. The execution Court disallowed the objections on the ground that Kishen Chand was a Patwari at Ferozepore and was consequently not carrying on the profession of a cultivator and that Mt. Sahjo had lost all her right on account of remarriage to Kishen Chand. From this order an appeal was preferred to the Senior Subordinate Judge who allowed the appeal and set aside the order of the execution Court. The decree-holder made a further appeal to this Court which has been placed before us for disposal.

The questions that arise for decision in this case are: (1) Whether the decision of 30th August 1935 operates as res judicata? (2) Whether it is necessary for the legal representatives of the judgment-debtor to establish that they in their own right are entitled to claim exemption under cl. (c) of the proviso to sub-s. (1), S. 60, or whether they can take advantage of the status held by the deceased judgment-debtor? and (3) whether the legal representatives can in their own right claim exemption under the said clause? After hearing counsel on both sides, we have come to the conclusion that the decision of all the three questions formulated above should go in favour of the respondents. On the question of res judicata, counsel for the respondents has relied on A I R 1924 P C 202,¹ A I R 1929 Lah 470² and A I R 1931 Lah 6,³ and in our view, these judgments go a long way to support his contention. In A I R 1924 P C 202,¹ in a case in which a decree-holder's application for the discharge of a receiver of the judgment-debtor's property had been dismissed and he had made a second application to the same effect, their Lordships of the Privy Council remarked that the previous decision operated as a bar to the trial of the second application and that the bar proceeded not upon Sec. 11 but upon general principles of law. In A I R 1929 Lah 470,² Tek Chand J. remarked that the execution Court has no jurisdiction to entertain a second application of objection to the attachment and sale when one has failed. In A I R 1931 Lah 6,³ Johnstone J. observed that the dismissal of a previous objection was a bar to a second objection and that the same principle applied to objections preferred under S. 47, Civil P.C.

Referring now to Cl. (c) of the Proviso to sub-s. (1) of S. 60, we find that all that is necessary to be established is that the houses for which exemption is claimed should belong to an agriculturist and are not let out on rent or lent to others or left vacant for a period of a year or more. As stated above, the decree was against Dulle and not against the legal representatives and as such it is being executed against the property of the deceased judgment-debtor and not against the legal representatives personally. Exemption attaches to the property itself and not to the person holding the property for the time being and consequently if the property happens to come within the meaning of Cl. (c) of the Proviso, it is immune from attachment. It is admitted that in the hands of Dulle the property was exempt under the said clause and we do not consider that that exemption vanishes merely because Dulle dies and some other person steps into his shoes as his legal representative. Supposing Dulle had not left him surviving any adult or able-bodied heir, who could carry on the pursuit of agriculture himself, the property would still have been exempt even though the heir at the time when it was being attached, was not cultivating any land with his own hand and, in our view, it should make no difference if the legal representative of the deceased happens to be an adult but does not cultivate any land himself. In a converse case a similar view of the matter at issue was taken by a single Judge of this Court in A I R 1936 Lah 895⁴ and as at present advised we see no reason to differ from him.

These questions however do not arise in this case as on the record it is clearly established that Kishan Chand is an agriculturist in the real sense of the term. There is abundant evidence on the record to support this conclusion and there is no reason to discredit that evidence in any manner. Reference may in this connexion be made to Ex. J.D/2 as well as the statements of Ramji Lal, son of Tirkha, Ramji Lal, son of Bhonra, Gumani, Mt. Sahjo, Mt. Melo, wife of Kishan Chand, and Kishan Chand himself. From whatever point of view therefore the case is looked at, the conclusion is irresistible that these houses are exempt under Cl. (c) of the Proviso to sub-s. (1) of S. 60, Civil P. C. We accordingly affirm the order of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss this appeal with costs.

Addison J. — Milkhi Ram, plaintiff, obtained certain money decrees against the firm Phuman Mal-Raghunath Das, the proprietor of which is Raghunath Das. In execution of those decrees he attached certain agricultural land. Mt. Rajji, a widow of his father Phuman Mal, who is the step-mother of Raghunath Das, put in an objection in the executing Court to the effect that she was entitled to a life interest in a half share of the attached land as one of the heirs of her husband. Her objection was successful and the plaintiff has instituted this suit under O. 21, R. 63, Civil P. C for a declaration to the effect that the half share of the land which was released by the executing Court from attachment belonged to Raghunath Das and was liable to attachment. In the meantime Raghunath Das has become insolvent and the Official Receiver has also been impleaded. The suit was contested only by Mt. Rajji who pleaded inter alia that she succeeded under a special custom to a half share of her husband's property for her life. The trial Judge has accepted this contention and dismissed the suit. Milkhi Ram has appealed. Raghunath Das and his mother are Nauhria Aggarwals, a trading and money-lending class who are not agriculturists. It was not pleaded that they were governed by the Customary law of the Ferozepore District and in fact as a witness Raghunath Das admitted that they followed Hindu law subject to a special custom that when a person dies, leaving a widow without sons and sons by another wife such widow was entitled to a life interest in half of her husband's property for her life.

It has been established that with respect to other properties left by Phuman Mal, Raghunath Das has been dealing with them as his own without any objection on the part of Mt. Rajji. It has also been established that Mt. Rajji is living with Raghunath Das who looks after the entire land and lets it out to tenants. It is true however that in 1921 as regards this agricultural land a mutation was entered by the patwari to the effect that the son and widow were entitled to succeed to the land in equal shares and this mutation was sanctioned. It is impossible to say whether any real effect was ever given to this mutation as Mt. Rajji lives with Raghunath Das who manages the entire land. This mutation is in dispute and cannot be taken as an instance establishing the special custom at variance with Hindu law set up in this case. There is however an instance amongst these Nauhria Aggarwals of Dharam Kot where in 1917 Mt. Saddi, widow of Labhu Ram, a Nauhria Aggarwal, got a share in the agricultural land equal to that of the sons of his second wife. This is the only piece of evidence on the record. The trial Judge has remarked that very few instances will prove such a custom as it is unreasonable to expect a large number of instances where a special custom is set up in the case of a small group of families. There appear to be 32 families of these Aggarwals in Dharam Kot so that there are a fair number of them in the village. The initial burden of proof may have been on the plaintiff as the objection in the execution case was decided against him but that onus immediately shifted when it was made clear that parties followed Hindu law. As they follow Hindu law it is for Mt. Rajji to establish a special custom at variance with Hindu law. In our judgment the one instance relied upon cannot be held to be sufficient to establish that custom in the circumstances already described.

Among persons who follow Customary law in the Ferozepore District, it is clear from the compilation of Customary law of that District, published in 1914, that according to question 35 there are a few sub-tribes of agricultural Jats and Khosas who in the Fazilka Tahsil follow that particular custom but on the whole the majority of the tribes do not follow this custom. It may be that in this particular village and its surroundings some agricultural tribes do follow this custom and that may explain why the mutation was entered. In any case as the Nauhria Aggarwals of Dharam Kot do not follow custom but Hindu law it was for Mt. Rajji to establish the special custom she relied on and this she has failed to do. We therefore accept the appeal and decree the plaintiff's suit with costs of the trial Court to be paid by Mt. Rajji. Parties will bear their own costs here. It will however be the duty of the Insolvency Court to make any provision for the maintenance of Mt. Rajji to which she may be legally entitled. That question does not form the subject of the present suit.

Judgment.— The following pedigree-table will be helpful in understanding the facts of this case:

LAKHA SINGH

The land in dispute measures 89 kanals and 7 marlas. The plaintiffs are the owners of this land. The defendants claim occupancy rights under S. 6, Punjab Tenancy Act. The plaintiffs instituted the suit, out of which the present appeal has arisen, on 23rd March 1935, for possession of the land in dispute on the ground that Mt. Indo, defendant 1, Suba Singh, defendant 2, and Anup Singh, defendant 3 were no longer occupancy tenants in respect of this holding and that the plaintiffs were entitled to resume it on the extinction of the line of Hardit Singh. The trial Court dismissed the plaintiffs' suit on the ground that the tenancy was jointly acquired by Gulab Singh, and Punjab Singh, sons of Ganda Singh, and Chanda Singh, Jawahar Singh and Hira Singh, sons of Prem Singh; and that so long as the branch of any of these five persons had not become extinct, the landlords were not entitled to a decree. Dissatisfied with this decision the plaintiffs preferred an appeal in the Court of the learned Additional District Judge. The learned Judge came to the conclusion that Anup Singh and Suba Singh had no right in the land in dispute as the tenancy was acquired by Punjab Singh and Gulab Singh only, who associated with them their brothers Phula Singh and Sardul Singh. He held that as none of the descendants of Jhanda Singh had acquired occupancy rights in the land in dispute, the descendants of that branch were not entitled to resist the claim of the plaintiffs. On these findings the plaintiffs' appeal was accepted and they were given a decree for possession of the land in suit with costs throughout. The contesting defendants, namely Mt. Indo, Anup Singh and Suba Singh, have preferred a second appeal to this Court.

The history of the acquisition of the occupancy rights in the land in dispute has been given in great detail in the judgment of the trial Court. I have verified the facts mentioned in the trial Court's judgment from the revenue records and find that the facts have been given accurately. The learned Additional District Judge has observed in his judgment that the occupancy rights in the land in dispute were acquired some time before 1865 by Punjab Singh and Gulab Singh who associated with them their brothers Phula Singh and Sardul Singh. This observation is the real basis of the judgment of the learned Additional District Judge. This observation however does not represent the facts correctly. In 1865 the land in dispute was in possession of Gulab Singh and Punjab Singh, sons of Ganda Singh, and Chanda Singh, Jawahar Singh and Hira Singh, sons of Prem Singh, on a lease for a period of fifteen years. The occupancy rights were not acquired in 1865. On 2nd July 1870 occupancy rights were acquired in this land not by Punjab Singh and Gulab Singh alone but by the five persons mentioned above who were in possession of the land in dispute as lessees. The revenue records of the year 1865, therefore make it perfectly clear that the occupancy rights were jointly acquired for five persons, three of whom were the descendants of Jhanda Singh. This mistake has vitiated the entire judgment of the learned Additional District Judge.

It was contended by the learned counsel for the respondents that in the revenue records of the years 1906-1907 and 1911-1912, we find that Gulab Singh and Punjab Singh had associated their brothers Phula Singh and Sardul Singh with themselves and that each one of these four persons was in possession of one-fourth of the land in dispute. It was urged that this fact showed that Chanda Singh, Jawahar Singh and Hira Singh had sold their occupancy rights in favour of Phula Singh and Sardul Singh. The inference drawn by the learned counsel from the absence of the names of Chanda Singh, Jawahar Singh and Hira Singh from the revenue records of 1911-1912 does not appear to me to be justified. If there were any sale by the descendants of Jhanda Singh in favour of Phula Singh and Sardul Singh after the year 1870, that would have undoubtedly found a place in the revenue records. Moreover, we find that in the revenue records of 1926-1927 and 1930-1931, the names of the descendants of Jhanda Singh again appear as holding portions of the property in dispute. Further, I am not satisfied that the names of the descendants of Jhanda Singh had completely disappeared from the revenue records of 1906-1907 and 1911-1912. The name of Mahla Singh appears in the records of 1906-1907 as the holder of part of the land in dispute.

The learned counsel for the respondents contended that as Sundar Singh had sold his holding to Hardit Singh, Anup Singh and Suba Singh, the appearance of the names of the descendants of Jhanda Singh in the revenue records of 1926-1927 was explainable as some of them were the vendees from Sundar Singh. It must however be remembered that Mahla Singh was not one of the vendees from Sundar Singh, nor were Mahla Singh's ancestors purchasers of the share of Sundar Singh. As I have held that the occupancy rights were acquired jointly by five persons, namely Punjab Singh, Gulab Singh, Hira Singh, Jawahar Singh and Chanda Singh in respect of the land in dispute on 2nd July 1870, the plaintiffs are not entitled to a decree until the descendants of these persons have lost the occupancy rights either by sale or any other reason. As mentioned above, the finding of fact given by the learned Additional District Judge has been completely vitiated by his misreading the revenue records of 1865 and 1870. It has been held in a Full Bench ruling of this Court, reported in 11 Lah 427,¹ that the provisions of S. 59, Punjab Tenancy Act, are not exhaustive and that if a tenancy has been jointly acquired, the heirs of all the joint tenants succeed by survivorship. It is obvious that until all the descendants have become extinct, the tenancy does not revert to the landlords. For the reasons given above, I accept this appeal, set aside the judgment and decree of the learned Additional District Judge and restore that of the trial Court. Having regard to all the circumstances of the case, I leave the parties to bear their own costs throughout.

Second Appeal No. 851 of 1937, Decided on 12th January 1938, from decree of Dist. Judge, Delhi, D/- 8th March 1937.

Punjab Municipal Act (3 of 1911), S. 195 — There must be definite finding as to the date on which unauthorized structure had been completed.

Action under S. 195 can be taken only if notice is delivered within six months of the date of the completion of the unauthorized structure. Hence, there must be a definite finding as to the date on which the construction of the unauthorized structure had been 'completed.' Merely finding that the structure was 'constructed' in certain year is vague and indefinite. [P 613 C 2]

Achhru Ram — for Respondent.

Judgment. — On 2nd March 1934, the Municipal Committee, Delhi, issued a notice to the plaintiff Budh Ram under S. 195, Municipal Act, requiring him to demolish the roof of a room and a chhaja on the third storey of the house which it was stated, he had constructed without sanction. On receipt of this notice, the plaintiff instituted a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge for issue of an injunction to the committee restraining it from interfering with the room and the chhaja. He contended that the structures in question had been completed more than six months before the delivery of the notice and therefore the committee was not entitled to order their demolition under S. 195. The committee resisted the suit, urging that the structures had been built within six months of the notice. The trial Judge found that the roof and the chhaja in question had been constructed in 1931 and on this finding he decreed the suit. On appeal by the Municipal Committee, the learned District Judge has come to a contrary conclusion and holding that the roof and the chhaja "were constructed in the year 1933" he has dismissed the suit.

This finding of the learned District Judge is vague and indefinite. Action under Sec. 195 can be taken only if notice is delivered within six months of the date of completion of the unauthorized structure. The notice in this case was issued on 2nd March 1934 and must have been delivered to the plaintiff a few days later. The learned Judge should therefore have definitely found that the construction of the roof and the chhaja in question had been completed later than 4th or 5th September 1933. In the absence of a clear finding to this effect it has become necessary for me to consider the evidence bearing on the point. The learned District Judge has rightly accepted as true the evidence of the witnesses produced by the plaintiff whom he has described as "independent and respectable and having no interest in making false depositions in favour of the plaintiff." On their testimony he has held that in 1931 the plaintiff had purchased building materials including girders, cement, lime, paints and varnishes. He has also considered as reliable the evidence of the masons produced by the plaintiff, but he has apparently misunderstood what these masons had said. From their evidence the learned Judge has concluded that in 1931 they were employed in "building the walls of the room in question." The masons however have definitely deposed that the walls were old and were not built or raised by them in 1931. One of them further stated that in 1931 the old roof was changed and instead of wooden rafters, iron girders, which had then been newly purchased, were put up, and the chajja also was rebuilt. The other mason, P. W. 2, worked for a short time only and he states that in 1931 the "old rafters in the roof were exchanged into iron rails." This evidence therefore does not warrant the conclusion that in 1931 the masons were employed in "building the walls of the room with the materials purchased in that year." This matter is indeed put beyond doubt by the terms of Resolution (No. 12) passed by the Municipal Committee itself on 2nd March 1934 when notice under S. 195 was ordered to issue to the plaintiff. In this Resolution it was stated distinctly that "all the walls of the room were old and that only the roof and the chhaja had been recently built." It was therefore neither party's case that the walls of this room were built in 1931. This finding of the learned Judge is clearly based on a misapprehension of the evidence.

The learned Judge has further relied upon the evidence of D. Ws. 1, 2 and 3, who, he says, "are unanimous in stating that a new roof was being put to the room in September 1933" and has held that he regarded their statement as absolutely correct. The most important of these witnesses is D. W. 3, Lala Sham Lal, Naib Tehsildar. But he by no means supports the evidence of the other two witnesses on this point. He visited the spot on one occasion only in November 1933 when he made a report. In this report he stated that the "roof had been built already." He does not say either in the report or in his deposition in Court as to how long earlier the roof had been built—whether it was two months or two years or more. His evidence therefore is of no assistance in the matter. D. W. 1 is a Building Jamadar and D. W. 2 a Building Inspector of the Municipal Committee. They no doubt have stated that in the latter part of September 1933 the roof and the chhaja were under construction. I am however not inclined to accept their evidence uncorroborated as it is by any other reliable evidence in preference to the plaintiffs' evidence which the learned District Judge himself has held to be reliable. It appears most unlikely that the building materials including girders, cement, lime and even paints and varnishes should have been purchased in 1931 but not used till 1933 and during these years the room would have remained without a roof.

I hold that the construction of the roof and the chhaja in question had been completed more than six months before the issue of the notice and the committee could not require their demolition under S. 195, by a Resolution passed on 2nd March 1934. I accept the appeal, set aside the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the Court of first instance. Having regard to all the circumstances I leave the parties to bear their own costs throughout.

Order.—Amin Lal lodged a complaint against Bhagu and four others under Sections 325/147, Penal Code. This went for trial to a Magistrate, Second Class. He charged all five accused under Section 323, Penal Code, and then acquitted Bhagu, while he convicted the four others and sentenced them to fines. A revision petition was preferred to the Additional District Magistrate. He held that the proper charge against Bhagu would have been one under Section 324, Penal Code, and as he had not been charged under that section, he ordered that he should be tried under it. Against this order of the Additional District Magistrate, this revision petition has been preferred to this Court. It must be accepted. The case is fully covered by Illus. (e) to Sec. 403, Criminal P. C., which is as follows :

A is charged by a Magistrate of the first class with, and convicted by him of, voluntarily causing hurt to B. A may not afterwards be tried for voluntarily causing grievous hurt to B on the same facts, unless the case comes within Para. 3 of the section.

The present case does not come within Para. 3 of the section. The only difference between this Illustration and the case before me is that the Magistrate who tried this case was a Magistrate, Second Class, but a Magistrate, Second Class, has power to try an offence punishable under S. 324 or S. 325, Penal Code. The Additional District Magistrate therefore had no power to order that he should be re-tried under Sec. 324, Penal Code, as that charge could have been framed by the Magistrate, Second Class. For the reasons given, I accept this petition and set aside the order of the Additional District Magistrate, dated 3rd November 1936, directing the trial of Bhagu alias Bhag Singh.

First Appeal No. 364 of 1937, Decided on 1st April 1938, from decree of Senior Sub-Judge, Lyallpur, D/- 9th July 1937.

Punjab Land Revenue Act (17 of 1887), S. 111—Mortgagee is not owner of land and hence cannot claim partition.

Section 111 confers the right of partition only on joint owners and joint tenants and unless a person falls under either of these categories, he cannot claim partition of agricultural land as of right. Din Mohammad J.—The facts of the case out of which this appeal has arisen may shortly be stated. One Sawan Singh mortgaged his land to three sets of persons in three different shares, and of these an 8/15th share was mortgaged to Sewa and Kahan Singh. The mortgage relating to the remaining 7/15th share was redeemed but the mortgage in favour of Sewa and Kahan Singh continued. These two mortgagees instituted a suit for possession of the whole land and on appeal to this Court obtained a decree for joint possession of an 8/15th share in the land in suit. This happened on 6th November 1935. Having obtained this decree they made an application to the Revenue Officer concerned for partition under the Land Revenue Act.

The Settlement Officer who heard the petition dismissed it on the ground that the petition could not succeed so long as the petitioners did not obtain an order from the Civil Court. Thereupon Sewa and Kahan Singh instituted the present suit praying for a declaration that they were entitled to have their own share separated off. This suit was resisted by the mortgagors and dismissed by the Senior Subordinate Judge mainly on the ground that a mortgagee was not an owner of land within the meaning of Sec. 111, Punjab Land Revenue Act and could not therefore claim partition. The plaintiffs have appealed. Counsel for the appellants has referred us to the definition of the term 'land-owner' as contained in Clause (2) of S. 3, Land Revenue Act and argued that inasmuch as a mortgagee is covered by this definition, he is a person contemplated by S. 111, Land Revenue Act, and the words "owner of land" convey the same meaning as the term "land-owner." We however consider that the interpretation put on the words "owner of land" by the appellants' counsel is not legally correct. In 82 P R 1898¹ a Full Bench of the Punjab Chief Court observed as follows :

The word used in S. 111 is 'owner', not 'land-owner' and, in our opinion, the two terms are not synonymous. 'Land-owner' has a very wide signification and includes many persons whose interests in land are of a limited or ephemeral character. The word 'owner' has not been defined in the Act and according to the accepted canons of interpretation we must, unless the context negatives such a construction, take it to have been used in its ordinary sense.

In A I R 1921 Lah 83,² Abdul Raoof J. approved of the observations made in 2 P R 1918 (Rev)³ and remarked that a mortgagee with possession might come under the definition of landlord but he was in no sense an owner and had consequently no locus standi to object to the correctness of the partition proceedings. We are in respectful agreement with the observations made in these judgments and consider that unless the interpretation as suggested by these judgments is adopted, a queer situation is likely to arise in certain cases inasmuch as a land-owner as defined in S. 3 includes even a person to whom a holding has been let in farm for the recovery of an arrear of land revenue or of a sum recoverable as such an arrear. Reference has been made to 11 P R 1885⁴ and 4 P R 1903⁵ in support of the contention that in case a mortgagee obtains a decree from a Civil Court establishing his right to partition, a Revenue Officer is bound to enforce that decree. It is true that while holding that a mortgagee as such was not entitled to partition, some remarks to the effect indicated above were made in these two judgments ; but we doubt the correctness and legality of those remarks. S. 111, Land Revenue Act, confers the right of partition only on joint owners or joint tenants and unless a person falls under either of these categories, he cannot claim partition of agricultural land as of right. And when once it is held that a mortgagee is not an owner of land, we fail to see how he can enforce partition under S. 111 in any manner and how a Civil Court can support his claim.

Our attention was further drawn to 9 P R 1895,⁶ where Mr. Young, Financial Commissioner, lays down that no one even though he may be a land-owner as defined in S. 3 is entitled to claim partition unless he fulfils one or other of the three conditions of S. 111, Land Revenue Act. But with all respect we consider that while using the term 'land-owner' the Financial Commissioner did not clearly realize its full implications. The term used in S. 111 is 'owner of land' and not land-owner, and the conditions laid down in Cls. (a), (b) and (c) of S. 111 come into play only if the requirements laid down in the substantive part of the section are satisfied. So long therefore as a person cannot claim the benefit of the substantive part, the conditions enumerated in Cls. (a), (b) and (c) would not avail him in any manner. Holding that the plaintiffs as mortgagees are not owners of land within the meaning of S. 111, Land Revenue Act, we maintain the decision of the Court below and dismiss this appeal with costs.

Order.—Civil Revisions Nos. 987 of 1937 and 82 of 1938 are connected and will be disposed of together. They arise out of a suit for certain declarations instituted by the plaintiff Mian Mohammad Musa with respect to a khankah with certain adjacent properties situated in mauza Muradpur in the Hoshiarpur District. The defendants resisted the suit inter alia on a preliminary plea that no suit for a declaration was competent. This plea was rejected by the trial Court, but the learned District Judge has found that the defendants were in joint possession of some of the properties and that therefore he should have sued for possession also. He therefore accepted the appeal and remanded the case to the trial Court with a direction that the plaintiff be allowed to amend his plaint by including a prayer for possession. Both parties have filed petitions for revision, the plaintiff contending that a suit for a declaration was competent and no amendment was necessary and the defendants contending that permission to amend the plaint should not have been given inasmuch as the plaintiff had failed to amend the plaint in the trial Court in spite of the objection raised by the defendants. The order passed by the learned District Judge appears to me to be unintelligible. The plaintiff according to his allegation was already in possession and this was not disputed by the defendants, who merely claimed to be in joint possession with him. In the circumstances it is not clear why the plaintiffs should have sued for possession at all. The learned District Judge perhaps meant to say that the plaintiff should have sued for ejectment of the defendants. Assuming that this was his meaning, the question arises whether it was necessary for the plaintiff to sue for such a relief.

The learned counsel for the plaintiff has contended that the plaintiff was suing merely for a declaration that he was a gaddi nashin of the khankah at mauza Muradpur and it was not necessary for him to sue for possession of any property that might be attached to the khankah. In support of this contention he relied upon A I R 1933 Oudh 517¹ and A I R 1935 Lah 657.² As regards the first ruling it appears that the plaintiff was suing in that case for a mere declaration that he was the sole mutwalli of certain waqf property. The main dispute between the parties was, whether the plaintiff was the mutwalli, and it was not disputed by the defendants that if he was the mutwalli he would be entitled to possession of the property which was in their possession. In the present instance, however the plaintiff has actually asked for a declaration that he is entitled to remain in exclusive possession of khasra Nos. 563 and 564. A I R 1935 Lah 657² is also distinguishable inasmuch as consequential relief in the shape of an injunction was asked for in that case. In the present case the plaintiff did not sue for any consequential relief at all. In view of these facts, it seems to me that the learned District Judge was justified in ordering the plaintiff to amend the plaint. The defendants' contention is that no amendment should have been allowed in view of the fact that the plaintiff had at first refused to amend the plaint. It appears however that he did put in an application subsequently stating that he was willing to amend the plaint, if any amendment was considered to be necessary. The learned District Judge has, in view of this petition, held that the plaintiff should be allowed to amend the plaint and I see no good ground for interference in revision with the discretion exercised by him. As regards the nature of the amendment however, I have already pointed out that it was not necessary for the plaintiff to sue for possession of the khasra numbers inasmuch as he was already in possession and this fact was not disputed. The plaintiff could only have sued for the ejectment of the defendants or for an injunction restraining the defendants to interfere with his rights in respect of the property: cf. A I R 1930 All 600.³ Inasmuch as the plaintiff in this case claimed to be entitled to exclusive possession of khasra Nos. 563 and 564, it would appear that on the allegations made in the plaint the appropriate relief in respect of these numbers would have been ejectment of the defendants from these khasra numbers.

I accordingly accept the plaintiff's petition for revision to the extent of directing that the plaintiff should amend the plaint by including a prayer for ejectment of the defendants from khasra Nos. 563 and 564. It is open to him to sue also for an injunction restraining the defendants from interfering with his rights, as a manager of the khankah, if he thinks it fit to add any such relief. The amended plaint should be put in, in the trial Court on or before 11th April 1938. Parties are directed to appear in the trial Court on that date. Plaintiff has only succeeded technically in this petition for revision. As he persisted in maintaining his suit in a declaratory form and asked for amendment only at a very late stage, I direct that the plaintiff shall pay Rs. 100 on account of the costs of the defendants in this Court and in the Court of the District Judge. Other costs will follow final decision. The cross petition for revision (No. 82 of 1938) is dismissed with costs.

Criminal Appeal No. 1164 of 1937, Decided on 26th November 1937, from order of Magistrate, First Class, D/- 30th August 1937.

Penal Code (1860), S. 304, Part 2—Accused's father when digging channel objected by deceased — Objection resulting in altercation between them — Accused taking iron rod with which channel was being dug and striking with it on head of deceased thereby killing him — Accused held could be convicted under S. 304 — Sentence of five years held too severe.

The deceased and the accused were neighbours. One day the accused's father began to dig a water channel close to the wall of the deceased's house. The deceased begged him to dig it a little distance away so as to avert any danger of his wall collapsing. This request led to an altercation and accused's father and the deceased grappled with each other. While they were doing so, the accused came up with an iron rod with which the water-course was being dug and seizing it with both hands struck a blow on the deceased's head. The deceased fell down dead :

Held that the accused must be credited with the knowledge that the heavy iron rod was likely to cause death. He could therefore be rightly convicted under Part 2 of S. 304. However in the circumstances of the case the sentence of five years' rigorous imprisonment was unnecessarily severe. There was no antecedent enmity between the parties. The quarrel arose very suddenly. The choice of weapon was fortuitous and was not one which indicated any real intention to kill or to cause serious injury. The accused saw his father grappling with another man and to that extent there was some provocation to him to commit the act he did. These were extenuating circumstances. [P 618 C 2]

Judgment. — Sadhu Barwala of Kang appeals from the order of a Section 30 Magistrate of Gurdaspur sentencing him to five years' rigorous imprisonment under Part 2 of S. 304, I. P. C. The deceased in this case, Harnama, and the appellant were neighbours. On the morning of 6th June last Mehr Din, the appellant's father, began to dig a water channel close to the wall of the deceased's house. The deceased begged him to dig it a little distance away so as to avert any danger of his wall collapsing. This request appears to have led to an altercation and Mehr Din and the deceased grappled with each other. While they were doing so, the appellant came up with an iron rod with which the water-course was being dug and seizing it with both hands struck a blow on the deceased's head. The deceased fell down and his daughter Mt. Lajo came to the spot. She was also hit by Sadhu with the same rod. Sadhu then ran away and subsequently produced the rod in the course of the investigation.

The eye-witnesses of this occurrence are Sewa Singh, Bur Singh and Partap Singh. Sewa Singh is a relation of the deceased and so is Mt. Lajo who also gives evidence. There seems to be no reason to doubt the truth of their testimony on this score alone as there is no suggestion that there was antecedent enmity between the parties. They are moreover corroborated by Bur Singh and Partap Singh who are independent witnesses. There is no reason apparent on the face of the record for discrediting the evidence of these witnesses and all that the counsel for the appellant is able to do is to point out some quite immaterial discrepancies. On the other hand the story told by the defence is not only contradicted by the medical evidence but is, as has been shown by the learned trial Magistrate, ridiculous on the face of it ; so much so that even the doctor that the defence themselves produced in their attempt to show that the story for the prosecution was absurd was unable to do so and had to hedge and qualify his statement. In my opinion there is not the least doubt that this transaction happened as described by the prosecution witnesses and Sadhu must be credited with the knowledge that this heavy iron rod was likely to cause death. He has therefore been rightly convicted under Part 2 of S. 304, I. P. C. I am however inclined to think that in the circumstances of the case the sentence of five years' rigorous imprisonment is unnecessarily severe. There was no antecedent enmity between the parties. The quarrel arose very suddenly. The choice of weapon was fortuitous and was not one which indicates any real intention to kill or to cause serious injury and it must be remembered that this young man saw his father grappling with another man and to that extent there was some provocation to him to commit the act he did. These appear to me to be extenuating circumstances and taking them all into consideration I reduce the sentence of five years rigorous imprisonment to two and a half years.

Judgment.—This judgment will dispose of Regular Second Appeals Nos. 56 of 1938 and 57 of 1938, both of which relate to a plot of vacant site, marked A B C D on plan Ex. P. L. On 26th January 1934, the Municipal Committee, Rohtak, passed a resolution requiring Kumman (one of the defendants in the suit which has given rise to Regular Second Appeal No. 56 of 1938 and father of Shahamad, plaintiff in the other suit) to demolish a chhappar and a manger which (it was stated) he had constructed recently on a portion of the plot in dispute. On 2nd March 1934, Shahamad instituted a suit for a declaration that he was the owner of the plot in suit and that the Municipal Committee had no power to require the demolition of the manger and the chhappar constructed by him. The Municipal Committee denied the plaintiff's claim and contended that the whole of the plot A B C D was a "street" as defined in S. 3 (13), Municipal Act and that the plaintiff had no right to raise any structures on it. While this suit was pending, Sujan Singh, who is a resident of the mohalla and owns the adjoining property, instituted another suit against Kamman and his son Shahamad for a permanent injunction that the plot A B C D was reserved as a sehan and thoroughfare for the joint purposes of the residents of the mohalla and that the defendants, by constructing the manger and the chhappar on a portion of it, had deprived the residents of their user. He therefore prayed for issue of an injunction requiring the defendants to remove the structures and restoring the site to its original shape.

The two suits were tried together and were decided by the Subordinate Judge on the same day. He decreed the suit of Shahamad against the Municipal Committee and dismissed the suit of Sujan Singh against Kumman and Shahamad. On appeal, the learned Senior Subordinate Judge, held that of the site in dispute the portion E B C F, marked red, is the private property of Shahamad but that it has been used for a very long time by the public as a common courtyard and is therefore a "street" as defined in S. 3 (13), Punjab Municipal Act. The remaining portion of the site, A E F D, he has held to be a thoroughfare. On these findings, the learned Judge has accepted the appeal of the Municipal Committee, and while declaring that Shahamad was the owner of the plot E B C F, has directed him to remove the manger and the chhappar within one month from the date of the decree. In case of disobedience, he has ordered, that it would be open to the Municipal Committee to apply for the removal of the structures at the plaintiffs' cost. In the appeal arising out of the suit instituted by Sujan Singh, the learned Judge has granted the plaintiff a decree for a permanent injunction restraining the defendants from making use of the land in dispute in such a way as to debar the residents of the mohalla from using it as common property, and ordering them to remove within one month the manger and the chhappar which had been erected thereon.

From these decrees, two appeals have been preferred before me: one by Shahamad in the case against the Municipal Committee and the other by Kumman and Shahamad against Sujan Singh. Both these appeals have been argued together on behalf of the appellants by Mr. Ghulam Rasul. The learned counsel has not challenged the decision of the Court below relating to the plot A E F D which he concedes is a public thoroughfare. He has confined his arguments to the plot, marked E B C F and shown red on the plan. With regard to this plot the finding of the learned Judge is that it belonged originally to one Lakhmir Khan, who sold it to Muni Lal in 1903, and Muni Lal's son Shugan Chand transferred it to Shahamad in November 1933. He therefore held that the site belonged to Shahamad. He has held however after a consideration of the oral and documentary evidence on the record, that the site in dispute had always been in use of the residents of the mohalla as an open space or a common courtyard and that the members of the public have been passing through it without let or hindrance. He has therefore held it to be a "street" as defined in the Municipal Act. Mr. Ghulam Rasul has contended that on the facts as found by the learned Judge, the site cannot be said to be a "street" as defined in the Act. He relies principally upon the Proviso to Clause (a) of sub.s. (13) of S. 3. That Proviso lays down that private property, if used by any persons as a means of access to or from any public place or thoroughfare, whether such persons be occupiers of such buildings or not, shall not be considered to be "street" if the occupier of any such building has a right at all hours to prevent all other persons from using as aforesaid. In this case it has not been found by either Court below, that the plaintiff Shahamad or his father Kumman or any of their predecessors-in-interest, had ever excluded any person from having ingress to or egress from this plot, nor is there any evidence on the record of this having been ever done. This being so, the Proviso cannot possibly apply. The case therefore clearly falls within Cl. (a) of sub.s. 13 of S. 3, and the learned Judge has rightly found that the plot marked red is also a "street."

Mr. Ghulam Rasul referred me to a decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in 1 Lah 117,¹ but the facts of that case were entirely different. There, the site in dispute was situate in the enclosed quadrangle of a market place (Mandi) and it was found as a fact that the gate of the quadrangle was shut at night when business was over in the shops in the Mandi. This however is not the case here. The next contention raised by the learned counsel was that there is no proof of the exercise of any right by the public for a period exceeding 20 years, nor has dedication of the property (which is now owned by the plaintiff) to the public been established by any clear evidence. This contention also is without force. In order to prove dedication, it is not legally necessary that there should be evidence of express grant; dedication may be inferred from long user: 62 P R 1898.² It is of course always permissible to rebut the presumption by evidence of the owner's intention that the user by the public was permissive. But in this case there is no proof whatever that this was the case. In these circumstances, I must hold that the decision of the lower Appellate Court is correct. The appeals fail and are dismissed with costs.

The word 'income' as has been used in the Income-tax Act has a wider sense and it connotes the assessable figure arrived at after accounting for all the legitimate deductions and exemptions and consequently if any assessee furnishes any false particulars about any item which is to be accounted for before the assessable figure is arrived at, he brings himself within the clutches of the law. Order.—This case turns upon the construction to be put upon the word 'income' as used in Sec. 28, Income-tax Act. By that section the income-tax authorities are empowered to impose a penalty upon any assessee who "has concealed the particulars of his income or has deliberately furnished inaccurate particulars of such income." The petitioner before us avers that the word "income" as used in this section means money received by the assessee and does not refer to any deduction or exemption claimed by him under the provisions of the Income-tax Act. In other words, he contends that the word 'income' has been used in this section in its popular sense. The income-tax authorities on the other hand maintain that the word 'income' has been used in this section in a much wider sense and it connotes the assessable figure arrived at after accounting for all the legitimate deductions and exemptions and consequently if any assessee furnishes any false particulars about any item which is to be accounted for before the assessable figure is arrived at he brings himself within the clutches of the law.

In order to determine the true connotation of the term 'income' as used in the Income-tax Act it will be necessary to refer to the various sections in which this term has been used. S. 2 (15) defines the term 'total income' as "total amount of income, profits and gains from all sources to which this Act applies computed in the manner laid down in S. 16." S. 3 determines all the income, profits or gains chargeable to income-tax. S. 4 lays down that the Income-tax Act applies to all income, profits or gains, as described or comprised in S. 6. S. 6 enumerates the various heads of income chargeable to income-tax and Ss. 7 to 12 describe the method in which the income under the various heads is to be computed. For example, S. 9 dealing with property, S. 10 dealing with business, S. 11 dealing with professional earnings and S. 12 dealing with other sources determine the method of computing the income under various heads after making the allowances specified therein. Then follow certain exemptions which specify the items of income which are not subject to income-tax. S. 16 lays down the method of computing the total income of an assessee. S. 22 (2) provides for the return of income to be submitted by the assessee and S. 23 (1) and (3) authorize the Income-tax Officer to assess the total income and determine the sum payable by an assessee on the basis of his return. It would thus appear that the word 'income' in all these sections has not been used in its dictionary meaning, but in a technical sense. These sections are then followed by S. 28 which, as stated above, is a penal section and provides for a safeguard against false returns. If the interpretation put upon the word by the assessee be adopted, it would lead to absurd and anomalous results. An assessee would in those circumstances be at liberty to forge his return with impunity in any manner that he likes so far as the expenditure, deductions or exemptions are concerned and would escape the consequences of the law so long as he furnishes true particulars of his income in the narrower sense of the term. This however could never be the intention of the Legislature. We are fortified in our conclusion by the remarks made by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 59 I A 290¹ at pp. 296-97. That case is on all fours with the present case inasmuch as it particularly relates to bad debts. Those remarks are :

Although the Act nowhere in terms authorizes the deduction of bad debts of a business, such a deduction is necessarily allowable. What are chargeable to income-tax in respect of a business are the profits and gains of a year ; and in assessing the amount of the profits and gains of a year account must necessarily be taken of all losses incurred, otherwise you would not arrive at the true profits and gains.

Falsehood in accounts can take only two forms, either an item may be suppressed dishonestly or an item may be claimed fraudulently, and in penalizing concealment of the particulars of one's income as well as deliberate furnishing of inaccurate particulars, Section 28 penalizes both forms of falsehood. In the case before us it has been found as a fact that the assessee deliberately claimed a false deduction and in the light of the remarks made above, we are disposed to hold that the case of the assessee fell within the ambit of S. 28. We accordingly dismiss this petition with costs.

Basant Lal and another—Defendants—Respondents.

First Appeal No. 383 of 1937, Decided on 3rd June 1938, from preliminary decree of Senior Sub-Judge, Jhelum, D/- 24th August 1937.

(a) Hindu Law — Debts — Debt incurred by father for new business is not binding on sons unless transaction was for benefit of family or to benefit of estate or was supported by legal necessity — Question of legal necessity is to be decided on facts of each case.

When the business of a joint Hindu family, to finance which money has been borrowed, is a new business and not an ancestral business, the sons are not liable for payment of the loan contracted by the father for that business, unless the transaction was for the benefit of the family or to the benefit of the estate or was supported by legal necessity. The question of necessity has to be decided on the facts of each case. Where it was necessary for the father to raise money for the business in order to maintain himself and his family it amounts to a legal necessity. [P 622 C 2; P 623 C 1]

Where therefore the father borrows money for the purpose of starting a petrol and sodawater business in order to maintain himself and his family, the borrowing of the money for the business is a legal necessity so as to make the debt binding on the son: A I R 1935 All 221, Rel. on.

(b) Hindu Law — Debts — Father borrowing money to start new business—Son participating in business after attaining majority — Money borrowed is charge on family property.

Where a Hindu father borrows money for the purpose of starting a new business in order to maintain himself and his family, and his son participates in the business after attaining majority, he can be taken to have accepted it as a family business and the money borrowed for the business would be a charge on the family property: A I R 1932 Pat 206, Rel. on.

M. C. Mahajan, Amolak Ram Kapur and Harbans Singh for A. R. Kapur (on 27th May 1938)—for Respondents.

Bhide J. — This was a suit for recovery of Rs. 6950 on the basis of a mortgage of a house, effected by Partap Singh, deceased father of Basant Lal, defendant 1 and husband of Mt. Rukman, defendant 2, by a deed dated 23rd January 1925. The suit was resisted by the defendants on various pleas, but the main plea on which the defendants relied and which is the only one now material for the purposes of this appeal was that the mortgage was effected without any valid necessity and was therefore not binding on the property which was ancestral. The learned Subordinate Judge who tried the suit found this issue in favour of the defendants and dismissed the suit and from this decision plaintiff has appealed.

According to the recital in the mortgage deed, the consideration for the mortgage, which consisted of a sum of Rs. 3000, was borrowed to serve as capital of some business (waste sarmaya karobar). The learned Subordinate Judge has held that this was not a valid necessity according to Hindu law (by which the parties are governed) and the learned counsel for the respondents has also strongly supported this view, relying upon the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in 54 All 564.¹ In that case it was held that money borrowed for the purposes of a new business did not constitute a valid necessity for alienation of ancestral property. As pointed out however in 57 All 605,² a Full Bench ruling of the Allahabad High Court, in which the question of the interpretation to be placed on the aforesaid ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council arose, the point whether the new business in question was a necessity or whether it was for the benefit of the family was neither raised nor considered by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 54 All 564¹ and consequently that ruling cannot be taken to lay down as an unqualified or absolute proposition that money raised for a new business can never form a valid charge on ancestral property. If, for instance, ancestral property has ceased to be remunerative and there is no way of maintaining the family except by alienating that property and investing the proceeds in some business, there seems to be no reason why the alienation should not be upheld as one for valid necessity. Similarly when the alienation is for the 'benefit of the estate,' there is no reason why it should not be upheld. It was accordingly held by the Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in 57 All 605,² that when the business of a joint Hindu family to finance which money has been borrowed is a new business and not an ancestral business, the sons are not liable for the payment of the loan contracted by the father for that business, unless the transaction was for the benefit of the family or to the benefit of the estate or it was supported by legal necessity.

There is a conflict of authority as to the exact interpretation of the words 'benefit of the estate.' In some cases it has been held, on the basis of the remarks of their Lordships of the Privy Council in 40 Mad 709,³ that the benefit must be of a defensive character, while in others it has been held that it need not be so restricted (cf. 50 All 969,⁴ 53 Bom 419⁵ and A I R 1937 Mad 496⁶). But it seems to me unnecessary to go into this question for the purpose of this appeal. The plaintiff's case is that the money borrowed by Pratap Singh by the mortgage in question was used for the purposes of a petrol and sodawater business in Kashmir. Now it cannot be said that the starting of this business meant any 'benefit to the estate.' Indeed, there is no evidence on the record to suggest that the new business was started for improving the family estate. All that is urged for the plaintiff is that Pratap Singh had no other means of maintaining the family and hence he was justified in selling the ancestral house in order to start the business. From this point of view, the question is really one of legal necessity and not of any benefit to the estate. The question of necessity has to be decided on the facts of each case. The evidence on the record in this case shows that Pratap Singh had a chequered career. He had been a storekeeper in the Army from 1906 to 1912, but was found guilty of misappropriation of liquor and was convicted and sentenced to two years' imprisonment (Ex. D. W. 12/8). On his return to his native place, he tried to engage in a shoe business in partnership with two other persons for some time, but the business did not prosper and was wound up in April 1919 (Ex. P. W. 4/1). Thereafter Pratap Singh went to Seistan in Persia as a gumashta of one Chandi Ram and tried to do some business there. But ill luck seems to have pursued him there also. He suffered heavy losses and had to sell about 7 kanals 17 marlas of his land to Chandi Ram in order to pay off the bulk of the losses and his own expenses, leaving a balance of about Rs. 1000 still due to Chandi Ram (see Ex. P/9 dated 28th August 1923). On 23rd January 1925, i. e. some 16 months later, Pratap Singh effected the mortgage now in dispute and raised a sum of Rs. 3000 for business. The only point for decision is whether in the circumstances stated above, it was necessary for Pratap Singh to raise money for a business, in order to maintain himself and his family, as is urged on behalf of the plaintiff.

It is true that the plaintiff did not state in his pleas in so many words that the new business was necessary for the maintenance of Pratap Singh and his family; but he did say that the transaction was for family necessity and for the benefit of the family (see his replication dated 17th March 1937). Defendant Basant Lal deposed that Pratap Singh did no business at all after he was discharged from service. But the facts stated above have been proved by reliable oral as well as documentary evidence and the defendant and his witnesses seem to have clearly lied on the point. It was alleged by the defendant that Pratap Singh was given to drinking and other vices; but here too the evidence produced by the defendant seems to be unreliable and his learned counsel did not attempt to rely on it. The fact that Pratap Singh started a petrol business in Kashmir about April 1925 (i. e. within 3 months of the mortgage) and later on a sodawater factory and that he carried on this business during 1925, 1926 and 1927, is established by unimpeachable testimony of witnesses of Kashmir, who were produced by the plaintiff (see evidence of Amar Nath, Sheikh Mohammad Ishaq and Sant Ram). The evidence of Amar Nath and Mohammad Ishaq further shows that defendant Basant Lal himself was taking part in the work. Basant Lal has denied this, but I see no reason to disbelieve the testimony of these witnesses. Their evidence receives further support from the entries in the accounts produced by Amar Nath. There is therefore little doubt that Basant Lal has perjured himself on this point also. It was urged that Rs. 3000 would not be necessary for a petrol or sodawater business, but I do not think the sum can be said to be unreasonably large, considering that Pratap Singh would have to invest in a petrol pump, sodawater machine and other accessories and also maintain the family till the business began to pay.

It was pointed out by the learned counsel for the respondents that Pratap Singh owned some land, but judging from the land revenue (about Rs. 4 in all), the land could not have yielded much income. Pratap Singh was a Khatri and the family was not really dependent on agriculture. Pratap Singh's father Amar Singh was employed as an assistant to the Government Treasurer, Rawalpindi (see Ex. D. W. 12/7). Pratap Singh was first in service and thereafter tried to do business. As he had been convicted of misappropriation and sentenced to imprisonment, he probably found it difficult to get any suitable employment after his dismissal in 1912 and had no alternative thereafter except to engage in some business. He seems to have suffered loss in Seistan, but whatever the nature of his business in Seistan may have been, it cannot be said that the petrol or sodawater business was a rash adventure or that it was a business which a man in the position of Pratap Singh could not reasonably take to, in order to find a means of livelihood. He was then nearly 56 years of age. (He was 65 when he died in 1934: vide Ex. D. W. 12/9). It is therefore difficult to see what else Pratap Singh could do except to engage in some such business as he did in order to make a living. I am therefore of opinion that the borrowing of money for the above mentioned business was a legal necessity for Pratap Singh in view of the circumstances of this case.

It may be pointed out here that Basant Lal admitted in one of his statements (vide p. 13 of the record) that all the other alienations made by Pratap Singh were either for valid necessity or were made with his consent and therefore he did not challenge them.

The learned counsel for the appellant has pointed out that Basant Lal had nearly attained majority when the new business was started in Kashmir in April 1925. According to his birth certificate, he was born on 20th January 1908 and consequently he was over 17 years of age in April 1925 and attained majority in January 1926. The evidence on the record shows that he was working with Pratap Singh during the time the petrol and sodawater business was carried on. The entries in the accounts produced by Amar Nath show that he was taking part in the business even in October 1926 (see Ex. P/8). It would thus appear that Basant Lal participated in the business after attaining majority and may be therefore taken to have accepted it as a family business. From this aspect also, the money borrowed for the business would be a charge on the family property (*cf. A I R 1932 Pat 206.*⁷) On the above findings, the mortgage in dispute must be held to be valid. As no other points were disputed, the appeal must be accepted and the case remanded to the trial Court for passing a preliminary decree and disposing of the suit according to law. Plaintiff will get his costs in both the Courts. Parties are directed to appear before the trial Court on 17th June 1938.

First Appeal No. 333 of 1936, Decided on 10th December 1937, from decree of Asst. Collector, First Grade, Nili Bar Colony, Pakpattan, D/. 2nd June 1936.

Custom (Punjab)—Partition — Shamilat land in village Sahib Ali is to be divided according to revenue and not area.

The measure for the partition of the shamilat land in the village of Sahib Ali is the land revenue assessed on the land and not the area of land held by the co-sharers. [P 625 O 1]

J. N. Aggarwal and Asa Ram Aggarwal — for Respondents.

Bhide J. — This is an appeal arising out of proceedings under S. 117, Punjab Land Revenue Act, in which a question of title raised in partition proceedings was tried as a suit by the Assistant Collector. The plaintiff claimed that the shamilat was liable to be partitioned in proportion to the areas held by the co-sharers, while some of the defendants contended that it was liable to be partitioned according to the revenue assessed thereon and that the basis should be taken to be the revenue assessed on the land at the Settlement of 1880. The learned

Assistant Collector has found these points against the plaintiff and from this decision, some of the defendants, who were supporting the plaintiff's claim have appealed. The main point for decision in the case was the interpretation to be placed on the entry in the wajib-ul-arz relating to the partition of the shamilat land. The oral evidence on the point in a case of this kind is of no assistance and the question has to be decided on the basis of the wording of the various wajib-ul-arzes which were relied on by the parties. The wording of the wajib-ul-arzes of 1858 and 1898 is somewhat ambiguous, the only words used being "hasab rasad khewat" and it not being made clear whether "khewat" referred to the area of the land comprised in it or the land revenue assessed on that land; but the entries of the years 1880 and 1917-18 make the point clear. In the former the entry is "Taqsim shamilat hasab hissas paimana malkiat yahni zar-i-malguzari"; in the latter the wording is "Taqsim shamilat hasab zar khewat bandobast sani". Both these entries leave no doubt that the measure for the purpose of partition was the land revenue assessed on the land and not the area of the land. In view of these entries the decision of the learned Assistant Collector on this point appears to be clearly correct.

The learned counsel for the appellants next contended that there was a dispute as regards the title of some of the defendants, namely the Aroras and Tanwaris, who, according to the appellants, had no share in the shamilat land. This question was, however, not the subject-matter of the claim which was being tried by the Assistant Collector under S. 117, Punjab Land Revenue Act. The Assistant Collector had made this point clear in his orders dated 19th December 1933 and 8th December 1934. The matter can therefore be agitated by the parties concerned in separate proceedings, if so advised. I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

Young C. J. — In April 1936 the respondent Ram Rakha sent by post an application to the Superintendent of Police, Rawalpindi, complaining that one Lajpat Rai, who was employed as a Head Constable in that district, had improperly asked him to withdraw a criminal case which he (Ram Rakha) had instituted against some relations of Lajpat Rai and that he had threatened that if Ram Rakha failed to do so he would meet with dire consequences. The Superintendent of Police asked for an explanation from Lajpat Rai, who denied the allegation. Lajpat Rai then lodged a complaint under S. 211, I. P. C., against Ram Rakha in the Court of a Magistrate First Class, Rawalpindi. The Magistrate found Ram Rakha guilty of an offence under that section and convicted and sentenced him. The conviction was affirmed on appeal by the Sessions Judge, but on revision a learned Judge of this Court came to the conclusion that, on the facts proved, the case did not fall within S. 211, I. P. C., but that it probably came within S. 182, I. P. C., and the accused could not be convicted under that section as there was no complaint in writing by the Superintendent of Police or a public servant to whom he was subordinate. The learned Judge accordingly set aside the conviction of Ram Rakha under S. 211, I. P. C., and acquitted him. The Superintendent of Police, Rawalpindi, has now filed a complaint against Ram Rakha on the same facts. Before the trying Magistrate, the accused raised the objection that he having been acquitted in the previous case could not be tried for another offence on the same facts. The trial Magistrate overruled the contention, holding that the case fell within the exception laid down in sub.s. (4), S. 403, Criminal P. C. The accused moved the Sessions Judge for revision of this order. The learned Judge disagreed with the trial Magistrate and being of the opinion that the objection was sound has submitted the case to this Court with the recommendation that the proceedings against the accused be quashed. The reference came up before Dalip Singh J. sitting in Single Bench, who in view of the conflict of decisions on the point, has referred it to a Division Bench. It is common ground, that the facts now alleged against the accused are the same on which he was formerly tried under S. 211, I. P. C. and was acquitted. The general rule that "a man may not be put twice in peril for the same offence" is embodied in S. 403, Criminal P. C., but to this rule the Legislature has made several exceptions. One of these is contained in sub.s. (4) which reads as follows:

A person acquitted or convicted of any offence constituted by any acts may notwithstanding such acquittal or conviction be subsequently charged with, and tried for any other offence constituted by the same acts which he may have committed, if the Court by which he was first tried was not competent to try the offence with which he is subsequently charged.

The question for consideration is as to what exactly is meant by the "competency" of the Court to try an offence. Does it mean the status or character of the former Court to try the offence with which the accused is subsequently charged; or does it also include within its purview cases in which the Court, though otherwise qualified to try the case could not have done so because certain conditions precedent for the exercise of its jurisdiction had not been fulfilled. The wording of the sub-section is by no means as clear as it might have been but the preponderance of judicial authority in this Court as well as the other Courts in India is in favour of the latter view. Before discussing the rulings, reference is necessary to S. 195, Criminal P. C. the relevant portion of which runs as follows:

(1) No Court shall take cognizance: (a) of any offence punishable under Ss. 172 to 188, I. P. C. except on the complaint in writing of the public servant concerned, or of some other public servant to whom he is subordinate.

It will appear from the wording of this section that the cognizance by a Court of an offence punishable under S. 182, I. P. C. is barred except on a complaint in writing by the public servant concerned, etc. It follows from this that in the absence of such a complaint a Court is not "competent to try" an offence under S. 182 and therefore the case would fall within sub.s. (4) of S. 403. This was held by Harrison J. sitting in Single Bench, in 129 I C 224.¹ The same interpretation has been accepted in all the other High Courts: see 22 Bom 711,² 40 Bom 97,³ 52 Bom 257,⁴ 37 All 107,⁵ 5 Pat 452,⁶ 95 IC 79⁷ and 97 IC 417.⁸ In 36 Mad 308⁹ however a Division Bench of that Court expressed the opinion that S. 403 (4) referred to the character and status of the tribunal when it refers to competency to try an offence, and that a sanction under Sec. 195, Criminal P. C. is not a condition of the competency of the tribunal but only a condition precedent for the institution of these proceedings.

The authority of this case however has been shaken, if not altogether annihilated by a recent decision of a Full Bench of the same Court in A I R 1937 Mad 301,¹⁰ where it was held that a Court, which tries an offender on a complaint, which it is forbidden by the Code to entertain unless certain conditions are satisfied, acts without jurisdiction.

After giving the case careful consideration, we are of opinion, that the bar of autrefois acquit does not apply to this case which is governed by the exception laid down in sub-s. (4) of S. 403, Criminal P. C. We hold therefore that the objection raised by the petitioner before the trying Magistrate was without force. We accordingly decline to accept the recommendation of the learned Sessions Judge. We wish however to express our considered opinion that the prosecution of the accused a second time on the same facts, though technically legal, savours of unnecessary harassment. The learned Assistant to the Advocate-General agreed that this was so, and stated that the only reason why the Crown had appeared to oppose the recommendation of the Sessions Judge for quashing the proceedings was that an authoritative decision on the interpretation of sub-s. (4) of Sec. 403, Criminal P. C. was necessary.

Criminal Revn. No. 1181 of 1937, Decided on 28th October 1937, reported by Addl. Sess. Judge, Lyallpur Division, D/- 30th April 1937.

Punjab Municipal Act (3 of 1911), S. 81—Proprietors of flour mill sending bags of flour through municipal terminal post with their servant M—M paying less terminal tax by misrepresenting weight of bags—Fraud discovered—Municipal Committee claiming deficiency in tax from proprietors and on their refusal, applying under S. 81 for recovery of money due by attachment and sale of property—Magistrate issuing warrant of attachment—Claim held to be intra vires of Municipal Committee—Magistrate's function held to be ministerial only.

The proprietors of a flour mill at L used to send bags of flour to the Railway Station L with their servant M. At the terminal post of L, Municipal Committee, M used to pay less terminal tax by misrepresenting the weight of the bags to the Municipal Officials who did not weigh the bags. The fraud was subsequently discovered and M was prosecuted and convicted. The Municipal Committee asked the proprietors of the mill, who were owners of the bags to pay up the deficiency in the terminal tax and on their refusal applied under S. 81 of the Municipal Act to a Magistrate for the recovery of the money due by attachment and sale of the property of the proprietors. The Magistrate issued a warrant of attachment :

Held that as the goods taxed were ostensibly passed through the terminal tax post as belonging to and carried by the flour mill, the claim made was intra vires of the Municipal Committee, being for money payable on account of tax levied under the Municipal Act. The Magistrate's function was ministerial only, his power of inquiry being limited to finding whether the amount was claimable or not : 1 P R 1891 Cr, Rel. on.

Facts:—The facts of this case are as follows: The proprietors of Premier Flour Mills, Lyallpur, used to send bags of flour to the Railway Station Lyallpur per their servant Monawar Husain. It is alleged that at the terminal post of Lyallpur Municipal Committee, Monawar Hussain used to pay less terminal tax by misrepresenting the weights of the bags to the Municipal Officials posted at the terminal post who did not weigh the bags. The bags were actually weighed at the Railway Station Lyallpur. This went on for some time till Auditors compared the terminal tax on these bags and the weight of the bags entered in the books at the railway station. A deficiency of Rs. 825-8-6 in the payment of the terminal tax was noticed by the Auditors. Monawar Hussain was prosecuted and imprisoned. The Municipal Committee however asked the proprietors of the Premier Flour Mills, Lyallpur, who were the owners of the bags to pay up the deficiency. On their refusal the Municipal Committee applied under S. 81, Municipal Act to Magistrate, Third Class, Lyallpur, for recovery of the money due by attachment and sale of the property of the proprietors.

The Magistrate held that though the person who introduced the bags without paying full terminal tax, namely Monawar Hussain, was primarily responsible, yet under the spirit of the law the owner of the bags is also responsible, on the principle that the master has to suffer through the loss committed by a dishonest servant of his. He therefore held that the proprietors were liable and issued warrant of attachment against the proprietors and the proprietors have come up in revision to this Court.

The proceedings are forwarded for revision on the following grounds: The substantial question which has been raised by the counsel for the applicant is, that in the case of a terminal tax the person who introduces the bags is liable to pay it and not the owner of the bags and in the case of deficient payment the former alone can be called upon to pay the deficiency and not the latter, and that the finding of the Magistrate is incorrect. This contention gets some support from 46 I C 848¹ and S. 78, Punjab Municipal Act. In 46 I C 848,¹ it is held, that any person introducing the goods within the limits of a Municipality, be he the owner or the servant, is liable to pay the terminal tax. S. 78, Punjab Municipal Act also fixes criminal liability on the person who actually introduces the goods. In the present case it is stated by the counsel for the respondent Municipal Committee that he did not contest the proposition that the proprietors paid the proper terminal tax to their servant Monawar Hussain but the latter did not pay it to the Municipal Officials and misappropriated it, and that the proprietors were not parties to the dishonesty of their servant. It was for this reason that the proprietors were not prosecuted under S. 78, Punjab Municipal Act, for abetting the introduction of goods without payment of tax. Had the Municipal Officials who were the toll-bar been vigilant, this dispute could not have arisen, for Monawar Hussain could not have introduced the bags without payment of full terminal tax. The scheme under which the goods are introduced itself shows that provided the Municipal Officials at the bar of terminal tax are doing their duties properly, the tax is and can be recovered at the spot and no question of recovering the deficiency arises. Therefore considering the scheme of the Act which is given in S. 78, Punjab Municipal Act, it appears to me that the person who actually accompanies the goods is responsible for paying the tax. In such cases the letter of the law and not the spirit of the law is to be seen. It is laid down at page 180 of Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 27 that:

The language of a statute imposing a tax must receive a strict construction. If the person sought to be taxed comes within the letter of the law, he must be taxed. On the other hand if the Crown seeking to recover the tax cannot bring the subject within the letter of the law, the subject is free however much within the spirit of the law a case might otherwise appear to be. There can be no equitable construction admissible in a taxing statute.

Thus the Magistrate was not justified in making the proprietors liable to terminal tax on equitable grounds. It is urged on the other side that assuming that the proprietors are not liable to pay the tax, they cannot object to their liability before the Magistrate, as they failed to file an appeal against the decision of the Municipal Committee to recover the tax from them which they could under S. 84, Punjab Municipal Act. He says that under these circumstances S. 86, Punjab Municipal Act is a bar to hearing this objection. S. 86, Punjab Municipal Act lays down as follows:

No objection shall be taken to any valuation or assessment nor shall the liability of any person to be assessed or taxed be questioned in any other manner or by any other authority that is provided in this Act.

It is urged that the only way in which this objection of the liability of the proprietors to pay the tax could be taken was by means of an appeal and as this procedure has not been adopted, the applicant cannot raise this objection before the Magistrate and the Magistrate cannot go into the question whether the proprietors are liable or not. He says in effect that the Magistrate is bound to issue a warrant of attachment against the proprietors as if it was an executing Court, in a civil suit which could not go behind the decree and that he should obey the ipse dixit of the Municipal Committee which has held the proprietors to be liable for the sum. To this argument the retort is made by the applicant that if the Municipal Committee acts high-handedly the subject is not bound to file an appeal and he can raise objection either by instituting a civil suit or when the Magistrate wants to act against him in a summary way under S. 81, Punjab Municipal Act. Reference is made to 75 I C 737.² In that case the Municipal Committee was not the owner of the land for which it had levied tax upon the person possessing it. It was remarked in that case that the special procedure laid down by the Berar Municipal Law relates only to appeal against the assessment or levy of a tax under the law and did not provide a remedy which might be done in violation of that law. It was also remarked that S. 53, Berar Municipal Law did not oust the jurisdiction of the Civil Court to relieve one subject of the Crown against an illegality imposed upon him by any other subject. It was also mentioned that S. 53, Berar Municipal Law, is almost word for word the same as S. 86,

1. Babu Ram v. Emperor, (1918) 5 A I R All 85 = 46 I C 848 = 19 Cr L J 832 = 16 A L J 632.

Punjab Municipal Act. It was further remarked as follows :

On the finding in the present case that the Municipal Committee is not the owner of the site in front of the shops tenanted by Bhagwan Singh, the said Bhagwan Singh was not liable to tax as he has been. The action of the Municipal Committee in levying the tax from him therefore gave him a cause of action in a Civil Court. I hold that the Civil Court has jurisdiction to try this case and that the failure on the part of Bhagwan Singh to take action under S. 84 of the Act is no bar to the suit, inasmuch as the tax was levied illegally.

In that case the Municipal Committee had no title to the rent on which the tax was imposed and therefore was committing an illegality which could be objected to before the Civil Court, without filing an appeal. In the present case the person proceeded against is not the person who is liable to pay the tax under the Act and the money demanded from him is not "claimable" from him under S. 81 of the Act under which he is being proceeded against. The process is being issued against a wrong person from whom the money cannot be claimed under the Act. The procedure of the Committee is therefore against the Act and I agree with the contention of the counsel for the applicant that he can raise the objection before the Magistrate that the money is not claimable from him. I forward the proceedings to the Hon'ble High Court with the recommendation that the order of the Magistrate issuing execution against the applicant under S. 81, Punjab Municipal Act be set aside.

Order.—The learned Sessions Judge has, it seems, lost sight of the important fact that the goods taxed were ostensibly passed through the terminal tax post as belonging to and carried by the Premier Flour Mills. This is proved by the documents to which the Magistrate has referred in his order. The claim made is intra vires of the Committee being for money payable on account of a tax levied under the Act, the Magistrate's function was ministerial only, his power of inquiry being limited to finding whether the amount was claimable or not. See in this connexion 1 P R 1891 Cr.³ There is no justification for interfering with the order passed. The recommendation is rejected and the revision petition is dismissed.

Criminal Appeal No. 336 of 1937, Decided on 17th June 1937, from order of Addl. District Magistrate, Jullundur, D/- 11th January 1937.

(a) Evidence Act (1872), Ss. 60 and 160 — Witness not stating orally what accused was alleged to have said — Witness not recollecting facts nor stating that he had reported facts correctly — Evidence of such witness is inadmissible.

Where no attempt is made by a witness to state orally before the Court, what the accused in the case was alleged to have said, nor does he state before the Court, that although he has no specific recollection of the facts themselves, he was sure that the facts were correctly reported by him in his report, the evidence of such witness is inadmissible in evidence : A I R 1932 Lah 7, Rel. on.

(b) Penal Code (1860), S. 124-A — Exhortation to hearers to join Communist or Bolshevik party is not seditious.

The speech which amounts to an exhortation to the hearers to join the Communist or Bolshevik party is not in itself seditious within the meaning of Section 124-A.

(c) Penal Code (1860), S. 124-A — Seditious slogans.

Shouting objectionable slogans in a meeting such as "destroy the dishonest Government" and "long live bloody revolution" is seditious within the meaning of S. 124-A.

Judgment. — I will deal in this order with four appeals arising from convictions under S. 124-A, I. P. C., by the Additional District Magistrate, Jullundur. In all these cases the same preliminary objection has been raised by counsel for the appellants and that is that inadmissible evidence has been relied upon in the shape of the shorthand notes and the typed transcript of them made by the police reporter Arjan Singh. This objection has been made on the strength of a judgment of this Court in A I R 1932 Lah 7.¹ It was there pointed out that:

A witness who professes to prove something spoken by another is expected to repeat in the witness-box what the latter had actually stated. He can, of course, refresh his memory by referring to any writing made, or any notes taken down by him, at the time when the speech was made. He can also use such writing or notes to corroborate his oral testimony. In some cases it is open to a witness merely to refer to a document and to say that it contains a correct statement of what happened in his presence; but in that case he must depose that he is unable to state from memory what happened as owing to a lapse of time and other circumstances he has forgotten it and further that he correctly recorded in the document what he had heard or witnessed. In such cases that document itself becomes primary evidence in the case.

The facts of that case appear to be practically the same as of this and here again no attempt was made by this witness to state orally before the Court what the accused in each case was alleged to have said nor did he state before the Court that, although he had no specific recollection of the facts themselves, he was sure that the facts were correctly recorded in the document. This evidence is therefore inadmissible in its present form. It is true that, under S. 167, Evidence Act, improper admission of evidence is not by itself a ground for a new trial or the reversal of the decision if the facts have been proved independently of that evidence, and it therefore has to be seen in each of these cases whether this is so.

But before doing so, I will merely refer to another objection raised in two of these appeals and that is that the appellant in each case was not confronted by the Magistrate with the particular passages which the Magistrate considered to be objectionable and asked to explain them. I am unable however to find that this is an illegality which vitiates the trial. The prosecution case in each trial was that the whole of the matter was seditious and the whole of the matter was put to the appellants. Although in his judgment the learned Magistrate has picked out one or two passages as typifying the spirit of the whole, his finding is clearly that the whole speech is objectionable under S. 124-A, I. P. C.

Turning now to the question of whether the offence has been proved by other evidence I would take each appeal in turn. The first appeal is that by Ahmad Din against his conviction and sentence of two years' rigorous imprisonment. In this case a number of respectable persons who were present at the meeting have been produced as witnesses and they do reproduce in their evidence portions of the speech practically verbatim. But I have very grave doubts whether this evidence can be considered reliable. It is rather significant that all these witnesses after a considerable lapse of time have remembered exactly the same portion of the appellant's speech and not the rest of it, and that they have remembered it in what is, practically speaking, almost the same words. These feats of memory involve coincidences which seem to me to be too extraordinary to be accepted in a Court of law. Moreover, it should be noticed that, in the portion of the speech which they purport to have remembered, there appears a passage which, if the appellant did utter it, would definitely have been seditious, and that is an excitement to Indians to take advantage of the seizure by Italy of the Suez Canal, if that event ever happened, to fight against the Government for independence. Curiously enough this passage cannot be found in the transcript of the report by the Criminal Investigating Department reporter which is clearly a far more reliable account. It would be seen therefore that although there is other evidence to prove what this appellant said, it cannot be taken as reliable and the only basis for conviction would be the verbatim report of the speech taken down by the Criminal Investigating Department reporter. That being so, it seems to me that this trial and conviction must be set aside as based on inadmissible evidence.

The only question is whether or not I should direct a retrial. In this particular case I have read very carefully through the speech and I must admit that taken as a whole it does not appear to me to be seditious in intention. The speech amounts to an exhortation to his hearers to join the Communist or Bolshevik party and that in itself is not objectionable within the meaning of S. 124-A. It is however true that there are certain passages which have been referred to by the learned Magistrate in which the speaker in his excitement does appear to have gone a bit too far and to have made remarks calculated to bring the Government in India into contempt and hatred. But none of these appear to me to be very serious in their nature and I think that in any case this appellant would have been amply punished for them by the imprisonment that he has already undergone. Therefore in his case I do not think there should be a re-trial and I accept his appeal and acquit him.

The next appeal is that of one Abdul Aziz. Abdul Aziz is not alleged to have made any speech but to have shouted certain objectionable slogans. These slogans were: (1) Destroy the Government. (2) Destroy the dishonest Government. (3) Long live the 'bloody revolution', and (4) Destroy the present Government.

Now, in this case the objection as to the evidence of Arjan Singh is immaterial, because the shouting of these slogans is clearly testified to by other respectable disinterested witnesses whose evidence there is no real reason to reject. There is however a certain amount of defence evidence of persons who attended the meeting and state that the appellant did not use these particular slogans and that all that he said was "Inqilab zinda bad" "Mazdur Kisan conference zinda bad". The learned Magistrate has pointed out that all these witnesses are interested in the appellant and that therefore no great reliance can be placed upon their evidence. It is true that these witnesses are all members of the same political party as the appellant and to that extent their evidence is probably prejudiced against the prosecution and biased in his favour. Some of these people are respectable persons and I do not think that they are deliberately attempting to deceive the Court. But it is fairly obvious that with the best intentions in the world these persons who are deposing several months after the event to shouts raised by the appellant in the excitement and hurly burly of a political meeting, when there is nothing to show that they went there definitely to observe and to note the exact words used, are not in a position to rebut those who did go there definitely as observers and noted exactly what was said and made a record of it at the time. I for one would not like to go in the witness-box several months after I had attended a meeting of this sort and swear that the accused did not use the expression "khuni" in referring to the revolution, or the word "beiman" in referring to Government. The most that I would be prepared to swear is that I could not remember having heard him use these particular words and I would have to admit that in the face of reliable evidence by other persons that he did use them, my recollection must be faulty. In fact it seems to me therefore that it is satisfactorily proved by the evidence on the record that this appellant did use these particular slogans and I have no doubt that two of them at any rate, namely "Destroy the dishonest Government" and "long live bloody revolution", are objectionable within the meaning of S. 124-A, I. P. C.

I see no reason to interfere with the sentence and I accordingly dismiss this appeal.

In the third case the appellant is one Ujagar Singh and the accusation against him is that he recited a seditious poem. The same preliminary objection arises in this case and I think must be sustained. Some attempt has been made by some of the other witnesses to quote words of his poem but these are the same witnesses who appeared in the first case and I doubt if it would be safe to rely on their recollection. The question therefore remains whether this appellant should be retried or not. I do not wish to prejudice any subsequent proceedings by giving any opinion as to the merits of this particular case and would therefore merely record an order that, on account of the admission of inadmissible evidence, the conviction and proceedings are set aside and a retrial is ordered. As the retrial will result in prolongation of the proceedings which is not the fault of the appellant I direct that the appellant be admitted to bail to the satisfaction of the District Magistrate.

The fourth appellant is one Sodhi Pindi Das. His case is practically identical with that of Ujagar Singh except that he has been convicted in respect of a speech and not for a poem. On full consideration of the case I pass the same order as in the case of Ujagar Singh, namely that, owing to the improper admission of inadmissible evidence, the proceedings and conviction are set aside and that the appellant be retried. For the same reasons I direct that he be released on bail to the satisfaction of the District Magistrate.

(b) Public Gambling Act (1867), S. 4 — Essentials for conviction—It is crime to be found in place where gambling is going on — No offence to gamble in public place till found doing gambling.

The only crime under the Public Gambling Act is being found in the place where gambling is going on and it is no offence to gamble in a public place as long as a person is not found doing it. The persons not found in the place where gambling was going on cannot therefore be convicted under S. 4 of the Act : 35 P R 1894 Cr, Foll.

Report. — The accused on conviction by Thakar Vikram Singh, exercising the powers of a Magistrate of the First Class, in the Ferozepore District, were sentenced, by order dated 20th October 1936, under S. 4, Gambling Act, to pay a fine of Rs. 15 each or in default to undergo rigorous imprisonment for one week. The facts of the case are as follows :

On the night between 1st and 2nd September 1936, the Superintendent of Police, Ferozepore, raided a building which he thought was being used as a public gambling house. In this raid three persons were actually found in the gambling house and were arrested. Six other men were arrested from the second storey of the same building. All these nine persons were sent up for trial before Thakar Vikram Singh, Additional District Magistrate, Ferozepore, for an offence under S. 4, Gambling Act. One of them Bishan Das was asked by the learned trial Magistrate to give evidence under S. 10, Gambling Act, and did so. He was acquitted while the other eight were convicted under S. 4 and ordered to pay a fine of Rs. 15 each, or in default to undergo rigorous imprisonment for one week each. The order is not appealable, and a petition for revision has therefore been filed against the order of the learned Magistrate.

It appears that there has been a material irregularity in the conduct of the trial. The accused persons should have been examined at the opening of the trial as this was a summons case. The learned Magistrate however did not examine any of the petitioners. In fact, I find from the record that he did not examine the accused persons at any stage of the trial. Only at one stage the statement of the counsel appearing for them is recorded concerning the defence witnesses. It also appears that the learned trial Magistrate went to see the spot at the conclusion of the defence evidence. After the inspection of the spot he called one Chebe Khan, Police Constable, as a Court witness. After the evidence of this witness was recorded, the accused were never offered any opportunity to produce further evidence. The Magistrate merely remarked "the case is closed" and he then proceeded to deliver judgment at once. The learned Public Prosecutor admits before me that there has been more than one irregularity in this case. The whole trial stands vitiated. It therefore becomes necessary that the case should be referred to the High Court for revision.

The learned counsel for the petitioners has further urged before me that on the merits there should not be a retrial as far as five of the petitioners are concerned. These are Gulzara Singh, Bawa Ram Kishan, Mohan Lal, Tirath Ram and Om Parkash; and the argument has been that these persons were not found at the time of the raid in the gambling house, and therefore they cannot be said to have committed any offence. The learned counsel urges that it is not an offence under the law to gamble even in a public gambling house, and that the only punishable offence is to be found gambling in such a gambling house at the time of a raid by the police. Admittedly these five petitioners were not found in the gaming house. They were caught in the neighbourhood in circumstances from which the learned Magistrate inferred that they had been gambling in the gaming house. The learned counsel for the appellant relies on a decision of the Punjab Chief Court being 35 P R 1894 Cr.¹ It is a Single Bench decision, and in the course of it Roe J. says :

I am of opinion that under Ss. 4 to 6 the accused must actually be found in the house when the search is made. The Act nowhere makes the act of gambling even in a common gaming house itself an offence; the offence is being found there when the house is lawfully searched. If it were clearly proved, or admitted, that an accused person had been gambling constantly, or up to the very moment of the entry by the police, I do not see under what section he could be convicted, if he succeeded in effecting his escape before the police effected their entry.

To my mind, the view expressed in this decision seems startling, but no authority to a contrary proposition has been cited before me.

In these circumstances, I direct that the records of this case be forwarded to the High Court with the recommendation that the present convictions and sentences be set aside, and either a retrial of all the petitioners ordered, or in case the view expressed in 35 P R 1894 Cr¹ is accepted, a retrial of the three petitioners Gurbakhsh Singh, Jagan Nath and Karam Chand alone be ordered.

Note.—The fine register shows that the fines in question were realized by the Court concerned and credited into the treasury on 26th October 1936.

Order. — The learned Sessions Judge recommended that the proceedings in this case should be set aside on account of what he considers to be two material irregularities. The first is that the accused were not examined at the opening of the trial as is necessary in a summons case. I find however on referring to the summary trial register that the learned Sessions Judge appears to be under some misapprehension as regards this point as the summary register shows that they were examined at the outset of the trial. What appears to have misled the learned Sessions Judge is that the learned Magistrate adopted the course, which he need not have adopted in a summary trial, of recording the evidence of the witnesses on separate sheets of paper. It seems that the file of these separate sheets of paper must have appeared to the learned Sessions Judge to be the whole of the record which of course it is not. The second point on which the learned Sessions Judge recommends the trial to be upset is the omission of the learned Magistrate further to examine the petitioners after he had called a Court witness at the close of the trial. But the statute does not require the accused to be examined again after the examination of a Court witness and S. 342 only applies to the prosecution case and not to witnesses called by the Court. It has been held that if in fact no prejudice has been caused by the omission to examine the accused in such circumstances there is no irregularity at all in the trial. That is the case in this trial. The evidence of the Court witness Chebe Khan has added nothing whatever to the case of the prosecution and has not prejudiced the petitioners in any way. The case against them would have been exactly the same if Chebe Khan's evidence had never been taken. There is therefore no ground to set aside the trial in this case.

But I am of opinion that the convictions of Mohan Lal, Ram Kishan, Tirath Ram and Om Parkash cannot be upheld. It is clear from the evidence that they were not found in the place where the gaming was going on within the meaning of S. 4, Public Gambling Act. The law in this matter has been very clearly stated by Roe J. in 35 P R 1894 Cr.¹ Whatever may or may not have been the intention of the Legislature in drafting S. 4, what they have said is that the only crime is being found in the place where gambling is going on and that under the Act it is no offence to gamble in a public place as long as you are not found doing it.

The case against Gulzara Singh is however slightly different. There is evidence which there is no reason to disbelieve that when the police party were approaching the chaubara in which the gambling was proved to be going on, a Sikh, who was afterwards identified by the same witness as Gulzara Singh, "peeped out of the chaubara over the parapet of the chaubara." If it could be satisfactorily proved that this means that he had just come out of the chaubara I think the conditions of S. 4 would have been fulfilled in his case. But the evidence is not very definite and clear on this point and the plan of the spot does not help. It is impossible therefore to determine the exact relation of the place where this Gulzara Singh was seen peeping out of the parapet of the chaubara to the place where the gambling was actually going on so as to enable the Court to decide whether at the time he was seen by the police he was or was not, practically speaking, in the place where the gambling was going on. He must, I think, be given the benefit of this doubt.

With regard then to three of the petitioners, Gurbakhsh Singh, Jagan Nath and Karam Chand, I see no reason to interfere and their petition is rejected. With regard to the other petitioners however I am of opinion that a conviction under S. 4, Public Gambling Act cannot be sustained and as far as they are concerned their petition is accepted and they are acquitted.

(a) Penal Code (1860), S. 403 — Proof of receipt of money and mere failure to account not sufficient—Proof of conversion to his use is necessary.

Not only has the prosecution in a case of criminal misappropriation to prove that the accused received the money and has not accounted for it but also to prove that he converted it to his own use. Proof of receipt and failure to account is naturally a long way towards proof of misappropriation, but it is not the whole way: A I R 1928 Lah 382; A I R 1934 Cal 425 and A I R 1934 Sind 22, Rel. on. [P 635 C 1]

Order. — This is a petition by one Ghulam Haider for revision of a conviction under S. 408, I. P. C. and sentence of two years' rigorous imprisonment and fine. Ghulam Haider, petitioner, was the Assistant Manager of the Court of Wards, Dogar Kalasra, District Muzaffargarh. He was convicted by a Magistrate on three charges under S. 409, I. P. C., of criminal misappropriation of moneys belonging to that Court of Wards. On appeal the learned Sessions Judge acquitted him on two charges but maintained the principal charge only altering the conviction from under S. 409 to one under S. 408, I. P. C. The petitioner was charged with embezzling three sums: (1) Rs. 4.8.0, (2) Rs. 85.11.0 and (3) Rupees 810.6.6. He was acquitted by the learned Sessions Judge in respect of the first two heads of the charge on the ground that it was not proved that these amounts had come into his hands. As to the third the finding of the Courts below was that the petitioner had actually embezzled Rupees 551.13.3 out of the sum charged. The Court of Wards had dealings with a firm in Sanawan called Jassa Ram-Tilok Chand. The finding of the Courts below is that on 17th October 1935 Ghulam Haider met a member of the firm named Kewal Ram by accident at Sanawan railway station. Kewal Ram had just received a large sum of money from a client out of which he paid Rs. 1740 to Ghulam Haider who gave him a receipt. Ghulam Haider however only entered in the book Rs. 1188.2.9 and failed to account for the balance. This was not specifically charged against the accused. The charge was based on the theory that the Assistant Manager had sold to the firm grain received from the tenants for Rupees 1998.9.3 but had only accounted for Rs. 1188.2.9 leaving a balance of Rs. 810.6.6 to be accounted for. The Sessions Judge held that the whole amount was not proved to have come into the hands of the accused but that this item of Rs. 1740 was so proved.

I agree with the Courts below that Rs. 1740 is proved to have been paid in cash to Ghulam Haider on 17th October 1935 by Kewal Ram. (His Lordship then examined the evidence and proceeded.) The Courts below have found that he has not accounted for the balance. Mr. J. G. Sethi who represented the accused argued that he had done so. His argument is that the Court of Wards had in the autumn of 1935 two sets of transactions with Jassa Ram-Tilok Chand. One was for a sum amounting to Rs. 2097.15.3; a half-share was of this firm and another half of a dealer named Rup Chand. The other transaction was that in question for Rs. 1998. Various entries in the Court of Wards' registers are referred to totalling to Rs. 2015.7.9 and it is said that these are payments on that account. But Tilok Chand as D. W. 1, admitted that in their firm's roznamha payments totalling Rs. 1334 were made to the accused and that no other amount was shown to have been paid to him by name. Now the argument of the defence is that out of the Rs. 1740 paid, Rupees 1188.2.9 were on account of the second transaction. In fact it is said to amount to Rs. 551.6.6 credited on 3rd August 1935. This consists of a total of Rs. 319.1.3 in register N and Rs. 262.6.9 in register O, a total of Rs. 581.8.0 less Rs. 30 odd credited in error. Register N is the general cash register of Malak Hamid Yar and register O is the general cash register of Malak Khair Mohammad.

Now these sums are totals of sums credited to various tenants. Mr. Sethi's explanation is that they represent the repayment of takavi advances. He says that the estate made takavi advances to their tenants; the tenants repaid in grain and when it was sold, the amounts were credited to the various tenants' accounts. There is no evidence to this effect, but the coincidence of the figures is remarkable. I asked Mr. Sethi to prove his allegation that these sums had been credited to the previous account by producing the account between the firm Jassa Ram-Tilok Chand and the Court of Wards. It appears that neither the Court of Wards nor the firm maintains any such account book; at any rate there is no such book on the record and no evidence that such a book exists. The truth of the defence is therefore far from proved. But of course it is not necessary to prove the innocence of the accused; it is for the prosecution to prove his guilt. From this elementary proposition it follows that not only has the prosecution in a case of criminal misappropriation to prove that the accused received the money and has not accounted for it, but also to prove that he converted it to his own use. Proof of receipt and failure to account is naturally a long way towards proof of misappropriation, but it is not the whole way; for specific cases see the rulings reported in A I R 1928 Lah 382,¹ A I R 1933 Cal 800,² A I R 1934 Cal 425³ and A I R 1934 Sind 22.⁴ A I R 1934 Cal 425³ is the simplest case and the simplest exposition of the law.

Now in the present case there is no evidence as to the system of keeping accounts in this Dogar Kalasra Court of Wards. We have no information as to what registers were supposed to be kept or were actually kept. The prosecution and defence are agreed that the petitioner on 18th October accounted for Rs. 1188.2.9. I find that this consists of two items, one for Rupees 804.8.0 in register Ex. P N, Malak Hamid Yar's general cash register, the other for Rs. 383.10.9 in Ex. P O, Malak Khair Mohammad's general register. There is no evidence and it was not explained in arguments before me why there are two general cash registers, and I can only guess that there are two minor brothers and a register for the share of each. Mr. Soni for the Crown urged that the prosecution could not prove a negative. He also relied on the answer of the accused already quoted, and said, what is indeed clear, that the accused could not have possibly received the balance of the Rs. 1740 on ruqas which he had returned. There is force in these arguments but the prosecution must prove its case. Now, it would generally be possible to prove misappropriation of money to the use of the accused by producing the books in which the receipt ought to be entered and showing that it is not there. In this case about the receipt of Rs. 1740 one would expect an entry, but there is not even that. There are unexplained entries in two different registers amounting to Rs. 1188.2.9. In the absence of clear accounts, I am not prepared to hold that the prosecution has proved the guilt of the accused beyond doubt. I give him the benefit of the doubt and acquit him. In my opinion this case shows that the system of maintaining accounts for this Court of Wards leaves a great deal to be desired. And in a complicated case of this kind, I think the services of the Public Prosecutor, or if necessary, of a special Public Prosecutor, should be requisitioned at the trial or to investigate the case and not merely at the stage of appeal. I repeat that there is no evidence in this case what registers were kept and what registers ought to be kept by the Court of Wards and what payments were entered in each. The handwriting of the Magistrate has added materially to the difficulty of deciding this petition.

The Illustration to S. 13 shows that an instance claiming a right means something more than a mere statement of boundaries in a deed or in a plan. A distinction has been drawn between a claim and a statement of claim. A plan filed in a previous suit in which certain property was not then in dispute describing the property as of the plaintiff's predecessor is not an instance in which the right in dispute was claimed and hence is not admissible in evidence: A I R 1925 Cal 684, Rel. on; Case law referred. [P 636 C 2; P 637 C 2]

(b) Evidence Act (1872), S. 157 — Suit for possession of certain shop — G, a neighbour of plaintiff, giving evidence and in support of his testimony producing rent deeds executed in his favour and reciting that shop belonged to plaintiff—Deeds not signed by G—Deeds cannot be relied on as corroborative evidence of his testimony.

In a suit for possession of certain shop one G, who was a near neighbour of the plaintiff, gave evidence. He said that the shop in dispute belonged to the plaintiff and in support of his testimony produced some rent deeds executed in his favour, which in the recital of the boundaries gave the shop in dispute as the property of the plaintiff. G actually did not sign any one of the deeds:

Held that G could not refer to deeds to which he was not a party, i. e. to statements which he did not make as corroborative evidence under Section 157. [P 637 C 2]

Judgment.—Chhotu, a Mahajan of village Gorar in Rohtak District, brought a suit on 14th October 1935 for possession of a shop, on the allegations that the shop was his ancestral property and that the defendant Khema, a Jat, had entered into forcible possession in the absence of the plaintiff in August 1934. The defendant denied that the property belonged to Chhotu or that he had taken forcible possession. He further pleaded that the plaintiff was a Gharibdasi sadhu with no interest in worldly affairs and incapable of suing. The learned trial Judge dismissed the suit, but the appeal was accepted by the Senior Subordinate Judge of Rohtak, who granted the plaintiff a decree. The defendant has come here in second appeal. The trial Judge found that the plaintiff, although a Gharibdasi sadhu, was very much alive to worldly affairs and that he was capable of suing. The plaintiff relied on a plan Ex. P. 2 filed by his predecessors-in-interest in a suit of the year 1875, in which this property, which was not then in dispute, was described as the property of the plaintiff's grandfather Sukh Lal. The trial Judge excluded this plan from evidence, first, because in his opinion, the identity of the present shop with that shown in the plan was not proved and, secondly, because in any event the plan, which was filed in a suit against Brahmins, i. e. strangers, was not admissible against Khema. The plaintiff also relied on three recent rent deeds executed in favour of Gudan Mal, Mahajan, a near neighbour, which in reciting the boundaries of Gudan Mal's property set forth the shop in dispute as belonging to Chhotu. The learned trial Judge excluded these rent deeds also. He found that the oral evidence was of an ordinary type, insufficient to prove the plaintiff's ownership; and finding both issues of ownership and possession within 12 years against the plaintiff, he dismissed the suit. The learned Senior Subordinate Judge on appeal held that the plan of 1875 was admissible and even attached some weight to the recent rent deeds. He accepted the appeal and decreed the suit as aforesaid.

Before me it is not contested that the finding that the shop now in dispute is the same as that shown in Ex. P. 2, the plan of 1875, as belonging to Sukh Lal, is a finding of fact by which I am bound. The points of law argued are that (1) the plan and (2) the rent deeds are inadmissible in evidence. As to the plan, S. 83, Evidence Act lays down that maps or plans made for the purposes of any cause must be proved to be accurate; and apparently this would govern Exhibit P. 2. Mr. Shamair Chand for the respondent, however, relies on S. 13, Evidence Act and says that the shop now in dispute shown as the property of Sukh Lal in the plan is an instance in which the right in dispute was claimed. In my judgment this is not so. The Illustration to S. 13 shows that an instance claiming a right means something more than a mere statement of boundaries in a deed or in a plan. A distinction has been drawn between a claim and a statement of claim: see A I R 1925 Cal 684,¹ a Division Bench ruling:

The word 'claim' denotes a demand or assertion in relation to a thing or attribute as against or from some person or persons, showing the existence of a right to it in the claimant. A bare statement may or may not be a claim according to the attending circumstances in which it is made. It may amount to a claim or be a mere statement of claim.

In that case it was held that a statement in a pattah that the land to the west of the land demised belonged to the executant was not a "claim" but a mere recital. Apparently that ruling would govern this case. A I R 1927 Cal 1,² a Full Bench ruling, is also in point. See also 49 I C 951,³ another Division Bench judgment of the Calcutta High Court, in which Sander-son C. J. delivering the judgment of the Bench, held that an old map prepared on behalf of one of the parties to a litigation was a private map and no evidence against the other party to the litigation. 8 Lah 651⁴ was referred to by both parties. In that case a Bench presided over by the Hon'ble Sir Shadi Lal held that certain deeds of sale concerning plots adjacent to the land in suit, reciting that the latter was the plaintiff's property, the executants being strangers to the suit, could not be relied upon because the executants of the deed were neither produced as witnesses nor proved to be dead. That does not really help as far as Ex. P. 2 is concerned. Reference was also made to 37 P L R 454,⁵ a judgment pronounced by me on behalf of a Division Bench of this Court, which said that recital of boundaries of adjacent properties in old deeds, though not conclusive, could be taken into account. This expression of opinion was unnecessary for the decision, which rested on other evidence, and I now think that it is wrong. Mr. Shamair Chand for the respondent also referred to a ruling of 1922 of the Madras High Court, reported in 70 I C 389,⁶ which relied on a mortgage deed executed in the year 1874. The judgment said :

They (the lower Courts) held on the first point that the assertion of title as owner found in Ex. 1, and also implied by that transaction of mortgage itself, is admissible under S. 13, Evidence Act, and on the second point that the statement which forms the recital in Ex. 1 as to how the title was acquired, is also admissible under S. 32, Cl. (7), Evidence Act.

With all respect, the judgment is not very clear. I am inclined to think, in view of the authorities quoted above, that the recital of title did not amount to a claim, but that the transaction of mortgage itself was admissible under S. 13. This case therefore does not carry us any further. The result of this argument is that, in my opinion, the plan Ex. P. 2 showing Sukh Lal as in possession is inadmissible in evidence. Mr. Shamair Chand admitted that if the plan had been a recent one, it would not be admissible unless the person preparing it appeared as a witness and swore to his knowledge of the facts and the correctness of the plan. This being so, I do not see why a document should be admitted merely on account of its age. It is quite true that the plaintiffs in 1875 had no apparent motive for saying anything, which was not correct, about the property now in dispute; but it did not matter for the purposes of that suit whether the description of the shop as Sukh Lal's was right or wrong; and the present defendant's predecessors-in-interest had no opportunity of contesting the statement. A better guarantee than this is required before letting in evidence which cannot be tested by cross-examination.

The position as to the rent deeds is simpler. They were executed by three different persons in favour of Gudan Mal Mahajan, a near neighbour of the plaintiff. Gudan Mal gave evidence. He said that the shop in dispute belonged to the plaintiff and in support of his testimony produced the three rent deeds executed in his favour, which in the recital of the boundaries gave the shop in dispute as the property of Chhotu. These three deeds were executed respectively in the years 1929, 1933 and 1934. Gudan Mal actually did not sign any one of the three deeds, and it is therefore urged that he could not rely on them under S. 157 as corroboration of his testimony. The executants of the two earlier deeds were not called. The executant of the third was a school master who had come to the village for the first time on 30th June 1934, his deed being executed on 18th July 1934. He said that he had no knowledge of the boundaries, that he stated what he was told but that all the villagers said that the shop belonged to Chhotu. This is mere hearsay. As to Gudan Mal, I think he cannot refer to deeds to which he was not a party, i. e. to statements which he did not make, as corroborative evidence under S. 157. If a point be stretched and it be said that Gudan was practically a party to the deeds, the position simply is that Gudan Mal stated in Court in 1935 that the shop belonged to Chhotu and that he had previously said so three times, the earliest date being 1929. In my opinion these rent deeds also are inadmissible. The conclusion of the learned Senior Subordinate Judge of Rohtak was therefore vitiated by inadmissible evidence. Following 8 Lah 651,⁴ I set aside his judgment and decree and direct that he should come to a fresh finding excluding the inadmissible evidence. He should also come to a finding as to Issue 2 as regards possession. Costs of this hearing are to follow the event. The learned counsel for the parties have been told that their clients are to appear in the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Rohtak, on 30th May 1938 to obtain a date for the re-argument of the appeal.

(Plaintiff).

Din Mohammad J.—This appeal has arisen in the following circumstances: One Shadi, mortgaged his land with possession to one Prabhu on 30th May 1901 and the mutation relating to that transaction was sanctioned on 24th November 1903. In September 1927, Chandan, one of the legal representatives of Shadi, made an application under S. 4, Redemption of Mortgages Act (2 of 1913). The mortgagee resisted the application principally on the ground that the mortgagor's rights had been extinguished and that he, the mortgagee, was not the complete owner of the land. The Assistant Collector while remarking that the objection made by the mortgagee appeared to him to be sound, dismissed the application on the ground that he could not enter into a discussion of a complicated matter in those summary proceedings and directed the petitioner to seek his remedy in regular Courts. No further action was taken by the representatives of the mortgagor until 6th December 1935 when the present suit for redemption was instituted. The mortgagee contended inter alia that inasmuch as no suit had been instituted within one year of the order of the Assistant Collector dismissing the application under the Redemption of Mortgages Act, the suit was barred under Art. 14, Lim. Act. The trial Court however did not give effect to this plea and made a decree in terms of the relief prayed for. On appeal, the Senior Subordinate Judge also agreed with the trial Court. Thereupon, a further appeal was presented to this Court, which came for hearing before Abdul Rashid J. He too upheld the decision of the Courts below on the question of limitation and dismissed the appeal. Hence this Letters Patent appeal.

Counsel for the appellant contends that under Sec. 12, Redemption of Mortgages Act, a party against whom an order of dismissal is made under any of the sections of the Act enumerated there, is bound to institute a suit to establish his rights in respect of the mortgage within one year under Art. 14, Lim. Act, and if he fails to do so, his right is lost for ever. Counsel for the respondent, on the other hand, urges that S. 12 contemplates such orders only as in any manner prejudicially affect the right of any party in relation to the mortgage in dispute and that those orders which do not touch the merits of the case do not come within the purview of S. 12. Certain authorities have been relied upon in connexion with the contentions raised on either side and before we formulate our conclusion, it will be necessary to review them at some length. In 6 Lah 206,¹ the predecessor-in-interest of the plaintiff had made an application to the Collector for the redemption of a mortgage under the Redemption of Mortgages Act and his application had been dismissed on the ground that the claim was barred by limitation. On a subsequent suit being brought by the plaintiff for redemption more than one year after the date of this order, it was contended by the mortgagee that the suit was barred by time under Art. 14, Lim. Act. The contention was repelled by both the trial Court and the lower Appellate Court, but was allowed by a single Judge of this Court. Thereupon, a Letters Patent appeal was presented, which came for hearing before Sir Shadi Lal C. J. and LeRossignol J. the main ground of attack being that Art. 14, Lim. Act, had no reference to such orders as were passed under the Redemption of Mortgages Act. The learned Judges came to the conclusion that the real nature of the suit contemplated by the Legislature in S. 12, Redemption of Mortgages Act was a suit to set aside the Collector's order and that consequently if a suit was not brought within one year of that order, it was out of time.

In A I R 1929 Lah 513,² Sir Shadi Lal C. J. and Broadway J. held that the rejection of an application by a Collector under S. 9 without considering the merits of the dispute and after recording the objections raised by the defendants on the ground that the dispute cannot be settled summarily, practically amounted to denial of jurisdiction and inasmuch as in order to enable the plaintiff to succeed in his suit for redemption, it was by no means necessary to set aside that order, he was not bound to bring a suit within one year of the said order. They however remarked that a party against whom such an order was made was a party aggrieved within the meaning of S. 12 of the Act. Counsel for the appellant has criticized this judgment on the ground that it places a very narrow interpretation on the wording of S. 12 of the Act and that in so doing it unnecessarily curtails the scope of that section. On giving due consideration to the arguments advanced on either side and to the reasoning employed by the learned Judges responsible for that judgment, we consider with all respect that that case has not been correctly decided. S. 12 is worded as follows :

Any party aggrieved by an order made under Ss. 6, 7, 8, 9, 10 or 11 of this Act may institute a suit to establish his rights in respect of the mortgage, but subject to the result of such suit, if any, the order shall be conclusive.

The relevant portion of S. 6 lays down that :

Where the mortgagee appears and the petitioner does not appear when the petition is called on for hearing, the Collector shall make an order that the petition be dismissed unless the mortgagee admits the claim. . . .

It is obvious that an order made under S. 6, if the mortgagee refuses to admit the claim of the petitioner, is that of a bare dismissal without reference to the merits of the case, but still it is an effective order under S. 12 and the dismissal will be conclusive if it is not set aside as contemplated by S. 12. If it is once held that a party against whom an order is made is a party aggrieved, even though the order is not on the merits, it is impossible to draw a distinction between those orders which go to the detriment of the party concerned on the merits and those that do not. The plain language of S. 12 does not admit of any such distinction being drawn and it is well settled that the function of the Courts is to administer the law as they find it and not to introduce into the clear provisions of the Legislature words which do not exist there. In other words, their function is to judge and not to legislate. And in these circumstances, it is difficult to follow the reasoning on which the decision in A I R 1929 Lah 513² is based. Moreover, S. 9 contemplates objections on grounds other than the amount of the deposit and empowers the Collector either to dismiss the petition in those circumstances or to hold a summary enquiry regarding the objection raised by the mortgagee. S. 10 lays down inter alia that if on enquiry regarding any objection so raised by the mortgagee the Collector is of opinion that there is a sufficient cause for not proceeding further with the petition, he shall dismiss the petition. It will be obvious that the law contemplates the disposal of petitions under the Redemption of Mortgages Act on grounds other than those which touch the merits of the petition and it empowers the Collector to dispose of those petitions on those grounds. For a Collector therefore to dismiss an application on grounds other than the merits is not to refuse jurisdiction inasmuch as this is a manner of exercising jurisdiction permitted by the Act and it is denial of jurisdiction which is the main ground on which A I R 1929 Lah 513² appears to have proceeded.

1. Kaura v. Ramchand, (1925) 12 A I R Lah 385 = 88 I C 945 = 6 Lah 206 = 26 P L R 383.

It may be that the interpretation which is sought to be placed by that judgment on S. 12 is more reasonable or more equitable but sitting as a Court of law we are concerned neither with the equitable side of the legislation nor with the logic of it. We have, as remarked before, to interpret it in its plain sense and to apply the law so interpreted to the facts of any case that arises without reference to logic or equity. In 15 Lah 389,³ a Full Bench of this Court reaffirmed the principle enunciated in 6 Lah 206.¹ Both these cases were sought to be distinguished by the respondent's counsel on the ground that there a decision had been given by the Collector on the merits but, as explained above, that circumstance is immaterial. Counsel for the respondent has further contended that the construction put upon the term 'aggrieved' by the Letters Patent Bench in A I R 1929 Lah 513² is open to objection and has drawn our attention to a quotation from (1880) 14 Ch D 458⁴ which is to the following effect:

It is said that any person aggrieved by any order of the Court is entitled to appeal. But the words 'person aggrieved' do not really mean a man who is disappointed of a benefit which he might have received if some other order had been made. A 'person aggrieved' must be a man who has suffered a legal grievance, a man against whom a decision has been pronounced which has wrongfully deprived him of something, or wrongfully refused him something, or wrongfully affected his title to something.

This may be so, but it cannot be urged that in the dismissal of the petition in the present case the plaintiff did not suffer a legal grievance or that the Assistant Collector did not wrongfully refuse to adjudicate upon the merits of the petition or wrongfully deprive the petitioner of the chance of obtaining the redemption of the land in summary proceedings. Even on this authority, therefore, we consider in respectful agreement with the learned Judges who decided A I R 1929 Lah 513² that any person against whom any order is made under Ss. 6 to 11, Redemption of Mortgages Act is a person aggrieved within the meaning of S. 12. We may with advantage quote here the pertinent observations made by LeRossignol J. in 6 Lah 206¹ at p. 216:

It has also been objected that this interpretation operates to reduce the normal period of limitation; but when a dispute has been established we do not think that that in itself is an unfortunate circumstance. However that may be, an individual who takes advantage of a summary procedure must suffer its disadvantages as well as enjoy its benefits.

We are consequently of opinion that having failed to bring a suit within one year of the order of the Assistant Collector dated 26th September 1928, the petitioner lost his right to bring a regular suit under Art. 14, Limitation Act and that his suit instituted in 1935 was hopelessly time-barred. On these grounds we allow this appeal, set aside the order of the learned Judge of this Court as well as the orders of the Courts below and dismiss the suit. In the peculiar circumstances of the case however we leave the parties to bear their own costs throughout.

Criminal Revn. No. 1777 of 1936, Decided on 3rd March 1937, from order of Sess. Judge, Jhelum, D/- 27th November 1936.

(a) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 476—Notice of inquiry to person alleged to have committed offence is not necessary.

In an inquiry under S. 476 it is not necessary for the Court to issue a notice to the person alleged to have committed the offence. Case law referred. [P 641 C 2]

(b) Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 195 (3) and 476 — H applying to District Magistrate for taking action against M for giving false medical certificate to N in criminal complaint by N against H in Court of Naib Tahsildar—Matter referred to Additional District Magistrate for disposal—Additional District Magistrate ordering complaint to be made against M—Complaint held lodged without jurisdiction.

H made an application to a District Magistrate that action should be taken under Ss. 193 and 467, I. P. C., against M for having given a false medical certificate to one N who had instituted a criminal complaint against H in the Court of Naib Tahsildar. The matter was referred to the Additional District Magistrate for disposal and he ordered a complaint to be made against M and the Sessions Judge on appeal maintained the order :

Held that the complaint was lodged without jurisdiction. The expression "Court to which appeals ordinarily lie" in S. 195 (3) meant in the present case the Court of the District Magistrate and not the Additional District Magistrate. If the District Magistrate had directed the Additional Magistrate to make an enquiry and report to him and had then adopted that report and made the complaint himself, the procedure would have been quite legal: 30 Cal 394; 26 Mad 656; A I R 1920 Lah 479 and A I R 1929 Cal 172, Foll.

Judgment. — The following facts have led up to this revision: One Nathu brought a criminal complaint against Harnam Singh in the Court of a Naib Tahsildar after obtaining a medical certificate of injuries from Dr. Nazar Mohammad, Sub-Assistant Surgeon. Harnam Singh himself went to the same doctor and obtained a medical certificate of injuries which was admittedly false. He is said to have gone to another doctor and also to the Civil Surgeon and obtained certificates from them that he had no injuries. Nathu's complaint was then dismissed in default. Harnam Singh then applied in the Court of the District Magistrate, Jhelum, that action should be taken under Ss. 193 and 467, Penal Code, against Nathu and Dr. Nazar Mohammad and the matter was referred to the Additional District Magistrate for disposal. The Additional District Magistrate Lala Mangat Rai ordered the complaint to be made against Dr. Nazar Mohammad only under Ss. 193 and 465, Penal Code. On appeal the learned Sessions Judge maintained the order under S. 193 but held there was no case under Sec. 465. Dr. Nazar Mohammad has come here on revision through Mr. Ghulam Mohy-ud-Din.

The first point argued is that the enquiry made by Lala Mangat Rai is bad because no notice was given to Dr. Nazar Mohammad. In support of this Mr. Ghulam Mohy-ud-Din referred to four rulings, A I R 1927 Lah 173,¹ A I R 1923 Mad 228,² 59 I C 655³ and 77 I C 888,⁴ all Single Bench judgments. They are to the effect that while the statute (S. 476, Criminal P. C.) does not require any preliminary enquiry, if an enquiry is made notice should be given to the person accused; and some of them say that he should be given an opportunity for cross-examining the witnesses. On the other hand, the Crown cited 58 Cal 215⁵ and A I R 1935 Oudh 113,⁶ which are to the effect that no notice in such an enquiry is necessary.

I am somewhat strongly of opinion that notice is not necessary. S. 476 says that if the Court thinks that an enquiry should be made into any offence referred to under S. 195, such Court may, after such preliminary enquiry if any, as it thinks necessary, record a finding and make a complaint.

If no enquiry at all is required by law, it is anomalous, that, if the Court then made an enquiry, it should be necessary to issue a notice to the respondent.

The second point is that the Additional District Magistrate, who after holding the preliminary enquiry made the complaint, had no jurisdiction to do so. S. 476, Criminal P. C. empowers a Court to make a complaint in writing in reference to an offence "which appears to have been committed in or in relation to a proceeding in that Court." S. 476-A extends the power conferred on such Court to the Court to which such former Court is subordinate within the meaning of S. 195, sub-s. (3), where the former Court has not made a complaint.

Section 195 sub-s. (3) says:

For the purposes of this Section a Court shall be deemed to be subordinate to the Court to which appeals ordinarily lie from the appealable decrees or sentences of such former Court. . . .

Provided that (a) where appeals lie to more than one Court, the Appellate Court of inferior jurisdiction shall be the Court to which such Court shall be deemed to be subordinate.

This point was taken before the learned Sessions Judge who remarked that appeals from orders of the second or third class Magistrates were ordinarily heard by the Additional District Magistrate and overruled it. The point is whether 'ordinarily heard by' means the same as 'ordinarily lie.' Section 10, Criminal P. C., provides for the appointment of the District Magistrate and of an Additional District Magistrate. S. 407 (1) provides that any person convicted by a Magistrate of the second or third class . . . may appeal to the District Magistrate. S. 407 (2) lays down:

The District Magistrate may direct that any appeal under this Section, or any class of such appeals, shall be heard by any Magistrate of the First Class Subordinate to him and empowered by the Local Government to hear such appeals, and thereupon such appeal or class of appeals may be presented to such subordinate Magistrate.

In 30 Cal 394⁷ it was held that the Court of the Joint Magistrate was not that to which appeals ordinarily lay; but the Court to which appeals ordinarily lay was that of the District Magistrate. The Joint Magistrate only heard appeals under the special powers conferred on him by the District Magistrate under S. 407 (2) and the existence of that power does not constitute the Joint Magistrate the Court to which appeals ordinarily lie under S. 195, Cl. (7) of the Code of 1908.

This was followed in 26 Mad 656,⁸ Benson J. dissenting. He said:

The language of S. 407 is not, it is true, very happy, but when all appeals of a certain class may be, and in practice are, presented to a certain Court, and must be heard by that Court, I do not think it is a great strain on the language to hold that such appeals may be said ordinarily to lie to such Court.

30 Cal 394⁷ was also followed in a Single Bench judgment of this Court: 68 I C 412.⁹ In A I R 1929 Cal 172,¹⁰ another Division Bench followed 30 Cal 394.⁷ Mukerji J. said that the law had not been changed with the redrafting of S. 195 in the Code of 1923 and that the previous decisions had been followed by almost all the superior Courts. Graham J. said:

The words "Court to which appeals ordinarily lie" in S. 195 (3), Criminal P. O., seem to be not free from doubt.

But on the whole he concurred in the judgment. Following these judgments and the wording of the Code itself, I am of opinion that "Courts to which appeals ordinarily lie" means in the present case the Court of the District Magistrate and not the Additional District Magistrate. The complaint was therefore lodged without jurisdiction. If the District Magistrate had directed the Additional District Magistrate to make an enquiry and report to him and had then adopted that report and made the complaint himself, the procedure would have been quite legal. The present revision must be accepted and the complaint of Lala Mangat Rai, Additional District Magistrate, Jhelum, set aside.

(a) Custom (Punjab)—Village abadi — Non-proprietor having house in abadi—Non-proprietors live with license — Terms of license though not put into writing are always to be taken as implied—Non-proprietor cannot transfer site of houses — Such custom should be termed 'usages' — Presumption in favour of proprietary body can be rebutted—Strong evidence is necessary.

In the Punjab villages, it is a matter of presumption that abadi dah is a common property of the proprietary body until partition has taken place; and when an outsider is allowed to settle permanently in the village and build a house in the abadi dah, it is further to be presumed that he does so by license from the proprietors. It is improbable that the terms of this license are ever put into words, but they are known to the parties concerned and are to be implied from local usage, much in the same way as certain terms will be read into any other transfer of property, unless there is evidence to the contrary. When a non-proprietor is granted a site for building in a village, one of these implied terms is that he may not transfer it, though it will be allowed to descend to his own family. The addition of such a term to the grant may be called a local custom; but it would probably be better to refer such customs as "usages" in order to distinguish them from customs which are governed by S. 5, Punjab Laws Act. It is a question of fact whether such a restriction on transfer is to be taken as an implied term when a site is granted to a non-proprietor in any particular village. Generally, it will be presumed that the proprietary body intends the grant to be subject to a restriction on transfer and that this condition has been accepted by any non-proprietor accepting the grant. The presumption may be rebutted in a variety of ways. It may be shown that the course of dealings between proprietors and non-proprietors over a long term of years has been such as to indicate that no restriction on transfer is implied when a grant is made. It is quite possible that the growth of a village or its absorption into a large town may lead the proprietary body to acquiesce in a system which allows the free transfer of residential sites. However, very strong evidence will be needed to show that the proprietors of a village have surrendered their privileges. It is a presumption of law that each man must be expected to act in a manner most favourable to his own interests, and instances intended to show the surrender of these privileges must exclude the possibility of any other construction. Judgment.—This is a suit relating to the rights of persons who occupy houses in an ordinary Punjab village but do not belong to the proprietary body. Two such persons from village Bulewal in the Batala

Tahsil of the Gurdaspur District are seeking a declaration to the effect that their village has grown to such an extent that it should more properly be called a town and that the non-proprietors residing therein have accordingly acquired full rights of ownership over both their houses and the sites which they occupy, with complete power to alienate them as they please. The suit has been brought against the proprietors of the village; and as these proprietors are taking steps towards the partition of the abadi deh, there is a further prayer that they may be restrained from doing so. A number of documents were produced to show that the houses of non-proprietors in the village have from time to time been transferred as though their occupiers had the right to alienate. The nature of these documents will be examined later. For the moment, it is sufficient to say that they were not sufficient to convince the trial Court that the non-proprietors had any customary right of alienating their residences in the abadi deh. It was further held that the plaintiffs had failed to prove that the present size of Bulewal justifies the name of a town. The Senior Subordinate Judge, on first appeal, came to the same conclusion. He also examined the general aspect of the question and expressed the opinion that there could hardly be a custom which would entitle one person to alienate property belonging to another. The decree of the trial Court dismissing the suit was accordingly confirmed. Although he was doubtful whether there was any matter involved which could properly be called a custom, the Senior Subordinate Judge granted the plaintiffs the usual certificate to enable them to come up in second appeal.

There are a large number of recorded decisions relating to the rights of non-proprietors in the villages of Northern India, some of which may possibly seem to suggest that the customary rights of villagers are liable to change as the villages grow into towns; and it is evident that these decisions have influenced the way in which the plaintiffs have framed and presented their claim. Since any suggestion of change is contrary to the generally accepted ideas as to the essential nature of "custom," the remarks of the lower Appellate Court with regard to the use of this word raise a question which needs some preliminary examination. In cases of this kind, the word "custom" is generally used with re-reference to Ss. 5 and 6, Punjab Laws Act, 1872, which run as follows:

5. In questions regarding succession, special property of females, betrothal, marriage, divorce, dower, adoption, guardianship, minority, bastardy, family relations, wills, legacies, gifts, partitions, or any religious usage or institution, the rule of decision shall be—

(a) Any custom applicable to the parties concerned, which is not contrary to justice, equity, or good conscience, and has not been by this or any other enactment altered or abolished, and has not been declared to be void by any competent authority.

(b) The Mahomedan law in cases where the parties are Mahomedans, and the Hindu law, in cases where the parties are Hindus, except in so far as such law has been altered or abolished by Legislative enactment, or is opposed to the provisions of this Act, or has been modified by any such custom as is above referred to.

6. In cases not otherwise specially provided for, the Judges shall decide according to justice, equity, and good conscience.

When we are dealing with the right of a non-proprietor to sell the house which he occupies without obtaining the consent of the proprietary body, it would be difficult to bring the case under S. 5, and it would have to be decided under S. 6. S. 6 is, however, subject to S. 7, which deals with the application of custom in another way. This Section runs thus:

7. All local customs and mercantile usages shall be regarded as valid, unless they are contrary to justice, equity or good conscience, or have, before the passing of this Act, been declared to be void by any competent authority.

There are, in fact, two classes of customs which may govern the disposal of property in a Punjab village. In the first place, there are certain rules having the force of law, such as the rules of succession, which cannot ordinarily be changed by the will of the parties concerned, and most rules of this kind are covered by S. 5. In the second place, we have another distinct set of principles, which are not so much rules of the kind which regulate such subjects as succession or marriage, but are more akin to trade usages. These customs or usages are described in Pollock and Mulla's Indian Contract Act at p. 63, Edn. 6, in a passage which may be here quoted:

But there is a class of cases, of considerable importance in England, where the parties are presumed to have contracted with tacit reference to some usage well known in the district or in the trade, and whatever is prescribed by that usage becomes an additional term of the contract, if not contrary to the general law or excluded by express agreement. Such terms are certainly implied, as resulting not from the words used, but from a general interpretation of the transaction with reference to the usual understanding of persons entering on like transactions in like circumstances. . . . The ground on which usages of this kind are enforced is not that they have any intrinsic authority, but that the parties are deemed to have contracted with reference to them. They need not, accordingly, be ancient or universal. It is enough that they are in fact generally observed by persons in the circumstances and condition of the parties.

It seems to be this class of local customs to which reference is made in S. 7, Punjab Laws Act, in which it is to be observed that such customs are coupled with mercantile usage. In the Punjab villages, it is a matter of presumption that the abadi deh is a common property of the proprietary body until partition has taken place: and when an outsider is allowed to settle permanently in the village and build a house in the abadi deh, it is further to be presumed that he does so by license from the proprietors. It is improbable that the terms of this license are ever put into words, but they are known to the parties concerned and are to be implied from local usage much in the same way as certain terms will be read into any other transfer of property, unless there is evidence to the contrary. When a non-proprietor is granted a site for building in a village, one of these implied terms is that he may not transfer it, though it will be allowed to descend to his own family. The addition of such a term to the grant may be called a local custom; but it would probably be better to refer such customs as "usages" in order to distinguish them from customs which are governed by S. 5, Punjab Laws Act. It is a question of fact whether such a restriction on transfer is to be taken as an implied term when a site is granted to a non-proprietor in any particular village. Generally, it will be presumed that the proprietary body intends the grant to be subject to a restriction on transfer and that this condition has been accepted by any non-proprietor accepting the grant. The presumption may be rebutted in a variety of ways. It may be shown that the course of dealings between proprietors and non-proprietors over a long term of years has been such as to indicate that no restriction on transfer is implied when a grant is made. It is quite possible that the growth of a village or its absorption into a large town may lead the proprietary body to acquiesce in a system which allows the free transfer of residential sites. As observed in the passage quoted above, usages of this kind are not immutable. I agree however with the learned Subordinate Judge that very strong evidence will be needed to show that the proprietors of a village have surrendered their privileges. It is a presumption of law that each man must be expected to act in a manner most favourable to his own interests, and instances intended to show the surrender of these privileges must exclude the possibility of any other construction.

When instances in the present case are examined, I do not think that they bear out the proposition that grants to non-proprietors in village Bulewal must be taken as having been made without the usual reservation against transfer. The only instances which occurred before the present century are those relating to court sales. There are seven such instances, of which four belong to the present century, and in most of these instances the property was bought in by one of the village proprietors. With regard to court sales it is to be observed that these are enforced transfers, so they do not necessarily throw any light on the terms of the original grant, and it is only the subsequent conduct of the proprietors which is relevant. If the house of a non-proprietor is put to sale and is bought in by one of the proprietors, no question arises of allowing a stranger to come into the village. In these circumstances, it would hardly be worth while for the proprietary body to bring a suit for a declaration that the site is not liable to transfer. There is only one instance of purchase by a non-proprietor at a court sale before 1933; and since it is evident that efforts have been made to find every possible instance of transfer, the fact which emerges most prominently is that no non-proprietor appears to have thought of transferring his residence of his own accord until recent years.

The next series of instances are those relating to mortgages none of which are earlier than 1910. The effect of the mortgage of 1910 was to let a proprietor in possession. There are two mortgages of 1914 and one of 1915, which purport to be mortgages with possession but which were apparently intended to leave the original occupier in possession as a lessee. The other mortgages are of 1926 and later. Here again there are no earlier instances of any transfers which would let a stranger into the village; there is only one instance before 1926 which would result in an ostensible change of possession, and even this would only pass the possession to a proprietor. The instances of a voluntary transfer of possession otherwise than by mortgage are extremely few. There are two instances of gift in 1907 and 1914. Both of these are gifts to near relatives, one of whom had previously been a proprietor of the house himself. Since it is the practice for these houses to descend to collaterals, there is nothing in such gifts which would necessarily call for action on the part of the proprietors. There are three instances of outright sale, but these occurred in 1934 and 1935. From examination of these instances, which appear at first sight to be numerous, it will be found that there is only one instance of transfer of possession other than transfer to a proprietor or near relative until quite recent years; and of the transfers to proprietors, all except one were the result of court sales. There does not appear to have been any attempt on the part of the non-proprietors to assert an unrestricted right of disposal until 1934. Since there are over 200 resident non-proprietors in the village, the paucity of true instances tends to strengthen the presumption against an unrestricted power of disposal rather than the reverse.

There is one other matter which requires consideration. Evidence has been given to show that a number of pucca houses have been built by non-proprietors in the village and it is argued that they would not have done so unless they had full rights of ownership in the sites below. Although I am aware that there are conflicting views on this point, I do not myself think that this argument has a very great weight. It is well known that the partition of an abadi is of rare occurrence, and the possession of a non-proprietor is not likely to be disturbed so long as the family lasts. Unless he has any intention of transferring his business elsewhere, it does not seem likely that the remote possibility of a partition would deter him from making the best possible provision within his means for the accommodation of himself and his family. For these reasons, I am of opinion that the plaintiffs have failed to rebut the presumption that the grant of residential sites to non-proprietors in village Bulewal has throughout been made in the form of a license which does not permit transfer without the consent of the proprietary body, and that they have also failed to prove that the members of the proprietary body have surrendered the proprietary right which would enable them to claim partition of the abadi. The decree of the trial Court is accordingly confirmed and the appeal dismissed with costs. Counsel for the plaintiffs has asked for the grant of a certificate to enable him to present a Letters Patent Appeal. This prayer is granted.

The effect of S. 15 (b), Pre-emption Act, is to confer the right of pre-emption in respect of agricultural land upon the whole line of heirs of the vendor and not merely on the nearest heir at the time of the sale, but the priority of the right between claimants is to be determined according to the order of succession. (Plaintiff).

Addison J. — Sardarni Lachhmi Devi sold some land to Allah Din and Sher Mohammad. A collateral of her husband, Prabh Dial, sued to pre-empt the sale. His suit has been decreed and the appeal of the vendees to the District Judge has been dismissed. Against this decision this second appeal has been admitted to a hearing. The defence of the vendees was that the alienor had executed a will, dated 17-8-1935, bequeathing her estate to two nephews, and that her husband's collateral could not therefore be said to be an heir entitled to pre-empt. In the first place, a will can be revoked at any moment and the widow is still alive, so that it is doubtful whether the legatees can be said to be heirs at present within the meaning of the Pre-emption Act. In the second place, it is clear from the Act that all classes of heirs are entitled to pre-empt though a nearer class would have precedence over a more distant class. The appropriate Section is S. 15 (b) which runs :

The right of pre-emption in respect of agricultural land shall vest where the sale is of a share out of joint land or property, and is not made by all the co-sharers jointly firstly, in the lineal descendants of the vendor in order of succession ;

secondly, in the co-sharers, if any, who are agnates in order of succession ;

thirdly, in the persons, not included under firstly or secondly above, in order of succession, who but for such sale would be entitled, on the death of the vendor, to inherit the land or property sold ;

fourthly, in the cosharers.

No one sued to pre-empt claiming under firstly, secondly or fourthly. The plaintiff comes under thirdly, as it is not disputed that he is a person entitled to inherit in the absence of nearer heirs. If it is assumed that the legatees under the will are heirs, it seems to us that the collaterals of the husband would still come in under S. 15 (b), thirdly, because the right is given to all classes in order of succession who but for such sale would be entitled to inherit the land or property sold. It was laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 3 Lah 48¹ under the old Act that the effect of the then Section was to confer the right of pre-emption in respect of agricultural land upon the whole line of heirs of the vendor, and not merely on the nearest heir at the time of the sale, but that the priority of right between claimants is to be determined according to the order of succession. This ruling applies to the present case and admittedly the husband's collateral is an heir and would therefore come under Sec. 15 (b) thirdly. The legatees did not sue to pre-empt so that there is no competition between the plaintiff and them. For the reasons given we dismiss this appeal with costs.

* Court-fees Act (1870), S. 7 (iv) (c) — Suit falling under S. 7 (iv) (c) — Plaintiff failing to fix value of suit for purposes of court-fee but separately valuing his suit for jurisdictional purposes at certain sum — Amount so fixed for jurisdictional purpose should be taken as value of relief for purpose of court-fee.

The assessment of court-fees on a suit falling under any of the clauses of S. 7 (iv) depends on the amount shown in the plaint or memorandum of appeal, as the case may be, as the value of the suit for purposes of court-fee; but this in turn must depend upon a figure to be fixed by the plaintiff himself. If the plaintiff fails to fix such a figure expressly for court-fee purposes on the erroneous supposition that the suit is not covered by S. 7 (iv) (c) and separately values his suit for jurisdictional purposes at a certain figure, he should be taken as having valued the relief sought by him at this amount. He should not be taken as having failed to value his relief within the meaning of the Section and so should not be required to fix the value of the relief for the first time. The plaintiff cannot have the benefit of a higher valuation for selecting a superior forum for Judgment. — This appeal was admitted to a hearing but it was noted in the order of admission that the question of court-fee will be argued at the hearing. The suit is one for a declaration that the plaintiffs have a right of grazing over 1620 kanals of village land and for an injunction to restrain the defendants from cultivating part of this land which they entered into possession. The decision of the lower Appellate Court is to the effect that the plaintiffs had a right of grazing over less than one third of the area claimed; and the defendants were restrained from making any further encroachments on this limited area.

The suit is clearly one to obtain a declaratory decree with consequential relief, falling under S. 7 (iv) (c), Court-fees Act, 1870.
It might also be treated as falling under Cl. (e) which covers suits for a right to some benefit arising out of land, but this would not make any practical difference.

In either case, court-fee must be paid ad valorem according to the amount at which the relief sought is valued in the plaint or memorandum of appeal, and the plaintiff is required to state the amount at which he valued the relief sought by him. When the plaint was presented to the trial Court however, the plaintiffs attempted to separate the prayer for a declaratory decree as if this were a matter in respect of which they were entitled to sue on a fixed court-fee of Rs. 10, without determining the value of this relief for purposes of stamp duty. For the purposes of jurisdiction, they placed the value of the relief sought by means of a declaratory decree at Rs. 1000 and the value of the injunction at Rs. 50, making the value of the suit Rs. 1050 in all.

When the present memorandum of appeal was presented the same method of valuation was adopted. The value of the declaratory decree for purposes of court-fee was said to be undetermined for purposes of calculating stamp duty but the jurisdictional value of the suit was again placed at Rs. 1050. It was brought to the notice of the counsel for the appellants (who are also plaintiffs) that the suit was one falling under S. 7 (iv) (c), Court-fees Act, and they were required to make up the deficiency in court-fees. Instead of doing this, counsel for the appellants proceeded to alter the memorandum so as to fix the value of the appeal for purposes of court-fee at a single sum of Rs. 180. At the same time the value for purposes of jurisdiction was fixed at the same amount.
The memorandum was then again presented, after the period of limitation for an appeal had expired.

The question now to be decided may be shortly stated. The assessment of court-fees on a suit falling under any of the clauses of S. 7 (iv) depends on the amount shown in the plaint or memorandum of appeal, as the case may be, as the value of the suit for purposes of court-fee; but this in turn must depend upon a figure to be fixed by the plaintiff himself. If the plaintiff fails to fix such a figure expressly for court-fee purposes on the erroneous supposition that the suit is not covered by S. 7 (iv) (c) and separately values his suit for jurisdictional purposes at a certain figure, should he be taken as having valued the relief sought by him at this amount, or should he be taken as having failed to value his relief

within the meaning of the Section and so be required to fix the value of the relief for the first time? There are two decisions of this Court bearing upon the question. In 9 Lah 366¹ the plaintiff sought relief relating to the estate of a deceased person, and valued his suit for jurisdictional purposes at Rs. 16,000, this being the value of the property involved, but failed to pay the court-fee which would be necessary if this figure had been taken as the value of relief sought for purposes of court-fee. It was held that the plaintiff had merely fixed the value of the property concerned and it was never present in his mind that he was fixing the value of the relief sought at the same time. He was accordingly allowed an opportunity of fixing this value for the first time. One of the grounds given for this decision was that, while a plaintiff fixing the value of the relief sought for the purposes of court-fee fixes the value of the suit for purposes of jurisdiction at the same time, there was no authority for the proposition that, by fixing the value of the suit for jurisdictional purposes only, he thereby fixes the value of the relief sought for purposes of court-fee.

A somewhat different decision is given in 13 Lah 391.² In this case the plaintiffs sued for a declaration that they were not bound by certain mortgages with consequential relief, and valued the suit at Rs. 5100 for purposes of jurisdiction. It was found that the court-fee would not be sufficient if this sum were taken as the value of the relief sought and their counsel asked that the plaint might be returned to them in order to enable them to fix their own value, as had been done in the case just mentioned. This claim was refused on the strength of the decision in 8 Lah 531.³ It is to be observed that the judgment was pronounced by the same Judge who had given the decision in 9 Lah 366¹ whose attention was drawn to his earlier judgment. He observed that the facts were considerably different and he did not consider that the earlier authority was to the point in the later case. It was not however made clear in what circumstances the rule of decision laid down in 9 Lah 366¹ would be applicable and there have since been divergent decisions on the point. In 140 I C 73⁴ the rule in 9 Lah 366¹ was applied, and this rule was taken as a direct consequence of the Full Bench decision in 111 P R 1913.⁵ On the other hand the rule in 13 Lah 391² has since been followed in a number of cases which are given in 38 P L R 923.⁶

In the present case I feel myself bound to follow the rule laid down in 13 Lah 391² for several reasons. In the first place, it seems to me that the trend of decisions in this Court is in favour of applying the latter rule rather than the former. In the second place, there may in certain exceptional circumstances be some reason for holding that the plaintiffs have no intention of fixing the value of the relief sought; but the same argument can hardly apply in a case of this kind when the plaintiffs are fixing only the value of a limited right in property. In the third place, as laid down in 13 Lah 788,⁷ the plaintiffs cannot have the benefit of a higher valuation for selecting a superior forum for the hearing of their case and pay a court-fee on a lower valuation. As the result of fixing the value of their relief at Rs. 1050, the plaintiffs have already had the benefit of securing that their case should be heard by a Court above the lowest grade. For these reasons I hold that the memorandum of appeal must be stamped ad valorem on the figure of Rs. 1050. The plaintiffs are given a fortnight in which to make up the deficiency.

(a) Custom (Punjab)—Alienation—Ancestral land — To support alienation necessity must exist at the time of alienation.

Even a male proprietor is not entitled to encumber ancestral property for his future requirements; the necessity to support an alienation of ancestral property must exist at the time of the alienation : A I R 1920 Lah 271 and A I R 1923 Lah 307, Rel. on. [P 652 C 1]

(b) Custom (Punjab)—Alienation—Ancestral land—Just debt—Meaning explained—Amounts borrowed by big zamindar, having social position and large income, for purchase of costly clothes and ornaments cannot be considered as reckless expenditure so as to exclude amounts from category of just debts.

Just debt means a debt which is actually due and which is not immoral, illegal or opposed to public policy. It also means a debt not contracted as an act of reckless extravagance or of wanton waste or with the intention of destroying the interest of the reversioners. It need not be one incurred for a necessary purpose; but if a non-necessary debt is unreasonably large compared to the means and station in life of the proprietor, it cannot come under the definition of a just debt. Similarly if a number of comparatively small loans for non-necessary purposes are contracted within an unreasonably short period, they collectively may amount to extravagance, judged by the tests previously mentioned, and may be excluded from the category of just debts. What is unreasonable or extravagant must depend upon the circumstances of each particular case and must be decided by the Court on fair and rational grounds : 65 P R 1900 (F B), Foll. [P 652 C 1]

Amounts borrowed by a big zamindar with a large income and living in a style suited to his social status, for costly clothes and ornaments cannot be considered to be a very unreasonable expenditure so as to exclude the debts from the category of "just" debts. [P 653 C 1]

(c) Custom (Punjab)—Alienation — Antecedent debt—Debts incurred after agreement of sale and later included in consideration for that sale are not antecedent debts.

An "antecedent debt" means a debt which is not only antecedent in time, but also antecedent in fact, i. e. it must be truly independent of the transaction impeached. In other words, the two transactions must be dissociated in time as well as fact. Debts which were incurred after agreement relating to the sale was entered into and which were later on included in the consideration for that sale cannot be properly held to be "antecedent debts" : A I R 1924 P C 50, Rel. on. [P 654 C 1]

(d) Custom (Punjab)—Alienation—Necessity—Purchase of ornaments.

The purchase of ornaments to replace those which had been stolen cannot be considered to be valid necessity for the sale of "ancestral" land. [P 654 C 1]

(e) Custom (Punjab) — Alienation — Good management.

It cannot obviously be considered to be an act of good management to sell property worth Rupees 20,500 when there is necessity for a loan of about Rs. 6000 only : A I R 1938 P C 77, Disting. [P 654 C 2]

(f) Custom (Punjab)—Alienation—Mere fact that part of property sold was house property situated within city limits is not sufficient to take it out of customary restriction on sale of ancestral property.

Where the vendor is admittedly governed by custom with regard to alienation of ancestral property, the mere fact that part of the property sold was house-property situated within the city limits would not be sufficient to take it out of the customary restrictions on sale of "ancestral" properties : 55 P R 1908; A I R 1938 Lah 107 and A I R 1934 Lah 81, Expl. [P 655 C 1]

(g) Custom (Punjab)—Alienation — Alienation by father—Declaratory suit by son challenging alienation — Mere fact that son lives with father does not make suit collusive.

Where a son brings a declaratory suit challenging the alienation of ancestral land by father, the mere fact that the plaintiff being the son of the vendor was living with him is not sufficient to justify the suit being dismissed as collusive : A I R 1927 Lah 264 and A I R 1927 Lah 46, Rel. on. [P 655 C 2]

(h) Custom (Punjab)—Alienation — Declaratory suit challenging sale of ancestral property —Such suit cannot be collusive between plaintiff, whether minor or major, and vendor defendant.

"Collusion" in judicial proceedings has been defined as "a secret agreement between two persons that the one should institute a suit against the other, in order to obtain the decision of a judicial tribunal for a sinister purpose." In a declaratory suit challenging the sale by father of ancestral property, the vendor is merely a pro forma defendant and no question of collusion with the defendant against whom relief is claimed really arises as it does, e. g. in suits for divorce, etc. Again when such a suit is instituted on behalf of a minor, there cannot obviously be any collusion on the part of the plaintiff in the above sense, as a minor is legally incapable of entering into any agreement. Even when the plaintiff is a major, the above definition would not apply, as the object of the declaratory decree is to protect the interest of the plaintiff and the other reversioners, and not those of the vendor; and this purpose cannot be considered to be "sinister." [P 656 C 1]

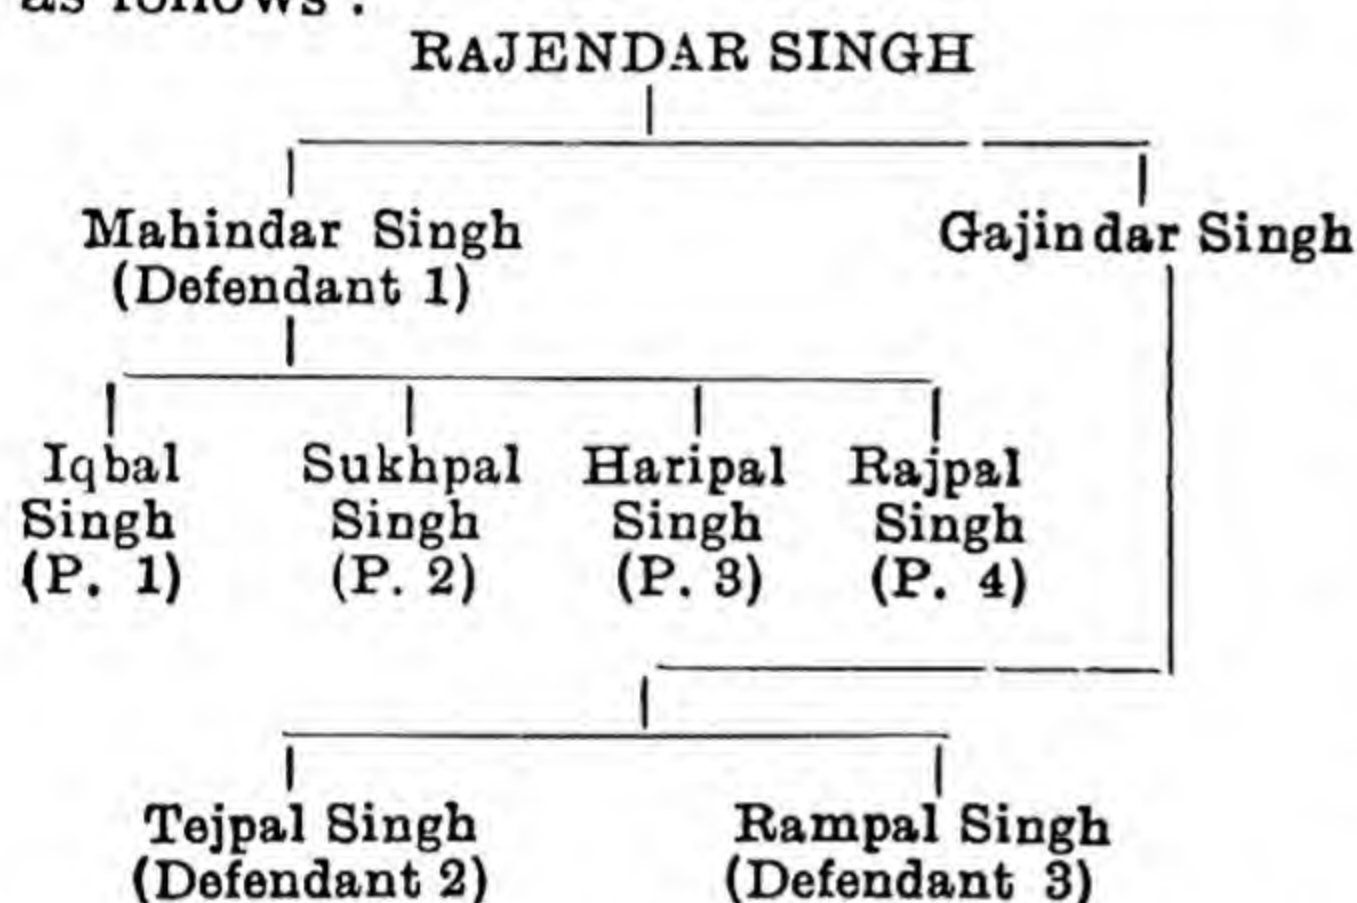

(i) Custom (Punjab)—Alienation—Ancestral property—Necessity—Alienee need only prove that antecedent debts discharged were due — Even outsider alienee is not protected if he knows true nature of debts and acts in bad faith.

The law requiring an alienee to prove necessity for alienation of ancestral property is well-known, and if an alienee fails to take the obvious precaution of ascertaining necessity for an alienation of ancestral property and getting it duly recorded at the proper place and time, he must take the consequences. Normally it is sufficient for the alienee to prove that the antecedent debts discharged were due, and it is unnecessary for him to show that the debts were incurred for "necessity" : 65 P R 1900, Rel. on. [P 656 C 2 ; P 657 C 1]

Even an alienee who is an outsider will not be protected, if he is aware of the true nature of the debts discharged by the alienation and acts in bad faith : 65 P R 1900, Rel. on. [P 658 C 1]

Bhide J. — This appeal arises out of a declaratory suit to challenge alienations of ancestral property by Sardar Mahindar Singh, father of the plaintiffs, and their deceased uncle Gajindar Singh. The suit has been dismissed by the Court below on the finding that the alienations in question were effected for valid necessity and consideration. From this decision the plaintiffs have appealed. The pedigree table showing the relationship of the parties concerned is as follows :

The four alienations in dispute were effected from the years 1921 to 1926. At the time the plaintiffs were minors. The suit was instituted on 31st July 1932 when Iqbal Singh, one of the plaintiffs, had attained majority, the others being still minors. The details of the various alienations may be briefly stated as follows :

I. Sale of 22 kanals and a bungalow for Rs. 20,500 on 29th November 1921 by Mahindar Singh, defendant 1, in favour of Salig Ram, proprietor of the firm Ram Narain-Jai Gopal (father of defendants 4-A and 4-B).

II. Sale of 25 kanals 2 marlas for Rs. 8130 dated 17th May 1923 by Mahindar Singh, defendant 1, and his brother Gajindar Singh, in favour of Jhanda Singh, Santa Singh, Kishen Singh and Kesar Singh. (Defendants 7 to 10).

III. Sale of 25 kanals 4 marlas for Rs. 8820 by defendant 1 and his brother Gajindar Singh in favour of Ganda Singh and Prem Singh (defendants 6 and 5).

IV. Mortgage deed in respect of 42 kanals 14 marlas for Rs. 8000 dated 29th

May 1926 in favour of Salig Ram, proprietor of the Firm Ram Narain-Jai Gopal mentioned above (father of defendants 4-A and 4-B).

The plaintiffs' case was that their father Mahindar Singh and uncle Gajindar Singh had inherited large property and had absolutely no necessity to sell or mortgage the ancestral property ; that they were both men of immoral character and had recklessly wasted the property, and that in the circumstances the alienations in dispute were not binding on them. The alienees on the other hand contended that the sales and the mortgage were effected mostly in lieu of just antecedent debts and were binding on the plaintiffs. Before proceeding with the discussion of the case, it will be convenient to deal with a preliminary matter which was raised by the learned counsel for the plaintiffs-appellants. It was urged that the learned Judge of the trial Court had refused to examine the appellant Iqbal Singh and his father Mahindar Singh, when the appellants wanted to produce them as their witnesses, although they were present in Court on 15th January 1936, and this refusal to record their evidence has greatly prejudiced the case of the appellants. It appears however from the record of the case that Mahindar Singh was never cited as a witness by the plaintiffs in their list of witnesses, and in fact on 16th January 1934 their pleader distinctly stated that Mahindar Singh was not a witness of the plaintiffs. So far as Iqbal Singh is concerned, he should have really appeared as his own witness at least at the conclusion of his case and had ample opportunity to do so. On 16th January 1934, the Court ordered Iqbal Singh to appear in Court and give his evidence on the next date ; but Iqbal Singh failed to appear on the next date. The case was later on transferred to another Court, and on the 16th November 1935 the Court adjourned the case to 14th December 1935 for evidence and arguments. Iqbal Singh had again an opportunity of appearing and giving evidence in Court on that date, but he failed to do so and no explanation is forthcoming as to why he did not appear on that date. As already stated, Mahindar Singh was never cited as a witness, but even if he was to be produced as a witness in rebuttal, the plaintiffs had the opportunity to do so on 14th January 1935. They did not however summon him as a witness nor produce him for examination on that date. The learned counsel for the plaintiffs had again no explanation to offer as to why Mahindar Singh was not summoned as a witness if he was to be produced in rebuttal.

It is true that on 15th January 1936 the plaintiffs did produce Mahindar Singh and Iqbal Singh for examination, but objection was taken to their being examined at that stage and the Court upheld that objection and proceeded to hear the arguments. In view of all the circumstances stated above, it cannot be said that the trial Court was wrong in refusing to examine the appellant Iqbal Singh or his father Mahindar Singh. Both these witnesses could have been produced at a much earlier stage and the plaintiffs were given ample opportunity for the purpose. But as they failed to avail themselves of the opportunity, I see no reason for remanding the case for recording the evidence of these two persons and for redecision as requested by the learned counsel for the appellants.

Coming now to the merits of the various alienations in dispute, it may be stated at

1. 5000-0-0	Credited by the vendee in his account books and utilized by the vendor for his requirements subsequently as follows :
	(a) Purchase of ornaments	2118-13-0
	(b) Cloth	170- 3-3
	(c) Building purposes	360-11-6
	(d) Land	310- 0-0
	(e) Cash	2959-11-9
					Total	2040- 4-3
						5000- 0-0

2. 13,361-5-6 Paid to the vendee in payment of the balance due to him on a prior account beginning from the year 1912 to the date of the sale.
3. 1638-10-6 Paid in cash before the Registrar.
4. 500- 0-0 Paid in advance.

The learned Judge of the trial Court has himself held that no necessity was proved for items 3 and 4. As regards item 1, he found that necessity was proved for Rs. 2959-11-9 out of the first item of Rs. 5000, but that no necessity was proved for the balance of Rs. 2040-4-3 out of it which was paid in cash to the vendor. As regards the second item, he held that the debts which were discharged thereby were spread over a long period, namely from 1912 to 1921 and that it included a sum of Rs. 7674-15-3 by way of interest. The balance of Rs. 5686-6-3 spread over a period of 9 years only meant a debt of Rs. 600 per annum, which the learned Judge considered was not unreasonable. He was of opinion the outset that it was admitted that the appellants' father Mahindar Singh and his brother Gajindar Singh owned about 400 bighas of land in the Amritsar and Hoshiarpur Districts. The property was at first under the Court of Wards but was released about the year 1908 when Mahindar Singh attained majority. The property was then apparently unencumbered. There is no definite evidence on the record to show what the income of the property was at the time, but witnesses have variously estimated the income from Rs. 8000 to 18,000. Zahur-ud-Din, D. W. 7, who was admittedly a Mukhtar of Sardar Mahindar Singh for some time estimated the income of Sardar Mahindar Singh and Gajindar Singh at about Rs. 8000 per year, although he said that the income dwindled down to Rs. 6000 per year after 1923. It may therefore safely be taken that the alienors had ample income for their ordinary requirements. The first alienation in dispute was effected in the year 1921 for a sum of Rs. 20,500 and the various items forming the consideration were as follows :

further that there was no reliable evidence on the record to prove that the vendors were men of immoral character or extravagant, and he therefore held that this item of Rs. 13,361-5-6 being in discharge of just and antecedent debts, constituted valid necessity for the sale of ancestral land. According to the finding of the learned Judge, no necessity was proved for Rs. 4178-14-9, but this was only about one-fifth of the consideration and consequently the learned Judge thought that the absence of proof of necessity for this small portion out of the consideration did not justify the sale being set aside.

The learned counsel for the appellants has contended that the learned Judge of the trial Court was clearly wrong in holding that any necessity was proved for the first item of Rs. 5000, as it was simply credited to the vendor for being used in the future. This contention appears to be correct because even a male proprietor is not entitled to encumber ancestral property for his future requirements; the necessity to support an alienation of ancestral property must exist at the time of the alienation (146 P R 1919;¹ 75 I C 680²). It will thus appear that there is no proof of necessity at all for items 1, 3 and 4 aggregating to Rs. 7138-10-6, i.e. a little over one-third of the consideration. The main question for consideration in respect of this sale therefore is whether payment of the item of Rs. 13,361-5-6 can be said to be valid necessity. The learned counsel for the appellants have urged that the so-called antecedent debts were incurred not during the period of 9 years, as held by the trial Court, but mostly during a period of two years preceding this sale, and that the debts were incurred without any apparent necessity and in such rapid succession that they must be held to be outside the category of 'just debts' as defined in the Full Bench ruling reported in 65 P R 1900.³ The definition of 'just debt' as given in that ruling is to the following effect :

Just debt means a debt which is actually due and which is not immoral, illegal or opposed to public policy. It also means a debt not contracted as an act of reckless extravagance or of wanton waste or with the intention of destroying the interests of the reversioners. It need not be one incurred for a necessary purpose but if a non-necessary debt is unreasonably large compared to the means and station in life of the proprietor, it cannot come under the definition of a just debt. Similarly if a number of comparatively small loans for non-necessary purposes are contracted within an unreasonably short period, they collectively may amount to extravagance judged by the tests previously mentioned, and may be excluded from the category of just debts. . . . What is unreasonable or extravagant must depend upon the circumstances of each particular case, and must be decided by the Court on fair and rational grounds.

We have therefore to consider whether the debts included in item 2 would fall within the description of 'just debts' as given above. The learned Judge of the trial Court has given in a convenient tabular form the nature of these debts incurred from year to year from 1912 to 1921: vide pp. 107-108, Vol. I of the printed record. It will appear from this statement that from the years 1912 to 1919, although large amounts were being borrowed, large repayments were also being made as a rule, and that in several years the amounts paid exceeded the amounts borrowed. From the account at p. 100 of Vol. II of the printed record, it would appear that a balance of Rs. 7000 was struck by Mahindar Singh in favour of the vendee on 13th February 1918, but a payment of Rs. 7000 was made shortly afterwards, i. e. on 25th May 1918, with the result that the balance due on that date was only about Rs. 3000. In 1919, although a sum of Rs. 11,821-15-9 was borrowed, the repayments amounted to Rs. 14,225. In 1920 however, the repayments amounted to Rs. 581-10-6 only as against a loan of Rs. 5050 taken during the year; and in 1921 again, the repayments amounted to only Rs. 3700 as against a loan of Rs. 8614-1-6. It will thus appear that it was only during the years 1920 to 1921 that the repayments fell far short of the amount borrowed. But the general nature of the dealings during the period was more or less the same as during the preceding years. Mahindar Singh had been drawing upon the firm as though they were his bankers, from time to time, and according to his requirements and also depositing sums with them according to his convenience. The creditor had no reason to suppose at the time that Mahindar Singh was living beyond his means or was incurring debts in a reckless manner without being able to pay. It must be remembered that Mahindar Singh occupied a good position in life. He was, it appears, educated at the Chiefs' College at Lahore. He owned a large estate and his income according to plaintiffs' own case was Rs. 10,000 or more. He was a friend of the Raja of Suket and also a Wazir in that State from 1910 to 1918. He therefore naturally lived in a style befitting his position in life. The mere fact that his income was large would not necessarily place him beyond the necessity of borrowing money. For it is common knowledge that agriculturists are often in need of ready cash before they are able to dispose of the produce of their land at a suitable price.

The plaintiffs had alleged in their plaint that Mahindar Singh was a drunkard and a profligate, but there is not much evidence on the record to support the allegation. Not only have the defendants' witnesses given him a good character, but one of the plaintiffs' own witnesses Bansi Ram patwari (who is apparently disinterested) deposes that he bears a good character. Some of the plaintiffs' witnesses have deposed that Sardar Mahindar Singh is given to drinking, but there is no evidence to show that he has been spending large sums of money on liquor. One Hujro, a kanjar from Lahore deposed that Mahindar Singh used to visit his niece, a prostitute at Lahore, during a period of about four years prior to the death of the Raja of Suket — which appears to have taken place about the year 1918. This witness however admits Mahindar Singh ceased to have anything to do with this prostitute after the death of the Raja. Mahindar Singh is a married man with four children and evidence like this coming from a witness of the type of Hujro must be taken with great caution; but taking it for what it may be worth, it does not help the appellants, as their learned counsel has confined his attack to the debts incurred by Sardar Mahindar Singh during a period of two years prior to the first sale. That sale took place on 29th November 1921, and consequently the debts incurred during the preceding period of two years cannot be said to have any connexion with Mahindar Singh's alleged visits to the prostitute prior to 1918.

The learned counsel for the appellants rightly did not place much reliance on the charge of immorality brought by the plaintiffs against their father, but he strenuously contended that in view of the nature and frequency of the debts incurred by Sardar Mahindar Singh during 1919-1921, these should be held to be outside the category of 'just debts' as defined in 65 P R 1900.³ As regards this point, I have already pointed out that the general nature of the account between the parties to this sale during 1919-1921 was more or less the same as that during the preceding seven or eight years. The learned counsel has taken us through the account and urged that several of the items for costly clothes and ornaments show reckless extravagance; but as already pointed out Mahindar Singh was a big zamindar with a large income and had to live in a style suited to his social status. The amounts borrowed for ornaments were moreover not altogether lost, for the ornaments remained with the family. It was urged that it was unnecessary for Mahindar Singh to spend on building a bungalow at Amritsar. But in view of his position, I do not think this can be considered to be a very unreasonable expenditure. At any rate, it cannot, I think, be held to amount to 'reckless extravagance' or 'wanton waste.' Taking the account as a whole, I am not prepared to hold in the circumstances of this case that the amounts borrowed during 1919-1921 were singly or collectively so out of proportion to the status, means and requirements of Sardar Mahindar Singh as to justify these debts being held to be outside the category of 'just debts'. I may note here that it was alleged on behalf of the plaintiffs that Mahindar Singh had made other alienations and wasted practically the whole of his property; but no evidence in the shape of mutations, sale-deeds, etc. were produced in support of the allegation, as might easily be done if the allegation were true. In the circumstances, mere oral statements of witnesses cannot be accepted on this point. The probability is that the alienations, if any, took place after the period covered by the present suit.

There is however force in the contention of the learned counsel for the appellants that the debts which were incurred after 10th September 1921, when the agreement relating to the first sale was entered into (vide Ex. D-1) and which were later on included in the consideration for that sale, cannot be properly held to be 'antecedent debts'. It appears from the account at pp. 178-179, Vol. 2 of the printed record that the following items were borrowed after the date of the agreement:

- (1) 28-9-1921 Rs. 5000-0-0 Purpose not given.
- (2) 29-10-1921 Rs. 510-0-0 For payment to Ibrahim.
- (3) 15-11-1921 Rs. 1430-1-0 For certain ornaments.
- (4) 27-11-1921 Rs. 100-0-0 Purpose not given.
- (5) 28-11-1921 Rs. 205-0-0 On account of 'paper'.

The balance due to the creditor on 10th September 1921, when the agreement of sale was entered into was apparently about Rs. 4747-4-0 (see account at p. 108, Vol. 2); but by the date of the sale, with the items borrowed in the intervening period and interest amounting to about Rs. 1300, the balance swelled to Rs. 13,361-5-6 and this was the sum included as an 'antecedent' debt in the sale transaction. It has been pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 46 All 95,⁴ that an 'antecedent debt' means a debt which is not only antecedent in time, but also antecedent in fact, i. e. it must be truly independent of the transaction impeached. In other words, the two transactions must be dissociated in time as well as fact. Applying this test, the debts incurred after the agreement of sale cannot, I think, properly be held to be independent of the sale transaction. It is significant that no purpose is given for the largest item of Rs. 5000 borrowed after the 10th September as well as for another item of Rs. 100. As regards the item of Rs. 510, it is not stated who Ibrahim was and why Rs. 510 were to be paid to him. The item of Rs. 1430-1-0 was taken only a fortnight before the sale, for ornaments. The item of Rs. 205 is said to have been for 'paper.' This was probably for the stamp required for the sale deed and may therefore be allowed. But considering the nature of the other items, there seems little doubt that they were merely intended to swell the consideration for the sale and nothing more. In the circumstances, these items cannot, in my opinion, be treated as an 'antecedent debt,' but must be placed on the same footing as though they formed part of the actual consideration for the sale. So treated, it seems to me that all of them excepting No. 5 must be held to be without necessity. In the case of items Nos. (1) and (4), there is no mention of any necessity at all as pointed out above, while the necessity mentioned in the case of item (2) is unintelligible. As regards item No. 3, I do not think purchase of ornaments can be considered to be a valid necessity for the sale of 'ancestral' land. It was urged that jewellery worth Rs. 7000 had been stolen from Sardar Mahindar Singh's bungalow prior to the sale, and it had to be replaced. But this could not be considered to be a matter of urgency, especially in view of the fact that during the period from 1912 to 1919 alone, Sardar Mahindar Singh had purchased jewellery worth over Rs. 15,000. This purchase could therefore be easily postponed till funds were available without encumbering ancestral land. The vendor himself probably realized this, for although there is reference to the 'necessity' of replacing ornaments in the agreement of sale Ex. D.1, this 'necessity' was not mentioned in the sale deed itself. I am therefore of the opinion, that the items referred to above, viz. Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4, amounting to Rs. 7040-1-0, must be held to be without necessity. As a result of the above findings it would appear that out of the consideration of Rs. 20,500 no necessity has been established for the following items, viz.:

- (1) Rs. 500- 0-0 Earnest money
- (2) Rs. 5000. 0-0 Left in deposit with the vendee.
- (3) Rs. 1638-10-6 Paid before the Sub-Registrar.
- (4) Rs. 7040- 1-0 Out of the item of Rs. 13,361-5-6—due to the vendee on book account.

Rs. 14,178-11-6. Total

In other words, no necessity has been proved for about two-thirds of the consideration. Consequently, it must be held that the sale of the land was clearly unnecessary; for, the balance of about Rs. 6000 which has been proved to be for necessity could have been easily raised by a mortgage of the portion of this or some other property. This finding also disposes of the contention of the learned counsel for the vendee respondents that the sale was an act of good management and should be upheld as such. It cannot obviously be considered to be an act of good management to sell property worth Rs. 20,500 when there is necessity for a loan of about Rs. 6000 only. The learned counsel for the appellant referred in this connexion to a recent decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council reported in A I R 1938 P C 77,⁵ but the facts of that case were entirely different and have no bearing on the circumstances of this case.

I shall now proceed to discuss certain other grounds on which the learned counsel for the respondents attempted to support the decision of the trial Court. It was urged that the property which was sold by the deed dated 29th November 1921 is 'house-property' situated in Amritsar City and therefore the vendor had a free power of disposal over it. It appears that this plea was raised in para. 6 of the vendee's written statement, but was not put in issue and it does not appear to have been pressed or even referred to at any stage of the trial. The learned counsel for the respondents urged that it was the duty of the Court to put the matter in issue; but the parties were represented by counsel, and when the point was never pressed subsequently, it is reasonable to infer that it was abandoned. There seems to be also no force in it on merits. The mere fact that part of the property sold was house property situated within the city limits of Amritsar would not be sufficient to take it out of the customary restrictions on sale of 'ancestral' property. The learned counsel for the respondent referred to 55 P R 1908,⁶ A I R 1938 Lah 107⁷ and 15 Lah 236⁸ in support of his contention, but these rulings do not seem to assist him. The first two were cases in which the vendors, though originally members of agricultural tribes, had altogether drifted away from agriculture, taken to other avocations and settled in towns and were therefore found to be not governed by agricultural custom. This is not the case here. Mahindar Singh is not only a member of a well-known agricultural tribe (Jat), but his main source of livelihood has been agriculture. In 15 Lah 236⁸ there are some remarks which support to some extent the contention of the learned counsel for the respondent; but the remarks are in the nature of obiter dicta, as it was also found in that case that the alienation in dispute was made for a necessary purpose and was therefore valid. In the present instance, the vendor Mahinder Singh is admittedly governed by custom with regard to alienation of the other ancestral property. It would therefore be very anomalous indeed if the mere inclusion of land within the limits of a town or the erection of a building thereon were sufficient to take it out of the scope of the restrictions imposed by custom on alienation of ancestral property. In 15 Lah 715,⁹ it was pointed out by the same learned Judge who decided 15 Lah 236,⁸ that one and the same person cannot be subject to different rules as regards alienation of ancestral property varying with the locality where the property is situated: (see p. 720 bottom).

It was next urged that 2 kanals 18

marlas out of the property sold (viz. Khasra No. 3872) at any rate is non-ancestral, as the same was purchased by Mahindar Singh himself (vide Ex. D.49 at p. 63, Vol. 2 of the printed record). This contention seems to be correct and the point was apparently not even disputed in arguments in the Court below. The plaintiffs are therefore not entitled to contest the alienation of this portion of the land sold. The price of this land was only Rs. 750, and the exclusion of this small area will not affect the question of the validity of the sale in this case.

The next point urged by the learned counsel for the respondents was that the suit was collusive and should therefore be thrown out on this ground alone. It was pointed out in this connexion that the plaintiffs were living with the vendor Mahinder Singh, and attention was also invited particularly to the statement of Kashi Ram, agent of Mahindar Singh, who deposed that the suit was collusive and Mahindar Singh was financing the litigation. Reliance was placed in this connexion on 5 Lah 389¹⁰ and some other rulings in which the view taken therein was followed. The evidence of Kashi Ram is not very satisfactory, and in the absence of any clear documentary evidence such as was available in 5 Lah 389,¹⁰ I do not think it would be safe to accept Kashi Ram's statement as conclusive on the point. He has apparently taken some land on mortgage or otherwise from Mahindar Singh and he is probably interested in supporting the position taken up by the vendees in this case. As regards plaintiffs residing with Mahindar Singh, this is natural as they are his sons. In 100 I C 911¹¹ and 98 I C 865¹² it was held that the mere fact that plaintiffs, being the sons of the vendor, were living with him was not sufficient to justify the suit being dismissed as collusive. Attention was next invited to the statement of the plaintiffs' pleader dated 15th January 1936 (see p. 81, Vol. 1 of the printed record), in which he referred to Mahindar Singh as one of his 'clients'. This may be a mere slip, but even if it is taken to be an indication of Mahindar Singh's helping the plaintiffs in this litigation, I doubt if that could be considered to be a sufficient ground for non-suiting the plaintiffs in a case of this kind on the ground of 'collusion'. 'Collusion' in judicial proceedings has been defined as 'a secret agreement between two persons that the one should institute a suit against the other in order to obtain the decision of a judicial tribunal for a sinister purpose' (see Wharton's Law Lexicon). In the first place, the vendor is merely a pro forma defendant in cases of this kind and no question of collusion with the defendant against whom relief is claimed really arises as it does, e. g. in suits for divorce, etc. Again, when a suit of the present type is instituted on behalf of a minor, as it frequently is, there cannot obviously be any collusion on the part of the plaintiff in the above sense, as a minor is legally incapable of entering into any agreement. Even when the plaintiff is a major, the above definition would not seem to apply, as the object of the declaratory decree is to protect the interests of the plaintiff and the other reversioners, and not those of the vendor, and this purpose cannot be considered to be 'sinister'. A declaratory decree in a case of this type has effect only after the death of the vendor and cannot therefore benefit the vendor himself. It is therefore difficult to see how a case of this type can be held to be 'collusive' in the above sense. In any case, I consider that it is not clearly established that the present suit is being conducted by Mahindar Singh himself at his own expense and that the plaintiffs are mere 'figure-heads'. It may be pointed out in this connexion that Iqbal Singh, the major plaintiff, who is suing on behalf of himself and his minor brothers, is employed in the army in an Indian State and has presumably resources of his own.

Lastly, it was contended by the learned counsel for the appellants that the suit was instituted nearly 12 years after the sale, and in view of the lapse of time strict proof of necessity should not be insisted on. In the present case, however, the suit was filed soon after one of the plaintiffs came of age and it cannot be said that the plaintiffs who were minors at the time of the sale are to blame in any way for the delay. Secondly, it does not appear that the respondents have been really prejudiced in any way. The question of necessity for the sale has been decided above, mostly on the basis of the recitals in the sale deed and in the accounts produced by the respondent-vendees themselves. These recitals have been generally accepted and it is only where necessity is not mentioned at all, or where the necessity mentioned cannot be held to be valid according to law, that items have been disallowed. It is significant that, while necessity is given in the case of certain items in the sale deed or in the accounts, it is not given at all in the case of others. It may, therefore, fairly be presumed that no inquiry as to necessity was made in the case of these items for which no necessity was specified. The law requiring an alienee to prove necessity for alienation of ancestral property is well-known in this province and if an alienee fails to take the obvious precaution of ascertaining necessity for an alienation of ancestral property and getting it duly recorded at the proper place and time, he must take the consequences.

I now come to the next two sales, which were both effected on the same date, viz. 17th May 1923 by Mahindar Singh and his brother Gajinder Singh. Each of these sales comprised an area of about 25 kanals of nahri land in Sultanwind near Amritsar and the consideration was more or less the same—the consideration for one sale (in favour of Ganda Singh and Prem Singh) being R. 8820 and for the other (in favour of Jhanda Singh, etc.) being Rs. 8130. A scrutiny of the debts included in these sale transactions shows that in the former sale only the debts of Mahindar Singh were included, while in the latter those of his brother Gajinder Singh alone were included. Strictly speaking, each brother could only alienate his own share for his own debts. But the brothers seem to have treated the transactions as though the land sold in discharge of the debts of Mahindar Singh belonged to him and that sold in discharge of the debts of Gajinder Singh belonged to him. The land had to be sold jointly as it apparently stood in the name of the two brothers, but in view of the facts stated above, it would be only equitable to treat the two sales as separate transactions on behalf of the two brothers, as though the land had been partitioned between them by a mutual agreement and then sold.

I shall first take the sale for Rs. 8820 in favour of Prem Singh and Ganda Singh which covered the debts of Mahindar Singh. The items included in this sale were as follows :

- (1) Rs. 500 Earnest money.
- (2) Rs. 1020 Paid before the Sub-Registrar for household expenses.
- (3) Rs. 1500 Paid to Kashi Ram in discharge of a pronote in his favour.
- (4) Rs. 3000 Paid to the firm Ram Narain Jai Gopal on account of a book debt.
- (5) Rs. 2000 Paid to Dilbagh Rai on account of a book debt.
- (6) Rs. 800 Paid to Dwarka Das on account of a book debt.

No necessity was proved for item 1, and the necessity mentioned for item 2, viz. 'household expenses' is vague and has to be taken with caution, when, as in the present instance, the transaction discloses extravagance. The remaining debts were paid to other creditors. According to the rule laid down in 65 P R 1900,³ normally it is sufficient for the alienee to prove that the antecedent debts discharged were due and it is unnecessary for him to show that the debts were incurred for 'necessity.' The learned counsel for the appellant has however urged that these debts were incurred by Mahindar Singh in a spirit of reckless extravagance, that the alienees must have been aware of this fact and therefore these debts should not be treated as 'just antecedent debts.'

In my opinion there is force in the above contention as regards this sale. I have treated the first sale on a different footing, for Mahindar Singh had dealings for many years with the firm Ram Narain Jai Gopal, and had been treating them practically as his bankers and his 'credits' usually equalled and at times even exceeded the 'debits' till a short time before that sale. The sale of 1921 was moreover admittedly the first alienation of property effected by Mahindar Singh. Till then, as Mahindar Singh was making large repayments, the alienee had no reason to think that he was living beyond his means. The situation was however different by the time the second sale was effected. This second sale was effected within a year and a half only after the first sale. The first sale was for a large sum of Rs. 20,500 and even leaving out of account the antecedent debt of about Rs. 13,000 due to the vendee, the vendor had secured thereby an extra sum of about Rs. 7000 for which there was no actual necessity. Mahindar Singh enjoyed a large income from his land and, in view of this income and the cash of Rs. 7000 obtained by the first sale, there should have been no necessity at all for him to borrow any money during the period between the first and the second sale. The vendees of the second sale were residents of Amritsar, where Mahindar Singh frequently resided and he was known to them. They could not therefore have been unaware of the first sale. There were besides, other facts which should have at once aroused their suspicion. For example, one of the debts discharged by the second sale was one for Rs. 1500 due to Kashi Ram on account of a pronote dated 4th April 1923. Now Kashi Ram was a servant in the employ of Mahindar Singh and this debt should have at once aroused the suspicion of the vendees; for there could hardly be any necessity for a man in the position of Mahindar Singh to go to the length of borrowing Rs. 1500 from one of his own servants for the betrothal of his own son as recited in the pronote. The pronote was moreover said to have been executed only about a month and a half before the sale. This item suggests that the vendees were not acting in good faith. It seems very likely that this debt was purely fictitious and the vendees deliberately required Mahindar Singh to give it the colour of an antecedent debt due to a third person in order to protect themselves.

The other items of debts included in the sale should also have put the vendees on their guard. For, the biggest item of Rs. 3000 was a debt due to the firm Ram Narain Jai Gopal, the vendee of the first sale. A scrutiny of the account of this firm, on the basis of which the above amount was claimed, would have at once shown that it included several items, pointing unmistakably to extravagance. For example, during this short period of about eighteen months covered by the accounts, the following amounts were spent on ornaments :

12-1-1922	215	0	0	See pp. 180-188 Vol. 2 of the printed record.
16-4-1923	2277	7	9
17-4-1923	341	1	0
18-4-1923	80	14	0
23-4-1923	28	4	0

Some of the ornaments are said to have been required for the 'shagan' (betrothal) of one of the sons of Mahindar Singh; but even making allowance for this fact, the amount borrowed during this short period for ornaments was clearly excessive. The rapidity with which the debts were taken in April just before the sale is also very suspicious and suggests that these were deliberately borrowed in advance, with a view to give them the colour of antecedent debts. The next item included in the sale is a sum of Rs. 2000 due to Dilbagh Rai. The account produced by Dilbagh Rai began with an item of Rs. 4000 borrowed on 17th May 1917 for the marriage of Bibi Gurbachan Kaur, a niece of Mahindar Singh. It does not appear why Mahindar Singh should have borrowed Rs. 4000 for the marriage of a niece. Next we have two items of Rs. 2000 each borrowed on 5th August 1920 and 18th October 1922 only a few months before the sale. Lastly there is the item of Rs. 800 said to have been paid to Dwarka Das. The account of this firm has been produced, but has not been even properly proved. Tara Chand (D. W. 10) who produced the account admitted that he had no personal knowledge of these accounts and consequently even the existence of this debt cannot be said to be proved. As a result of the above findings, it seems to me that the debts included in this sale cannot be held to constitute valid necessity. One of the debts is not even proved. As regards the others, the circumstances show that the promissory note of Rs. 1500 in favour of Kashi Ram was probably fictitious and was merely a device to give this part of the consideration colour of an antecedent debt. The accounts relating to the other two debts were of such a nature that the vendees could not have failed to discover — if they had examined them carefully and if they were acting in good faith — that Mahindar Singh was incurring debts in a recklessly extravagant manner. As held in 65 P R 1900³ even an alienee who is an outsider will not be protected, if he is aware of the true nature of the debts discharged by the alienation and acts in bad faith. In view of all the facts stated above, I hold that the debts discharged by this sale were not 'just' debts and the vendees do not appear to have acted in good faith in discharging them. I would accordingly grant the plaintiffs the decree prayed for in respect of this sale. (His Lordship then considered the third sale and lastly the mortgage and after discussing the various items included therein proceeded further.) As a result of the above findings, I would accept the appeal in part and grant a declaration to the plaintiffs (i) that the sale dated 29th November 1921 in favour of the firm Ram Narain Jai Gopal (excluding khasra No. 3872) shall not affect their reversionary rights, but that they will not be entitled to obtain possession of the rest of the property included in this sale, without payment of a sum of Rupees 6321-4-6 which has been proved to be for valid necessity, and (ii) that the sale dated 17th May 1923, in favour of Prem Singh and Ganda Singh shall also not affect their reversionary rights. In other respects I would dismiss the appeal. In view of all the circumstances, I would grant the plaintiffs full costs in respect of the sale in favour of Prem Singh and Ganda Singh as against these defendants, and 2/3rd costs against defendants 4-A and 4-B in respect of the first sale dated 29th November 1921. I would further order the plaintiffs to pay costs of defendants Santa Singh, Kesar Singh, Jhanda Singh and Kishan Singh in respect of the sale in their favour, and to defendants 4-A and 4-B in respect of the mortgage dated 29th May 1926.

Letters Patent Appeal No. 47 of 1938, Decided on 24th March 1938, against order of Monroe J., in Civil Original Case No. 37 of 1935, Decided on 17th February 1938.

(a) Companies Act (1913), S. 235—Application under S. 235 is in nature of plaint and proceedings under S. 235 are judicial proceedings—Provisions of Civil Procedure Code are however inapplicable to petition under S. 235 (Per Monroe J.)

An application under S. 235, Companies Act is in the nature of a plaint and the proceedings under S. 235 are judicial proceedings; but the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure are inapplicable to a petition under S. 235, because express provisions for its contents and the formalities connected with it are provided for by the Companies Act and the rules made thereunder: 17 All 238, Dissent; [P 669 O 2] Case law discussed.

(b) Civil P. C. (1908)—Applicability of provisions of Code (Per Monroe J.)

A provision of the Code of Civil Procedure cannot be made applicable to proceedings under an Act if that provision is inconsistent with the procedure prescribed by the Act. [P 663 C 1]

(c) Companies Act (1913), S. 235—Petition by liquidator under S. 235 to High Court—Petition is not bad because liquidator does not state specific amount claimed—Liquidator must however bring all facts on which claim is based to notice of Court (Per Monroe J.).

A liquidator presenting a petition under S. 235 to the High Court is not required by the rules framed under S. 235 to state a specific amount claimed from the person or persons against whom the petition is made and his application cannot be considered bad in law because he omits to do so. The liquidator must bring the facts on which his claim is based to the notice of the Court and the amount of compensation is to be assessed not by the liquidator but by the Court after a consideration of the whole circumstances: Case law discussed. [P 664 C 2; P 665 C 1]

(d) Companies Act (1913), S. 235—Petition under S. 235 to High Court—Name of certain persons added subsequently but documents relating to them filed later on—Date of application against these persons is date on which documents are filed (Per Monroe J.).

Where in a petition under S. 235 to the High Court, the names of certain persons are added subsequently but documents relating to them which taken together fulfil the requirements of the rule framed under S. 235 are not filed at that time but later, the date of the application against the added defendants is the date on which the documents are filed. [P 665 C 1]

(e) Companies Act (1913), Ss. 202, 235—Petition under S. 235 presented to High Court against certain persons—High Court holding petition maintainable—Order of High Court is appealable under S. 202 (Per Young C. J. and Tek Chand J.).

Section 202 is very wide in its terms and covers appeals against any order in the matter of the winding up of a company, provided such order finally decides a dispute between the parties or deprives the appellant of a substantial and important right and is not a mere formal and interlocutory order. The last part of S. 202 which lays down that 'appeal will be heard in the same manner' etc., merely regulates the procedure to be followed in the presentation and hearing of such appeals. [P 668 C 1]

Where a petition under S. 235 is presented to the High Court against certain persons and the High Court passes an order holding the application to be maintainable, its order is not of a merely formal or ministerial character but finally decides points between the parties relating to substantial and important rights. Such an order is appealable under S. 202 and a party aggrieved by the order is entitled to appeal to a Division Bench of the High Court under Cl. 10 of the Letters Patent: A I R 1929 Lah 707, Foll.; A I R 1915 Lah 109; A I R 1917 Lah 391; A I R 1926 Lah 246 and 30 Mad 22, Rel. on; A I R 1916 All 341, Disting. [P 669 C 2]

(f) Companies Act (1913), S. 235—Petition under S. 235 presented to High Court—Particulars on which claim is based or sums sought to be recovered not mentioned—Petition not accompanied by affidavit—Proceedings are not rendered defective by reason of these defects (Per Young C. J. and Tek Chand J.).

It is not necessary in a petition presented to the High Court under S. 235 to fully and adequately set out the particulars on which the claim is based. Neither S. 235 nor the rules framed thereunder require that the sum claimed by the liquidator from a director or officer of the company should be specifically stated in the petition. So also the rules framed under S. 235 do not require that an affidavit supporting the facts mentioned in the petition should be filed along with the petition or that if it is not filed, it cannot be received at a later stage. Where therefore a petition under S. 235 does not state the sum sought to be recovered from the persons against whom the petition is presented and is not supported by affidavit, the absence of these do not render the proceedings defective. [P 669 C 2; P 670 C 1]

(g) Companies Act (1913), S. 235—Proceedings under S. 235 started in High Court against certain persons—Matters alleged against some of them entirely different from those alleged against others—Claims against all cannot be tried jointly on principles underlying O. 2, R. 6, Civil P. C. (Per Young C. J. and Tek Chand J.)

Where in the proceedings under S. 235, Companies Act, instituted in the High Court against certain persons, the matters alleged against some of such persons are entirely different from those which are subject matter of the investigation against others, the claims against all cannot be tried jointly on principles underlying O. 2, R. 6, Civil P. C., there being no real common unity between them. [P 671 C 1]

Respondent.

CIVIL ORIGINAL CASE NO. 37 OF 1935.

MONROE J.—In this application instituted by the Official Liquidator of the Peoples Bank of Northern India, Ltd. (in Liquidation) under S. 235, Companies Act, three preliminary issues have been settled and discussed:

1. Is the petition under S. 235, Companies Act, in the nature of a plaint and must it be in accordance with the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure?
2. Do the petitions which have been filed, collectively or individually, constitute a valid plaint or statement of claim?
3. Is one joint trial of the claims against all the respondents joined in the petition permissible in law, the allegations against each of them being distinct and based on separate acts of misfeasance?

It is necessary, in the first place, to examine the documents which have been filed. On 1st July 1935, a document entitled "application under S. 235, Companies Act," was presented to the Court, and leave to file this application was given. This is the application now before the Court. It is the basis of the whole proceedings. In this application, the Official Liquidator is named as applicant and thirty-five persons are named as defendants. Of these defendants, thirty-one had been Directors of the Peoples Bank of Northern India, Limited, (which I shall hereafter call the Bank), one had been Manager of the Bank, one Investment Officer and two were firms of auditors, who had been auditors of the Bank. At a later stage I shall discuss this document in greater detail: it is sufficient now to state that it alleges against certain of the directors fraud and negligence in their duty to the Bank, against the remaining directors negligence in their duty to the Bank, against the officers breach of trust and collusion with the directors and against the auditors negligence in the performance of their duties and collusion with the directors. There is annexed to the application a schedule (Sch. B) showing the amount of the indebtedness of the directors and of the firms and companies in which they were interested after 31st December 1934. Appended to the application is a note signed by the Official Liquidator in which it is stated that he has been unable to make a full investigation by reason of want of time; he was appointed on 22nd May 1935, and he seeks leave to furnish further better particulars after further investigation; he further stated that his application was made without a complete investigation in order to avoid a plea of limitation. I may here say that, in my opinion, this note can have no effect on the legal aspects of the case: the Official Liquidator is entitled to expedite the initiation of proceedings for the purpose of avoiding a plea of limitation. If he fails to do so, owing to circumstances over which he has no control, it is his misfortune, but he can only prevent time from running against him by instituting proper proceedings before the expiry of the period of limitation.

On 9th October 1935, a document was presented to the Court by the Official Liquidator which was entitled "Application under O. 6, R. 17 and S. 151, Civil P. C." praying that certain amendments be allowed to be made in Sch. B. The object was to supply the omissions and to make the figures correct to 1st July 1935. On 9th October also the application was allowed to stand until particulars had been prepared. On 16th July 1936, a document entitled "Application on behalf of the Official Liquidator under O. 1, R. 10, Civil P. C." was presented to the Court, praying that the names of the defendants who had died should be struck out, that the names of certain additional persons should be added as defendants and for authority to present further and better particulars during the vacation. On 3rd September a further document was presented: it set out a series of particulars being filed in pursuance of the order of 16th July 1936 and prayed that notices under S. 235, Companies Act might issue for 2nd October 1936: this application was adjourned from time to time and a further document was presented on 22nd April 1937 asking for amendments in the particulars, for the striking out of the names of certain defendants and for the issue of notice of the petition as amended on the thirty-nine persons named, who are now the respondents before the Court. Notice was issued accordingly and copies of the application of 1st July 1935 with the amended particulars were served on the respondents. I do not think that it is necessary to examine the various sets of particulars in detail; they have not been discussed in detail in the arguments, but there are one or two points which I must mention. So far as the respondents' names in the application of 1st July are concerned, they contain further particulars of the statements in the application: it may be that they also contain in certain cases new charges, as for example, in the case of Sir Abdul Hamid in relation to advances made to contractors of Kapurthala State on State guarantee. It was argued that this charge was not covered by the statements in the original application. It is not necessary now to examine this question; it is sufficient to distinguish charges made by the original application and charges not included in it but contained only in the particulars. I may note that the original application, except in the striking out or the adding of names of respondents has not been formally amended.

Issue 1—Section 235 (1), Companies Act requires as a condition for its operation that it should appear that the respondent, being a past or present director or officer of the company, has misapplied or retained or become liable or accountable for any money of the company or been guilty of any misfeasance or breach of trust in relation to the company. The condition being fulfilled, there must be an application by the liquidator or any creditor or contributory; the Court may then examine into the conduct of the respondent. Relief is by an order to restore or repay the money or property, or to contribute such sum to the assets of the company by way of compensation in respect of the misfeasance or breach of trust as the Court thinks fit. Some light is thrown on the nature of the application to be made by the liquidator by sub-s. (3), "The Indian Limitation Act, 1908, shall apply to an application under this Section as if such application was a suit." The Section relates to procedure only: it provides an alternative method for enforcing the liabilities which might have been enforced by a suit. The method of procedure has been described as summary, but an examination of some of the cases which have been tried under the corresponding Section of the various English Acts shows that frequently misfeasance proceedings follow the normal course of an action for fraud or breach of trust and the application of the word "summary" indicates little but that the proceedings in England are instituted by summons and not by suit or petition—a detail of practice. The essential distinction is that the Court has a discretion in assessing the amount of the compensation and is not in every case, as a Court hearing a suit would be, to give a decree for the whole loss suffered. The Section provides a convenient method by which in the course of winding up a company the same Court deals with all the internal affairs of the Company.

Though a procedure Section, the Section does not go into details of procedure, which must be sought for elsewhere. The contention for the respondents is that the Civil Procedure Code applies by virtue of the provisions of S. 141. The opposing contention is that S. 141 does not apply the provisions of the Code to an application such as this and that the application is not a plaint and is not required to be in any particular form. S. 141 is as follows:

The procedure provided in this Code in regard to suits shall be followed, as far as it can be made applicable, in all proceedings in any Court of civil jurisdiction.

A proceeding in a misfeasance application is a proceeding in a Court of civil jurisdiction and the provisions of the Code have been applied to proceedings under the Companies Acts. In 27 Bom 415¹ it was held that a petition under the Companies

Memorandum of Association Act, 1895, is a proceeding within the Section, and in 1 Lah 187² to an application to set aside an ex parte payment order made under the Companies Act of 1886, the provisions of O. 9, R. 13 were applied by virtue of this Section. That the Section applies to proceedings under the Companies Act never appears to have been doubted. Only one case involving the construction of the Section has gone as far as the Privy Council. In 22 I A 44³ the question at issue was, whether S. 647 of the old Code (equivalent to S. 141) made applicable to execution proceedings the procedure laid down in regard to suits: the only passage in the judgment of their Lordships which throws any light on the question now raised is as follows:

Their Lordships think that the proceedings spoken of in S. 647 include original matters in the nature of suits such as proceedings in probate, guardianship and so forth and do not include execution.

Their Lordships' view disposes, I think, of one of Mr. Bannerji's arguments: that the application under S. 235 is not a suit and therefore no plaint is required. The question is not whether the proceeding is a suit but whether it is an original matter in the nature of a suit. The only difficulty which presents itself in applying their Lordships' dictum is in the use of the word 'original'. An application under Sec. 235 is not in one sense an original matter: it is a matter arising in the course of the winding up and the document which originates the winding up proceedings is the petition. This aspect of the question was not before their Lordships. I do not think that it can be inferred from the use of the word 'original' that, for example, matters in the nature of a suit arising in winding up proceedings are to be excluded from the scope of S. 141. The phrase 'original matters' is used as opposed to 'execution proceedings': the distinction was a necessary one for the purpose of deciding the controversy in the case before their Lordships. Even though the application under S. 235 arises in the course of winding up proceedings, the application originates the claim for misfeasance, a matter in the nature of a suit; it is by virtue of the application that the respondents are in a proper case to be made answerable; as I have already pointed out the proceedings by application in the winding up are an alternative to proceedings by a regular suit. Mr. Bannerji relied on two cases which are not in conflict with this view, 54 All 1067⁴ and 55 All 912⁵ at p. 927; these cases make it clear that an application by a liquidator under S. 235 or S. 186 is not a suit: that does not imply that they are not matters in the nature of a suit. To support the general proposition that the Code of Civil Procedure is not applicable to misfeasance proceedings, Mr. Bannerji cited 17 All 238⁶ in which it was held that an order under S. 214, Companies Act 1882, (equivalent of S. 235) was not a decree or order having the force of a decree. In the course of his judgment Burkit J. said:—

It is at least doubtful whether the result of proceedings can be considered to be an order, i. e. as defined by the Code of Civil Procedure. The proceedings leading up to such an order, if it be an order, are not in the strict and technical sense judicial proceedings at all. No procedure is imposed at any stage, no person would be formally cited, no plaint need be filed; no party has a right to prove his case in such a way as he chooses. The whole power is in the Court, which may examine into the conduct of the person complained of, and after such examination may compel repayment or contribution by way of compensation. The word 'compel' seems to contemplate an order entirely distinct from an order adjudicating on the rights of the parties. It presupposes, not a formal adjudication but simply a conviction in the mind of the Court that such order as it is going to make is just. The Act contemplates no order by way of formal adjudication upon the matter of right. That which it authorizes is a compulsory, that is to say an execution, order.

With great respect, I dissent from almost every proposition contained in this passage. I venture to assert that since this Section was passed in 1862 as S. 165, Companies Act, 1862, proceedings taken under it have been judicial proceedings — and the authority for this assertion is to be found in almost every reported case. Proceedings under the Section have in England been governed by rules, made under the authority of various Acts in force from time to time. The rule in force at the date of the judgment cited was R. 78 in the Rules of 1890; in the Rules of 1909 the Rule was No. 68; and in the present Code of 1929 the Rule is No. 66. The rules now in force are the most easily available and I draw attention to the following requirements made by them:

The application shall be made by summons. The summons shall state that the nature of the declaration or order for which application is made and the ground of the application, and unless otherwise ordered, shall be served in the manner in which an Originating Summons is required by the rules of the Supreme Court to be served.

On the return of the summons, the Court may give such directions, as it shall think fit, as to whether points of claim and defence are to be delivered, as to the taking of evidence wholly or in part by affidavit or orally, and the cross-examination either before the Judge on the hearing in Court or in Chambers of any deponents to affidavits in support of or in opposition to the application.

In addition to the special rules to which I have referred, there is a general rule (No. 224) which directs that where no other provision is made by the Act or rules, the practice, procedure and regulations shall be in accordance with the rules of the Supreme Court. Such rules as these, are wholly inapplicable to any but judicial proceedings, and it may be stated that not only are the proceedings under a misfeasance summons judicial but are conducted in a manner almost identical with the ordinary judicial proceedings of the Chancery Division. The rules made by this Court under the powers conferred by Sec. 246, Companies Act, 1913 concerning the mode of proceedings to be had for winding up a company contain like provisions. I refer to this rule here in support of my view that the proceedings under S. 235 were considered to be judicial proceedings by the framers of the rule, the Judges of the Court, some of whom were engaged in administering the Companies Acts. It is unnecessary to pursue this question further. There can be no doubt that the proceedings under S. 235 are judicial. It is agreed by counsel for both the Official Liquidator and for the respondents that the winding up rules of this Court apply to the application which is now before me. I have already referred to R. 77, which requires that the application should contain the particulars on which the claim is based and that a copy of the application with the grounds thereof should be served on every person against whom an order is sought, and further that when the application is made by the Official Liquidator, he may make a report to the Court stating any facts and information on which he proceeds, which are verified by affidavit or derived from sworn evidence in the proceedings.

The requirement of the rule in respect of a supporting affidavit differs where the application is made by any other person than the Official Liquidator; in such a case the application shall be supported by affidavit to be filed by him. R. 95 provides that the general practice of the Court shall in cases not provided for by the Companies Act or these rules, and so far as the same is not inconsistent with the said Act or these rules, apply to all proceedings for winding up of a company in any Court. The rules being made under the authority of the Act have the force of law. The position then is that by virtue of S. 141, Civil P. C., the procedure provided in the Code must be followed in the present proceedings as far as it can be made applicable. This would be so even in the absence of R. 95 or a similar rule. R. 95 makes it clear that the general practice of the Court, which is determined by the Civil Procedure Code, is to apply in cases not provided for by the rules: and that the rules are not intended to override the provisions of S. 141. In each case i. e. in S. 141 and in the rules, there is a restriction on the application of the procedure provided for in the Code: in S. 141 the restrictive words are "so far as it can be made applicable"; in R. 95 the words are "so far as the same is not inconsistent with the said Act or these rules". In each case the effect of the restrictive words is the same: a provision of the Civil Procedure Code cannot be made applicable to proceedings under an Act, if that provision is inconsistent with the procedure prescribed by the Act.

It was contended for the respondents that the rules applicable to a plaint in a regular suit must be applied to the Official Liquidator's application. This contention ignores the restriction. When the Companies Act and the rules made under it prescribe what an application is to contain, and the formalities to be observed in making an application, the rules which prescribe the corresponding requisites for a plaint in a regular suit cannot be applied; but inasmuch as an application under S. 235 preferred in accordance with the rules and a plaint both initiate proceedings of a similar kind, it is clear that there is ample scope for the operation of S. 141 to these proceedings. This is well illustrated by the Official Liquidator's application to amend his original application by adding additional parties, which was purported to be made under the provisions of O. 1, R. 10, Civil P. C. On Issue 1 therefore I find that an application under S. 235, Companies Act is in the nature of a plaint but that the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code are inapplicable to it, because express provision for its contents and the formalities connected with it are provided for by the Companies Act and the rules made thereunder.

Issue 2.—Do the petitions which have been filed collectively or individually constitute a valid plaint or statement of claim? This issue with Issues 1 and 3 was framed at the instance of the respondents. The wording of this issue anticipated a complete affirmative to Issue 1. But an additional contention for the respondents was that even if the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code relating to plaints did not apply, there was, nevertheless, no valid application under S. 235 before the Court. The validity of the application will have to be considered separately in the case of the respondents who were named in the application and in the case of the respondents named in the application of 16th July 1936, whose names were added to the list of respondents by an order of the same day. So far as the first class of respondents is concerned, the question is whether the allegations in the application against them are sufficient. I have not to consider the case against the auditors. Since the hearing began, a compromise has been effected between the Official Liquidator and the auditors. The Official Liquidator has withdrawn all charges of fraud against them. It appears from the record that the allegations of the Official Liquidator relate to the acts, not of any member of the firm of Messrs. Billimoria and Company but of one of their employees who was in charge of a branch of their business in Lahore and who was engaged in the audit of the Bank's accounts. Messrs. Billimoria and Company have recognized their responsibility for the negligence of their employee and having made a settlement, have disappeared from the case. The cases against the Patiala State Bank and S. Salig Ram Hoon, the Managing Director of that Bank, have also been settled.

In spite of exhaustive research, few cases have been found in which the necessary contents of an application under S. 235 have been discussed. Both Indian and English cases which deal with the averments necessary where fraud is alleged have been cited, and also one English case, (1892) 3 Ch 577⁷ and one Indian case, 19 Bom 88,⁸ in which the contents of a misfeasance summons were discussed. In (1880) 5 A C 685⁹ Lord Selbourne said :

With regard to fraud, if there be any principle which is perfectly well settled, it is that general allegations however strong may be the words in which they are stated are insufficient even to amount to an averment of fraud of which any Court ought to take notice. And here I find nothing but perfectly general and vague allegations of fraud. No single material fact is condescended upon, in a manner which would enable any Court to understand what it was that was alleged to be fraudulent.

In that case there was only a general statement that the appellant had by fraud and misrepresentation been induced to enter the society. In 15 I A 119¹⁰ the passage set out above was quoted and Lord Watson continued:

In the present case it is unnecessary to criticize the plaint minutely. Strike out the words 'fraud,' 'deceit,' 'illegal' and 'fraudulent acts,' 'machinations' and so forth of which there is great superfluity and what remains? Nothing, except an allegation of certain facts which might be unattended with any fraudulent or illegal purpose or character.

In 64 I A 143¹¹ an objection was taken before the Judicial Committee that fraud had not been alleged in a petition for winding up but only in an affidavit in support of the petition. Their Lordships refused at that stage to consider the objection, but said:

The allegations were made in the affidavit evidence and the whole matter was clearly fought in the High Court on those lines and apparently without any objection being taken, which, had it been taken, would no doubt have led to the necessary amendments being made in the petition.

From this last case no help is to be gained on the question of how much must be averred. In (1892) 3 Ch 577⁷ the liquidator took out a misfeasance summons against certain directors of the company applying for a declaration that the directors were liable to repay two sums of the company's money which had been paid by them to a third party. The summons stated no ground of liability nor any reason why the payments made were to be considered improper. It was stated in argument by counsel that the directors had been guilty of "a breach of trust in relation to the company." In his judgment, Vaughan Williams J., after referring to Palmer's Company Precedents and Emden's Winding up Practice, said:

It does not seem to me that the summons in the case before me sufficiently defines the grounds upon which the liquidator says the directors ought to be ordered to pay the money claimed. It does not go on to say on what grounds it is suggested that the payments made by the directors were wrongful or acts of misfeasance for which the directors are responsible.

He concluded his discussion of the point by saying:

For the sake of future practice, I point out that the summons even with the affidavit leaves one too much in the dark as to what is charged against the directors.

In 19 Bom 88⁸ at p. 95 though the form of the petition was not directly in issue, the learned Judge expressed the opinion that where it is sought to make an officer of a company liable for the misapplication of the funds of the company or for misfeasance or breach of trust in relation to its affairs, the sum sought to be recovered should be definitely stated in the summons, and the grounds upon which the application is based should be fully and adequately set out in an affidavit or affidavits. (I may note that there is a difference in the procedure of the High Court at Bombay and this Court but it does not affect the principle). This opinion was expressed in view of the assertion "if all the matters are allowed to be disclosed on affidavits, the principal object of the enquiry would be frustrated." It must be noted that, notwithstanding the opinion so expressed, the learned Judge accepted the petition and referred it to Chambers. The rule does not require that a specific sum should be claimed by the Official Liquidator, and the terms of S. 235 in reference to misfeasance or breach of trust authorize the Court to compel the respondent to contribute such sum as the Court thinks just. This is the relief sought in the present case; the Liquidator must bring the facts on which his claim is based to the notice of the Court; the amount of the compensation is to be assessed, not by the Liquidator but by the Court, after a consideration of the whole circumstances. If the Liquidator is not required to state a specific amount, his application cannot be considered bad in law because he omits to do so.

Ignoring vituperative epithets, I think that definite charges are made against the defendants named in the application — charges of a very grave character. It is asserted that almost the major portion of the assets of the Bank amounting to two crores of rupees had, in the course of six years, been transferred by the directors, defendants 1 to 17, to their own pockets: the assets were then almost entirely represented by loans due by the directors or their businesses and were incapable of being realized even to such an extent as to avoid default by the Bank; these loans were made without authority, were ultra vires and either unsecured or inadequately secured and the directors connived at the making of the advances in this way. The remaining defendant-directors are charged with neglect of duty in that, having taken on themselves to resuscitate the Bank, they failed to make any effort to recover the assets. The two officers of the Bank, defendants, are charged with having aided and abetted the directors in taking unauthorized loans. The allegations seem to me to be ample to justify an examination into the conduct of these directors and officers. I hold that the application of 1st July 1935 complied with the rules and is a good application as against the persons named as defendants. On 16th July 1936 the names of further defendants were added, but no charges were made against them; the application at that date as against them was defective; in the documents filed on 22nd April 1937 charges were made against them and all the documents were served on them. The contention of counsel for the Official Liquidator was that the application even in the case of these added defendants was the document of 1st July 1935. But they were not parties to the proceedings at that date; they became parties on 16th July 1936; even then, so far as they were concerned, there was, in my opinion, no such application as contemplated by S. 235, especially in view of sub-s. (3), to say nothing of the rules. It was not till 22nd April 1937 that documents, which taken together fulfilled the requirements of the rules, were filed. I hold that the date of the application against these added defendants was 22nd April 1937.

Issue 3. — The contention by counsel for the auditors on this issue was that the cases against some of the other defendants arise out of the activities of branches of the Bank, with which the auditors were not concerned and that the case of the auditors should not be mixed up with entirely different matters. Counsel for Mr. Hoon and the Patiala State Bank said that the evidence and case against one director is not that against another. No other counsel addressed arguments to me on this point, but I assume that all the counsel adopted the arguments of Mr. Coltman and Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru. To these contentions, Mr. Banerjee's reply was that there is a common unity in the connexion with the company—the application is restricted to the affairs of the company—the whole enquiry relates to the affairs of Harkishen Lal—the evidence is one connected whole—under the wording of S. 235, a joinder of parties without any restriction is permissible; the arguments on this point, except that for the auditors, have not given me much assistance; and as the auditors are no longer parties, I have not to consider their case.

Mr. Bannerjee cited in support of his argument two English cases, (1883) 22 Ch D 714¹² and (1897) 1 Ch 796.¹³ But though in both these cases the objections were overruled, the discussions indicate that an objection on the ground of multifariousness is, if established, a good objection. The contention that restriction to the affairs of the company is sufficient to avoid a charge of multifariousness is too wide. There might in some cases be separate and distinct charges against individual directors or groups of directors and it might be oppressive that in one trial such separate charges should be examined. The practice of this Court is to be found in the Civil Procedure Code from which, I think, it appears that there should not be a trial against several defendants unless relief is claimed in respect of or arising out of the same transaction or series of transactions and the right to it is alleged to exist against the defendants whether jointly, severally or in the alternative. It was conceded by Mr. Bannerjee in argument that though no provision of the Civil Procedure Code applied, it was a permissible argument that the rules contained in the Code to avoid embarrassment in this respect may be taken as rules of natural justice. As the nature of the claim against the various defendants has not been discussed further than I have indicated, I find it difficult to arrive at a conclusion on this question. As the case now stands, no good ground of objection has been shown against the joinder of the defendants who are named as parties in the application of 1st July 1935. Other defendants who participated in the acts alleged in that application are in the same position.

But in the cases of Sham Mohan Seth, branch manager at Lakhimpur Kheri, B. L. Mehra, branch manager at Lucknow, the group, Bankey Behari Lal, Rup Chand, Haji Mohammad Halim, Amolak Ram Hoon and Mahadev Parshad Tandan, Chairman, Directors and Manager of the branch at Cawnpore, there is no common connexion between them or connexion with the acts of the directors, except that the acts of misfeasance alleged against them were committed in the interests of Harkishen Lal ; the directors of the Bank, so far as I can ascertain, were not parties to these acts of misfeasance, which are unconnected with the series of transactions mentioned in the application. Whether I am right in applying the rule taken from the Code or not, I have no doubt that it would be oppressive to deal with these several heads of claim in one trial. I have now to consider the consequences of this multifariousness. If this was a regular suit and all these claims had been joined, O. 2, R. 8 would apply, and the petitioner would be required to elect between the several claims ; there would be no difficulty in applying this rule to an application under S. 235, no inconsistency or conflict in doing so with the rules under the Companies Act. In the present case there are two documents entitled "application under S. 235," the first dated 1st July 1935, the second dated 22nd April 1937. The additional defendants include both persons who are defendants in respect of the charges contained in 1st July 1935 and also the three sets of defendants to whom I have referred and who are unconcerned with the charges in that application. I see no reason for not applying O. 2, R. 8 to the second application. The petitioner must elect with which of the four separate cases he will proceed, i. e. whether he will proceed with the claim set out in the first application or the claim against Sham Mohan Seth, or the claim against B. L. Mehra, or the claim against the Chairman, Directors and Manager of the branch at Cawnpore.

Shiv Kishen Kaul and (3) Lala Raghu Nath Sahai against the order of Monroe J., dated 17th February 1938, deciding certain preliminary issues in proceedings under S. 235, Companies Act, pending against the three appellants and a number of other directors and officers of the Peoples Bank of Northern India, Limited (in liquidation). The Peoples Bank of Northern India was incorporated as a joint stock company under the Indian Companies Act in January 1925 and commenced business in April 1925. It suspended payment on 29th September 1931, and on 22nd December 1931 a scheme for its "resuscitation" was sanctioned under S. 153 of the Act. Subsequently, the company was ordered to be compulsorily wound up on 25th May 1935, and an Official Liquidator appointed. On 1st July 1935, the Official Liquidator presented a petition under S. 235, Companies Act against 35 persons praying that the Court may examine into their conduct and compel them, or such of them as may be liable, to repay or restore moneys or properties lost to the company, or to contribute such sum or sums to its assets by way of compensation as may be just. Two of the present appellants, Lala Mulk Raj Bhalla and Pt. Shiv Kishen Kaul, were among the defendants named in this petition ; appellant 3 Lala Raghu Nath Sahai was not mentioned in it. On 16th July 1936, the Official Liquidator filed an application under O. 1, R. 10, Civil P. C., stating (inter alia) that further investigation into the affairs of the Bank had disclosed the liability of certain other directors and officers of the Bank, and praying that their names "be added" as defendants in the misfeasance proceedings. One of these persons was Lala Raghu Nath Sahai, who was for some time manager of the branch of the Bank at Ferozepore and had subsequently worked in the head office at Lahore. This application did not mention any charges against him, nor did it specify the grounds on which it was sought to make him liable. On 3rd September 1936, the liquidator filed another document containing "better particulars of misfeasance" against the various directors and officers of the company mentioned in the original petition of 1st July 1935 and the application of 16th July 1936. This document was accompanied by several schedules containing details of the "acts of misfeasance" alleged to have been committed by each defendant, and the sums for which it was sought to make him liable. On 22nd April 1937, the liquidator filed another application, withdrawing the case against 17 of the persons named in the previous applications, and "amending and amplifying the particulars" against the remaining 39 defendants. Copies of the original petition and the subsequent applications and schedules aforesaid were accordingly served on these defendants, including the three appellants. In answer to this claim, the defendants filed the lengthy written statements denying their liability and raising numerous pleas of fact and law. On these pleadings, the learned Judge framed 52 issues. At the commencement of the trial, arguments were heard on the following three preliminary issues :

(1) Is the petition under S. 235, Companies Act in the nature of a plaint and must it be in accordance with the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code ?

(2) Do the petitions which have been filed, collectively or individually, constitute a valid plaint or statement of claim ?

(3) Is one joint trial of the claims against all the respondents joined in the petition permissible in law, the allegations against each of them being distinct and based on separate acts of misfeasance?

The learned Judge passed a detailed order on 17th February 1938 deciding these issues. On Issue 1 he held that the petition under S. 235, Companies Act is "in the nature of a plaint," but that the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code are inapplicable to it, because express provisions for its contents and the formalities connected with it are provided for by the Companies Act and the rules made thereunder. On Issue 2 the finding was that the petition of 1st July 1935 complied with the rules framed for the presentation of such application under the Companies Act and is a good petition as against the persons named therein as defendants. As regards the defendants, whose names were added on the liquidator's application of 16th July 1937, the learned Judge held that the application was defective as it did not make any charges against them ; and as the charges against them were mentioned for the first time in the documents filed on 22nd April 1937, the date of the application against these added defendants must be taken to be 22nd April 1937. As regards the plea of multifariousness to which Issue 3 related, it was held that no good ground of objection has been shown against the joinder of the defendants who were named as parties in the application of 1st July 1935 and all other defendants who had participated in the acts alleged in that application. This plea was however upheld so far as the cases of the seven other defendants are concerned, and the liquidator was directed to make his election under O. 2, R. 8, Civil P. C. From this order the present appeals have been lodged by the three appellants under S. 202, Companies Act and Cl. 10, Letters Patent.

At the commencement of the hearing before us, a preliminary objection was raised by the counsel for the Official Liquidator that the order of the learned Judge deciding the aforesaid issues was not a "judgment" within the meaning of Cl. 10, Letters Patent and was therefore not open to appeal. It was contended that S. 202, Companies Act did not confer a substantive right of appeal against orders passed in the matter of winding up of a company; it merely stated that the law as regards appeals from orders passed in the matter of the winding up of a company was co-extensive with that relating to appeals from orders passed by the Court in the exercise of its ordinary jurisdiction. The contention, in other words, was that, if a company is being wound up by the District Court, only such orders passed by it in the course of the winding up were appealable, as are covered by S. 104 or O. 43, R. 1, Civil P. C.; and, if the company is being wound up by a Judge of this Court, an appeal would lie to a Division Bench if the order passed by him amounted to a "judgment" within the meaning of Cl. 10 of Letters Patent; but if a particular order is not covered by these provisions of the Civil Procedure Code or the Letters Patent, it is not appealable. This objection is completely disposed of by the decision of a Full Bench of three Judges of this Court in 10 Lah 806.¹⁴ In that case, in the course of proceedings for the winding up of a company before the District Judge, Lahore, an order had been passed by him permitting amendment of the petition under S. 235, Companies Act, against certain directors by adding a new ground of liability after the expiry of the period of limitation, and from that order the directors had appealed to the High Court under S. 202, Companies Act. On an objection raised by the liquidator that the order was not appealable as it did not fall within S. 104, Civil P. C., it was held by the Full Bench that a party aggrieved from an order passed in the course of liquidation proceedings by the District Judge, in exercise of his jurisdiction under the Companies Act, is entitled under S. 202 to appeal to the High Court, irrespective of the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code which restrict the right of appeal to specified orders, S. 202 being wide enough to cover appeals against any order made in the matter of the winding up of a company, provided such an order finally decides the dispute between the parties or deprives the appellant of a substantial and important right, and is not a mere formal or interlocutory order.

This decision completely meets the objection raised in this case before us. It was however contended that the law had not been correctly laid down by the Full Bench, and we were asked to have the matter reconsidered by a larger Bench. We have listened to interesting and able arguments by counsel for both sides; but after giving the matter careful consideration, we find ourselves in respectful agreement with the conclusion reached in the case cited. Sec. 202, Companies Act, reads as follows:

Re-hearings of, and appeals from, any order or decision made, or given, in the matter of the winding up of a company by the Court may be had in the same manner, and subject to the same conditions in, and subject to which, appeals may be had from any order or decision of the same Court in cases within its ordinary jurisdiction.

It will be observed that the Section is very wide in its terms and permits appeals "from any order or decision made, or given, in the matter of the winding up," and we see no reason to limit its operation in the manner suggested by the respondent's learned counsel. We have no doubt that the last part of the Section, which lays down that appeals will be had in the same manner and subject to the same conditions in, and subject to which, appeals may be had from any order or decision of the same Court in cases within its ordinary jurisdiction, merely regulates the procedure to be followed in the presentation and hearing of such appeals, that is to say, the necessary copies to be filed, the period of limitation within which the appeal is to be presented, the manner in which service is to be effected, the order in which parties are to be heard and so forth. Any other interpretation is not warranted by the plain wording of the Section, and, if accepted, will lead to startling results. It will have the effect of practically shutting out appeals from all orders passed by a District Court, in cases in which the winding up proceedings are going on before it, for very few of such orders would fall within S. 104 or O. 43 of the Code, which alone permit appeals against orders passed by a Subordinate Court in the exercise of its original jurisdiction. This obviously could not have been the intention of the Legislature, especially when we bear in mind that S. 169 of the Act of 1882 (which was replaced by S. 202 in the Act of 1913) was enacted at a time when the Court of the District Judge was the only Court under the Companies Act, outside the Presidency towns.

So far as the Punjab Courts are concerned, the view ultimately adopted by the Full Bench in 10 Lah 806¹⁴ had been followed in a long course of decisions. In 40 P R 1915,¹⁵ an order by a District Judge directing the public examination of certain directors of the company was held to be appealable under S. 169, Companies Act of 1882, though the order was not appealable under the Civil Procedure Code. Similarly, in 13 P R 1917¹⁶ it was held that an appeal lay from an order passed by the District Judge under S. 171, Companies Act, granting leave to a share-holder to proceed with his suit for declaration that he was not a share-holder of a company. It is admitted that such an order, being purely interlocutory and not covered by S. 104 or O. 43, Civil P. C., was not appealable under any provision of the law, except under S. 169, Companies Act of 1882. Again, in 96 I C 755¹⁷ an order of a District Judge refusing to allow inspection of notes of examination under S. 196, Companies Act of 1913 was held appealable under S. 202 of the Act. The same view appears to have been taken in most of the other Courts. In 30 Mad 22¹⁸ it was held that the right of appeal extends to all orders or decisions made or given in the matter of the winding up of a company, whether the winding up is compulsory, voluntary or under supervision.

The only decision, which Mr. Peary Lal Bannerji for the respondent cited in support of his contention is 38 All 537.¹⁹ The facts of that case however were entirely different. There, the Additional District Judge of Lahore, in whose Court a company was being wound up, had passed a payment order against a contributory, which was enforceable in the same manner as a decree. The Liquidator had taken out execution of the order and had it transferred to the Court of the District Judge, Agra, where certain immovable property alleged to belong to the contributory, was attached. A third person objected to the attachment under O. 21, R. 58, Civil P. C., on the ground that the attached property belonged to him. This objection was dismissed by the District Judge, Agra, under O. 21, R. 63. An appeal against this order was preferred by the judgment-debtor in the High Court, Allahabad, purporting to be under S. 169, Companies Act of 1882. At the hearing of the appeal an objection was raised that the appeal was incompetent. In upholding the objection, the learned Judges observed that S. 169, Companies Act, merely provides for a right of appeal in the case of orders which would have been appealable had they been passed by the Court in the exercise of its ordinary jurisdiction. This brings us back again to the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure which regulates cases in which appeals from orders in Civil Courts lie. It appears to us quite clear therefore that the right of appeal under the provisions of S. 169 of the old Companies Act is co-extensive with the right of appeal conferred by the Court and, as we have already mentioned, an appeal in a case of this sort would not lie under the Code.

It is on this observation that the learned counsel for the respondent relies in support of his interpretation of S. 202. With great respect, we may say that, while there is no doubt as to the correctness of the decision in that case, that no appeal lay from the order of the District Judge to the High Court, it is difficult to see how S. 169, Companies Act of 1882 could possibly have applied. The order in question had not been passed by the District Judge, Agra, in the matter of the winding up of a company. Indeed, it was not an order under the Companies Act at all. The execution of the payment order, as a decree, had been transferred to the District Judge Agra, under S. 39 and S. 40, Civil P. C.; and under S. 42 all orders passed by that Court were "subject to same rules in respect of appeal as if the decree had been passed by itself." The course of appeal from the order of the Agra Court was therefore to be determined by the Civil Procedure Code and not the Companies Act, and there is no question that under the Code no appeal lay from the order rejecting the objection under O. 21, R. 63.

After giving the matter careful consideration, we hold that the order under appeal in this case is not of a merely formal or ministerial character but finally decides points between the parties relating to substantial and important rights and is therefore appealable under S. 202, Companies Act. In this view of the case, it is not necessary to go into the further point argued before us by Mr. Badri Das that the order in question was also a "judgment" within Cl. 10, Letters Patent. We accordingly overrule the preliminary objection. On the merits, it will be convenient to take up first the appeals of Lala Mulk Raj Bhalla and Pandit Shiv Kishan Kaul, which raise common grounds. Counsel for both these appellants have accepted the decision of the learned Judge on Issue 1, that a petition under S. 235, Companies Act is in "the nature of a plaint" but that the provisions in the Civil Procedure Code are inapplicable to it so far as its contents and the formalities connected with it are concerned, as provision for these matters is made by the Companies Act and the Rules made thereunder. They contend however that the petition of 1st July 1935 did not constitute a valid and sufficient "statement of the claim" under S. 235 of the Act against either of them, as required by R. 77 of the Rules framed under the Act, inasmuch as (a) the petition did not fully and adequately set out the particulars on which the claim was based; (b) it did not state the sum sought to be recovered, and (c) it was not supported by a properly verified affidavit. Of these objections (b) and (c) are, in our opinion, without any substance and do not require detailed discussion. Neither S. 235, Companies Act nor the Rules framed thereunder require that the sum claimed by the liquidator from a director or officer of the company should be specifically stated in the petition. All that the Section says is that the Court be asked "to examine into the conduct of the director or officer named in the petition," and compel him to repay or restore the money or property or any part thereof or to contribute such sum to the assets of the Company by way of compensation in respect of the misfeasance as the Court thinks just.

19. Santi Lal v. Indian Exchange Bank, Lahore, (1916) 8 A I R All 341=85 I O 6=38 All 537=14 A L J 722.

In this case, this is exactly what the petition of 1st July 1935 had prayed for in the last paragraph. In support of objection (c), reference is made to R. 77 which lays down that where the application under S. 235 is filed by the Official Liquidator he may make a report to the Court stating any facts and information on which he proceeds, which are verified by affidavit, or derived from sworn evidence in the proceedings. It is true, that the petition presented by the Official Liquidator on 1st July 1935, was not accompanied by an affidavit, nor did it state that the information contained therein had been derived from sworn evidence in the proceedings. But no action was taken against the appellants on that petition. As stated already, further particulars were allowed to be filed at a later stage and they were supported by an affidavit sworn by the Official Liquidator on 22nd April 1937; and it was after this had been done that notice was issued to the appellants for the first time. The rules do not require that the affidavit should be filed along with the petition, or that, if it is not so filed, it cannot be received at a later date. We hold therefore that the proceedings against the appellants are not defective by reason of objections (b) and (c) mentioned above.

The remaining objection is that the petition did not fully and adequately set out the particulars on which the claim is based. In the original petition 35 persons had been named as defendants, whom the Official Liquidator sought to make liable for alleged acts of misfeasance. The appellants, Pt. Shiv Kishan Kaul and Lala Mulk Raj Bhalla were among them, being Nos. (18) and (19) in the list. It is contended on their behalf that this petition does not contain any specific allegations on which a claim under S. 235 could be based against them. In reply, the learned counsel for the liquidator referred us to paras. 10 and 12 of the petition which, he contended, adequately set out the charges against them. Para. 10 however does not appear to us to relate to these two appellants. It refers to Lala Harkishan Lal and the other directors who had taken "huge amounts which were practically advances of the Bank's moneys by them to themselves" or who had "connived" at these "huge advances being made to L. Harkishan Lal or his concerns or other co-directors" and thus "actively colluded with him or altogether neglected the interests of the Bank." The two appellants are not mentioned by name in this paragraph, and it is admitted that neither of them was connected with the Bank when these "huge advances" were made. Para. 12 however refers, among others, to the two appellants and alleges that they did not "take proper and effective steps to safeguard the interests of the Bank" and "allowed valuable securities to be lost or depreciated" and are therefore "liable for the consequential loss or losses to the Bank caused by their acts, defaults or negligence." In the petition however no details of the securities alleged to have been lost or depreciated were given. They were subsequently set out in detail in the schedules attached to the document presented on 22nd February 1937. In these schedules "the headings of charges" and "brief facts pertaining to each defendant" were supplied: those relating to the two appellants will be found at pages 47 and 48 of the paper-book. Para. 12 of the original petition, read with the documents filed on 22nd July 1937, adequately sets out the allegations on which the claim in respect of the release of stocks belonging to the Lucknow Sugar Works, and their forcible removal by Lala Harkishan Lal is based. But, as regards the claim relating to the advances of Rs. 10,000 and Rs. 4000 respectively, mentioned in Cls. 5 and 6 of the schedule, we do not find the particulars sufficient to show on what grounds the liability of the appellants is based. We accordingly hold that the petition of 1st July 1935, read with the documents filed on 22nd April 1937, contains adequate particulars of the claim against the two appellants so far as the allegations relating to the release and removal of stocks from the Lucknow Sugar Mills are concerned, but not with regard to the advances aggregating to Rs. 14,000.

We now come to the case of appellant 3, Lala Raghunath Sahai. It has already been stated that he was not one of the defendants named in the original petition of 1st July 1935. He was first mentioned in the application of 16th July 1935, but that application merely asked that he be "added" as a defendant; it did not set out any allegations against him; nor did it disclose the basis of the claim on which it was sought to make him liable. In Sch. B, attached to the document presented on 22nd April 1937, a summary of the case against him was for the first time given (p. 54), and in the Schedule at p. 130 are found details of the amount in respect of which it was stated that he had committed acts of misfeasance. We have read with the assistance of counsel, the relevant clauses of the statement of claim but are unable to find that any case of fraud, breach of trust or negligence, is disclosed against him. We must therefore hold that so far as he is concerned, the applications taken individually or collectively, do not comply with the requirements of Rule 77.

This brings us to Issue 3 in the case, as to whether the claim against the appellants should be tried jointly with the other defendants. It is conceded that neither Lala Mulk Raj Bhalla nor Pandit Shiv Kishan Kaul had anything to do with the dealings of the Bank with Lala Harkishan Lal and the other directors and officers until their appointment as directors a short time before the Bank shut its doors. One of them joined the directorate on 6th June 1931 and the other on 10th August 1931. Lala Mulk Raj Bhalla resigned in July 1932 and Pandit Shiv Kishan Kaul in September 1933. It is not alleged that either of them had borrowed any money from the Bank, individually or in conjunction with any other director or officer of the Bank, nor are there any allegations against them of having appropriated for their personal use, or otherwise taken possession of, any property of the Bank. The case against them is one of negligence in releasing to Lala Harkishan Lal, or allowing him to remove, certain stocks from the Lucknow Sugar Works in August 1931 and their failure to take proper steps to realize the assets during the period of resuscitation. These matters are entirely distinct from those which are the subject of investigation against the other defendants. There is no real common unity between them and it will be highly inconvenient to try the two cases together. We hold therefore that on the principle underlying O. 2, R. 6, Civil P. C., it will be just and convenient to have the petition against Lala Mulk Raj Bhalla and Pandit Shiv Kishan Kaul tried separately.

To sum up our findings on the three issues decided by the learned Judge in the order under appeal are: (1) The decision on Issue 1 is correct (2) On Issue 2 we hold (a) that the various petitions filed by the Official Liquidator do not constitute a valid statement of claim against Lala Raghunath Sahai; but (b) that these petitions taken collectively, contain adequate particulars of the allegations against Lala Mulk Raj and Pandit Shiv Kishan Kaul with regard to the release to, and removal by, Lala Harkishan Lal of the stocks of the Lucknow Sugar Works; but not with regard to the advances of Rs. 10,000 and Rs. 4000. (3) On Issue 3 we hold that it will be just and convenient to try the allegations against Lala Mulk Raj Bhalla and Pandit Shiv Kishan Kaul separately from those against the other defendants. We accordingly accept the appeal of Lala Raghunath Sahai and dismiss the proceedings against him. The appeals of Lala Mulk Raj Bhalla and Pandit Shiv Kishan Kaul are accepted to the extent indicated above. In the circumstances we leave the parties to bear their own costs.

Before concluding we wish to make it clear that our decision in these appeals in no way deals with the question as to whether the claim against the appellants, or any of them, is or is not within limitation. That matter is the subject of other issues, and it has yet to be decided by the learned Judge as to what is the period prescribed by law for a petition under S. 235, Companies Act, what is the terminus a quo and when the proceedings against each defendant are to be taken to have been properly instituted.

First Appeal No. 49 of 1937, Decided on 14th January 1938, from decree of Senior Sub.Judge, Jhang, D/- 2nd November 1936.

(a) Limitation Act (1908), Art. 120—Partition proceeding—Plaintiff's title to land denied—Plaintiff never in possession—Suit for declaration that plaintiff was owner of land brought more than six years after denial of title is time barred.

In partition proceedings started in the year 1902, the plaintiffs' title to the land in dispute was denied at that time. The plaintiffs had never actually been in physical possession of the property in dispute :

Held that a suit for declaration that the plaintiffs were owners of land instituted on 19th August 1935, was clearly barred by time under Art. 120: A I R 1917 Lah 293, Rel. on. [P 672 C 2 ; P 673 C 1]

(b) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 11, Expln. 4—In previous suit plaintiff's predecessors claiming partition of whole shamilat—Subsequent suit by plaintiff claiming that certain well and land in shamilat was not liable to be partitioned is barred by res judicata.

A suit was instituted by the plaintiff's predecessors in which they claimed that entire shamilat was liable to be partitioned. A subsequent suit was brought by the plaintiff to the effect that certain well and land in the shamilat should be excluded from partition :

Held that this plea ought to have been raised and made a ground of attack in the previous suit by the plaintiff's predecessors. As it was not so raised, the subsequent suit was barred under Expln. 4 to S. 11. [P 673 C 1]

Abdul Rashid J. — This appeal has arisen out of an action brought by the plaintiffs for a declaration to the effect that they are owners of 394 kanals and 4 marlas of land, and that this land is liable to be excluded from the partition of the village shamilat. The allegations of the plaintiffs are that their ancestors sank the well Hidayatwala almaaruf Jandwala in the shamilat of the village Mukhiana in the year 1886, that according to condition 14 of the Wajib-ul-arz, prepared at the settlement of 1880, and according to the judgment of Mr. Abbot, Settlement Officer, dated 3rd May 1902, they had become owners of the well and of land measuring 394 kanals and 4 marlas as this area was commanded by the well Hidayatwala almaaruf Jandwala. The defendants pleaded, inter alia, that there was no well, known as Hidayatwala almaaruf Jandwala, that no such well had been constructed by the plaintiffs' ancestors, that the plaintiffs' suit was time-barred, that it had already been decided by the Divisional Judge in his judgment dated 2nd August 1904, that the land in dispute was partible shamilat, that the present suit was therefore not entertainable, that condition 14 of the Wajib-ul-arz had been deleted by Mr. Abbot, Settlement Officer, by means of his judgment dated 3rd May 1902, and that the plaintiffs' suit was therefore liable to dismissal. The trial Court held that the plaintiffs' suit was barred by limitation. It was further found that in the previous civil suit instituted by the predecessors of the present plaintiffs, they had failed to plead that the well in dispute and the land attached thereto should be excluded from shamilat and that the present suit was therefore barred by the rule of res judicata. On the facts, the learned Senior Subordinate Judge held that the plaintiffs had failed to establish that any well known as Hidayatwala almaaruf Jandwala was sunk by the plaintiffs' ancestors between the years 1880 and 1902, and that it had not been established that 394 kanals 4 marlas of land was attached to any such well. On these findings the plaintiffs' suit was dismissed. The plaintiffs have preferred an appeal to this Court.

There is no documentary evidence on the record showing that the well, known as Hidayatwala almaaruf Jandwala was sunk by the plaintiffs' ancestors in the year 1886, and that the well commanded 394 kanals 4 marlas of land. Ex. P-1, even if it be held to be admissible, does not help the plaintiffs. It merely shows that there was a ghair mumkin dal in a separate number which measured 1 kanal 9 marlas in the year 1900-01. Previous to it there is no specific khasra number showing any land as ghair mumkin dal. This ghair mumkin dal is not entered as Hidayatwala almaaruf Jandwala in any revenue record between the years 1880 and 1902. There is a well Hidayatwala which admittedly belongs to the plaintiffs and which has already been excluded from partition. It cannot be held that the entry in Ex. P-1 relates to another well named as Hidayatwala almaaruf Jandwala. Moreover Ex. P-1 shows that the well mentioned therein was constructed in kharif 1886-87 and was demolished in the rabi of the same year. The oral evidence produced by the plaintiffs shows that this well was in existence for two or three years and that only 10 or 11 kanals of land was attached to this well. In these circumstances the learned Senior Sub-Judge was right in holding that it had not been established that a well, known as Hidayatwala almaaruf Jandwala was sunk by the plaintiffs' ancestors in the year 1886 and that 394 kanals 4 marlas of land was attached to this well. The partition proceedings started in the year 1902. The plaintiffs' title to the land in dispute was denied at that time. The present suit for declaration having been instituted on 19th August 1935 is clearly barred by time under Art. 120, Limitation Act as the plaintiffs have never actually been in physical possession of the property in dispute. Reference may be made in this connexion to 79 P R 1917.¹

The predecessors of the present plaintiffs filed a civil suit in the year 1902. In that suit they claimed that in spite of condition 14 of the wajib-ul-arz they were entitled to claim partition of the entire shamlat and that the measure of right should be the jama paid by each khewatdar at the time of the first regular settlement. In that suit it was the duty of the predecessors of the present plaintiffs to plead that the well and the land now in dispute should be excluded from partition as the shamlat was being partitioned at that time. As they did not raise any such plea in the previous suit, which had arisen out of the partition proceedings, the present suit is barred under Explan. 4 to S. 11, Civil P. C. The subject-matter of the present suit ought to have been made a ground of attack in the previous suit instituted by the predecessors of the present plaintiffs. For the reasons given above, we affirm the decision of the Court below and dismiss this appeal with costs.

Firm Messrs. Kishan Gopal Jhanji & Sons — Defendants — Respondents.

Second Appeal No. 197 of 1938, Decided on 1st June 1938, from decree of the Senior Sub-Judge, Gurdaspur, D/. 24th November 1937.

Contract — Enforcibility — Principal and agent—Agent having interest in contract may sue in his own name.

Where an agent enters into a contract as such, if he has an interest in the contract, he may sue in his own name, the agent being in such a case virtually a principal to the extent of his interest in the contract.

Judgment. — The plaintiffs, Firm Hardayal Mal-Mohri Mal of Batala, instituted a suit against Messrs. Kishan Gopal Jhanji and Sons of Jullundur for recovery of Rs. 850 alleged to be due as the balance of the price of coal purchased by the defendants from a firm called Hardayal Mal-Mohri Mal Bengal Coal Co., which was then owned by the plaintiff and Damodar Chand, defendant 2, but which has since been dissolved and is now owned by the plaintiff alone. The defendants, Messrs. Kishan Gopal Jhanji and Sons, contested the suit on numerous grounds. The Subordinate Judge, Batala, decided all these points in favour of the plaintiff and against the defendants, and decreed the suit. On appeal before the Senior Subordinate Judge, the defendants, Firm Kishad Gopal Jhanji and Sons, did not challenge the findings of the trial Court on the merits, which were to the effect that Rs. 850 was due by these defendants as the balance of the price of coal supplied. They assailed the decree of the trial Court on two grounds: (1) that the Civil Court at Batala had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit as no part of the cause of action had arisen at Batala, and (2) that in the transactions in dispute the plaintiffs were not acting as principals, but were the agents of a Calcutta firm, known as Messrs. Tara Chand Ghansham Das, and therefore they had no locus standi to maintain the suit. The Senior Subordinate Judge overruled the first plea and, agreeing with the Court of first instance, held that the suit had been properly brought in the Batala Court. On the second point however he disagreed with the conclusion of the Subordinate Judge and found that the plaintiffs had acted as the agents of Messrs. Tara Chand Ghansham Das in the transactions in dispute. He therefore held that under S. 230, Contract Act, they could not personally enforce the contracts which had been entered into by them on behalf of their principals, and hence they had no locus standi to bring the present suit. On this finding the learned Judge accepted the defendants' appeal and dismissed the plaintiffs' suit with costs throughout.

On second appeal, it is contended that the finding of the learned Senior Subordinate Judge that in the transactions in dispute the plaintiffs had acted as the agents of the Calcutta firm and not as principals, is vitiated by the fact that the learned Judge has omitted to consider important evidence on the record and has not taken into account the admissions of the representatives of the Calcutta firm who had deposed that they had no interest in the transactions. Secondly it has been urged that even if the plaintiffs were the agents of the Calcutta firm they were "agents having an interest" in the transactions and therefore in the eye of the law they were virtually principals and as such entitled to sue. The contention of the plaintiffs in the Courts below was that they were the "sole distributors" of Messrs. Tara Chand Ghansham Das in the Punjab, while the defendants contended that their real position was that of "sole agents" of the Calcutta firm in this province. On this point the evidence is conflicting. The learned Judge, after considering this evidence, has found that the plaintiffs' contention is incorrect. On second appeal, I see no adequate ground for going behind that finding. The plaintiffs therefore must be considered to have acted as agents of the Calcutta firm in these transactions.

This finding however is insufficient to justify the dismissal of the suit. The learned Judge should have further examined the evidence to determine the exact nature of the agency and definitely found whether or not the plaintiffs, as agents, had any "interest" in the transactions in question. I have heard counsel at length on this point, and find that the evidence on the record, including the documents produced by the defendants and the statements of their witnesses taken in Court and on commission shows that the plaintiffs were not agents of the Calcutta firm in the ordinary sense of the term, but they were "agents having an interest" in the transactions. It is admitted, and has indeed been found by the learned Judge himself in the first part of his judgment dealing with the question of jurisdiction, that all payments by defendants were actually made to the plaintiffs and not to the Calcutta firm. Secondly, Ranchod Das and N. B. Bose of the firm of Tara Chand Ghansham Das, who were examined by the defendants themselves, clearly deposed that the loss of the transactions was to fall not on the Calcutta firm but on Hardayal Mal. Mohri Mal. They also said that they had kept no separate accounts of the defendants with them, and whenever the defendants, in cases of emergency, sent any orders direct to Tara Chand Ghansham Das in Calcutta, they immediately replied that they had noted the contract, but that the plaintiffs should be informed and that the price paid to them in order to avoid confusion. There is also evidence on the record that no commission was to be charged by the plaintiffs from the Calcutta firm, which would have been the case if they had been merely their agents in the ordinary sense of the term. It also appears that the railway receipts were invariably sent by the Calcutta firm to the plaintiffs, who forwarded them, with their own bills, to the defendants asking them to make payments to them and not to Tara Chand Ghansham Das. See inter alia Exs. P-48, P-50, P-51, P-18, P-14, P-30 and P-12. The defendants also promised to make payments to the plaintiffs at Batala and not to the Calcutta firm, which would have been the case if the plaintiffs were merely their agents without having an interest in the transactions.

The learned Judge, as also the learned counsel for the respondents, relied on certain postcards, Exs. D-7, D-51 and D-55 to D-60, which were sent by the Calcutta firm to the defendants, but they were merely advices of the despatch of goods and were never accompanied by railway receipts or bills. These documents therefore do not affect the matter. This is clearly a case of an "agency coupled with interest" and therefore the ordinary rule laid down in S. 230 is inapplicable. It is settled law in England and, as observed by Pollock and Mulla in their Commentary on the Indian Contract Act (Edn. 6) page 638 :

The like rule is laid down by Indian Courts that where an agent enters into a contract as such if he has an interest in the contract, he may sue in his own name. This is not a real exception to the rule laid down at the beginning of the Section, the agent being in such a case virtually a principal to the extent of his interest in the contract.

Mr. Achhru Ram argued that this point had not been pleaded in so many words and was not covered by the issues and should not be allowed to be raised at this stage. The material facts bearing on the point however were all brought out in the statements made by the plaintiff on oath, and in the document produced, and Issue 5 as framed by the trial Court was comprehensive enough to cover the point. The defendants therefore cannot say that they have been taken by surprise. As stated above, it has been found by the First Court, and that finding was not challenged either before the lower Appellate Court or before me, that the sum of Rs. 850 was due by the defendants to the plaintiffs on the transactions in dispute. For the foregoing reasons, I accept the appeal, set aside the decree of the learned Senior Subordinate Judge and restore that of the Court of first instance decreeing the suit for Rs. 820. Having regard to all the circumstances, I leave the parties to bear their own costs throughout.

Lala Achhru Ram — for Appellant.

J. L. Kapur — for Respondent.

Din Mohammad J.—This Letters Patent Appeal raises an interesting question of law on which, as conceded by both parties, there is no direct authority available. The question is whether on the expiry of the period of limitation for the redemption of a mortgage of an occupancy right under Art. 148, Limitation Act, the mortgagee acquires the status of an occupancy tenant and continues to retain it, even on the death of the mortgagor without leaving any heirs as mentioned in S. 59, Tenancy Act. The relevant provisions of the enactments applicable to this case are Ss. 5 to 9 and 53 to 59, Tenancy Act, and S. 28 and Art. 148, Limitation Act. S. 5 enumerates the various classes of occupancy tenants. S. 6 deals with a special class of occupancy tenants. S. 7 relates to rights of occupancy in land taken in exchange. S. 8 enacts that nothing in Ss. 5 to 7 shall preclude any person from establishing a right of occupancy on any ground other than the grounds specified in those Sections. S. 9 lays down that no tenant shall acquire a right of occupancy by mere lapse of time. It would thus appear that S. 9 in a way restricts the generality of the provisions made in S. 8 and excludes the method of acquiring a right of occupancy by mere efflux of time from the grounds on which a right of occupancy can be established under S. 8.

Section 53 lays down certain conditions under which a tenant having a right of occupancy under S. 5 may transfer that right by sale, gift or mortgage. S. 54 makes it incumbent upon a mortgagee of a right of occupancy under S. 5 to follow the procedure as laid down in S. 53, if he proposes to foreclose his mortgage or otherwise enforce his lien on the land subject to the right of occupancy. S. 55 enacts that a right of occupancy under S. 5 may be sold in execution of a decree or order of a Court but notice of an intended sale shall be given to the landlord and he will be given a preferential right to purchase it. S. 56 provides that a right of occupancy under any other Section than S. 5 shall not be attached or sold in execution of a decree or order of any Court or without the previous consent in writing of the landlord, be transferred by private contract. S. 57 enacts that when a right of occupancy has been transferred by sale, gift or usufructuary mortgage to a person other than the landlord, that person shall, in respect of the land in which the right subsists, have the same rights, and be subject to the same liabilities, as the tenant to whom before the transfer the right belonged had and was subject to. The word "subsist" as used in Sec. 57 is significant. It indicates that the right acquired by a transfer exists only so long as the original right exists in respect of the land so transferred. In other words, the right acquired by a transfer expires as soon as the original right ceases to exist. Further where this Section confers upon the transferee the rights of the transferor, it subjects him to the same liabilities. S. 58 restricts the power of an occupancy tenant to sublet the land for any period over seven years and in case of subletting makes the lessee along with the tenant subject to all the liabilities of the tenant under the Act. Here again the distinction between a person who acquires a right of occupancy by sale, gift or usufructuary mortgage, and a person to whom the land is sublet, is noteworthy. No privilege is conferred upon the lessee and the tenant is not absolved from his liabilities in the case of subletting. S. 58-A provides for a special case for the consolidation of holdings; and S. 59, among other things, says that if the deceased tenant has left no such persons as are mentioned in sub-s. (1) on whom his right of occupancy may devolve under that sub-section, the right shall be extinguished. A close study of these provisions displays an anxiety on the part of the Legislature to safeguard the interests of the landlord as far as possible and to protect him against all intruders.

Counsel for the mortgagee contends that a mortgagor has only 60 years under Art. 148, Limitation Act, within which to redeem his property and in case of his failure to do so, S. 28, Limitation Act, comes into play which says that at the determination of the period limited to any person for instituting a suit for possession of any property, his right to such property shall be extinguished. It is true that a tenant so long as he is alive or his line continues may lose his right to oust the mortgagee from the land in suit on the expiry of 60 years, but we cannot hold that the combined effect of these provisions is to inflict upon the landlord an occupancy tenant even after the right of occupancy ceases to exist owing to the death of the original tenant without any heirs. Counsel for the mortgagee contends that inasmuch as the extinguishment of the tenant's right to redeem extinguishes his right to that property altogether, if the original transfer has taken place with the consent of the landlord, he is bound to accept the successor of the original tenant as a rightful claimant to the occupancy holding. We, however, consider that this proposition of law runs counter to the whole scheme of the Tenancy Act. No tenant can acquire a right of occupancy by mere lapse of time as laid down in S. 9 of the Tenancy Act, and it cannot be denied that by virtue of S. 57 the mortgagee is a tenant. Further, as pointed out above, a mortgagee remains a tenant only so long as the original right subsists as provided in S. 57 and consequently he loses any right that he acquires as against the mortgagor as soon as the right ceases to exist under S. 59 of the Tenancy Act.

Counsel for the respondent has relied on 1 P R 1898 (Rev.)¹ and A I R 1927 All 311² in support of his contention, but in our view neither of those judgments is in point. In 1 P R 1898 (Rev.)¹ the only question was whether a landlord could object to a mortgage made by the tenant in spite of the fact that he had acquiesced in it by acceptance of rent from the mortgagee, and the Financial Commissioner held that in the circumstances of that case he could not. The headnote, we consider, is couched in very wide terms and is misleading. In A I R 1927 All 311² the headnote reads as follows:

A mortgage of an occupancy holding is not permitted by law, but by entering into possession as mortgagees of the holding and by continuing in such possession for more than 12 years, the mortgagees can only prescribe a title for the limited interest of a usufructuary mortgagee but his possession is not adverse to the mortgagor, and if the mortgagor brings a suit for possession of the holding against the mortgagee within 12 years from the date of the execution of the mortgage the plaintiff can claim an unconditional decree for possession on the ground that the mortgage being of an occupancy holding is void in law; but by the continuance of the defendants' possession for more than 12 years as usufructuary mortgagees, there came into existence a legally operative mortgage which the plaintiffs must redeem as a condition precedent to a decree for possession of the holding.

Nothing that is said there helps the mortgagee in this case. Counsel for the appellant, on the other hand, has referred to 79 P R 1878,³ 6 P R 1901 (Rev.),⁴ 8 P R 1905 (Rev.)⁵ and 11 Lah 716.⁶ In 79 P R 1878,³ the proprietor of an occupancy holding sued to recover possession of land held by the defendant mortgagee from an occupancy tenant who had died without heirs two years prior to the institution of the suit. Chief Court composed of Plowden and Elsmie JJ. held that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree as the interest of the mortgagee in the land could be no greater and last no longer than that of the mortgagor from whom it was derived, and that the mortgagor's interest having come wholly to an end by reason of his death without heirs, the mortgagee's interest ceased with it, even if the mortgage was made with the proprietor's knowledge or was afterwards assented to by him. In 6 P R 1901 (Rev.)⁴ Mr. Tuper followed this judgment and remarked :

The law is that the occupancy right is extinguished. There cannot be a subsisting mortgage of a right which has ceased to exist, and I must therefore hold that the landlords are entitled to the possession for which they sue.

In 8 P R 1905 (Rev.)⁵ Mr. Gordon Walker, Financial Commissioner, observed:

It is argued that occupancy rights have now been acquired by adverse possession, and that the mortgagee has acquired such rights by being allowed to enjoy them for more than 12 years. . . . It is sufficient reply to the above argument that occupancy rights can only be acquired in one of the ways described in the Tenancy Act; Since the death of the mortgagor-tenant, the mortgagee has merely been a tenant-at-will holding so long as the plaintiff did not disturb him, and lapse of time cannot alter his status.

In 11 Lah 716,⁶ both 79 P R 1878³ and 6 P R 1901 (Rev.)⁴ were referred to with approval and the principle enunciated in those judgments was affirmed by a Division Bench of this Court composed of Broadway and Currie JJ. It is true that the facts of the cases cited above are not on all fours with those of the present case but the principle deducible therefrom does hold good. It follows therefore that, even if the mortgagee in this case had stepped into the shoes of the original tenant on account of the lapse of time, he ceased to have any connexion with the land as soon as the tenant's death took place leaving no heirs behind. We accordingly allow this appeal, set aside the judgment of the learned Judge of this Court and restore that of the trial Court decreeing the plaintiff-appellant's suit. In the peculiar circumstances of the case however, we leave the parties to bear their own costs throughout.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 21, R. 63—Occupancy rights of judgment-debtor attached in execution of decree—Landlord is entitled to bring suit for declaration that occupancy rights cannot be attached and sold.

Where the occupancy rights held by a judgment-debtor are attached in execution of a decree against him, the landlord of the land in which the occupancy rights are held, is entitled to bring a suit under O. 21, R. 63 for a declaration that the occupancy rights cannot be attached and sold in execution of the decree. [P 677 C 2; P 678 C 1]

(b) Punjab Tenancy Act (16 of 1887), Ss. 5, 6, 7 and 77 (3) (d)—Occupancy rights of judgment-debtor sought to be attached and sold—Civil Court has jurisdiction to decide whether rights fall under S. 5 or Ss. 6 and 7—Suit is not one under S. 77 (3) (d).

A Civil Court has jurisdiction to decide as to whether the occupancy rights held by a judgment-debtor, which are sought to be attached and sold in execution of a decree, fall under S. 5 or Ss. 6 and 7. Such a suit is not a suit by a tenant to establish a claim to a right of occupancy or by a landlord to prove that the tenant had not such a right.

Addison J.—The Firm Karam Chand-Shankar Das held a decree against Mt. Damodri to the extent of the property of her deceased husband in her hands. In execution thereof they attached certain occupancy rights in the name of Mt. Damodri which had come to her from her husband. The plaintiff, who is the landlord of the land in which Mt. Damodri has the occupancy rights put in objections under O. 21, R. 58, Civil P. C., but these were dismissed without enquiry on the ground that they were belated. Accordingly, the landlord instituted the present suit for a declaration that Mt. Damodri's occupancy rights could not be attached and sold in execution of the firm's decree. The suit has been decreed and the Firm Karam Chand-Shankar Das has preferred this appeal. It was first contested before us that the landlord had no locus standi to bring the present suit. O. 21, R. 58, however is very wide and runs as follows :

Where any claim is preferred to or any objection is made to the attachment of any property attached in execution of a decree on the ground that such property is not liable to such attachment, the Court shall proceed to investigate the claim, etc.

The claim therefore can be made by any person interested in any way in the land. The landlord is undoubtedly interested. If the occupancy rights are purchased, the purchaser will take the place of Mt. Damodri. The landlord has always the right of escheat. Mt. Damodri's line is apparently about to die out and the purchaser's line may continue for hundreds of years. Besides, under S. 56, Punjab Tenancy Act, a right of occupancy under any Section other than S. 5 cannot be attached or sold in execution of a decree or order of any Court; while under S. 55 the right of occupancy under S. 5 may be sold in execution of a decree or order of a Court but the landlord has the right to be declared the purchaser instead of the person making the highest bid. It is clear therefore that the landlord has a locus standi to bring the present suit.

It was next contended that the burden of proof was on the landlord to show that the tenancy was not under S. 5, Punjab Tenancy Act. This may be so but he has discharged that burden by producing the revenue papers where Mt. Damodri is recorded merely as an occupancy tenant, no Section being specified. This therefore throws the burden back upon the Firm Karam Chand. Shankar Das to establish that they can attach these occupancy rights, as they can only do so if they are under S. 5. This they have certainly failed to do and in fact the trial Judge has held that it has been established that the rights are not under S. 5, a question however which we need not proceed to discuss further. There was a third argument to the effect that the question whether the occupancy rights fall under S. 5 or Ss. 6 and 7 should have been decided by the Revenue Court under the Proviso to S. 77, Punjab Tenancy Act. We are unable to agree with this contention. S. 77 (3) (d) was relied upon in this connexion, it being claimed that the suit was by a tenant to establish a claim to a right of occupancy, or by a landlord to prove that a tenant had not such a right. Obviously however the suit is not of such a character and therefore the matter was one for the Civil Courts. We therefore dismiss this appeal but make no order as to costs in it.

Dalip Singh J. — In this case the decree-holder obtained a decree for Rupees 93,700 and interest on 17th December 1925. It is admitted that an application for execution was consigned to the record room on 9th January 1932. The next application was made on 3rd January 1936. This application would, ordinarily speaking, have been barred by time, but the decree-holder relied on an application made on 4th July 1933, to recover certain moneys deposited in Court. The Court being somewhat doubtful on the question of limitation, a special attempt was made to serve the judgment-debtor. On 28th July 1936, it was reported that the judgment-debtor was avoiding service. On 17th August 1936, it was reported that the judgment-debtor had refused service and a notice had been put on his dwelling house. On 21st August 1936, the Court held in the absence of the judgment-debtor following A I R 1925 Bom 443,¹ that the application was within time by reason of the application made on 4th July 1933. On 22nd January 1937, this application of 3rd January 1936 was consigned to the record room. On 2nd March 1937, the present application was made. The judgment-debtor pleaded bar of limitation and alleged that he had never been served and had never refused service as regards the applieration of 3rd January 1936. The trial Court held on the evidence that it appeared that it had been wrongly reported that the judgment-debtor had refused to accept service.

I have been through the evidence and I see no reason to dissent from the finding of the trial Court on this point. It is therefore open to the judgment-debtor to urge that the application of 3rd January 1936 was wrongly held to be within time by reason of the application of 4th July 1933. The trial Court has held that there is a conflict of rulings between A I R 1925 Bom 443¹ and 14 I C 335,² a ruling of our own Court. It is admitted by learned counsel on both sides that this conflict of rulings exists and that Calcutta and Lahore hold that such an application, as the one made on 4th July 1933, is not a step-in-aid of execution and that Allahabad, Madras and Bombay hold that such an application is a step-in-aid of the execution. So far as our Court is concerned, there is one Single Bench ruling, namely A I R 1938 Lah 138³ in which a previous Full Bench ruling of the Chief Court, 103 P R 1908,⁴ was followed. There is also a Single Bench ruling of the Chief Court, 14 I C 335.² As the matter is not free from difficulty and there should be an authoritative decision of this Court in view of the conflict of rulings, I refer the case to a Division Bench on this point, namely whether an application to draw out monies deposited in Court for his benefit, by the decree-holder is a step-in-aid of execution or not.

Judgment of Division Bench

Addison J.—The only question involved in this appeal is whether the application, dated 4th July 1933, to recover certain monies deposited in Court in execution of the decree is a step-in-aid so as to give a fresh starting point for limitation. The Bombay High Court has held in 22 Bom 340⁵ and A I R 1925 Bom 443¹ that such an application is an application to the Court to take a step-in-aid of execution of the decree. It was held in A I R 1925 Mad 703⁶ that an application for payment out of money in Court by a decree-holder is a step-in-aid of execution if the money in Court was realized in execution of the decree. A Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court held in 12 All 399⁷ that a "step-in-aid of execution" included an application made by a decree-holder to enter up part satisfaction of the decree. On the other hand, it was held in 8 Cal 89⁸ that an application made by a judgment-creditor to take out of Court certain monies there deposited by his judgment-debtor, cannot be considered to be an application to the Court to take a step-in-aid of execution, and is not, therefore, within the meaning of Cl. 4 of Art. 179, Sch. 2 of Act 15 of 1877. The decisions of the Punjab Chief Court and of this Court appear to have been uniform throughout. In 107 P R 1881⁹ there was an application for payment out to the decree-holder of a sum of money which had been deposited in Court, which application was granted and the money paid out. It was held by Plowden and Brandreth JJ. that it was not an application to take a step-in-aid of execution of the decree. A similar decision was given by Barkley and Burney JJ. in 88 P R 1884.¹⁰ Plowden and Tremlett JJ. affirmed the same principle in 27 P R 1888.¹¹ A Full Bench of the Punjab Chief Court held in 103 P R 1908⁴ that an application by a decree holder to the executing Court for payment to him of a certain sum of money deposited in Court in partial satisfaction of the decree does not ordinarily amount to an application to take some step-in-aid of execution. In 14 I C 335² Rattigan J. held that as a general rule, an application by a decree-holder to withdraw money deposited in Court for his benefit cannot be held to be a step-in-aid of execution, especially where the right of the decree-holder to withdraw the money is not contested by the judgment-debtor and payment of the money by the Court is a mere ministerial function. It was further said that it made no difference that the original application for execution had not been finally disposed of. Lastly, in A I R 1938 Lah 138³ Bhide J., following Second Appeal No. 182 of 1935, Decided on 19th April 1938, from decree of Dist. Judge, Attock at Campbellpur, D/- 31st July 1934.

(a) Custom—Proof of existence—Essentials.

Proof of the existence of custom over a period of about 60 years is sufficient to hold that it is binding: 34 P R 1907; 85 P R 1901; 17 All 87 and 20 Mad 389, Rel. on. [P 684 C 1]

The technical rules of English law governing the establishment of custom cannot be followed rigidly in proving the existence of a custom in India: A I R 1930 P C 35; A I R 1917 P C 187 and A I R 1924 P C 113, Rel. on. [P 684 C 1]

In India a custom may fall into desuetude and be superseded by another custom according to the ethical and legal notions of the community in which it is in force, provided of course the existence of substituted custom can be proved by a series of well-known, concordant, and on the whole continuous instances, extending over a reasonable length of time: 4 Bom 545; 110 P R 1906 and 1 Cal 186, Rel. on. [P 684 C 2]

(b) Custom (Punjab) — Abadi Ferozepura — Right of reversion in malba of houses of non-proprietors.

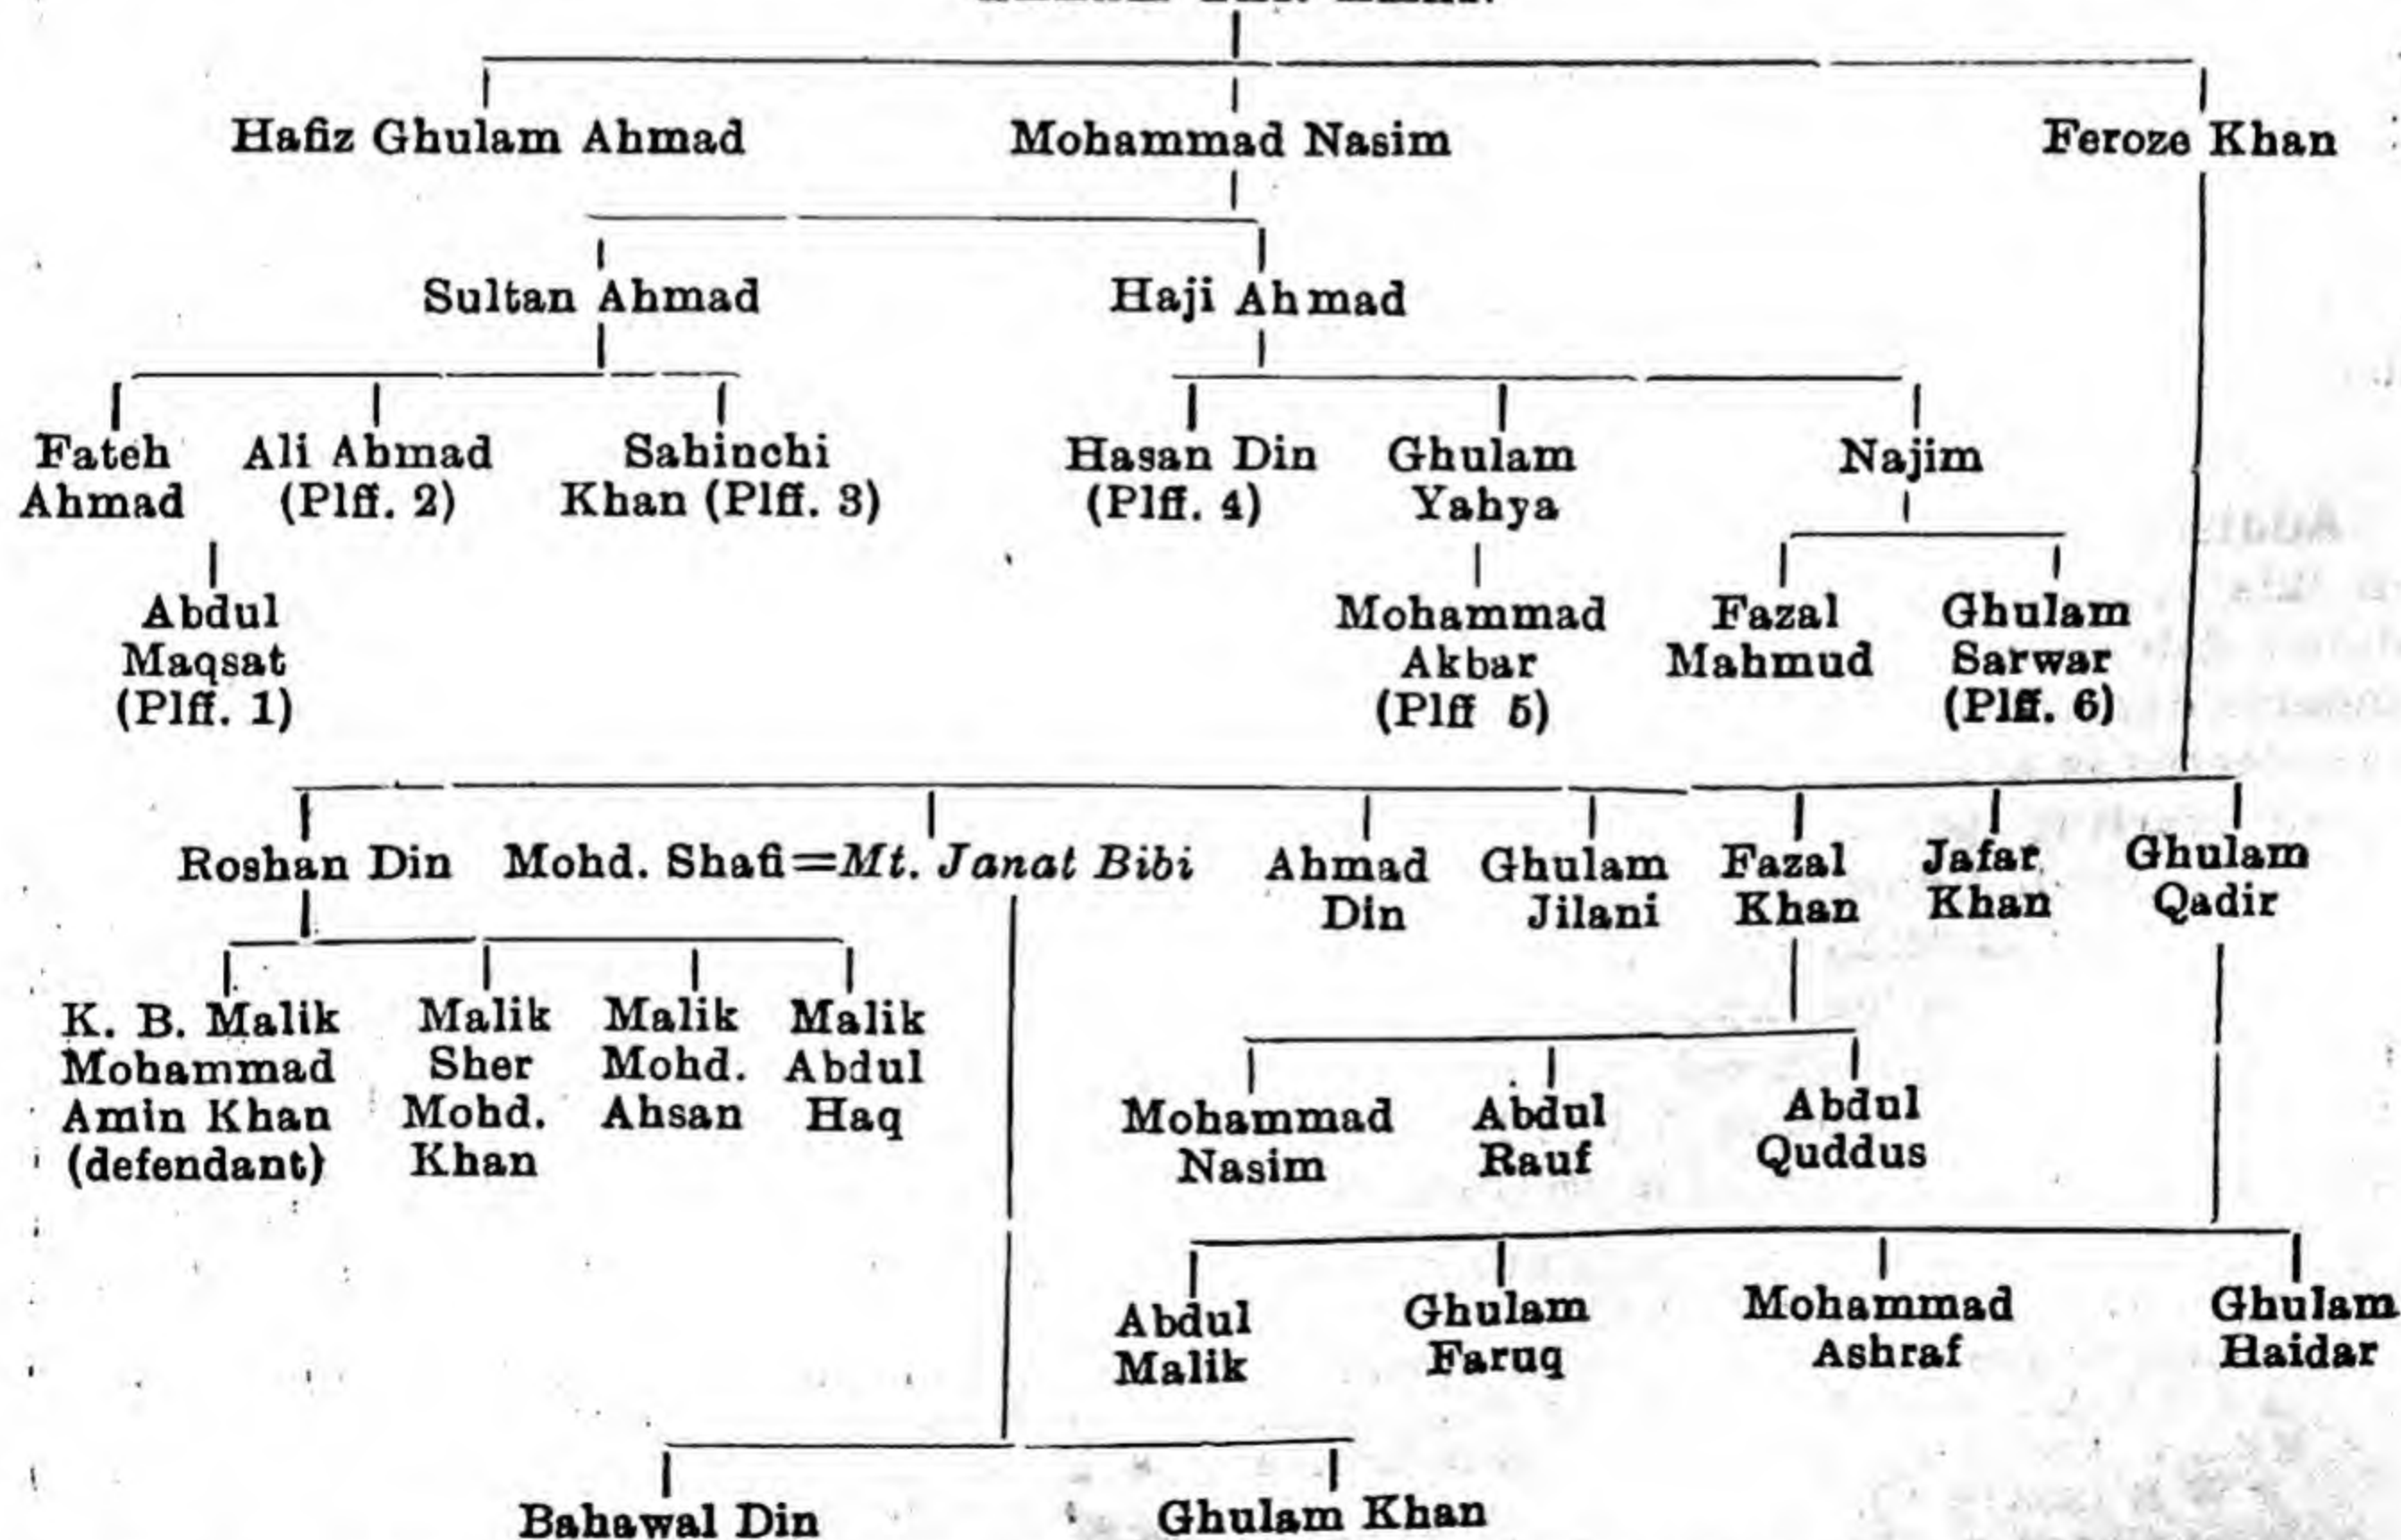

On the non-proprietors leaving, the right of reversion of the malba of the houses of the non-proprietors in Abadi Ferozepura held vested in M alone and not in all the proprietors of the village. [P 684 C 2]

Judgment.—The parties to this litigation are the descendants of Malik Allah Yar Khan, Awan Qureshi of Mouza Shamsabad in Attock District. Their relationship will appear from the following pedigree-table.

ALLAH YAR KHAN

The six plaintiffs are the descendants of Mohammad Nasim, and the defendant Malik Mohammad Amin is the eldest grandson of Feroze Khan. There has been litigation between these two branches of the family for over 60 years. The parties have been before the Chief Court and the High Court on several occasions previously. Allah Yar Khan, the common ancestor of the parties, was the sole proprietor of Shamsabad. On his death the affairs of the family were managed by his eldest son Ghulam Ahmad. About the year 1844 Ghulam Ahmad retired from the management of the estate and devoted himself to the study of the Quran, for which reason he began to be described as Hafiz. Feroze Khan, though he was the youngest of the brothers, then took over the management of the estate, and both under the Sikh Rule and after the conquest of this part of the country by the British, he increased the family property considerably and acquired great influence locally. The British Government conferred a substantial jagir on him; and he was appointed the lambardar of Shamsabad and the zaildar of the ilaka. During the period that Feroze Khan was the head of the family, the abadi of Shamsabad was considerably extended; a new mohalla was founded by Feroze Khan and was named after him as Ferozepura. (It is in respect of certain rights in this mohalla that the present dispute has arisen.) At the time of the first settlement, disputes arose between Feroze Khan and Mohammad Nasim as to the shares in which they were to be entered as owners of the family landed property. This dispute was ultimately decided by the Chief Court (C. A. No. 369 of 1866) on 26th January 1867, it being held that Feroze Khan was entitled to one-half, and Ghulam Ahmad and Mohammad Nasim to one fourth each. About the same time, it was settled by the executive authorities that the jagir shall be held by Feroze Khan alone. Feroze Khan died in 1867 and on his death a peculiar mode of succession was adopted: his eldest son Roshan Din was given one-half of the estate and his other seven sons divided the remaining half among themselves in equal shares. The whole of the jagir was of course continued in the name of the eldest son Roshan Din alone, who was also appointed zaildar and lambardar in place of his father. Roshan Din died in 1893, leaving four sons: Mohammad Amin (defendant), Sher Mohammad, Mohammad Ahsan and Abdul Haq, who have appeared as witnesses in this case. On Roshan Din's death one-half of his estate went to the eldest son Mohammad Amin and the remaining half was taken by the other three sons in equal shares. The jagir was continued in the name of Mohammad Amin alone and he succeeded his father as the zaildar and lambardar.

In January 1900 a suit was instituted by the descendants of Mohammad Nasim, against the descendants of Feroze Khan, including Mohammad Amin. That suit was for possession by partition of a one-third share in the abadis of mauza Shamsabad including mohalla Ferozepura. The suit was resisted by Mohammad Amin who claimed (inter alia) that the abadi of Ferozepura had been founded by his grandfather, that he was the sole proprietor of it and that this mohalla should be excluded from the partition altogether. He further claimed that he alone was entitled to certain dues known as haq bua, watta rakhai, dhart, etc. This suit was ultimately decided by a Division Bench of the Chief Court in C. A. No. 122 of 1904 on 5th January 1910. The learned Judges held that Ferozepura had been founded by Malik Feroze Khan but it did not belong to him exclusively, and the site of the abadi of this mohalla, like that of mouza Shamsabad as a whole, was the property of all the descendants of Allah Yar Khan in the shares in which they had inherited the family estate as laid down in the Chief Court decision of 1867. It was further held that Mohammad Amin was solely entitled to the haq bua and the other dues mentioned above. Thirdly, Mohammad Amin had the exclusive right of locating non-proprietors in, and ejecting them from the abadi of Ferozepura but that he had no such right in Shamsabad generally, where the right vested in all the proprietors. Subject to these reservations, it was held that the plaintiffs were entitled to have the abadi of Shamsabad partitioned except in regard to existing houses, gardens, roads, ponds, mosques and other lands or structures of public utility.

In 1924-25 was held the last settlement of that part of Attock District, in which Shamsabad is situate. The settlement authorities made certain entries in the wajibularz, which led to considerable litigation between the descendants of Mohammad Nasim and Mohammad Amin. On 26th April 1929, the descendants of Mohammad Nasim instituted a suit against Mohammad Amin and others for a declaration that they were entitled to one-third share in haq bua, puchh bakri, watta rakhai, etc., in Shamsabad and that the entries in the wajibularz to the effect that Mohammad Amin alone was entitled to these dues were incorrect. This suit was finally decided by the High Court in C. A. No. 1874 of 1932 on 8th January 1935 : the plaintiffs' claim was dismissed and the entries in the wajibularz relating to the dues mentioned above were upheld. The present dispute relates to another provision in the same wajibularz and is concerned with the right of reversion in the malba of the houses of the non-proprietors in mohalla Ferozepura. The disputed entry in the wajibularz of the settlement of 1924.25 is as follows :

The abadi of Ferozepura was founded by Malik Feroze Khan. Non-proprietors can build their kothas in the above mentioned abadi with the permission of Khan Bahadur Malik Mohammad Amin, and in the abadi of Shamsabad with the permission of the whole proprietary body. The right of locating or ejecting (the non-proprietors) is on the same lines. As long as the non-proprietors live there, they are not interfered with, but if they go to another place, they cannot sell or remove the malba which is taken by Khan Bahadur Malik Mohammad Amin in the abadi of Ferozepura and by the whole proprietary body in the abadi of Shamsabad.

Soon after the completion of the settlement, the six plaintiffs, who are the descendants of Mohammad Nasim, objected to this entry and for some years they carried on litigation before the revenue authorities. Being unsuccessful there, they instituted the present suit on 5th March 1930 in the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Attock, for a declaration that the aforesaid entry, in so far as it related to the reversion of the malba in the abadi of Ferozepura was incorrect and inoperative against the plaintiffs' proprietary rights in the abadi of Ferozepura and that the defendant was not the sole owner of Ferozepura. The suit was dismissed by the Senior Subordinate Judge on 19th April 1930 on the preliminary ground that it was barred by res judicata by reason of the findings in the judgment of the Chief Court in Civil Appeal No. 122 of 1904, dated 5th January 1910, to which reference has been made above. This decision was affirmed on appeal by the District Judge on 12th January 1931. On second appeal (Civil Appeal No. 630 of 1931, decided by Bhide J. on 10th October 1932), both parties agreed as to the correctness of the first part of the entry, in so far as it stated that the abadi of Ferozepura was founded by Malik Feroze Khan, that non-proprietors could build their kothas in the abadi with the permission of Malik Mohammad Amin, and that the right of locating or ejecting them vested in him. It was also agreed that Malik Mohammad Amin was not the sole owner of Ferozepura. The dispute was thus confined to the portion of the entry relating to the reversion of the malba of the houses of the non-proprietors in Ferozepura to Malik Mohammad Amin. On this point the learned Judge held that the matter was not res judicata by reason of the previous decision. He held that the question was one of custom which should be decided, independently of the former decision, on the evidence of the parties. As this point had not been tried by the Courts below, he accepted the appeal and remanded the case for re-hearing and re-decision of the question as to whether on the non-proprietors leaving Ferozepura the malba vested in Malik Mohammad Amin alone or in all the proprietors of the village. After the parties had produced oral and documentary evidence bearing on the point, the Subordinate Judge decided this issue against the plaintiffs and dismissed the suit on 23rd August 1933. This decision was upheld on appeal by the learned District Judge on 31st July 1934. He however granted a certificate under S. 41 (3), Punjab Courts Act for a second appeal to this Court on the question of custom involved.

Before me, the case has been argued at great length by Mr. Shamair Chand for the plaintiffs-appellants and Mr. Barkat Ali for the defendant-respondent. It is common ground that the entry in the wajibularz of the latest settlement being in favour of the defendant, the onus to prove that it is incorrect lies on the plaintiffs. It is also conceded, as observed by Bhide J. in his order of remand above referred to, that the existence of the custom cannot be proved by a process of logical reasoning : it must be established by instances of the actual course of events in the past. Before considering the evidence produced in the case, it is necessary to state a few facts which are no longer in controversy. It is now common ground that the ownership of the abadi of Ferozepura vests in all the descendants of Allah Yar Khan, the share of Feroze Khan's descendants being one-half and that of Mohammad Nasim's descendants one-fourth. (The third brother Ghulam Ahmad died issueless and the parties are not agreed before me as to who had succeeded to his share. This point is however not material for the purposes of this litigation.) It is also admitted that Feroze Khan was the founder of the mohalla and that the right of locating and ejecting tenants in Ferozepura vests in Mohammad Amin alone. The next point worthy of note is that the plaintiffs have not produced a single instance, in which they, or any other descendants of Allah Yar Khan, except Mohammad Amin, have ever taken the malba on a non-proprietor abandoning his house in mohalla Ferozepura or his dying without wife or issue. It is also a significant fact that the oral evidence produced by them consists only of the statements of four of the plaintiffs themselves. No other person from the village, whether a proprietor or a non-proprietor, has come forward to depose that the entry in question was wrongly recorded in the wajibularz or that the actually prevailing custom is as alleged by the plaintiffs. It is also noteworthy that if the custom were as alleged by the plaintiffs, the descendants of the seven younger sons of Feroze Khan and the three younger sons of Roshan Din, would be entitled to a pro rata share in the malba of the houses abandoned by the non-proprietors and the share of Malik Mohammad Amin would be only 1/64th. But none of them has claimed any share. Indeed, three of his brothers, Sher Mohammad, Mohammad Ahsan and Abdul Haq, two of whom are members of the Provincial Civil Service and are not likely to forgo their shares if they had any, have actually given evidence supporting the custom as recorded in the wajibularz.

Another point, which it is necessary to mention, is that in the course of the settlement when the wajibularz was under preparation, the non-proprietors claimed that they were the proprietors of the malba and that they could alienate it to anybody they liked, without reference to the proprietary body. This claim was resisted by Mohammad Amin who stated that the non-proprietors could not sell the malba or the site underneath and that on their giving up residence in the village the malba reverted to him. Two of the plaintiffs, Sahinchi Khan (plaintiff 3) and Mohammad Akbar (plaintiff 5) and Fateh Ahmad, father of Abdul Maksat, plaintiff 1, made statements supporting the claim of the non-proprietors; they did not then put forward the claim which they have made in the present litigation that they were the owners of one-third of the abadi of Ferozepura and as such were entitled to their pro rata share in the malba. It may be mentioned that in their evidence as witnesses Sahinchi Khan and Mohammad Akbar denied having made the statement; but this fact was proved by the Naib Tahsildar, Mohammad Taj-ud Din, who was examined as a witness in the case and by other evidence, which has been accepted as true by the Courts below. The defendant has examined 33 witnesses who have attempted to prove 23 instances in each of which on the line of a non-proprietor becoming extinct or his abandoning his residence in mohalla Ferozepura, the house was taken by the defendant Mohammad Amin or the malba removed by him. (After giving a summary of the instances the judgment proceeded further.) All these instances are supported by oral evidence of the witnesses produced by the defendant, who have been believed by both the Courts below. Mr. Shamair Chand has taken me through the evidence and after giving due consideration to his arguments, I see no reason to differ, except with regard to instance No. 19, the evidence relating to which is not sufficiently clear and specific. The name of the non-proprietor, the malba of whose house is stated to have been taken possession of by the defendant, is not disclosed by the witnesses. He is merely described as a Hindu who had embraced Islam. Leaving this instance out of consideration, there is clear proof of 22 cases in which the defendant alone took the house or the malba to the exclusion of, and without protest by, the plaintiffs or any other proprietor of the village. Some of these instances are as old as 60, 55 and 50 years; in 15 cases the reversion took place more than 20 years ago.

Mr. Shamair Chand relied largely on the entries in the wajibularz of the first three settlements held in 1862, 1882 and 1904. The entry in the first settlement however refers merely to the location and ejectment of tenants and is couched in vague phraseology, which might either mean that that right vested in all the proprietors, or in Feroze Khan alone who was described as khas lambardar. The entries in the second and third settlements are no doubt in favour of the plaintiffs. They related to the watta rakhai dues and also to the right of reversion of the malba on abandonment by a non-proprietor. With regard to the dues, the entry was found to be erroneous in the litigation which ended with the Chief Court decision in 1910 and with regard to the reversion of the malba it was superseded, after inquiry, by the wajibularz in the most recent settlement. Not a single instance in support of the alleged rights of the plaintiffs is proved by oral or documentary evidence, whereas no less than 22 instances, several of which are of very early times, have been proved in favour of the defendant. The oral evidence almost unanimously supports him. Mr. Shamair Chand also referred me to two decisions of Mr. Ejaz Nabi, Munsif in 1881, in which at the instance of the proprietors certain alienations by non-proprietors in Ferozepura were set aside. These instances are really not in point as these were not really cases of reversion on the death of, or abandonment by, a non-proprietor, but of sale of the houses including the malba and the site by non-proprietors, and the sales were set aside at the instance of the proprietors.

As a last resort, Mr. Shamair Chand argued that the instances, even if they be held to be proved, were not sufficient to establish the custom in view of the recent decision of a Full Bench of this Court in 18 Lah 594¹ at p. 611, according to which a custom can be held proved only if it is "ancient" in the sense that it is shown to have existed "so long that the memory of man runneth not to the contrary." I do not think that this decision affects the present case. In the first place, the custom as recorded in the wajibularz is against the claim of the plaintiffs. The initial onus therefore was on them and they led no evidence except their own bare statements, unsupported by any instance to discharge it. On the other hand, the defendants have shown that the custom, as recorded, has been followed uniformly during a period of sixty years. Proof of the existence of custom over such a period has been considered by the Courts in India to be sufficient to hold that it is binding: see inter alia 34 P R 1907² at p. 161, 85 P R 1901,³ 17 All 87⁴ at p. 92, 20 Mad 389⁵ and Boulnois and Rattigan's Notes on Customary Law, p. 34. Moreover it has been held by their Lordships of the Privy Council in several cases that the technical rules of English law governing the establishment of custom cannot be followed rigidly in proving the exist-

tence of a custom in this country: 5 Luck 70⁶ at p. 75, 45 Cal 450⁷ at p. 460 and 5 Lah 200⁸ at p. 206. It is also well recognized that in India a custom may fall into desuetude and be superseded by another custom according to the ethical and legal notions of the community in which it is in force, provided of course the existence of the substituted custom can be proved by a series of well-known, concordant, and on the whole continuous instances, extending over a reasonable length of time: cf. 4 Bom 545,⁹ 110 P R 1906¹⁰ at p. 407; cf. 1 Cal 186¹¹ at p. 194 where proof of 40 years of practice was considered sufficient to destroy the existence of rule of descent which admittedly prevailed before. For the foregoing reasons, I hold that the custom, as recorded in the wajibularz, has been proved to exist and that the plaintiffs have failed to establish their claim except to the extent admitted by counsel for the defendant before Bhide J. that Malik Mohammad Amin was not the sole owner of Ferozepura. The decision of the Courts below therefore is correct. I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Order.—Hardial, son of Gobinda, was tried by a Magistrate of the First Class in the Ferozepore District and sentenced to two years' rigorous imprisonment under S. 366-A, I. P. C. His appeal was rejected by the learned Sessions Judge, Ferozepore, by order dated 8th November 1937, and he has now moved this Court through Mr. Jiwan Lal Kapur, under S. 439, Criminal P. C., for a revision of that order. The brief facts are that one Mt. Manohri, a young girl of 14, was purchased by one Shashpal from her husband. This Shashpal sold the girl to Partu and to the petitioner. It is alleged that these two tried to sell Mt. Manohri unsuccessfully in the Montgomery District and brought her back to Abohar, where they represented that the girl though a Mahomedan was in fact a Jat. Partu, who was absconding at the time of the trial of the petitioner and has since been arrested, was suspected by Duni Chand, prosecution witness, of being a habitual abductor of women, and Duni Chand with Walla Ram and Chandi Ram went to where the girl was and on learning that she was a Mahomedan took her to the thana where a report was lodged. Partu made good his escape, but the petitioner was caught and challaned.

The petitioner's defence is that he was going about with Partu in search of employment and that he had no connexion either with the purchase or attempted sale of the girl and in any case had not ever tried to seduce her to illicit intercourse. In support of the story for the prosecution, we have the statement of Mt. Manohri corroborated by the circumstance of the petitioner going to Montgomery District and back to Abohar in the Ferozepore District in the company of the girl and Partu, and also by the allegation that he tried to run away when Walla Ram and others questioned the girl. It is significant that the girl herself attributes a prominent part to Partu, who, she says, used to rape her, but not a single question even was put to her as to what part the petitioner took in either enticing her away or seducing her to illicit intercourse. The mere circumstance that the petitioner accompanied Partu or he was trying to sell the girl, possibly for immoral purposes, may be suspicious but is not sufficient in my opinion to establish the essential ingredients of the offence charged against the petitioner. His alleged attempt at running away also does not appear to me to be either satisfactorily proved or sufficiently corroborative of his guilt. It is not unlikely that realizing that Mt. Manohri was going to be taken to the thana he, in order to escape trouble, tried to slip away. This does not indicate necessarily a guilty knowledge. In my opinion there is a sufficient element of doubt in this case and the petitioner is entitled to the benefit of this doubt. I accordingly set aside the conviction and sentence passed on Hardial, petitioner, and direct that he will be released forthwith.

(a) Punjab Relief of Indebtedness Act (7 of 1934), S. 21 — Civil Court can take cognizance of plea of lack of jurisdiction in Board to pass an order (Obiter).

Section 21 only debars a Civil Court from taking cognizance of certain classes of suits and a Civil Court can take cognizance of a plea of lack of inherent jurisdiction in the Board to pass a certain order. [P 686 C 1]

(b) Registration Act (1908), S. 17 (2) (vi) — Agreement recorded by Debt Conciliation Board relating to lease for period of 12 years — Agreement even if regarded as decree requires registration if it includes properties of persons not applicants before Board.

Even if an agreement recorded by the Debt Conciliation Board under S. 17, Punjab Relief of Indebtedness Act, relating to a lease for a period of 12 years be considered as a decree falling under S. 17 (2) (vi), Registration Act, it needs registration if the agreement includes properties of persons who were not applicants before the Board. Judgment.—This appeal arises out of an application for execution of an agreement recorded by the Debt Conciliation Board under S. 17, Punjab Relief of Indebtedness

Act. The material facts were that one Mahni had applied to the Board for settlement of his debts. Notices were issued to the creditors and thereafter an agreement was recorded by the Board to which not only the applicant Mahni but two other persons named Wali Dad, and Bhai Khan, his brothers, were parties. Neither Wali Dad nor Bhai Khan had made any application to the Board according to law. By virtue of the agreement certain property was leased for a period of 12 years. The agreement does not clearly state to whom the property in question belonged but apparently the debts of Mahni, Wali Dad, Bhai Khan and Muhammad (who is dead), a cousin of Mahni, were taken into consideration and presumably the property belonging to these persons was involved. One of the creditors then proceeded to execute this agreement when an objection was raised on behalf of Mahni and others that the agreement could not be executed as a decree, as the Board had no jurisdiction to record the agreement under S. 17 as Wali Dad and Bhai Khan had not made any application to the Board.

It was also contended that the agreement required registration as it related to a lease for a period of 12 years and secondly, even if it was to be considered as a decree falling under S. 17 (2) (vi), Registration Act, it needed registration as the agreement included properties of persons who were not applicants before the Board. S. 21, Punjab Relief of Indebtedness Act, is relied on by the judgment-debtors; but that Section only bars certain suits and does not appear to be in point. That Section only debars a Civil Court from taking cognizance of certain classes of suits, and as at present advised I do not see why a Civil Court should not be able to take cognizance of a plea of the kind raised in this case, viz. lack of inherent jurisdiction in the Board to pass a certain order. But I consider it unnecessary to decide this point, for, it seems to me clear that the agreement in question required registration, as it amounted to a lease for 12 years. The learned counsel for the appellant tried to argue that it was a 'mortgage' but the wording of the agreement appears to me to leave no doubt that it was tantamount to a lease as it purported to be (mustajiri) and as such it would fall under S. 17 (1) (d), Registration Act. S. 17 (2) (vi), which exempts certain classes of decrees from registration, applies only to documents falling under Cls. (b) and (c) of S. 17 and not to those falling under Cl. (d) of that Section. Moreover, even under S. 17 (2) (vi) the agreement would have required registration as it comprised property which was extraneous to the subject-matter of the application of Mahni, which alone was before the Board. It seems to me therefore that the agreement recorded by the Board cannot be received in evidence for want of registration. I therefore uphold the decision of the Court below dismissing the application for execution of the said agreement on this ground, and dismiss the appeal. In view of all the circumstances I leave the parties to bear their costs in this Court.

First Appeal No. 401 of 1937, Decided on 3rd June 1938, from decree of Sub-Judge, 1st Class, Amritsar, D/- 9th August 1937.

(a) Hindu Law—Religious endowment—Ceremonies of sankalp and samarpan are not essential — Intention of maker to divest and formal divesting are sufficient — On considering circumstances valid dedication held created.

According to the Hindu law as administered in British India, the formal religious ceremonies of sankalp and samarpan, though ordinarily performed among the orthodox Hindus, are not essential for the creation of a valid endowment for religious purposes. So long as there is a clear and unequivocal manifestation of intention to create a trust and there is a formal divesting of the ownership in the property on the part of the donor and vesting the same in another, or even in the donor himself as a trustee, that is to say, so long as there is a clear change in the tenure of the property with the intention on the part of the donor to devote it to religious or public purposes, dedication thereof must be deemed to be complete. The evidence of divestiture may be contemporaneous and the subsequent acts and conduct of the donor are irrelevant and cannot reinvest him: A I R 1934 Lah 771 and A I R 1935 Nag 35, Rel. on; A I R 1933 Lah 189 and A I R 1938 P C 73, Expl.; A I R 1933 Lah 833 and A I R 1937 Lah 106, Disting.

On more occasions than one, the dedicator declared in unequivocal terms that the house in question was set aside for the purpose of being used as a resting place for the marriage processions of the Khatris of the locality. More than one tablet was affixed on the house, the trend of all of which was to emphasize the wakf nature of the property. On the completion of the building the dedicator requested the Governor of the Punjab to perform its opening ceremony and further invited almost all the gentry of the place on that occasion and there made a dedication to the effect that the house had been set aside for the purposes mentioned above :

Held that in the face of these circumstances it could not be urged that the house was not wakf or that the dedication was bad in the eye of the law on account of its being indefinite and vague. Hence, the using by the son of the dedicator of a part of the house as his own residence and allowing the other portion to be used as a girls' school was counter to the wishes of the settlor and was thus a breach of trust. [P 659 C 1]

(b) Estoppel - Person with full knowledge of facts admitting wakf nature of house — He cannot be allowed to resile from that position.

Din Mohammad J. — This appeal has arisen out of a suit instituted by Diwan Ram Saran Das and four others, Khatri by caste, residents of Amritsar, against one Jai Dayal and his minor brother Madan Mohan, under S. 92, Civil P. C. The relief claimed was the removal of Jai Dayal from the managership of a house known as Janjghar, for the appointment of new trustees, for the settlement of a scheme for the future management of the said house and for rendition of accounts. It was alleged in the plaint that in 1923 the father of the defendants, Durga Das, built a house which he dedicated for the use of the marriage processions of the Khatri residents of the locality and that on the completion of the building he placed inscriptions on the front wall of the house explaining the object of the dedication. The house was so used during the life-time of Durga Das and for some time after his death which took place on 30th October 1929. But a year and a half prior to the institution of the suit, Jai Dayal took possession of the house and while he installed himself in one portion of the house, he leased the other portion as his personal property, thus diverting the house altogether from its original use. The minor defendant was impleaded merely on account of his relationship with Durga Das but no relief was asked for as against him.

Jai Dayal could not be served in the first instance and it was consequently prayed by the plaintiffs that service may be effected on his agent, Bhagwan Das. Notice was served on Bhagwan Das but he objected that he was not empowered to receive any summons on his behalf. The Subordinate Judge however repelled this contention and called upon him to submit his pleas which he did. He repudiated the claim of the plaintiffs and further raised several objections on technical grounds. On 27th July 1936, one Sahib Ditta appeared on behalf of Jai Dayal and described as his mukhtar-i-am. His statement was recorded before issues and in that statement he admitted that Durga Das had dedicated the house in suit for the purposes specified in the plaint, but he contended that the property was being used in conformity with the directions of Durga Das and that consequently no interference with the defendant's management was called for. On the very same day, Lala Dulat Ram Tandan, counsel for Bhagwan Das, made a statement questioning the locus standi of Sahib Ditta to make any statement on behalf of Jai Dayal. An issue was framed on this point along with certain other technical issues. The other issues were decided against the defendant but the issue in regard to Sahib Ditta's locus standi was left undisposed of. On 25th November 1936, Jai Dayal himself appeared in the case and put in his pleas traversing all the allegations made by the plaintiffs and raising other formal issues in the case. On the pleadings of the parties the following issues were framed :

(1) Is the property in dispute wakf property and if so, what is the nature of the wakf? (2) Has there been any breach of the terms of the wakf and if so, what; and what is its effect? (3) Did defendant realize any rent from the property in suit and is he liable to render accounts to the plaintiffs and if so, what amount is due? (4) Are all plaintiffs not taking interest in the suit and if so, what is its effect? (5) What is the jurisdictional value of the suit? (6) Are plaintiffs entitled to sue if Issues 1 and 2 are proved? (7) Relief?

Issues 4 to 6 were not pressed at the time of the arguments. Issue 2 was decided against the defendant and it was held that the defendant in using the building for his own residence and in letting out the rest of the building to a Pathshala was committing a breach of the trust and that consequently the plaintiffs were entitled to the relief prayed for, if it was held that the property was wakf. Issue 3 was found against the plaintiffs. The main controversy raged round Issue 1 and after discussing all the pros and cons of the matter, the Subordinate Judge found in favour of the plaintiffs on that question and consequently authorized a respectable member of the Khatri brotherhood of the name of Rai Sahib Lala Labh Chand to call a meeting of the Khatri of Amritsar and elect a committee of five persons to take charge of the property in suit. Jai Dayal, defendant, has appealed.

Counsel for the appellant has contended that there was no valid wakf inasmuch as Durga Das never divested himself of the ownership in the property and also for the reason that his declaration was vague. He has further urged that the occupying of a portion of the house by Jai Dayal in the capacity of a supervisor of the building and his allowing the remaining part of the building to be used by a girls' school are not inconsistent with the object of the wakf and no case therefore has been established to justify his removal especially as he belongs to the founder's family. The main questions involved in this case therefore are: (1) Whether there was a valid dedication made by Durga Das, and (2) whether the circumstances brought on the record justify the eviction of Jai Dayal from the house and the settlement of a scheme for its future management on the lines proposed by the Subordinate Judge. There is abundant evidence on the record to show that on more occasions than one Durga Das declared in unequivocal terms that the house in question was set aside for the purpose of being used as a resting place for the marriage processions of the Khatri of the locality. More than one tablet was affixed on the house, the trend of all of which is to emphasize the wakf nature of the property. For example, one of them says that the house is a Khatri Shadighar built by Durga Das. Another reiterates the object of the construction of the building and lays down certain conditions under which it is to be used, one of which is that it can be used on the occasions of marriages or for any other laudable purpose for seven days and that for any time over and above that period, special permission is required. The third inscription again stresses the wakf nature of the property and adds that no person is entitled to sell, mortgage or dispose of the house in any other manner.

lagan, Governor of the Punjab, to perform its opening ceremony and further invited almost all the gentry of the place on that occasion and, there in the presence of all, made an unambiguous declaration to the effect that the house had been set aside for the purposes mentioned above. Throughout the period that Durga Das lived, he used the building in conformity with his declaration and never diverted it from its original purpose. A manager had been appointed by him to look after its maintenance and a chaukidar to keep watch on it. Marriage parties had to deposit Rs. 10 in advance to meet the expenditure on the supply of electricity and water and this state of affairs continued until some time after the death of Durga Das.

One day before his death, Durga Das made a will in which again the wakf nature of the property was emphasized in the clearest possible terms. While making the disposal of his properties, he stated that it should be remembered that he had already dedicated for charitable purposes the house in suit which was known as Janjghar. In order to ensure that it should not be misused, he referred to the inscriptions which had already been placed on it and reiterated his declaration that the house in suit should remain wakf for ever. Even Jai Dayal defendant himself, while entering into an agreement with his own minor brother of 17th August 1930 in regard to the property left by Durga Das, undertook to abide by the will of their father dated 29th October 1929, and to accept it in its entirety. Not only that, he even in the body of that agreement referred to the Janjghar in suit and declared that it was wakf and that it should remain so permanently. On the same day, the two brothers executed another agreement to refer certain disputes arising between them to the arbitration of one Lala Radha Kishen and one of the points in dispute was stated to be as to which of the secular properties of theirs should be attached to the house in suit to meet the necessary expenditure involved in its maintenance and up-keep. It was also suggested there that a committee should be set up and regular office-bearers nominated to look after the building. On 24th February 1932, the arbitrator made an award in which he declared the Janjghar to be wakf, but did not consider it necessary to appoint any outside committee to manage the building, inasmuch as no permanent income accrued from it.

In the face of the circumstances mentioned above, it cannot be urged that the house was not wakf or that the dedication made by Durga Das was bad in the eye of the law on account of its being indefinite and vague. Counsel for the appellant referred to A I R 1933 Lah 189¹ and A I R 1938 P C 73² in support of his contention that unless the sankalp and samarpan ceremonies are undergone, no valid dedication can take place under the Hindu law. It is true that in A I R 1933 Lah 189¹ some remarks were made which may be susceptible of the interpretation put upon it by the appellant's counsel, but as explained in 16 Lah 85,³ the learned Judges who were responsible for that decision did not intend to lay down any such rigid rule. The Hon'ble the Acting Chief Justice, who is a member of this Bench, was a party to that decision and he suggests that what was intended to be laid down in A I R 1933 Lah 189¹ has been rightly appreciated by the learned Judges in 16 Lah 85.³ There it has been clearly stated that according to the Hindu law as administered in British India, the formal religious ceremonies of sankalp and samarpan, though ordinarily performed among the orthodox Hindus are not essential for the creation of a valid endowment for religious purposes. Jai Lal J. who delivered the judgment says :

The true meaning of the law, in my opinion, is that so long as there is a clear and unequivocal manifestation of intention to create a trust of this description and there is a formal divesting of the ownership in the property on the part of the donor and vesting of the same in another or even in the donor himself as a trustee, that is to say, so long as there is a clear change in the tenure of the property with the intention on the part of the donor to devote it to religious or public purposes, dedication thereof must, in my opinion, be deemed to be complete.

I am in respectful agreement with the principle enunciated above, and I cannot think of any other case where the principles laid down above could be applied with greater force. In A I R 1935 Nag 35⁴ the same view was taken by the Additional Judicial Commissioners who further said that divesting of ownership which is necessary in the case of such dedications, can be done by a clear expression of intention to dedicate the property and to renounce ownership coupled with acts showing appropriation of the income of the property to the purposes of the endowment. Nothing that is laid down in A I R 1938 P C 73² helps the appellant in my opinion. Their Lordships quoted with approval the following passage from the judgment of this Court under appeal :

It is not disputed that for the foundation of a charitable endowment by a Hindu in this Province no writing is required. What is necessary is that the purpose be clearly specified and that the property intended for the endowment should be set apart as dedicated to that purpose. It is necessary that the donor should divest himself of the property.

Their Lordships further added that the evidence of divestiture may be contemporaneous and the subsequent acts and conduct of the donor are irrelevant and cannot re-invest him. As stated above, Durga Das made even His Excellency the Governor of the Punjab to bear witness to his dedication and gave the whole world to understand not only by inscriptions but by both verbal and written declarations that he no longer possessed the house as secular property and that it was not subject to the incidents of sale, mortgage, etc. as secular property is. This divestiture does, on the authority of the Privy Council judgment cited above, complete the act of dedication and even if Durga Das or his descendants subsequently conducted themselves in a manner which was inconsistent with the original dedication, that would be immaterial. Counsel for the appellant has further referred to 14 Lah 827⁵ and A I R 1937 Lah 106⁶ in support of the proposition that a dedication made in vague terms was bad in law. With the proposition in the abstract no one can disagree, but the question is whether the present case comes within the mischief of the rule. In 14 Lah 827⁵ the three objects of the trust created by a will had to be read disjunctively so that the trustees had the discretionary power to apply the funds to any one of the three objects to the exclusion of the other two or in such proportion as they thought fit, and one of the three objects of the trust was invalid. It was on that basis that it was held that the whole bequest failed. This is not the case here. Moreover the House of Lords judgment which was relied upon in that case clearly stated that if the word 'charitable' had stood alone, the devise would have been sufficiently definite and valid and as remarked above, the present declaration had been made in these terms. In A I R 1937 Lah 106,⁶ it was said, and rightly so, that a trust by way of dharmarth cannot be enforced. In the present case the word 'dharmarth' is not used to indicate the object of the trust but to explain the nature of the property, and therefore that principle does not hold good.

As stated in A I R 1935 Mad 1066⁷ and A I R 1926 Lah 650⁸ a party cannot be allowed to approbate and reprobate. In the two agreements entered into between the two brothers on 17th August 1930, Jai Dayal had with full knowledge of the facts in unmistakable terms admitted the wakf nature of the house in suit and he cannot now be allowed to resile from that position.

I have no hesitation therefore in holding that the property in suit was set apart for ever for the use of the marriage processions of the Khatris of the locality and that it cannot be diverted now from its original purpose. The appellant in using a part of it as his own residence and allowing the other portion to be used as a girls' school has run counter to the wishes of the settlor and has thus committed a breach of trust. In the circumstances, the order made by the Subordinate Judge was the only proper order to be made. It will of course be open to Rai Sahib Lala Labh Chand, Honorary Magistrate, to consider the claim of Jai Dayal to be a member of the committee which may be set up to manage the building in suit, but I think it will not be advisable to force his hands in any manner. I would therefore affirm the decision of the Court below and dismiss this appeal with costs.

First Appeal No. 68 of 1937, Decided on 29th November 1937, from order of Dist. Judge, Attock at Campbellpur, D/. 6th February 1937.

 Civil P. C. (1908), S. 47—Suit by judgment-debtor to set aside sale held in execution on ground of fraud in respect of application under O. 21, R. 89—Matter falls under S. 47 and cannot be agitated by separate suit.

A judgment-debtor brought a suit for setting aside a sale of his land held in execution on the ground that his sister made an application under O. 21, R. 89, Civil P. C., and had deposited the necessary amount but that this application was fraudulently removed by the decree-holder and the sale was obtained without this application being brought to the notice of the Court or any decision given thereon :

Held that the matter really was within the provisions of S. 47, Civil P. C. and could only be decided under that Section and not by a separate suit. Judgment.— This is a second appeal arising out of a suit instituted by the plaintiff Shamas Din for setting aside a sale of his land which had been effected in execution proceedings relating to a decree against him. The trial Court held that the suit was barred by the provisions of S. 47, Civil P. C., as well as under O. 21, R. 92 (3), Civil P. C. On appeal the learned District Judge however came to the conclusion that the suit was based on ground of fraud which was wider than the grounds which could be urged in an application under O. 21, R. 90, Civil P. C., and therefore the suit was competent. He accordingly accepted the appeal and remanded the suit for re-decision. From this order of remand the present appeal has been preferred by the defendant. The learned counsel for the appellant urged that there were two grounds on which the plaintiff had based his claim, namely (1) that the notice as regards the sale was not served on him when he was in jail and the sale was effected without his knowledge, and (2) that on 2nd January 1935 the plaintiff's sister made an application under O. 21, R. 89, Civil P. C. and had deposited the necessary amount, but that this application was fraudulently removed by the decree-holder and the sale was obtained without this application being brought to the notice of the Court or any decision given thereon.

As regards the first point the learned District Judge has himself held that a separate suit would be barred by the provisions of O. 21, R. 92 (3), Civil P. C., and it is therefore unnecessary to consider that point. The learned counsel for the appellant has however urged that the learned District Judge was not right in holding that the other ground of fraud in respect of the application under O. 21, R. 89 could be agitated by a separate suit. He contended that the matter really was within the provisions of S. 47, Civil P. C., and could only be decided under that Section and not by a separate suit. In support of this contention the learned counsel relied on a decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council reported in 19 Cal 683.¹ The learned counsel for the respondent on the other hand contended that S. 47 was not applicable, as the sale had already been confirmed and a third party, namely the auction-purchaser, was interested. But neither of these contentions appears to me to have force, in view of the Privy Council decision referred to above. In that case also the sale had been confirmed and it was held that the mere fact that an auction-purchaser was interested was no ground for holding that S. 47, Civil P. C., could not apply. The learned District Judge has relied on a ruling of the Allahabad High Court reported in A I R 1925 All 146.² But in that case the sale had been held by the Collector, apparently under Sch. 3, Civil P. C., and S. 47 was held to be inapplicable. In my judgment the decision of the trial Court was correct. I therefore accept the appeal and setting aside the order of remand passed by the learned District Judge restore the decree of the trial Court with costs throughout.

Criminal Revn. No. 1 of 1938, Decided on 28th March 1938, case reported by Addl. Sess. Judge, Lahore, No. 60 of 1937, for orders of High Court.

(a) Punjab Motor Vehicles Rules, R. 23—Maximum load has not been provided for private lorries—Owner of private lorry carrying load heavier than its carrying capacity cannot be convicted under R. 23.

Unless the wording of the rules is beyond doubt, the manufacturers' specifications regarding maximum load which can be carried cannot be read as part of the rules made by the Punjab Government. When the rule-making authority has deliberately made a distinction between private lorries and public lorries and has specified that public lorries shall not carry more than a specified amount of weight, it is reasonable to assume that it was not intended that any such limitation should apply to vehicles which are not public motor vehicles. Hence the owner of private lorries cannot be convicted under R. 23 of Punjab Motor Vehicles Rules read with S. 16, Motor Vehicles Act, on the ground that his lorry was carrying a load in excess of its carrying capacity: Criminal Revn. No. 519 of 1932, Rel. on. [P 692 C 1, 2]

Order.—The learned Additional Sessions Judge of Lahore has made this reference and thirteen others which are based on similar facts and the same point of law is involved in each of the fourteen cases. In each of these cases the owners of private lorries were challaned by the police and convicted under R. 23 of the Punjab Motor Vehicles Rules read with S. 16, Punjab Motor Vehicles Act on the allegation that their lorries were carrying a load in excess of their carrying capacity. In each case the Magistrate, who tried the cases summarily, inflicted a sentence of fine. The sole question that arises is whether any maximum load has been provided in the rules for private lorries. All lorries are either public or private and this distinction has been deliberately drawn in the rules framed under the Act. R. 23 under which the convictions have been registered is in the following terms :

Every motor vehicle shall be maintained in such a condition as to comply with the specifications and rules applying to the class of vehicle to which it belongs, and the owner thereof (and the driver if he drives the vehicle knowing that any rule is being contravened) shall be liable, in cases of breach of this rule, to the penalty imposed by S. 16 of the Act.

It will be seen that this rule merely enacts that vehicles should be maintained in accordance with the specifications and rules laid down by the rule-making authority. For each vehicle a permit is required and the forms for the application for a permit for different kinds of vehicles are given in Appx. 3 to the rules. Form A-2 is the relevant form for private lorries and form BB-2 is the relevant form for public motor vehicles. In form BB-2 a maximum load which may be carried by each vehicle is prescribed but in form A-2 there is no such provision. It is true that both in form A-2 and in form BB-2 as indeed also in form A-1, which is the relevant form for private motor cars, there is a column in which the carrying capacity of each vehicle has to be specified and this is usually taken from the manufacturers' specifications. It was urged by the learned counsel, who appeared before me for the Crown, that because the carrying capacity of private motor lorries was given in this form, any owner who loaded a vehicle in excess of this capacity was guilty of an offence inasmuch as R. 95 (b) laid down that all classes of motor vehicles should be maintained in such a condition as to prevent danger to the public or to any person riding in the vehicle. I am unable to accept this argument. To accept this contention would involve the proposition that if the manufacturers' specifications of a private motor car said that the carrying capacity of that car was five passengers, any owner who carried six or more passengers in it, for however short a time, was guilty of an offence. In the second place, this interpretation would amount to the creation of an offence by implication. Unless the wording of the rules is beyond doubt, the manufacturers' specifications cannot be read as part of the rules made by the Punjab Government. In the third place, when the rule-making authority has deliberately made a distinction between private lorries and public lorries and has specified that public lorries shall not carry more than a specified amount of weight, it is reasonable to assume that it was not intended that any such limitation should apply to vehicles which are not public motor vehicles. Fourthly, the interpretation sought to be placed by the learned counsel for the Crown involves a question of fact, whether in each case there is danger to the public or to a passenger by overloading. The Crown would have to prove the existence of such danger in each case and this would place an intolerable burden on the shoulders of the prosecution. It is absurd to imagine that the rule-making authority left the matter in this condition when a simple rule or a clause in the application for a permit could have put the position beyond doubt.

Assuming however that the rules can be read in the manner suggested by the learned counsel for the prosecution, it is obvious that when two equally reasonable interpretations are possible, the penal provision should be so construed as not to place a burden on the subject. A similar point arose in Criminal Revn. No. 519 of 1932 before Coldstream J., where the petitioner found to have been driving a lorry with a heavier load than its recorded capacity was held not to have been guilty of an offence. For the reasons stated above, I accept the recommendation of the learned Additional Sessions Judge and set aside the conviction in each of the fourteen cases referred by him to the High Court. The fines, if paid, will be refunded.

Order. — This is an application for stay of execution by way of arrest. An affidavit has been put in by the decree-holder in para. 3 of which it is stated that the judgment-debtor has mortgaged and sold all his available property and hence has made the execution of the decree impossible. In para. 6 it is stated that the appellant is delaying the printing of the record. This allegation does not appear to be correct. In para. 7 it is stated that loss will be caused to the decree-holder. On the application for arrest only notice has been issued by the Court to the judgment-debtor to show cause. Under the new Act arrest is not possible unless there has been some contumacious conduct on the part of the judgment-debtor and mere inability to pay does not justify arrest. At present, I cannot decide whether there has been any contumacy in the conduct of the judgment-debtor but, I see no reason why there should be any stay of the proceedings for arrest. The Court below can decide whether it is true as alleged that the judgment-debtor has done away with the entire property available and whether the proceeds of the alienations are available for the discharge of this debt. The judgment-debtor is unable to deposit security for the decretal amount. I therefore dismiss the petition for stay. No order as to costs of this petition.

ORDER OF REFERENCE

Blacker J.—This is a petition against the order of a Magistrate upheld by the learned Additional Sessions Judge of Lahore refusing to summon certain defence witnesses in a case under S. 500, Penal Code, unless their expenses were deposited by the accused petitioner. On behalf of the petitioner it is contended that it is settled by a string of judgments of this Court that in warrant cases the Magistrate should summon defence witnesses at Government expense. The judgments quoted are: A I R 1929 Lah 23,¹ 108 I C 907,² A I R 1932 Lah 481,³ *A I R 1936 Lah 919*⁴ and A I R 1937 Lah 458.⁵ Faced with this mass of authority, I am rather diffident about taking the opposite view. But one thing should be noticed and that is that none of the last four authorities have done anything but merely followed the first. It is necessary, therefore to go back to the original case, A I R 1929 Lah 23.¹ The case proceeds on the ground that it has been laid down as a rule by the Lahore High Court that in a warrant case the costs of an accused's necessary witnesses should ordinarily be borne by Government. The authority quoted is Rules and Orders of the High Court, Vol. 2, Chapter 6, Para. 67 (now Vol. 3, Chap. 1-D, R. 14). The actual words are:

In ordinary warrant cases however the cost of causing the attendance of accused's necessary witnesses is usually borne by Government.

With the utmost possible respect to the very great learning of the Hon'ble Judge whose ruling this is, it would appear to me that the sentence which he quotes occurs in a part of Rules and Orders which are not really rules of the Court but are more in the nature of pieces of advice by this Court to the subordinate Courts as to the manner in which they should exercise their functions. In some cases the advice has statutory sanction behind it; in others it has not. This is one of the cases where it does not appear to have any statutory sanction behind it. Reference should be made to S. 544, Criminal P. C., which runs as follows :

Subject to any rules made by the Local Government, any Criminal Court may, if it thinks fit, order payment on the part of Government, of the reasonable expenses of any complainant or witness attending for the purposes of any enquiry, trial or other proceeding before such Court under this Code.

As the statute itself has given the power to make rules not to the High Court but to the Local Government, any rules made by the High Court would, I think, be ultra vires, especially if they are inconsistent with the rules made by Government. Now Government has in fact made such rules and they are contained in Chap. 9, Vol. 3 of the Rules and Orders. These rules from their heading are shown to be made under S. 544 and were in force as far back as 1st July 1898. The first of these rules runs as follows :

The Criminal Courts are authorized to pay, at the rates specified below, the expenses of complainants or witnesses—(1) in cases in which the prosecution is instituted or carried on by or under the orders or with the sanction of the Government or of any Judge, Magistrate, or any other public officer, or in which it shall appear to the presiding officer to be directly in furtherance of the interests of the public service ; (2) in all cases entered in Col. 5 of Sch. 2 appended to the Code of Criminal Procedure, as not bailable ; (3) in all cases which are cognizable by the police and (4) of witnesses in all cases in which they are compelled by the Magistrate, of his own motion, to attend under S. 540, Criminal P. C.

It seems to me that the only fair interpretation of this rule, which makes no distinction between prosecution witnesses and defence witnesses is that Government by exercising its power of restriction, which it is authorized to exercise by S. 544 of the Code, has limited the cases in which Magistrates may pay the expenses of witnesses to those mentioned above. If the rule framed by the High Court—if it was indeed intended to be a rule—lays down the contrary, that is to say that ordinarily the expenses of witnesses are to be paid by Government in every warrant case, it appears to me to be ultra vires. It has been urged before me that the rule framed by Government is inequitable. I am very tempted to agree. But as it is framed under the rule-making power given to the Local Government by the statute itself, it has statutory force and whatever may be a Judge's opinion about it, he is bound to follow it. That being so, my decision in this case would be that as the case is neither instituted by Government, nor non-bailable nor cognizable by the police, Government cannot be made to pay the expenses of the witnesses and the petition must be dismissed. But, as I have said, there is considerable weight of authority in favour of the opposite view, and I therefore think that this is not a matter which should be decided by a Judge sitting singly. I accordingly recommend that it be laid before a larger Bench.

Addison J. — The plaintiff firm sued Chhabil Das and Mam Raj for Rs. 10,242, principal and interest, on the basis of two promissory notes, dated 21st January 1932 and 21st July 1933, for Rs. 8000 and 720 respectively. The suit has been decreed and Mam Raj has appealed against the decision making him personally liable. Mam Raj is the nephew of Chhabil Das. The real defence of Mam Raj was that he was not joint with his uncle. The Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion on the evidence that he was joint and on this finding held him liable along with Chhabil Das, although the promissory notes were signed only by Chhabil Das. The law on the subject is not in doubt. It is stated on p. 259 of Mulla's Hindu Law (Edn. 8) as follows:

As regards the other coparceners, they are liable only to the extent of their interest in the family property, unless, in the case of adult co-parceners, the contract sued upon, though purporting to have been entered into by the manager alone, is in reality one to which they are actual contracting parties, or one to which they can be treated as being contracting parties by reason of their conduct, or one which they have subsequently ratified.

It is not alleged that Mam Raj subsequently ratified the contract. While there is no finding of the Subordinate Judge that the contract was one to which he could be treated as being a contracting party by reason of his conduct, it is true that, in the course of his judgment when he was coming to the finding that they were joint, he stated, as one of the circumstances going to prove this, the fact that he also used to work at the shop, but that by itself is obviously not such conduct as would cause him to be treated as one of the contracting parties. The same view has been taken in two cases in 17 Lah 311¹ and 17 Lah 395.² There are many other authorities to the same effect. We therefore accept the appeal with costs and, modifying the decree of the Subordinate Judge with respect to Mam Raj, direct that Mam Raj is only liable to the extent of his share in the joint Hindu family property.

One M obtained a decree for possession against R on 12th February 1927 and took out execution. He was however obstructed in taking possession by B who was in possession as a result of the decision of the trial Court in a suit between B and R. M's application under O. 21, R. 97 was dismissed on 12th June 1928 on the ground that B was in lawful possession of the land under a decree of a Civil Court. Meanwhile R had appealed against the decision of the trial Court in the suit between B and R and the High Court on 16th January 1929 held that R was the lawful owner of the property. B preferred an appeal to the Privy Council. M filed an application on 23rd October 1935 for execution of his decree for possession :

Held further that if the previous application for execution was taken to be in suspense, then it was incumbent on M to take a step-in-aid of the execution every three years from 12th June 1928 till 23rd October 1935. [P 696 C 2]

Judgment. — Munshi Lal obtained a decree for possession of land against Brij Rajsaran Singh on 12th February 1927. On the 30th March the decree-holder took out execution. He could not however obtain possession of the land in dispute as it was reported to the executing Court that persons other than the judgment-debtor, namely Basant Singh and others, were in possession of the property. The decree-holder thereupon presented an application under O. 21, R. 97, Civil P. C., complaining of resistance or obstruction by Basant Singh and others, and asking the Court to investigate the matter and to remove the obstructors. Evidence was recorded by the executing Court, and on 12th June 1928, the executing Court made a final order to the effect that Basant Singh and others were in lawful possession of the land in dispute under a decree of a Civil Court and that as they were not parties to the suit brought by Munshi Lal against Brij Rajsaran Singh, they could not be removed. The application of the decree-holder against the obstructors was dismissed. It was also ordered that the file relating to the execution of the decree may be consigned to the record room. From 12th June 1928 till 23rd October 1935 the decree-holder took no action. On the latter date he presented an application for the execution of his decree dated 12th February 1927. The judgment-debtor raised an objection to the effect that this application was barred by limitation. The executing Court upheld the objection and dismissed the application for execution. On appeal the learned District Judge held that the application dated 23rd October 1935 was within time. Against this order the judgment-debtor has preferred a second appeal to this Court.

The application presented by the decree-holder under O. 21, R. 97, was dismissed by the Court under O. 21, R. 99, on 12th June 1928. It was open therefore to the decree-holder to institute a suit under O. 21 R. 103, to establish his right and to make Basant Singh and others defendants in this case. This suit could be instituted within a period of one year from 12th June 1928. The decree-holder failed to institute any such suit and Basant Singh and others continued to be in possession of the property in dispute. It appears that the property in dispute originally belonged to one Khushal Singh. On the death of the widow of Khushal Singh, Basant Singh and others laid a claim to the property. Brij Rajsaran Singh, judgment-debtor in the present case, also claimed the same property as the adopted son of the last male-holder. The trial Court passed a decree in favour of Basant Singh and others for possession of the property. Brij Rajsaran Singh appealed to the Allahabad High Court and the High Court held that Brij Rajsaran Singh was validly adopted by Khushal Singh and that he was entitled to the property in dispute. The suit of Basant Singh and others was dismissed with costs by the High Court. The judgment of the High Court was delivered on 16th January 1929. So far as the Courts in India are concerned, it was therefore finally decided in January 1929 that Brij Rajsaran Singh was the lawful heir of Khushal Singh, the last male holder. It was incumbent on the present decree-holder to institute his application for execution at the latest within three years of 16th January 1929. The right to apply certainly accrued to him on that date if not earlier. His application is therefore clearly barred under Art. 181, Limitation Act.

The lower Appellate Court relied on A I R 1925 All 572,¹ a Single Bench ruling, but this decision was set aside by the Letters Patent Bench in A I R 1926 All 409.² It was held in the last case that where there is an obstacle to the execution proceedings, for instance, the order that execution proceedings be stayed until the decision of another regular suit, as soon as that obstacle is swept away by a Court of competent jurisdiction, the duty again arises upon the decree-holder to take execution proceedings within three years, notwithstanding the fact that the judgment-debtor may have in the interval filed an appeal. In the present case the decree-holder had no right to await the result of an appeal to their Lordships of the Privy Council by Basant Singh and others. The learned counsel for the respondent contended that the order dated 12th June 1928 did not amount to a dismissal of his execution application and that his execution application must be taken to be in suspense all the time from 1928 to 1935 and that the present application may be regarded as a request for the revival of the previous application. This contention is also untenable. If the previous application is taken to be in suspense then it was incumbent on the decree-holder to take a step in aid of the execution every three years from 12th June 1928 till 23rd October 1935. For the reasons given above, I accept this appeal, set aside the order of the learned District Judge dated 17th July 1937 and restore that of the Senior Subordinate Judge dated 4th February 1937 dismissing the present application for execution as time-barred. Having regard to all the circumstances, I leave the parties to bear their own costs throughout.

(1898), S. 498—Appeal decided by High Court—Leave for appeal to Privy Council granted by Judicial Committee—Power of High Court to grant application for bail pending decision of appeal to Privy Council depends upon direction by Privy Council to accused to apply to High Court for bail.

Once the High Court has passed orders in a criminal appeal, it becomes functus officio and has no seisin in the case. This seisin may be revived when the Judicial Committee has granted leave to appeal. The power of High Court to deal with an application for bail pending decision of appeal to Privy Council depends on whether they have been directed by the Privy Council to do so or not. Mohammad Monir, Assistant Advocate-

Order. — The applicant, Bawa Faqir Singh, an advocate of this Court, was convicted by a Special Magistrate under Ss. 467, 471 and 120-B, I. P. C., and sentenced to five years' rigorous imprisonment. On appeal to the High Court he was acquitted of the charge under S. 467, I. P. C., but the conviction under the other Sections and the sentence were maintained. He has now obtained leave to appeal from the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, a copy of whose order is before me. He applies for bail pending the decision of this appeal. The first question before me is whether I have power to consider this application. Mr. Sleem for the petitioner relies upon a recent Calcutta case, Babulal v. Emperor.¹ This case came before the Calcutta High Court on two occasions and the judgment of the Division Bench on the first occasion is reported in A I R 1936 Cal 809.¹ There the learned Judges held that between the time that the High Court had finally dealt with a criminal case and the time when leave to appeal had been granted by the Privy Council, the High Court was functus officio and had no power to grant bail. They therefore at that stage refused to grant bail. Subsequently however, the petitioner in that case obtained leave to appeal from the Privy Council and Mr. Sleem has laid before the Court a certified copy of the order of a Single Bench Judge granting bail to the petitioner in that case. The order in question however is extremely brief and in no way discusses the question of jurisdiction which had been left open by the Division Bench. Counsel has also referred to a case, which was a Full Bench judgment of the Madras High Court in 24 Mad 161.² In that case the Madras High Court held again in a very brief order that they had jurisdiction to make the order and released the accused on bail pending the final decision of the Privy Council.

The petition has been opposed on behalf of the Crown by the learned Assistant Advocate-General. He has cited the Full Bench case of the Punjab Chief Court in 15 P R 1908.³ In that case the Punjab Chief Court decided that they had no power to grant bail and dismissed the petition. The Court based its decision on the argument that S. 498 could not be construed without reference to the other Sections of the Code, the principle underlying which being that only the Court to which an appeal is preferred can admit to bail. In 49 All 247,⁴ a Division Bench judgment of the Allahabad High Court, the Allahabad High Court held that S. 498 did not apply but that it had inherent powers under S. 561-A and granted bail. The learned Assistant Advocate-General however points out that this view that the Court has inherent powers under S. 561-A has not been accepted by other High Courts. He has referred to a very recent judgment of a Division Bench of the Nagpur High Court in 167 I C 373.⁵ The whole case-law on the subject has been very carefully reviewed in that judgment. There the learned Judges held that they had no jurisdiction. That case however is different to the present one in one essential particular and that is that in that case the Privy Council had not yet granted leave to appeal ; the stage merely was that the petitioner had expressed his intention of filing an appeal before the Privy Council. It seems to me clear on a consideration of this case that once the High Court has passed orders in a criminal appeal, it becomes functus officio and has no seisin in the case. This seisin may be revived when the Judicial Committee has granted leave to appeal. In the Nagpur case however, the Bench pointed out that there was a further distinction between a case in which the Privy Council in granting leave to appeal had also given a direction to the appellant to apply to the High Court for bail, and one in which there was no such direction. If I may say so with the utmost respect, I am very greatly impressed by dictum of the learned Judges of the Nagpur High Court that the power of the High Court to deal with an application of this sort depends on whether they have been directed by the Privy Council to do so or not. They have pointed out that once leave is granted and seisin taken, S. 498 expressly empowers the High Court to act in the matter not on its own motion but on behalf of the Privy Council and that its jurisdiction to that limited extent revives.

The highest judicial Tribunal in the Empire is then seized of the proceedings and it directs a Court subordinate to it, as it has every right to do, to perform a function which it has authority to perform under this Section.

This appears to me to be the answer to the question of jurisdiction. In the Madras case referred to above, the Privy Council had directed the petitioner to apply for bail to the Madras High Court and by this direction it clearly delegated to the Madras High Court its own undoubted inherent power to grant bail. In the Calcutta case,¹ on which Mr. Sleem has relied, the order of the learned Single Bench Judge, which he has produced, makes no mention whatever of this point and gives no reason why he has held that he is empowered to grant bail. There is a passage in the petition for bail in this case, a copy of which has also been produced, in which it is stated that their Lordships advised application for bail to be made to the authorities in this country. It is therefore to be presumed that the learned Judge of the Calcutta High Court in that case held himself empowered to grant bail in consequence of this direction. In the present case there is no such direction before me. There is a similar statement in the petition in this case that the question of bail had been left "as usual" to this Court, but this is not borne out by any of the documents produced, i. e. a cable and a letter for the solicitors, both of which are silent on the subject. I am therefore of opinion, after considering the authorities to which I have referred above, that this High Court has not now power to grant bail in this matter, unless it is directed to consider the petitioner's application for bail by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council which has given him leave to appeal. Holding therefore that I have no power to grant bail at present, I dismiss the application with the remark that it can, in my opinion, be revived, if the petitioner obtains and produces any direction from their Lordships of the Privy Council in the matter, which would authorize this Court to go into the question of bail.

A pleader who puts in an application on behalf of a litigant acts for him and cannot therefore do so, unless he is authorized in writing by him. While R. 1 of O. 3, mentions three functions of a pleader, viz. 'appearing,' 'applying' or 'acting' sub-rule (1) and sub-rule (2) of R. 4 merely deal with 'acting' and 'pleading' respectively; but that does not indicate that 'applying' is not covered by 'acting.' 'To apply' is to do something more than to 'appear' or 'to plead.' It is to take some active step on behalf of a person and thus to act for him, 'Applying' therefore is included in 'acting' and this is why no separate provision has been made by the Legislature in relation to this function of a pleader. To hold otherwise would lead to absurd results. R. 4 of O. 3 being silent on the point of applying, any pleader without any authority from a litigant and without putting in any memorandum of appearance would be in a position to present any application on his behalf. ORDER OF REFERENCE

Tek Chand J. — This petition for revision raises a question of general importance which, I think, should be authoritatively decided by a larger Bench. The facts briefly are that the respondent, Mrs. Mary Minck, instituted a suit against the defendant for declaration of a right of way and issue of a perpetual injunction. For the conduct of this case the plaintiff engaged Bawa Faqir Singh, advocate, who presented the plaint and conducted proceedings till November 1936. The next hearing of the case was fixed for 3rd December 1936; but a day before that date, Bawa Faqir Singh was convicted in a criminal case and committed to prison. The plaintiff was in England at the time and her local attorney, Mr. A. Minck, was not aware of the conviction of Bawa Faqir Singh. When the case was called on 3rd December, there was no appearance on behalf of the plaintiff and the suit was dismissed in default under O. 9, R. 8, Civil P. C. On 23rd December 1936, an application purporting to be under O. 9, R. 9, and S. 151, Civil P. C., was presented by Mr. Kali Sharn, pleader, who described himself as "counsel for the plaintiff." This application was not signed or verified by the plaintiff or her attorney, nor was it accompanied by a vakalatnama in favour of Mr. Kali Sharn from either of them. The Subordinate Judge fixed 4th January 1937 for the usual kaifiyat by the office. On that date a vakalatnama executed by Mr. A. Minck in favour of Mr. Kali Sharn was filed in Court.

This vakalatnama bears the date "4th January 1936," which is admittedly a mistake for "4th January 1937," as the court-fee stamp, which it bears, was purchased on that date. Notice of the application for restoration was issued to the opposite party, on whose behalf an objection was taken at the next hearing that there was no proper presentation of the application within 30 days from the date of dismissal prescribed by law for making such applications. It was urged that under O. 3, R. 4, Mr. Kali Sharn could not 'act' on behalf of the plaintiff on 23rd December 1936, as on that date he had no vakalatnama in writing from the plaintiff or her authorized agent. The Subordinate Judge has held that for the purpose of making an application for restoration of the suit, it was not necessary for the pleader to file a written vakalatnama from the plaintiff, and that "oral instructions" of the plaintiff's attorney were sufficient. The defendant has preferred a petition for revision of this order and has contended that the view of the law taken by the Court below is wrong, and that the order restoring the suit was ultra vires, as it had been passed on an application which could not be considered to have been properly made before 4th January 1937, when it was time-barred. That a revision lies from such an order is admitted by the learned counsel for the respondent, and there is ample authority for it: see 7 Lah 161,¹ 107 I C 395,² A I R 1926 Lah 344,³ A I R 1926 Lah 642,⁴ A I R 1936 Lah 618⁵ and A I R 1934 Lah 231.⁶ The real question in dispute is one of the correct interpretation of R. 4 of O. 3, which lays down that:

No pleader shall act for any person in any Court, unless he has been appointed for the purpose by such person by a document in writing, signed by such person or by his recognized agent, or by some other person duly authorized by, or under, a power of attorney to make such appointment.

The word 'act' is not defined in the Code. It was added by the Civil Procedure Code Second Amendment Act of 1926. It has been argued that 'acting' does not include "making an application" in the progress of the suit, or an application for restoration of a suit which had terminated by dismissal in default or in which a decree had been passed ex parte. It is urged that it has a different meaning in the Code than what it has in England, as in R. 1 of O. 3, a clear distinction has been made between 'appearance', 'application' and 'act', and in R. 4 it is with regard to 'acting' alone that authority in writing is necessary. In 13 Lah 775,⁷ I, sitting in Single Bench, held that 'acting' included "making an application to refer a pending suit to arbitration." The correctness of that decision, in so far as it relates to the interpretation of R. 4, has been challenged, and it appears that the practice in the Courts is not uniform. The question is not altogether free from difficulty and is of general importance, and should, I think, be authoritatively settled by a large Bench. I accordingly refer it to a Division Bench. An early date will be fixed.

Addison and Din Mohammad JJ.—The only question that falls to be determined in this case is whether an application for restoration of a suit dismissed for default can be made by a pleader whose appointment has not been made in writing. The relevant provisions dealing with the subject are O. 3, R. 1 and O. 3, R. 4, Civil P. C., the material portions of which for facility of reference are reproduced below: O. 3, R. 1, reads as follows :

Any appearance, application or act in or to any Court, required or authorized by law to be made or done by a party in such Court, may. . . . be made or done by a pleader appearing, applying or acting on his behalf.

Order 3, R. 4, is in the following terms :

(1). No pleader shall act for any person in any Court, unless he has been appointed for the purpose by such person by a document in writing signed by such person or by his recognized agent.

(2) : : : : :

(5) No pleader who has been engaged for the purpose of pleading only shall plead on behalf of any party, unless he has filed in Court a memorandum of appearance signed by himself and stating

It would appear that the two provisions of law taken together lay down that in order to be able to act, a pleader must be appointed by a document in writing and in order to be able to plead he should submit a memorandum of appearance stating the particulars prescribed by sub-r. (5). No other method of authorising a pleader to act or plead is mentioned in O. 3, Civil P. C. It has been frankly conceded by counsel for the respondent that to put in an application of the nature involved in this case is not "to plead." The only question therefore that remains to be considered is whether the putting in of such petition amounts to acting or whether, as contended by counsel for the respondent, it is neither pleading nor acting and has thus not been specifically provided for in the Civil Procedure Code. After hearing counsel on both sides we are disposed to think that a pleader who puts in an application on behalf of a litigant acts for him and cannot therefore do so unless he is authorized in writing by him. It is true that, while R. 1

of O. 3 mentions three functions of a pleader, viz. 'appearing,' 'applying' or 'acting,' sub-r. (1) and sub-r. (5) of R. 4 merely deal with 'acting' and 'pleading' respectively; but that does not indicate that 'applying' is not covered by 'acting.' 'To apply' is to do something more than 'to appear' or 'to plead.' It is to take some active step on behalf of a person and thus to act for him. 'Applying' therefore is included in 'acting' and this is why no separate provision has been made by the Legislature in relation to this function of a pleader. To hold otherwise would lead to absurd results. R. 4 of O. 3 being silent on the point of applying, any pleader without any authority from a litigant and without putting in any memorandum of appearance would be in a position to present any application on his behalf. This obviously could not be the intention of the Legislature. It is a recognized principle of law that statutes should be interpreted in a reasonable manner so as to avoid all absurd interpretations, and the only reasonable interpretation in these circumstances is the one that we propose to put on the Rule.

In the conclusion at which we have arrived we are supported by authority. In 4 Rang 249,⁸ a Division Bench of the Rangoon High Court held that an advocate 'acts' when he files a memorandum of appeal or cross-objections or any other document in a case (other than a memorandum of appearance) and that in all such cases a power of attorney is necessary.

This ruling was followed by a single Judge of this Court in a case reported in 17 Lah 610⁹ where it was held that an appeal presented by an advocate other than the one in whose favour the appellant's power of attorney was given, is not properly presented and cannot be entertained. To the same effect is 13 Lah 775⁷ where Tek Chand J. held that in view of the distinction drawn in sub-rules (1) and (5) of O. 3, R. 4, Civil P. C., between pleaders acting and pleading, though a pleader could, on filing the necessary memorandum of appearance, appear and plead for another pleader on behalf of the persons who had engaged the latter, he had no power to act on his behalf without a document in writing executed in the manner prescribed, and in referring a pending suit to arbitration the advocate 'acted' and did not merely 'plead.' In A I R 1937 Mad 239,¹⁰ a Division Bench remarked that applications for execution could be made only by a pleader who was authorized in writing to do so and that in the absence of any such authority in writing, the pleader was wanting in capacity or in competence to act. In 33 P L R 517,¹¹ a Division Bench of this Court, of which one of us was a member, held that if an appeal is presented on the last day of limitation with a telegram attached, authorizing counsel to file an appeal and the power of attorney is later on put in, the appeal cannot be regarded as having been presented within limitation. As against these authorities, counsel for the respondent has relied on 63 Cal 733,¹² A I R 1924 Pat 114,¹³ A I R 1926 Lah 223,¹⁴ 55 I C 990,¹⁵ 40 All 147¹⁶ and A I R 1926 Bom 336.¹⁷ But in our opinion, none of these authorities is in point. In 63 Cal 733¹² an application for execution had been made within three years of the decree by a pleader who did not file his power of attorney till after more than three years had elapsed from the date of the decree. The application was however duly signed and verified by the decree-holder himself and was accepted by the Court which proceeded to act on it by issuing notices. On these facts a single Judge of the Calcutta High Court held that the application was in accordance with law and was not barred by limitation. It is noticeable however that the learned Judge did hold that in presenting the application for execution, the pleader acted on behalf of the decree-holder and the omission to put in the power of attorney was excused on different grounds.

In A I R 1924 Pat 114,¹³ A had been authorized by B to put in an application in a Court. He accordingly signed a vakalat-nama in B's name and B accepted the authority given to the pleader by A. It was held by a Division Bench that the power to present the application included power to give and sign the power of attorney. In A I R 1926 Lah 223¹⁴ Dalip Singh J. observed that when the person on whose behalf an appeal is filed has accepted or ratified the action of the person who presented the appeal on his behalf, the person presenting the appeal has authority to present the appeal. He however did not base his judgment on this observation alone and further remarked that he would be inclined to extend the time under the provisions of S. 5, Limitation Act, if he considered it necessary to do so. Moreover, there the only question that arose for decision was whether a power of attorney signed on behalf of a Municipal Committee by the Secretary who had not been expressly authorized by the Committee to institute an appeal was valid, especially when the President had ratified the Secretary's act. It would be obvious therefore that that judgment was given on its own facts. In 55 I C 990¹⁵ Chevis J. held that when an appeal was presented by a pleader whose power of attorney was not signed by the appellant till after limitation had expired, the omission was obviously an oversight and the subsequent signing cured the defect. In 40 All 147¹⁶ Walsh J. observed that where a suit is duly authorised, the proper signing of the plaint is a matter of practice only and if a mistake or omission has been made, it may be amended at any time. In A I R 1926 Bom 336¹⁷ an appeal had been presented by a pleader duly appointed to act on the appellant's behalf by virtue of a power of attorney having been signed and in these circumstances the non-filing of the power of attorney in Court was condoned. In the result, we allow the petition and set aside the order of the Subordinate Judge restoring the suit. The petitioner will get his costs from the respondent.

Din Mohammad J.—This case raises an important question of law under the Punjab Relief of Indebtedness Act, which has not so far been authoritatively decided by this Court. It often happens that applications under S. 9 of the Act are made to a Debt Conciliation Board in relation to matters involved in pending suits and when the fact of such applications having been made is brought to the notice of the Civil Courts, they refuse to stay proceedings before them on the ground either that the application is not competent or that the applicant is not a debtor within the meaning of the Act. It is necessary therefore to consider the question at some length whether the Civil Courts are competent to do so. In the present case a suit for recovery of Rs. 31,000 was pending in the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Lyallpur. During the pendency of that suit, one of the defendants, Gopal Das, a partner of the principal defendant which was a firm, made an application to the Debt Conciliation Board, stating among other things that his debt amounted to Rs. 5000. It appears that the Board admitted this application and an intimation to that effect was forwarded to the Senior Subordinate Judge. The plaintiff objected that inasmuch as the amount of debt owed by the defendant firm, of which Gopal Das was a partner, exceeded Rs. 10,000, which is the maximum limit of the pecuniary jurisdiction of a Conciliation Board, the Senior Subordinate Judge was not bound to suspend the proceedings in his Court as required by S. 25 of the Act. The Senior Subordinate Judge framed an issue on the point along with certain other issues with which we are not concerned, and holding that the amount of debt did exceed Rs. 10,000, refused to suspend the proceedings. The question therefore arises whether the action of the Subordinate Judge was in accordance with law.

The reply to the question propounded above turns upon the construction to be placed upon the wording of S. 25, considered in the light of the other provisions made in the Act in relation to the matters to be decided and the procedure to be adopted by the Board in connexion with the applications submitted to it. Sec. 7 defines the terms "debt" and "debtor" and inter alia enacts that if any question arises in proceedings under the Act whether a person is a debtor or not, the decision of a Debt Conciliation Board shall be final. S. 8 deals with the setting up of the Debt Conciliation Boards. S. 9 enables a debtor or any of his creditors to apply to the Board appointed for the area in which the debtor resides or holds any land to effect a settlement between the debtor and his creditors. A Proviso is attached to this Section which prohibits such applications if the debtor's debts exceed Rs. 10,000. S. 11 requires an applicant to mention among other things the particulars of all claims against him. S. 12 authorizes the Board inter alia to dismiss the application if it does not consider it desirable to attempt to effect the settlement prayed for. S. 13 lays down the manner in which notices under the Act are to be issued and the statements by the creditors are to be submitted. S. 14 requires the creditors to produce all documents on which they rely. S. 15 empowers the Board to attempt an amicable settlement. S. 16 relates to the summoning and examining of the parties and witnesses and S. 17 deals with registration of the agreement arrived at between the disputants and the dismissal of the application so far as it relates to those creditors who do not come to an amicable settlement. S. 18 enables the Board to dismiss an application for want of diligent prosecution. S. 19 bars a second application. S. 20 provides for those cases where a creditor refuses to agree to an amicable settlement. S. 21 bars certain civil suits. Sec. 22 shuts out appeals and applications for revision against the order of the Board. S. 23 empowers the Board to review its own order. S. 24 provides for appearance of the parties before the Board and S. 25 not only bars new suits and other proceedings in relation to those debts for the settlement of which an application has been made to the Board, but further enjoins that any suit or other proceeding before a Civil Court in respect of any such debt shall be suspended until the Board has dismissed the application or an agreement has been made under S. 17. S. 26 extends limitation by the time spent in proceedings before a Conciliation Board and the time during which a person is debarred from suing or executing his decree under the provisions of the Act.

It will thus appear that the whole scheme of the Act is intended to invest the Board alone with the right to adjudicate upon the claims made to it so long as they are pending before it, and not only expressly prohibits the institution of new suits or other proceedings in relation to the debts awaiting decision in the Board but also suspends all pending proceedings in connexion therewith. In the face of such clear prohibition, it is not possible to argue that any other Court is competent to determine those matters which have been placed exclusively within the jurisdiction of the Board, nor can it be urged that so long as the Board has not determined those matters, any other Court can continue the proceedings before it in relation to them. It is clear that the sole jurisdiction to determine whether a certain person is a debtor or not is by virtue of S. 7 vested in the Board alone, and its decision thereon is final; and in our view the determination of this question involves everything which relates to the competency of the application, including the amount of debt owed by the applicant. The Board is empowered to dismiss an application submitted to it under various Sections of the Act and an application which exceeds the pecuniary limits of its jurisdiction is bound to be dismissed under the Proviso to S. 9. For an independent tribunal therefore to determine whether a certain application lies to the Board or not, would be clearly to encroach upon its jurisdiction and to run counter to the entire scheme propounded in the Act itself. It would further make the Act unworkable and defeat the object with which it has been enacted.

Supposing a debtor makes an application to the Debt Conciliation Board alleging that all claims against him do not exceed Rs. 10,000; the Board is prima facie bound to entertain the application especially when the applications made before it are presumed to be correct inasmuch as they are to be verified in the manner prescribed by the Local Government. On the presentation of the application, therefore, the Board is not in a position to hold that the application does not lie on the ground that it exceeds its jurisdiction. The natural result will be that the application will be admitted to hearing under S. 12 of the Act and as soon as this is done, S. 25 will at once come into play and bar all new suits in relation to those debts which are covered by the application and suspend all pending proceedings in connexion therewith. If in the meantime a rival Court is also authorized to adjudicate on those matters which are pending decision in the Conciliation Board, it would nullify all the purposes for which the Board has been set up. This might lead to certain fantastic and amazing results as stated by Costello Ag. C. J. in 41 C W N 1363¹ at p. 1365, but with that aspect of the case, we are not concerned, as we have to interpret the law as we find it and are not to emphasize the defects of legislation and to refuse to give effect to it on the ground that it might lead to certain absurd results.

A party loses nothing, if a suit is barred or a proceeding is suspended in the meantime, inasmuch as S. 26 extends the period of limitation by the time spent in the Board. Obviously therefore it is the Board that is to determine whether it has jurisdiction or not in relation to an application put before it, and not an outside authority, be it a competent Civil Court, for the Board so long as it is functioning cannot be forestalled in any manner. We are supported in this conclusion by several authorities from the Calcutta High Court where similar provisions of law have been interpreted in the manner suggested by us. Reference may be made in this connexion to 41 C W N 928,² 41 C W N 1363,¹ 42 C W N 173,³ 42 C W N 411,⁴ 42 C W N 481⁵ and 42 C W N 529.⁶ In 41 C W N 928,² a Division Bench held that when on an application made thereto under S. 8, Bengal Agricultural Debtors Act, the Board has given notice thereof to the Court before which a proceeding in respect of a debt included in the application is pending, that proceeding must be stayed. In 41 C W N 1363¹, a suit had been instituted for recovery of Rs. 26,000 odd. During the pendency of that suit one of the defendants made an application to a Board set up under the provisions of the Bengal Agricultural Debtors Act, claiming that he was a debtor within the meaning of the Act, although the suit related to a sum exceeding the jurisdiction of the Board. On receiving the application, the Chairman of the Board sent a notice to the Subordinate Judge requiring stay of the suit pending in his Court. The Subordinate Judge refused to consider himself bound by that notice on the ground inter alia that the applicant was not a debtor within the meaning of the Act. Costello, Ag. C. J. observed that :

Although the alleged debt was as much as Rs. 26,000, yet it does not seem open to the Court to decide or even consider whether the debtor comes within the Act or whether he does not; that question rests solely with the Board.

In 42 C W N 173,³ it was held by a Division Bench that an Insolvency Court served with a notice under S. 34, Bengal Agricultural Debtors Act, has no jurisdiction to decide whether a person is a debtor within the meaning of the Act. In 42

C W N 411,⁴ Nasim Ali J. observed that the Civil Court had no jurisdiction to entertain questions which can be raised before the Board, for example, whether the debtor is a debtor within the meaning of the Act or whether he ordinarily resides within the local area for which the Board has been established. In the same volume at p. 481, Ameer Ali J. held that after a petition purporting to be one under S. 8, Bengal Agricultural Debtors Act, has been filed to a Debt Conciliation Board and before the petition has been dismissed or an award made, the High Court cannot in interlocutory proceedings decide whether the petition was properly presented or entertained. At p. 529 in the same volume, Edgley J. held that a Civil Court receiving a notice under S. 34, Bengal Agricultural Debtors Act, in respect of a debt for which several persons are jointly liable has no jurisdiction to inquire whether the application before the Board is a valid application under S. 9 of the Act and to refuse to stay proceedings if it thinks that there is no valid application.

No authority to the contrary has been cited before us nor do we consider that there could be one. We accordingly accept this petition, set aside the order of the Subordinate Judge and direct the suspension of the proceedings pending in his Court under S. 25, Punjab Relief of Indebtedness Act, until such time as the application before the Board is dismissed or an agreement is arrived at in connexion therewith. In view however of the difficult nature of the question involved, we leave the parties to bear their own costs before us.

The defendant in a suit originally belonged to a village in the Jullundur District, and although he had no house, he still had some land there; but for a considerable period he had resided in the Lyallpur District. The plaintiff lodged a suit against him in Jullundur. He said in the plaint that the suit was lodged there because the residence of the parties and their dealings were within the limits of the Jullundur District. The defendant pleaded inter alia that he was a resident of Lyallpur District. The Jullundur Court finding that it had not jurisdiction returned the plaint for presentation to the proper Court:

Judgment. — Maya Singh, resident of Kapurthala, sued Udhram Singh on the basis of a bond for Rs. 700 executed on 13th February 1933, at Lyallpur. The plaintiff lodged the suit for Rs. 952, principal and interest, on 13th February 1936 in Jullundur. He said in the plaint that the suit was lodged there because the residence of the parties and their dealings were within the limits of the Jullundur District (chunkih sakunat fariqain wa lenden andar hadud zillah Jullundur hai). The defendant, Udhram Singh, pleaded inter alia that he was a resident of Lyallpur District and on 15th June 1936 the Jullundur Court finding that it had not jurisdiction returned the plaint for presentation in the proper Court. The following day the suit was lodged in the Lyallpur District. The defendant did not plead that the debt had not been contracted but pleaded that the suit was barred by limitation. The trial Court found that the plaintiff was entitled to deduct the time spent in prosecuting the suit at Jullundur, as he had been acting there with due diligence. He found that the suit was within time and granted the plaintiff a decree for Rs. 952 payable by instalments. On appeal however the learned District Judge found that the plaintiff had not been acting with due diligence in lodging the suit at Jullundur, that the suit was therefore barred by time and he accepted the appeal. The point for determination before me is whether S. 14 (2), Limitation Act, applies; in other words, whether the plaintiff was acting with due diligence and in good faith in lodging the suit in Jullundur.

The learned District Judge found that the plaintiff did not act honestly in conducting the suit in the Jullundur Court, because according to the plaint the money was advanced at Jullundur, whereas afterwards both at Jullundur and Lyallpur the plaintiff admitted that the money was advanced at Lyallpur. It is pointed out by Mr. Achhru Ram for the plaintiff that the plaint does not say that the money was advanced at Jullundur but that the parties had dealings in Jullundur. I have already quoted the exact words of the plaint. It is admitted that the defendant originally belonged to village Udhesian in the Jullundur District, that although he has no house, he still has some land there but that for a considerable period he has resided in the Lyallpur District, that the defendant's son is a lambar-dar of village Udhesian and that the defendant visits the village on ceremonial occasions. Mr. Achhru Ram does not contend that the Jullundur Court had jurisdiction, but he urges that the mistake might have been made by a reasonable man and that the suit was prosecuted in good faith and with due diligence. Mr. Mukand Lal Puri for the respondent argues that the matter is concluded by a finding of fact and he cites two Single Bench judgments of this Court in support of his contention: 102 I C 628¹ by Campbell J. and A I R 1932 Lah 531² by Tek Chand J. In A I R 1932 Lah 531² Tek Chand J. said:

The learned District Judge on an examination of the facts and circumstances bearing on the matter has recorded a definite finding that Gahna Singh was acting in good faith. This finding is one of fact and cannot be challenged in second appeal.

The learned Judge was clearly referring to the particular case before him and did not intend to lay down any general principle. Similarly Campbell J. in 102 I C 628¹ was only referring to the particular facts before him. He said:

1. Ganga Ram-Bishen Das v. Hari Ram-Ram Lal, (1927) 14 A I R Lah 909=102 I C 628.
2. Kala Singh v. Gehna Singh, (1932) 19 A I R Lah 531=138 I C 646 = 14 Lah 106 = 33 P L R 740.

The trial Court and the lower Appellate Court have held that the plaintiffs were entitled to the benefit of S. 14... as they had filed the suits there (at Gujranwala) in good faith and had conducted them diligently. This is a finding of fact with which I cannot interfere.

On the other hand Mr. Achhru Ram has drawn my attention to 36 I C 702³ where a Single Bench of the Oudh Judicial Commissioner's Court held that the question whether a party acted in good faith within the meaning of S. 14, Limitation Act, is a mixed question of law and fact and can be questioned in second appeal, provided that the lower Court's findings of fact are not interfered with.

To the same effect is 101 I C 674,⁴ a judgment of a Division Bench of the Patna High Court. This I think is the true principle. The facts must be accepted as found by the District Judge, but it is for the High Court to determine the question of law whether on these facts the plaintiff has acted with due diligence and in good faith. In the Oudh case, Mr. Stuart said that some general criterion must be laid down to distinguish cases in which indulgence is to be granted from those in which it should not be granted; and he thought that indulgence should be granted only in cases where error was an error that might be committed by a reasonable and prudent man exercising due diligence and caution. Applying this rule, I do not think the plaintiff made such an error as to disentitle him to the benefit of S. 14 in lodging the suit in Jullundur where the defendant has land and where he originally belonged. I accept this appeal, set aside the order of the District Judge dismissing the suit and hold that the suit was within time. The case is remanded under O. 41, R. 23, Civil P. C., for this purpose. Stamp on appeal to be refunded. Other costs to be costs in the cause.

Criminal Misc. No. 63 of 1938, Decided on 29th March 1938, from order of Dist. Magistrate, Gurgaon, D/- 6.1.1938.

(a) Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 526, 528—Case between Hindus and Mahomedans—Mere fact that Judge or Magistrate is Hindu or Mahomedan does not debar him from hearing it — But case reaching stage in which question of communalism has become very prominent — It is desirable that case should be transferred.

Ordinarily, the mere fact that a case is between Hindus or Mahomedans does not ipso facto debar either a Hindu or Mahomedan Judge or Magistrate from hearing it. Where however the case has reached a stage in which the unfortunate question of communalism has become very prominent, by reason of the petitions for transfer by one of the parties, it is desirable in the interests of everybody concerned to transfer the case. [P 707 C 1, 2]

(b) Practice — Judgment—'Proof' — Court should avoid use of word 'proof' in interlocutory order — Fact cannot be said to be proved until final adjudication.

Although there is a technical use of the word 'proof' which is practically synonymous with 'evidence,' yet, in an interlocutory order, the expression 'proof' should be avoided as a fact cannot be said to be proved until it comes to the final adjudication. [P 707 C 1]

Order.—This is a petition under S. 439, Criminal P. C., for setting aside the order of the District Magistrate, Gurgaon, dated 6th January 1938, under S. 528, Criminal P. C., transferring a case from the Court of the Additional District Magistrate to that of a Second Class Magistrate, and also under S. 526, Criminal P. C., for transfer of the case back to the Court of the Additional District Magistrate. In arguments before me, an additional prayer has been made that the case be transferred to the Court of the District Magistrate himself. The facts of the case are that the present petitioner, Amba Parshad, brought a complaint against Imam Ali and Kallu, under Ss. 295/297 and 448, Penal Code. This case was triable by a Second Class Magistrate, but the Additional District Magistrate, who was the ilaka Magistrate, kept it in his Court, and after hearing the complainant's evidence, framed a charge under Ss. 295/297, Penal Code. Thereupon the accused respondents filed an application in the Court of the District Magistrate praying for the transfer of the case. They did not ask for it to be sent to any particular Court but merely asked for it to be transferred from the Court of the Additional District Magistrate on the ground that he was taking an undue interest in the case. Although it was not definitely stated, there was an insinuation that as the case was one involving communal feelings and the Additional District

Magistrate was a Hindu, therefore he had taken this undue interest. This application was heard by the learned District Magistrate who appears to have been unimpressed by the allegations of communal partisanship against the Additional District Magistrate. At any rate, in his order, which is the subject of this revision petition, he has made no mention of this aspect of the case and as he has transferred the case to a Magistrate of the opposite community, it is apparent that he did not think that the religion of the Magistrate by itself was a legitimate ground for transfer. A certain amount of confusion has been unfortunately imported into this case by the terminology employed by the District Magistrate in his order. He has stated :

From the evidence it is clear that there is sufficient proof to show that the two accused had obtained a Civil Court's decree according to which they are entitled to occupy the plot of land in dispute.

It is true that there is a technical use of the word 'proof' which is practically synonymous with 'evidence,' but in an interlocutory order, the expression should be avoided as the fact cannot be held to be 'proved' until it comes to the final adjudication. What the learned District Magistrate meant to say, I think, is that from a document shown to him there appeared to be evidence in support of the defence raised by the accused which was that the place in dispute was not a temple at all, but was a piece of ground of which they were in possession by order of the Court. Whether this defence is true or not is not a matter which arises at this stage, but it is relevant that the defence has been raised. The learned District Magistrate clearly thought that as the case was not an important one and as it was triable by a Second Class Magistrate and as the defence raised made it desirable that the Magistrate concerned should inspect the spot, the balance of administrative convenience lay in having it tried by the local Second Class Magistrate, even though he did belong to one of the communities involved. On this ground it does not appear to me that the order of the learned District Magistrate is in itself in any way improper or one which would ordinarily be interfered with in revision.

But it seems to me that there can be no doubt that the case has now reached a stage in which this unfortunate question of communalism has become very prominent. Ordinarily, I would not accept the proposition that merely because the case was between Hindus and Mahomedans, either a Hindu or a Mahomedan Judge or Magistrate was ipso facto debarred from hearing it. But it is clear that these petitions have unfortunately given the communal aspect of the case an importance which it really does not deserve on the merits, and it is useless to shut one's eyes to the fact that this question has now cropped up and become a prominent issue. It seems to me therefore that it would be desirable in the interests of everybody concerned that the learned District Magistrate take this case into his Court and dispose of it himself. I therefore order accordingly.

Judgment.—On 23rd December 1936, Hans Raj Shah obtained a personal decree against Mohammad Zaman and Nathu, defendants, for Rs. 1573 on the basis of a registered deed of mortgage dated 5th February 1923. The learned Subordinate Judge announced the judgment to the counsel for Hans Raj Shah, plaintiff. He noted on the judgment that counsel for Mohammad Zaman was to be informed. No information was sent to the counsel for Mohammad Zaman till 8th January 1937. Against this decision, Mohammad Zaman and Nathu filed an appeal in the Court of the District Judge, Rawalpindi, on 19th February 1937. At the hearing, a preliminary objection was taken on behalf of the respondents to the effect that the appeal was barred by limitation. The learned District Judge accepted this objection and dismissed the appeal on the question of limitation. Mohammad Zaman and Nathu have accordingly preferred a second appeal to this Court. The learned District Judge has made the following observations in his judgment :

Now I fully concede that the conduct of the Subordinate Judge concerned, namely Lala Manohar Lal who has since been transferred, in not fixing a date for judgment is exceedingly objectionable. Nevertheless, the limitation law must be strictly applied and consequently the limitation period must be deemed to run from the actual date of the judgment and not from the date on which counsel was informed of it.

I am of the opinion that there is no justification for holding that the period of limitation must be deemed to run from 23rd December 1936 and not from 8th January 1937. O. 20, Rule 1, Civil P. C., lays down that the Court, after the case has been heard, shall pronounce judgment in open Court either at once or on some future day of which due notice shall be given to the parties or their pleaders. After hearing the arguments of the parties, the Court did not fix any date for the pronouncement of judgment. On 8th January 1937, the judgment was sent to the counsel for Mohammad Zaman and he wrote down the word "noted" on the margin of the judgment. 8th January 1937 must therefore be regarded as the date for pronouncing judgment of which due notice was given to the counsel for Mohammad Zaman. Reference may be made in this connexion to a Division Bench ruling of the Allahabad High Court reported in 47 All 332.¹ In that case the judgment was signed, dated and delivered in the absence of the parties or their pleaders and without previous notice to them and the plaintiff was ordered to deposit the pre-emption money within three months of the date of the delivery of the said judgment. It was held that the judgment was not validly pronounced within the meaning of Rr. 1 and 3 of O. 20, Civil P. C., and that as regards the payment of the pre-emption price, time began to run against the plaintiff as from 14th January 1925, when he was informed of the judgment.

Mr. Sawhney on behalf of the respondent contended that even if 8th January 1937, be taken to be the date of the delivery of the judgment, the appeal to the learned District Judge was still barred by time. Mohammad Zaman applied for a copy of the judgment on 29th January and obtained it on 5th February. He applied for a copy of the decree on 16th February and obtained it on 19th February. The appeal was filed in the Court of the learned District Judge on the same day. If eight days be allowed for a copy of the judgment and four days for a copy of the decree, 19th February would be the last date of limitation. It was held in 47 All 509² that in calculating the period of limitation for filing an appeal, time requisite for obtaining a copy of the judgment of the appeal and a copy of the decree sheet must be excluded. The contention of the learned counsel for the respondent was that the last day of limitation for the filing of the appeal was 15th February 1937, and as no application for obtaining a copy of the decree was put in till 16th February, the time taken in obtaining copy of the decree cannot be excluded in computing the period of limitation. The Court was however closed on 15th February 1937. The appeal could therefore be put in till 4 P.M. on 16th

February by virtue of S. 4, Limitation Act. As the application for obtaining a copy of the decree was made on 16th February, the application must be taken to have been made within limitation. Even if it be assumed that the application for obtaining a copy of the decree does not strictly fall within the purview of S. 4, Limitation Act, the general principle underlying this Section, which has been reproduced in S. 10, General Clauses Act, must be given effect to, namely that where an act or proceeding is allowed to be done on a certain day, then if the Court or office is closed on that day, the act or proceeding shall be considered as done or taken in due time, if it is done or taken on the next day afterwards on which the Court or office is opened. The facts of the Privy Council case reported in 49 Cal 999,³ relied upon by the learned counsel for the respondent, are very different from the facts of this case and no assistance can therefore be derived from that ruling.

For the reasons given above, I accept this appeal, set aside the judgment and the decree of the learned District Judge, dated 14th August 1937, and remand the case to him for a decision of the appeal preferred in his Court in accordance with law. The court-fee levied on the memorandum of appeal in this Court shall be refunded and the other costs shall abide the result. The learned counsel for the parties have been directed to cause their respective clients to appear in the Court of the learned District Judge of Rawalpindi on 1st March 1938.

Tek Chand J. — The facts which have led to this litigation are as follows: Ladha Singh and Sham Singh, sons of Mul Singh, owned in equal shares two Ahatas in Lyallpur on which they had built a house. Ladha Singh had a son, Narinjan Singh, who was born on 19th April 1917. On 7th June 1920, Ladha Singh and Sham Singh mortgaged the house to one Ram Sarup for Rs. 5000 by a registered deed. In April 1922, Ladha Singh, ignoring this mortgage, orally gifted his one-half share in the house to his son Narinjan Singh who was five years old at the time, and on 24th April 1922 a mutation was sanctioned in respect of this gift showing Narinjan Singh as the owner of one-half of the house. On 24th May 1925, Sham Singh and Ladha Singh, ignoring the gift and describing themselves as owners of the house, mortgaged it to Ganesh Das, who redeemed the prior mortgagee, Ram Sarup. On 23rd September 1926, Ladha Singh and Sham Singh again mortgaged the house to Piar Singh for Rs. 6000 who paid off Ganesh Das. Four years later, on 22nd September 1930, Ladha Singh, acting as the mukhtar of Sham Singh and guardian of his son Narinjan Singh, (who was described as the owner of one-half) mortgaged the entire house to Karam Chand and Mt. Lal Devi, appellants, for Rs. 7500, the major portion of which was utilized in paying off the prior mortgagee, Piar Singh. At the time of this last mortgage, the house was in possession of a tenant named Bhagwan Singh, from whom the mortgagees were authorized to realize the rent and credit it towards the interest payable under the mortgage deed. The tenant having failed to pay rent to the mortgagees, Karam Chand and Mt. Lal Devi, they brought a suit against him for recovery of the amount due. To this suit Sham Singh and Narinjan Singh, minor, through Ladha Singh as his guardian ad litem, were made parties. The suit was dismissed on the ground that Ladha Singh had no authority to mortgage the house on behalf of Narinjan Singh.

On 23rd February 1934, Karam Chand and Mt. Lal Devi instituted a suit against Sham Singh, Ladha Singh and Narinjan Singh for a declaration that they were the mortgagees in possession of the house under the mortgage deed of 22nd September 1930. In the plaint Narinjan Singh was described as a minor under the guardianship of his father Ladha Singh, and along with the plaint a list of the relations of Narinjan Singh was filed, which included Mt. Karam Devi, the grandmother of Narinjan Singh. No formal order appointing any person as the guardian ad litem of the minor was passed by the Court; Ladha Singh did not defend the suit either for himself or on behalf of the minor. But Mt. Karam Devi, describing herself as the guardian ad litem of Narinjan Singh, minor, filed a very comprehensive written statement denying the plaintiffs' claim and raising numerous objections to the validity of the mortgage of one-half of the house which was claimed as owned by Narinjan Singh under the oral gift by Ladha Singh made in April 1922. She engaged a pleader, Lala Hans Raj, to conduct the case on behalf of the minor. In the vakalatnama authority was given to Lala Hans Raj to "compromise the suit in whole or in part." After issues had been framed, and the plaintiffs' evidence recorded in part, the hearing was adjourned to 6th December 1934. On that date, an application to refer the dispute to the arbitration of certain named persons was presented to the Court signed by the plaintiffs, Ladha Singh, and Narinjan Singh himself, (who was 17 years and 7½ months old at the time) and Lala Hans Raj, pleader for Mt. Karam Devi, guardian ad litem of Narinjan Singh. The Court granted the application and referred the dispute to arbitration. The arbitrators filed their award on 14th January 1935. It was to the effect that a sum of Rupees 7500 was due to the plaintiffs by the defendants, and that the transaction of mortgage, being for family necessity, was binding on Narinjan Singh.

Objections were filed by Lala Hans Raj, pleader for Mt. Karam Devi, guardian of Narinjan Singh, alleging that the arbitrators were guilty of misconduct and the award was invalid. On these objections, issues were framed and the hearing was adjourned to 11th March 1935 for evidence. On that date Karam Chand, plaintiff, Ladha Singh, Lala Hans Raj, pleader for Mt. Karam Devi, and Narinjan Singh (who was still a minor) made a joint statement before the Court that they had entered into a compromise to the effect that if the sum of Rs. 7150 was paid by the defendants, including Narinjan Singh, to the plaintiffs by 30th June 1935, the house in question would be released, free from all encumbrances; in default the mortgagees would be entitled to realize Rs. 7500 from the entire house, as provided in the award. This statement was signed by Karam Chand, plaintiff, Lala Hans Raj, pleader, Lala Ladha Singh and Narinjan Singh. Immediately after this, another statement was made by Lala Hans Raj, pleader, asking the Court "to sanction the compromise on behalf of Narinjan Singh, defendant." Thereupon the Subordinate Judge passed an order "accepting the compromise and granting a decree in accordance with its terms." No formal application under O. 32, R. 7, Civil P. C., for sanction to enter into the compromise on behalf of the minor was made by or on behalf of Mt. Karam Devi as the guardian ad litem; nor was any order granting the sanction passed; nor did the order accepting the compromise indicate that the compromise was for the benefit of the minor.

A few weeks later, on 19th April 1935, Narinjan Singh attained majority, and on 15th July 1935 he instituted the present suit for a declaration that the decree in the aforesaid suit was not binding on him, as: (1) he was not properly represented in the former suit, no application having been made for the appointment of a guardian ad litem for him, nor any order passed appointing any one as such guardian; and (2) that no express sanction had been given by the Court in respect of the compromise, which was not for his benefit.

The trial Judge decreed the suit, declaring that the decree of 11th March 1935 was ineffectual so far as Narinjan Singh, plaintiff, was concerned. On appeal by Karam Chand and Mt. Lal Devi, the Senior Subordinate Judge came to the contrary conclusion; he held that the plaintiff was effectively represented by Mt. Karam Devi in the former suit, and that though no formal order appointing her as guardian was passed, this was a mere irregularity which had not prejudiced the plaintiff in any way. He further found that it appeared from the proceedings in that suit that the Judge, who had passed the decree, had considered that the compromise was for the benefit of the minor, and that the mere fact that no formal order expressly sanctioning the compromise had been passed did not vitiate the decree based thereon. He accordingly accepted the appeal and dismissed the plaintiff's suit. On second appeal a learned Judge of this Court, sitting in Single Bench, held that there were serious irregularities inasmuch as no guardian ad litem had been appointed under O. 32, R. 3, Civil P. C., and that no sanction had been sought or granted by the Court to compromise as required by O. 32, R. 7, Civil P. C. He accordingly accepted the plaintiff's appeal and restored the decree of the trial Judge granting the plaintiff the declaration asked for. From this decree Karam Chand and Mt. Lal Devi had appealed under Cl. 10 of the Letters Patent, after having obtained the necessary certificate from the learned Judge.

It is no doubt true that Ladha Singh had been described as the guardian ad litem of Narinjan Singh minor in the plaint of the previous suit; it is also true that the interests of Ladha Singh were adverse to those of Narinjan Singh. But along with the plaint a list of the near relations of the minor had been given, as required by the Lahore High Court Rules, and one of the persons mentioned therein was his grandmother, Mt. Karam Devi. As already stated, Mt. Karam Devi appeared to resist the suit on behalf of Narinjan Singh. She engaged a pleader and filed a written statement raising every conceivable plea. The Court admitted the written statement, and allowed the pleader to cross-examine the witnesses produced by the then plaintiffs. Mt. Karam Devi had already filed another suit on behalf of the minor relating to this very property; and it is not alleged that her interests were in any way adverse to those of the minor. It is clear that she acted as the de facto guardian ad litem of the minor and in the circumstances, the mere absence of an order formally appointing her as guardian ad litem is not fatal to the validity of the proceedings: 30 Cal 1021¹ and 5 Lah 38.² Mr. Achhru Ram, who appears on behalf of the plaintiff respondent, concedes that the decree in the former suit could not be set aside on this ground.

The other irregularity, however, is of a more serious nature. At the time of the compromise Narinjan Singh was admittedly a minor, and as laid down in O. 32, R. 7, Civil P. C., his guardian ad litem could have entered into a compromise only with the leave of the Court, expressly recorded in the proceedings. In this case no application for sanction to enter into a compromise was filed by Mt. Karam Devi, nor was an order expressly recorded by the Subordinate Judge granting sanction to the guardian to enter into a compromise. Nor again is there anything to indicate that when the terms of the compromise were placed before the Subordinate Judge, and accepted by him, he applied his mind to the all important question, that the compromise was for the benefit of the minor. It must therefore be held that the provisions of Rule 7 were not complied with, and the compromise and the decree passed thereon are not binding on the minor. It is no doubt true that Narinjan Singh himself had signed the statement embodying the terms of the compromise, but he was no sui juris then, and the so-called consent, given by him during minority, is of no avail. For this reason therefore the plaintiff is entitled to a declaration that the compromise and the decree based thereon are not binding on him.

The next question is as to the proper order to be passed on the above findings. Mr. Achhru Ram for the plaintiff-respondent concedes that the order of the trial Judge, restored by the learned Judge of this Court, granting the above declaration simpliciter is incomplete, and that it should have further been ordered that the proceedings in the original suit be revived from the stage at which they were when the irregularity above mentioned was committed: 35 All 487³ and A I R 1936 Lah

1. Walian v. Banke Behari, (1903) 30 Cal 1021 = 30 I A 182 = 7 C W N 774 = 8 Sar 512 (P C).

861.⁴ In modification of the decree under appeal therefore, we pass a decree declaring that the plaintiff is not bound by the compromise and the decree based thereon passed by Lala Chhakan Lal, Subordinate Judge, on 11th March 1935, and we direct that the former suit be restored at its original number and proceedings therein restarted from the stage at which they were on 14th February 1935. Having regard to the peculiar circumstances of the case, we leave the parties to bear their own costs throughout. Both counsel have been directed to cause their respective clients to appear before Sheikh Maqbul Ahmad, Subordinate Judge, First Class, Lyallpur, on 14th June 1937, when a date will be fixed for further proceedings in accordance with the foregoing directions.

First Appeal No. 327 of 1937, Decided on 2nd February 1938, from decree of Senior Sub-Judge, Ambala, D/. 16th June 1937.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 6, R. 17—Mere introduction of fresh matter does not alter nature of suit—Alteration affecting case is one where original suit is wholly displaced by proposed amendment or where totally inconsistent case is introduced—Leave to amend cannot be refused when such is not the case.

It is not by a mere change in the wording of the plaint or the introduction of fresh details that the nature of a suit is altered. The alteration which affects the case is one where the original suit is wholly displaced by the proposed amendment or where a totally different or inconsistent case is introduced. But where this is not the case, leave to amend cannot be refused merely on the ground that the words which did not find place in the original plaint had been introduced in the subsequent plaint, even though the effect of those words is not to introduce a new or an inconsistent case. Din Mohammad J.—This appeal has arisen in the following circumstances : On 1st October 1936 a suit was instituted on behalf of Megh Raj as proprietor of the Firm Ganesha Mal Megh Raj, through L. Kundan Lal, against the Firm Raghbar Das Beni Parshad, through Beni Parshad. The claim was described in the following terms : "For recovery of Rs. 9815 principal and interest on the basis of bahi account and other oral and documentary evidence of all sorts." In para. 1 of the plaint it was stated that the plaintiff firm was a joint Hindu family firm carrying on business in Ambala city. In para. 2 of the plaint it was said that the defendant firm borrowed money from the plaintiff firm on bahi account and promissory note on various occasions commencing from the year 1929. In para. 3 reference was made to a certain draft executed by the defendant in which he admitted his liability to the extent of Rs. 9000 to the plaintiff firm. This petition of plaint was signed by Kundan Lal, mentioned above as mukhtar khas (special attorney). The defendant firm put in a written statement on 10th November 1936, in which, along with the pleas on facts, certain preliminary objections to the drafting of the plaint were also raised. It was contended inter alia that inasmuch as it was alleged in the plaint that the plaintiff firm was a joint Hindu family firm, the suit should have been instituted in the name of the firm and not in that of Megh Raj. It was also pleaded that the suit could not be instituted "through the special agent of Megh Raj." It was further urged that no details had been given in the plaint as to the date from which the account commenced and the date up to which it continued, nor of the amounts advanced and the amounts repaid; nor had any transliteration of the bahi entries been attached to the plaint. On 4th December 1936 the plaintiff put in a reply to these objections stating that the suit could proceed in the form in which it was instituted and that it could be instituted through the special agent.

The Senior Subordinate Judge being otherwise busy on that date, adjourned the case to 20th January 1937; and on that date an order was made that inasmuch as in para. 2 of the plaint it had not been clearly stated how much money was borrowed on the promissory note, how much on bahi account and between which periods, the plaintiff should submit a properly amended plaint. In pursuance of this order, the plaintiff put in an amended plaint on 28th January 1937. In the column of claim it was reiterated that the suit was for recovery of Rs. 9815 principal and interest on the basis of bahi account and other oral and documentary evidence of every kind. In para. 2 of the amended plaint it was said that the firm Ganesha Mal Megh Raj was a joint Hindu family firm of which Megh Raj and his minor son Gian Chand were members. In paras. 3 to 7 the details of the accounts commencing from 17th April 1929 and ending on 23rd June 1932 were mentioned and reference was also made to an agreement, dated 24th July 1932, wherein the defendant had admitted his liability to the plaintiff to the extent of Rs. 12,600. The remaining paragraphs of the amended plaint merely repeated what had already been said in the original plaint. This plaint was signed by Megh Raj as proprietor of the Firm Ganesha Mal Megh Raj. To this amended plaint, further pleas were submitted by the defendant on 9th February 1937 and it was urged inter alia that the plaint had not been amended in accordance with the directions of the Court and that the amendments made had changed the nature of the suit as originally instituted and this was not permissible under the law. On the pleadings of the parties the Senior Subordinate Judge framed the following issues :

1. Has the amendment of the plaint been made in accordance with the orders of the Court? 2. Does not amendment made in the plaint change the nature of the suit as originally filed and if so, what is its effect? 3. Can the suit proceed in the name of the plaintiff as stated in the plaint, or should it be filed in the name of the Firm Ganesha Mal Megh Raj? 4. Is the signing and presentation of the plaint by Kundan Lal valid? 5. Is the mukhtarnama by L. Megh Raj in favour of L. Kundan Lal not properly attested and not valid?

In his decision on Issues 1 and 2, the Senior Subordinate Judge stated that counsel for the plaintiff had admitted that the amendments made were not in accordance with the orders of the Court and he further amplified this statement by referring to certain matters which in his view had changed the nature of the suit. Some of the matters so referred to were as follows : 1. The plaintiff had omitted to make any mention of the debt borrowed on the foot of the promissory note as had been alleged in the original plaint. 2. The original plaint had been signed by Kundan Lal, whose locus standi was in dispute, while the amended plaint was signed by Megh Raj himself and this could not be done without the permission of the Court. 3. No mention was made in the original plaint of any other partner of the joint Hindu family firm, while in the amended plaint the name of Gian Chand was mentioned as another member of the joint family. 4. Para. 2 of the original plaint had been split up into six paragraphs, thus changing the entire aspect of the case.

On the grounds mentioned above he rejected the amended plaint and proceeded to deal with the plaint which had originally been presented. On Issues 3 and 4 the Senior Subordinate Judge decided that the power of attorney executed in favour of Kundan Lal was not valid, that it did not show that that power of attorney had been given for instituting the present suit and that consequently he had no locus standi to institute the suit on behalf of the firm. He further came to the conclusion that inasmuch as the power of attorney was defective, both the signing and presentation of the plaint were also invalid and so was the appointment of a pleader for conducting the case. On Issue 5 his decision went in favour of the plaintiff; but as he had decided the other issues against him, holding that there was no proper plaint before him nor were its presentation and attestation valid, he dismissed the suit with costs. The present appeal has been preferred from the said order of the Senior Subordinate Judge.

After hearing counsel for the parties, we are satisfied that the objections raised to the drafting of the plaint were too trivial to be taken notice of and that the Senior Subordinate Judge was entirely wrong in holding that by the amendments introduced in the amended plaint any directions given by him were disobeyed or that the character of the suit was altered. In fact, he had given no directions whatever in the matter and, as stated above, while making his order requiring the plaintiff to amend the plaint, he had merely indicated that certain details were lacking in the original plaint. The Senior Subordinate Judge should have known that it is not by mere change in the wording of the plaint or the introduction of fresh details that the nature of a suit is altered and that the alteration which affects the case is the one where the original suit is wholly displaced by the proposed amendment or where a totally different or inconsistent case is introduced. But where this is not the case, leave to amend cannot be refused merely on the ground that the words which did not find place in the original plaint had been introduced in the subsequent plaint, even though the effect of those words is not to introduce a new or an inconsistent case. The objections raised and allowed by the Senior Subordinate Judge were so frivolous that counsel for the respondent before us did not make any attempt to rely on them. He frankly conceded that he could not support the judgment of the Senior Subordinate Judge on that score.

The only matter on which he laid much stress was that the power of attorney executed in favour of Kundan Lal could not authorize him to institute the present suit, inasmuch as in his power of attorney the title of the suit which he was authorized to institute was given as "Megh Raj v. Beni Parshad," and the present suit was by Megh Raj as proprietor of a certain firm against Beni Parshad as a representative of another firm. In our view this ground too is as flimsy as the other grounds taken by the defendant against the drafting of the plaint. Documents in this country are not drafted with that meticulous care which is necessary and parties cannot be penalized for such formal defects as are not material. If we ignore the description of the plaintiff and the defendant given in the title of the suit, the suit is between Megh Raj and Beni Parshad. In the plaint it was essential to give an exact description of the parties but we do not consider that the same care was necessary to be taken in the drafting of the power of attorney.

Counsel for the respondent has referred to 1893 A C 170¹ where at p. 177 of the report it is said that powers of attorney should be strictly construed; but those remarks relate to the substantive part of the document where a particular authority is conferred upon the attorney and not to introductory particulars like the present. We may remark in this connexion that in spite of the fact that the defendant had put in pleas on two different occasions, the objection in this form was not taken on either occasion. What he intended to convey by his original objections was that Megh Raj not being a proper person to institute the suit in his own name, his special attorney too was equally incompetent. We need not discuss this matter further as it is sufficiently clear that there was no substance in any of the objections taken by the defendant to the form or frame of the suit. We accordingly accept the appeal, set aside the decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge dismissing the suit and remand the case to him under O. 41, R. 23, Civil P. C., for disposal in accordance with law. The court-fee paid on this appeal will be refunded to the appellant. Other costs of the appeal will be borne by the parties.

Criminal Appeal No. 1217 of 1937, Decided on 25th January 1938, from order of Magistrate, First Class, Mianwali, D/- 27th September 1937.

(a) Criminal Trial—Evidence—Statement of formal witness for prosecution assisting defence has not much weight.

Statement of a formal witness for the prosecution, which goes to assist the defence, does not have that weight which it would have had if he had been a witness for the prosecution as to the material facts of the case. [P 716 O 1]

(b) Criminal Trial—First information report—Delay in making report is only suspicious circumstance—It is no ground for rejecting evidence.

Delay in making a report to the police is only a suspicious circumstance which puts the Court on its guard and cannot by itself be held to be a reason for rejecting evidence which is otherwise fully entitled to credit. [P 717 O 1]

(c) Criminal Trial—Evidence—Police diary—Statement of witnesses recorded in police diary—Burden of rebutting it is not very heavy—Witness, respectable educated man and quite disinterested—Slight discrepancy in his statement in Court and what is recorded in 'diary'—His denial of accuracy of statement in diary may be accepted as correct.

1. Bryant, Powis and Bryant Ltd. v. La Banque De Peuple, (1893) A C 170=62 L J P O 68=1 R 836=68 L T 546=41 W R 600.

There is an initial presumption of accuracy in the case of official records but in the case of statements of witnesses recorded in the police diaries, the burden of rebutting them is not very heavy. Where the witness is a respectable educated man and quite disinterested and the difference between what he did say and what he is recorded as saying, is very slight and could easily have been due to a misunderstanding by the Police Officer recording the statement, his denial of the accuracy of the statement attributed to him by the Police Officer may be accepted as correct.

(d) Penal Code (1860), S. 304, Part 2 and S. 325—Accused striking only one lathi blow on head of deceased, on being struck with hockey stick by latter — Intention of accused merely appearing to give ordinary beating to deceased — Offence does not fall under S. 304, Part 2 but only under S. 325.

Where the accused struck only one blow with a stick on the head of the deceased, and that too after the latter had struck him on the thigh with a hockey stick and up to that point the accused merely appeared to have intended to give the deceased an ordinary beating with his stick, and ordinary beating was all that seemed to have been required by the motive suggested for the attack, it cannot be assumed in the circumstances of the case that the accused intentionally struck a blow which he knew was likely to cause death. The offence committed by him does not therefore fall under S. 304, Part 2 but one under S. 325.

Judgment. — Radha Kishen appeals against a conviction under S. 304, Part 2 and a sentence of five years' rigorous imprisonment and Topan Ram appeals separately against the conviction under S. 325, I. P. C., and a sentence of three years' rigorous imprisonment. The appeals arise out of the same trial and I will dispose of them in one judgment. The facts of this case as set forth in the prosecution evidence are as follows: One Wazir Muhammad Khan was a teacher in the District Board School at Jandanwala in the Mianwali District. Radha Kishen was a resident of that village and Topan Ram was a resident of the village of Ahmed Shahwali. On 4th June last Wazir Muhammad Khan and Muhammad Zaman (P. W. 10) who is a Superintendent of the boarding house of the school had remonstrated with Radha Kishan for making water close to the boarding house. On 6th June which was a Sunday, Mohammed Zaman with other three masters and a candidate master was sitting in the room of the boarding house and Wazir Mohammed Khan who did not reside in the boarding house came and joined them at 9 A. M. At some unspecified time afterwards Wazir Mohammed Khan went out to make water. At half past 11 these persons heard a row outside the boarding house and they saw Topan Ram, who had a stick, striking Wazir Mohammed Khan on the shoulder. Radha Kishan then struck him on the hand. Wazir Mohammed Khan had a hockey stick, which he usually carried with him, and he in return dealt Radha Kishen a blow on the right thigh. Radha Kishen then struck him on the head and he fell down. He was temporarily stunned but was helped into the boarding house and there he told the witnesses that he had again found Radha Kishen making water and there had been an altercation between them after which he went to the bazar. On his coming back he saw Radha Kishen and Topan Ram waiting for him and as he passed they attacked him in the manner described. The defence of Radha Kishen is that the affair took place at his shop in the bazar, that he was attacked by Wazir Mohammed Khan and that he wrested the hockey stick from Wazir Mohammed Khan and struck him, whereupon Wazir Mohammed Khan fell down and struck his head and became unconscious. Topan Ram's defence is an alibi. He has led evidence to show that on that day he was at Maghiana where he attested a document which has been produced as evidence.

The first thing that strikes one about this case is that the prosecution witnesses are respectable persons who have, as far as can be seen from the record, absolutely no motive for implicating any other person but the persons who actually committed this assault on Wazir Mohammed Khan. The mere fact that they are teachers in the same school does not mean that they have any reason to name innocent persons as the perpetrators of this assault and it has not been suggested that they have any enmity with either of the appellants or any other reason for falsely implicating them. That being so it seems to me that before one disbelieves their evidence one wants something more than the few circumstances that counsel have been able to glean from a diligent scrutiny of the record. The first contention of counsel is that the dying declaration of Wazir Mohammed Khan must be rejected on account of the medical evidence. There is no doubt that the Civil Surgeon at first expressed the opinion that this blow would cause immediate unconsciousness which would continue until death. But he has under further examination admitted that it is quite possible that the first unconsciousness described may merely have been due to the deceased being stunned by the force of the blow, and that when he recovered from this, he would have a lucid interval before the final unconsciousness supervened which resulted in death. It cannot therefore be said that the medical evidence is in any way incompatible with the truth of the prosecution story. On the other hand, to some extent it supports it as the ordinary layman inventing a false story would not be likely to invent two separate periods of unconsciousness.

The second objection which counsel took was that the statement of Mohammed Zaman would show that Wazir Mohammed Khan went out to make water at 9 A. M. or shortly after and that therefore there is no explanation of what was happening between 9 o'clock and half past 11 when the assault is said to have taken place. But again this argument appears to me to flow from an unnecessary literal interpretation of Mohammed Zaman's evidence. No doubt as it reads it would suggest that Wazir Mohammed Khan left the place to make water somewhere about 9 o'clock but it does not necessarily mean this, and taken with the context obviously was not intended to mean anything of the sort. But if so, the dying declaration itself shows that when the deceased went out to make water he did not immediately come back to the school but went into the bazar and it is impossible to say how long he had been in the bazar. The prosecution witnesses were not with him and he being dead cannot tell us. The third objection arises from the evidence of the patwari who made the plan and appears as a prosecution witness. This witness is certainly a prosecution witness in name. But he is only a formal witness for the prosecution and if he makes a statement assisting the defence, it does not appear to me to have that weight which it would have had if he had been a witness for the prosecution as to the material facts of the case. In cross-examination he says that a certain place shown as No. 10 in his plan was pointed out to him by the witnesses as the scene of the fight. Now if this is true, that spot is inconsistent with the prosecution version and more consistent with the version given by Radha Kishen. A careful examination of the plan, Ex. P. D., shows that there is a little mark in light blue ink which appears to have been made by a fountain pen and above it there are the Urdu numerals 10 in black ink. A certified copy of the plan has been produced in which there is a little round mark at the place where the 10 appears on Ex. P. D., but no mark corresponding to the mark in blue ink. The witness gave his evidence on 5th July and this certified copy was made on 28th June. If the round mark in the certified copy was copied from the blue ink mark in Ex. P. D., the patwari's evidence becomes open to grave suspicion, as this mark was clearly not made at the same time as the rest of the plan which is in black Indian ink. If it was not, there is no mark in Ex. P. D. of which it could be a reproduction, unless the second digit of the Urdu No. 10 was already in existence. This digit is not just a dot, but nearly a circle, and could be a badly written Urdu 5. If so, the patwari when he said he put down the No. 10 on the plan in Court would only have put down the 1, which with the other mark which could be read either as a large miswritten dot, or a small miswritten circle, would have constituted the No. 10. That this round mark may originally have been meant for an Urdu 5 is made likely by the fact that it is in front of a house, which by comparison with another house on the plan is shown to be 5 karams long. If this is not a 5, this is the only house in this part of the plan of which the dimensions are not shown. In either case therefore there is considerable doubt about the bonafides of the patwari's evidence and this doubt is increased when one finds that the notes on the plan by the Sub-Inspector of Police which are dated 7th June show quite a different spot as the scene of the occurrence. It seems to me therefore that the patwari's evidence on this point is not reliable and therefore does not prejudicially affect the prosecution case.

The next point taken by the counsel is the delay in making the report. The affair took place at half past 11, the report was made to the Head Master who lives about half a mile away at about 3 o'clock and his report was made at the police station at 3-30. It cannot be denied that there is a greater delay than one would expect under the circumstances but there was work, namely the attending to the injured man, which could reasonably occupy the witnesses for some considerable time. It must also be remembered that witnesses are not ordinary zamindars used to criminal litigation who know the importance that the Courts have come to attach to an early report but school teachers who do not normally have anything to do with the Courts and would not realize that their failure to rush to the police at once would later give counsel an opportunity of arguing that they had invented the whole story. Moreover, it was not obviously the duty of any individual member of this party to go and report the facts to the police and this would probably also account to some extent for the delay in the report being made. After all, delay in making a report to the police is only a suspicious circumstance which puts the Court on its guard and cannot by itself be held to be a reason for rejecting evidence which is otherwise fully entitled to credit. In this case, as I have said above, the witnesses are thoroughly disinterested and have not been shown to have any motive for implicating the present appellants. An attempt has been made by counsel to criticize their conduct in not interfering to rescue Wazir Mohammed Khan, but here again only four blows were struck and the whole thing must have been over before they had time to lift a finger in his assistance.

Another circumstance in the case on which counsel has relied for criticizing the prosecution case is the fact that one of the prosecution witnesses has denied the accuracy of a statement alleged to have been made by him to the police. This statement was to the effect that the witnesses lifted Wazir Mohammad Khan from the place where he was injured into the boarding house. The story of the witness given in Court is that he walked supported by them. There is an initial presumption of accuracy in the case of official records, but I have never considered that in the case of the statements of witnesses recorded in police diaries the burden of rebutting it is very heavy. Where, as in this case, the witness is a respectable educated man and quite disinterested and the difference between what he did say and what he is recorded as saying is very slight and could easily have been due to a misunderstanding by the police officer recording the statement, I am quite prepared to accept as correct his denial of the accuracy of the statement attributed to him by the police officer.

To sum up therefore there seems to me no real reason for rejecting the prosecution evidence in this case. The learned Magistrate has felt some doubts about the truth of the evidence of three of the witnesses with regard to the previous altercation of the 4th June. I do not propose to deal with this at length except to say that I am not really convinced by the reasons which the learned Magistrate has given for casting doubt upon this evidence. To turn to the defence, I am in agreement with the learned Magistrate that the story told by Radha Kishen is far-fetched and I do not think that any reasonable person would accept it in the face of this disinterested and reliable prosecution evidence. The alibi of Topan Ram appears to be more formidable at first sight but it must be remembered that such evidence is easily procured in defence of a man who is in trouble and it would not be difficult for Topan Ram's relative who lives at Maghiana to procure witnesses in support of a story of this sort. Moreover as the learned Magistrate has pointed out it was not physically impossible for Topan Ram to have reached Maghiana on the day of the occurrence after the attack. There is also no reason why the signature of Topan Ram could not have been added to the document produced in evidence of a later date, and from its position and appearance on the deed it looks as if that may well have been the case. Moreover it is curious that a mere visitor to Maghiana should have been asked to attest this document when there must have been scores of local residents to do so, whose attendance would be easily procurable if they were later to be witnesses. But what is more important is that there is no suggestion of this defence in the cross-examination of the investigating officer and there was no mention of the attestation of this deed in the statement of Topan Ram recorded in Court on the 6th July. All that Topan Ram says is that he was at Maghiana on that day. It seems to me that if he had really got this important evidence in his favour, namely that he had attested this deed at Maghiana on the day of the occurrence, he could not have failed to have said so when questioned by the Court. The alibi therefore does not appear to me to be reliable and cannot rebut the prosecution case. I consider that the Magistrate has rightly convicted the appellants.

I am not however so convinced that any offence under S. 304, Part 2, I. P. C., has been made out against Radha Kishen. After all he only struck one blow with a stick on the head and that was after the deceased had struck him on the thigh with a hockey stick. Up to that point the two appellants merely appear to have wished to give an ordinary beating with sticks to Wazir Muhammad Khan and an ordinary beating is all that seems to have been required by the motive suggested for the attack. I do not think therefore that it can be assumed in the circumstances of the case that Radha Kishen intentionally struck a blow which he knew was likely to cause death. I therefore alter his conviction to one under S. 325 and in the circumstances I reduce his sentence to one of three years' rigorous imprisonment. With regard to Topan Ram I also consider that the conviction under S. 325 is not justified by the facts on the record. There is nothing to show that the last blow struck by Radha Kishen was in furtherance of a common intention by him and Radha Kishen that grievous hurt should be caused, as up till the time when Wazir Mohammed Khan retaliated by hitting Radha Kishen with his hockey stick, the beating was merely an ordinary one and only simple hurt was caused. Topan Ram did not strike any blow after that. I accordingly alter the conviction in his case to one under S. 323, I. P. C., and reduce his sentence to six months' rigorous imprisonment.

Civil P. C. (1908), S. 153 and O. 30, R. 1 — Suit by firm against firm working in Patiala State—Opposite party described as "firm S at Patiala through C, manager and proprietor" — Amendment by substituting name of C, sole proprietor and manager in place of firm S held should be allowed.

A firm brought a suit against another firm working in the Patiala State. The description of the opposite party was given as "firm S situate at Patiala State through C, manager and proprietor of the said firm." An objection being brought that O. 30, R. 1 benefited firms in British India only and not the firms working in the Indian States, the plaintiff applied that the plaint should be allowed to be amended by substituting the name of C, the sole proprietor and manager of the firm in place of firm S :

Held that in view of the fact that the name of C was already on the record and that the only defect in the plaint was that the opposite party had been wrongly described, the amendment sought to be allowed. [P 718 O 2]

Din Mohammad J. — An application under Para. 17 of Sch. 2 to the Civil P. C., was made by the Firm Kishen Singh-Sant Ram against the Firm Salig Ram-Bhagat Ram working in the Patiala State. The description of the opposite party was given as below :

Firm Salig Ram-Bhagat Ram, situate at Patiala State, Bazar Chaunk Kaserian, through Churanji Lal, manager and proprietor of the said firm.

At the trial an objection was raised that the opposite party being a foreign firm that is not working in British India, could not be sued in the manner in which it had been sued, inasmuch as O. 30, R. 1, Civil P. C., benefited firms in British India only, and not the firms working in the Indian States. Thereupon an application was made that the plaint be allowed to be amended in that respect. This application was disallowed by the trial Judge and eventually on 22nd November 1937, the original application under Sch. 2 was dismissed on the ground that no proceedings could be taken against the opposite party in the Courts in British India. It is from that order that the present appeal has been preferred. The amendment sought to be introduced was the substitution of the name of Churanji Lal, the sole proprietor and manager of the firm, in place of the Firm Salig Ram-Bhagat Ram and in view of the fact that the name of Churanji Lal was already on the record and that the only defect in the plaint was that the opposite party had been wrongly described and further considering that the claim of the plaintiff firm is within time, we do not consider that it was proper for the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge to have refused to allow the amendment prayed for.

We accordingly accept this appeal, set aside the order of the trial Judge and remand the case to him for disposal in accordance with law after allowing the plaintiff to make the necessary amendment in the description of the opposite party. There will be no order as to costs before us.

 Mahomedan Law—Marriage — Option of puberty—Sunni sect — Option is retained until knowledge of marriage is known to girl—Once option is exercised, marriage is cancelled from date it took place and not when option is exercised.

Among Sunnis the rule of Mahomedan law respecting the doctrine of the option of puberty is that a girl who was unaware of her marriage, when she attains puberty retains her option of repudiation until she becomes aware of the marriage, and the option is prolonged until she is acquainted with the fact that she has the right to repudiate the marriage; and she can exercise that right within a reasonable time thereafter: A I R 1922 All 155 and A I R 1929 Lah 827, Rel. on. [P 719 C 2, P 720 C 1]

By the exercise of the option of puberty the marriage ceases to be a marriage and must be treated as having never taken place. [P 720 C 2]

ORDER OF REFERENCE

Abdul Rashid J. — One Mehrwan had two sons, namely Ahmad and Mohammad. Ahmad died many years ago and his daughter Mt. Aishan was brought up by her uncle Mohammad. Mohammad had a son Amir. On 11th July 1928, Mohammad brought about a marriage between his son Amir, who was about two years of age, and his niece Mt. Aishan who was 11 or 12 years old at the time of her marriage. Mohammad was adjudicated an insolvent in the year 1935. On 16th November 1935, Jodha Ram, one of the creditors of Mohammad, presented an application in the Court of the Insolvency Judge under Ss. 4 and 69, Provincial Insolvency Act, stating that Mt. Aishan having been married to Amir in the year 1928 had forfeited her life estate, that the land inherited by Mt. Aishan from her father Ahmad had become the property of Mohammad insolvent and that this land be included amongst the assets of the insolvent. This application was opposed by Mt. Aishan mainly on the ground that her uncle Mohammad had no right to marry her to his son Amir who was only two years of age, and that this marriage had been repudiated by her on attaining puberty and she had obtained a decree on 18th July 1936, annulling her marriage with Amir. The Insolvency Court held that Mt. Aishan had got to know of the marriage soon after it had been celebrated and as the option of puberty, according to Mt. Aishan, was exercised in the beginning of 1935, it could not be said that the option was exercised within a reasonable time. On Issue 2 however, the Court held that Mt. Aishan's statement that she had exercised her option of puberty by repudiating the marriage at home had not been established and that she had never exercised such option at home. The petition under S. 4 was accepted and it was ordered that the land in dispute be included in the insolvent's assets. Against this decision Mt. Aishan preferred an appeal. Her appeal having been dismissed, she has come up to this Court on second appeal.

It was contended by the learned counsel for the appellant that the mere fact that Mt. Aishan did not exercise her option of puberty within a reasonable time of attaining puberty does not deprive her of her right to exercise her option at a subsequent time, if she was unaware of the fact that she had the right to repudiate the marriage. In support of this contention the learned counsel quoted a large number of authorities. It is however unnecessary to refer to all of them as the point has been dealt with at length in a Division Bench ruling of this Court reported in 11 Lah 172.¹ It was held therein that among Sunnis the rule of Mahomedan law respecting the doctrine of the option of puberty was that a girl who was unaware of her marriage, when she attained puberty, retained her option of repudiation until she became aware of the marriage, and the option was prolonged until she was acquainted with the fact that she had the right to repudiate the marriage; and that she could exercise that right within a reasonable time thereafter. As soon as a notice was served on her by the Insolvency Court, Mt. Aishan brought a suit and obtained a decree annulling her marriage with Amir. The finding of the lower Courts that Mt. Aishan did not exercise her option within a reasonable time of her attainment of puberty is therefore not sufficient for the decision of the point involved in this case.

Another difficulty involved in this case is as to the effect of the exercise of the option of puberty. It is contended by the learned counsel for the appellant that even if Mt. Aishan forfeited her life-estate on the date of her marriage with Amir, that forfeiture was not absolute and that as soon as her marriage with Amir was annulled, the property reverted to Mt. Aishan. The forfeiture was subject to the effect of the exercise of the option of puberty. At the time of the marriage between Amir and Mt. Aishan, Mohammad was the guardian both of the bride and the bridegroom. Both of them were minors at the time, one being his son and the other his niece. It seems to be in the highest degree inequitable that by performing a marriage between these two minors, Mohammad should be taken to have secured the estate of Mt. Aishan for himself in such a manner that even the exercise of the option of puberty by Mt. Aishan could not entitle her to the return of the estate. It may be mentioned that in the revenue records the land continued to be shown as the property of Mt. Aishan, and was never mutated in favour of Mohammad. The points involved in this case are of great importance. Subject to the orders of the learned Chief Justice, I refer this case to a Division Bench.

The facts are fully stated in the order referring this appeal to a Division Bench and need not be repeated. We are in agreement with the learned Judge who referred the appeal that the law is correctly stated in 44 All 61² and 11 Lah 172.¹ Mt. Aishan therefore had the right to repudiate this most unreasonable marriage within a reasonable time after she came to know of the existence of her right to do so. The second point involved in the appeal is without authority. She was married at the age of 11 or 12 to a boy aged 2. She has repudiated that marriage. The question is whether the marriage is dissolved from the date of repudiation or whether the marriage must be taken to have been repudiated as from the date of the marriage, in other words should the marriage be treated, once it has been repudiated, as never having taken place? The question is important in this way, by the fact of her uncle having married her to his two-year old son when both were minors, she lost her life estate in the land of her father, if the marriage was an effective one and only ceased to be a marriage as from the date of repudiation. As remarked by the learned single Judge who referred the appeal, it seems to be in the highest degree inequitable that by performing a marriage between these two minors, Mohammad should be taken to have secured the estate of Mt. Aishan for himself in such a manner that even the exercise of the option of puberty by Mt. Aishan could not entitle her to the return of the estate. It seems to us that the better view is that by the exercise of the option of puberty the marriage must be taken never to have had any effect. This does not go against Para. 211 of Mulla's Principles of Mahomedan Law, Edn. 10. If a marriage is not repudiated, it will, of course, be effective from the date of the marriage. If before repudiation either party to the marriage dies, the other will inherit from him or her. But there is no authority either way as to what is the effect if the option is exercised. We hold that by the exercise of the option of puberty the marriage ceases to be a marriage and must be treated as having never taken place.

For the reasons given, we accept the appeal and hold that the land in question belongs to Mt. Aishan and not to her insolvent uncle Mohammad. Parties will bear their own costs throughout. We may note that the learned counsel appearing for the Official Receiver stated that he had compromised the matter with Mt. Aishan. If that is so, it would appear that this decision will not affect him; but the appeal was contested by one of the creditors, Jodha Ram, and there could thus be no compromise before us nor was it sought to compromise the matter before us.

First Appeals Nos. 41 & 91 of 1937, Decided 6th April 1938, from order of Senior Sub-Judge, Multan, D/- 2nd November 1936.

(a) Punjab Colonization of Government Lands Act (5 of 1912), S. 19 — A and B contracting that A should bid at auction for both A and B and that land so purchased should be treated as joint — A obtaining land and recorded as tenant — Suit by B to enforce his title — B becomes tenant when land was purchased and objections under S. 19 held not maintainable.

A entered into a contract with B by which A was to bid at an auction held by Government for the sale of land. The land if purchased was to be treated as the property of the parties in certain defined shares. A was successful in bidding for the land. A then had his name recorded as the occupancy tenant of that land until full payment of the purchase money and interest. A suit brought by B to enforce his title to the land under the agreement was resisted on the ground that under S. 19 the rights or interests vested in a tenant under the Act could not be transferred without the consent in writing of the Commissioner and that any transfer made without such consent in writing was void :

Held that by virtue of the contract entered into between the parties, the title to the property vested in both the persons as soon as the purchase was effected, and B became joint tenant with A from the very beginning; and as B did not acquire any interest in pursuance of any transfer from A, the latter's objection must fail : A I R 1930 Lah 835, Foll.; A I R 1932 Lah 32 and A I R 1936 Lah 576, Rel. on. [P 722 C 2]

(b) Registration — Contract — Agreement to divide property if successful in obtaining it need not be registered.

An agreement between certain persons providing the manner in which certain property should be divided between them in the event of their succeeding in purchasing the same is not an agreement falling under S. 17 (1) (b), Registration Act. Further, registration is not necessary by reason of S. 17 (2) (v) as the document merely creates a right to obtaining another document later on : 89 P R 1908, Foll. [P 722 C 2]

(c) Registration — Unregistered contract — Part performance carried out—It is admissible in evidence for purposes of S. 53-A, T. P. Act.

Addison J.—In First Appeal No. 41 of 1937 the plaintiffs claimed that defendants 1 to 5 on behalf of themselves as well as on behalf of the plaintiffs and defendants 6 and 7 bid at an auction of Government land for certain lot which they were successful in getting on certain terms from Government. Prior to 6th May 1925, the parties entered into an oral agreement according to which defendants 1 to 5 alone were to bid but the parties were to subscribe in certain proportions towards the purchase money and obtain certain shares in the land. A formal agreement dated 6th May 1925 set out this fact. Apparently, Government preferred bids to be made by a small number of persons and it was for this reason that defendants 1 to 5 were alone put forward to bid, although the bid was on behalf of all the parties. It was especially mentioned in the agreement that in fact all the parties were the purchasers although defendants 1 to 5 put themselves forward as the purchasers. Six days later, namely on 12th May 1925, defendants 1 to 5 paid the original deposit amounting to Rs. 15,792 and signed a formal agreement in favour of Government to the effect that they would pay the balance in six equal instalments extending from 15th July 1930 to 15th January 1933. The deposit was subscribed by the parties according to their shares and it is not disputed that parties took possession of the land and have all along remained in possession according to those shares. Apparently, many of the colonists who bid for land were unable to pay the instalments and Government confiscated their lands, including the land purchased in the name of defendants 1 to 5. Government later restored the land to defendants 1 to 5 but slightly varied the terms. The purchasers were allowed to become occupancy tenants under S. 8, Punjab Tenancy Act, without paying anything further and they became entitled to purchase the full proprietary rights on 31st March 1937, a date which has now passed though the suit was instituted in December 1934. It may further be mentioned that by the original agreement between the parties of 6th May 1925 defendants 1 to 5 contracted that they would execute a deed of partnership as soon as their application to the Deputy Commissioner to associate plaintiffs with them in the transaction was accepted and that after proprietary rights had been obtained they would cause a sale deed to be executed in favour of their co-partners, damages being fixed if this was not done.

In 1933 defendants 1 to 5 applied to the revenue authorities to mutate the land in accordance with the original agreement. An investigation was held by the Tehsildar of Khanewal who reported to the Deputy Commissioner that this should be done. Accordingly the Deputy Commissioner by order, dated 17th March 1934, effected mutation in the names of all the parties in accordance with the original agreement. Some of the defendants however appealed to the Commissioner and were successful on 14th August 1934 in getting the Deputy Commissioner's order cancelled, apparently on the ground that the transaction was contrary to S. 19, Colonization of Government Lands (Punjab) Act. The order of the Commissioner having been upheld by the Financial Commissioner, the plaintiffs brought the present suit to remove the cloud that was cast upon their possession of the land. They sued for a declaration that they were from the beginning partners with defendants 1 to 5 in the purchase of the land and were in possession of the property in that capacity, and for an injunction against these defendants to restrain them from interfering with their possession. In the alternative they claimed damages amounting to Rs. 6180. Only defendants 1 to 4 contested the suit. The declaration and injunction claimed have been granted by the trial Court and against this decision the defendants have appealed. A case nearly on all fours with the present is 11 Lah 685.¹ There the defendant entered into a contract with the plaintiffs by which the former was to bid at an auction held by Government for the sale of land. The land if purchased was to be treated as the property of all the parties in certain defined shares. The defendant was successful in bidding for the land. The sum was to be paid by instalments.

1. Preman v. Hardit Singh, (1930) 17 A I R Lah 885=126 I C 523=11 Lah 685=32 P L R 185.

The defendant then had his name recorded as the tenant of that land until full payment of the purchase money and interest. The suit brought by the plaintiffs to enforce their title to the land under the agreement was resisted on the ground that under S. 19, Colonization of Government Lands (Punjab) Act, the rights or interests vested in a tenant under the Act could not be transferred without the consent in writing of the Commissioner and that any transfer made without such consent in writing was void. It was held that :

By virtue of the contract entered into between the parties, the title to the property vested in all the persons as soon as the purchase was effected, and the plaintiffs became joint tenants with the defendant from the very beginning ; and as they did not acquire any interest in pursuance of any transfer from the defendant, the latter's objection must fail.

This covers the case of the contract entered into between the parties in this appeal. This decision was followed in A I R 1932 Lah 32² and A I R 1936 Lah 576.³ It cannot there be said that the contract entered into between the parties offends against S. 19 of the Act. It was sought to distinguish these authorities on the ground that in the present case defendants 1 to 5 were occupancy tenants and that the defendant in 11 Lah 685¹ was only a tenant. But that obviously makes no difference. It is obvious that the Civil Courts have jurisdiction to grant the relief claimed. Nothing has been shown to us, excluding the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts. The only other question argued was that the agreement referred to was inadmissible in evidence as it was compulsorily registrable under S. 17 (1) (b), Registration Act. This contention must also be repelled. It was held in 89 P R 1908⁴ that an agreement between certain persons providing the manner in which certain property should be divided between them in the event of their succeeding in purchasing the same was not an agreement falling under S. 17 (1) (b), Registration Act. Further, registration is not necessary by reason of S. 17 (2) (v) as the document merely creates a right to obtain another document later on.

Lastly, there has been in the present case part performance so that by virtue of

4. Bhan Singh v. Thakar Das, (1908) 89 PR 1908=145 P W R 1908.

S. 49, Registration Act, the document could be received as evidence of part performance of a contract for the purposes of S. 53-A, T. P. Act; and in any case could be looked at to see the nature of the possession. There is thus no force in this contention. It was finally argued that the original agreement between the parties came to an end with the confiscation of the land by Government when the instalments were not paid. But, it is clear from the Government letter that this confiscation was set aside and the land restored though the terms were easier. Defendants 1 to 5 therefore got back the land for themselves and for their co-partners. For the reasons given we dismiss this appeal with costs. It remains to discuss the connected appeal No. 91 of 1937. It was conceded before us that the transfer by Budh Singh in this case was after he was put in possession. This being so, the transaction does offend against S. 19, Colonization of Government Lands (Punjab) Act. The decree granted in that case was therefore incompetent. Counsel for the respondent however argued that the plaintiff was entitled to the refund of the money he had paid, namely the sum of Rs. 1200. This is covered by A I R 1933 Lah 291⁵ where it was said that the sum originally advanced would be recoverable even though the attempted dealing with the land was inoperative. The learned Judges who decided that case relied on 45 All 179,⁶ where it was held that in a case where there was no effectual transfer of certain villages since the vendor had only an expectancy, yet under S. 65, Contract Act, the purchase money was recoverable. It was said by their Lordships in that case that the agreement was void from its inception and that S. 65 applied. It was contended on behalf of the respondents that a different view had been taken in A I R 1931 Oudh 309.⁷ If that is so, it cannot override the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council, while a Full Bench held in A I R 1932 Oudh 193⁸ that, where a contract in writing is void from its inception, it would fall within the terms of S. 65 as a contract which has become void. For the reasons given we accept this appeal partially and setting aside the decree of the trial Judge grant the plaintiff a decree for Rs. 1200 with costs throughout. This relief was claimed by him in the alternative.

Judgment.—In this case the plaintiff as principal brought a suit for rendition of accounts against the defendant as agent. The defendant pleaded that he was a pucca arhtia and also denied liability to render accounts. Issues were framed: (1) whether the defendant was a pucca arhtia, and (2) whether he was liable to render accounts; and no evidence being led by the defendant, the plaintiff obtained a preliminary decree for accounts. On going into accounts to proceed to final decree it was found that the sum of Rs. 885-11-0 was due to the defendant by the plaintiff and the trial Court gave a decree to the defendant for this amount. I have been informed that the defendant has sued in Bombay for a sum of Rs. 845-8-0 against the plaintiff for money paid by the defendant as agent on plaintiff's behalf. That suit has been stayed pending the decision of the present case. On appeal the learned District Judge dismissed the appeal holding that it was possible to pass a decree in favour of the defendant agent and that the defendant was entitled to settle the accounts in dispute without reference to the plaintiff before the due date, on the failure of the plaintiff to deposit margin money as required by the terms of their contract. The plaintiff has come in second appeal and the learned counsel has contended firstly that the learned District Judge is wrong in holding that the terms of the contract in question made any reference to deposit of margin money. The plaintiff admits that he signed the form contained in Ex. C/49 which runs as follows:

We shall thank you to wire your head office to do the following business on our account on your usual terms under rules and regulations of the Marwari Chamber of Commerce.

The plaintiff points out that in Exs. C/31, C/33, C/35, C/36, C/38 which contain the acceptance of the order by the defendant firm, there is no mention of the clause "on your usual terms." The relevant words run as follows:

We have this day sold by your order and on your account as follows subject to the rules and regulations of the Marwari Chamber of Commerce.

The plaintiff therefore contends that the words on "your usual terms" either refer to the rules and regulations of the Marwari Chamber of Commerce or refer to some customary terms which have not been proved and do not refer to the terms contained in Exs. DW/KC and DW/RC. As regards this point, the difficulty of the learned counsel is that he has to contend either that the words "on your usual terms" are superfluous or that there was a substantial variation between the offer and acceptance in which case there would be no contract. This was never the case of parties. With reference to the argument as to customary terms, the words are not "on the usual terms" but "on your usual terms" which obviously refer to some particular terms of the defendant. On this point there is a finding of fact by the learned District Judge that the terms contained in Exs. DW/KC and DW/RC are the usual terms of the defendant in dealing with his constituents. It is true that the two independent witnesses have stated that they had signed the forms containing these usual terms and the plaintiff is not shown to have signed any such terms. One witness however did depose that the plaintiff dealt with the defendant on those terms. I am unable to say whether the distinction was present to the mind of the learned District Judge or not when he gave the finding of fact, but I am not prepared to hold that the finding of fact is vitiated by this circumstance and I therefore repel the first contention of the learned counsel for the appellant.

The next point made was that there was no proof of a specific demand for margin money. The plaintiff's case however was that there was never any demand for margin money at all and there is again a finding of fact by the learned District Judge that margin money was demanded. The learned counsel contends that there is no statement that a specific amount was demanded but in the absence of any pleading to this effect, I think it must be taken that the amount due under the terms of the contract was demanded. There is nothing to show that any exorbitant demand was made and therefore the plaintiff refused to pay it. Hence I repel this contention of the counsel also. The third point made by the learned counsel was that no decree could be passed in favour of an agent in a suit brought by a principal for rendition of accounts and he cited A I R 1932 Lah 619.¹ With great respect to the learned Judge who gave that ruling I venture to differ from that ruling on the authority of the two Allahabad cases cited in the judgment of the learned District Judge, namely A I R 1924 All 854² and 32 All 525.³ These rulings have been approved of by the Madras High Court in 54 Mad 654⁴ at p. 659, where a reference is also made to the dictum of their Lordships of the Privy Council in 14 Cal 147.⁵ None of these rulings however laid down that a decree must be passed in favour of the defendant. The defendant in this case as stated has brought a suit for Rs. 845-8-0 in Bombay. In order to obtain a decree in this Court the defendant (not being a pucca arhtia) would not only have to show that he made a settlement on behalf of the plaintiff but that he had actually paid the sums due under the settlement. No loss has been proved in this case. Ordinarily speaking, I might have framed an issue and remanded the case for a finding on this point but in view of the fact that the defendant's suit is pending, I see no reason why the powers of the Court should be exercised in his favour.

I would therefore accept this appeal so far as to do away with the decree in favour of the defendant for Rs. 885-11-0 and I dismiss the plaintiff's suit leaving the parties to bear their own costs of the final decree proceedings. As regards the costs for the hearing of 19th January 1938, the defendant-respondent has furnished no valid excuse for the absence and I assess costs of that hearing at Rs. 50.

(in liquidation) praying that the certificate granted to the respondents for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council be cancelled, inasmuch as no security had been deposited by them within the time prescribed by law. After hearing counsel for the parties, I have arrived at the conclusion that this petition should be dismissed. It will be necessary to set out a few facts in order fully to appreciate the grounds on which, in my view, this petition should fail. On 3rd July 1936, a Division Bench of this Court, of which I was a member, granted the respondents a certificate under S. 109, Civil P. C., for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. Under R. 7, O. 45, Civil P. C., they were required to furnish security in cash or in Government securities in the alternative within six weeks from the date of the grant. The period thus allowed expired on 14th August 1936, but no security was furnished on or before this date. On 22nd August, Mr. Madan Gopal advocate, made an application enclosing the two halves of two Government promissory notes, one for Rs. 3000 and the other for Rs. 1000, duly endorsed in favour of the Registrar of the High Court and stating that he had instructed Lloyds Bank on 18th July to purchase securities, that although the Bank had promised to do so within two or three weeks, it did not carry out its undertaking, that the default was not intentional and that on that ground the security though late by one week be accepted. Thereupon, the Registrar on 11th September 1936, forwarded the papers to me when I was sitting as a Vacation Judge, with the recommendation that, in view of the circumstances disclosed in the case, the delay may be condoned. Reference in the note was made to the commentary appended to R. 7, O. 45, in Mulla's Civil Procedure Code, and it was suggested that this Court had power to extend the time if "cogent reasons" were forthcoming. This commentary was based on a judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council reported in 10 Cal 557¹ and a Full Bench judgment of the

In 10 Cal 557¹ their Lordships of the Privy Council, while referring to the wording of S. 602, Act 10 of 1877 (which has now been replaced by Act 5 of 1908) remarked that the words relating to the time within which security is to be given are directory only and although they are not to be departed from without cogent reasons, the Court from which the appeal is preferred has the right of extending the time. In the case before their Lordships, the Oudh Judicial Commissioner had condoned the delay and their Lordships maintained that order. In 6 All 250² Sir Robert Stuart C. J., sitting with Straight, Oldfield, Brodhurst and Tyrrell JJ., followed this judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council and referring inter alia to the wording of Ss. 603, 604 and 605 came to the conclusion that the power to extend the time for giving security was vested in the Court in spite of the apparently mandatory language of S. 602. In the present Civil Procedure Code, the terminology used in R. 7 of O. 45, so far as the period of limitation under consideration is concerned, is just the same as had been used in S. 602 and so is the language of Ss. 603, 604 and 605. I accordingly authorized the Registrar to accept the security as tendered. On 1st October 1936, the appeal to His Majesty in Council was declared to be admitted by the Bench granting the certificate in terms of R. 8 of O. 45 and a notice thereof was duly given to the respondent, that is the present petitioner. A correct copy of the record was transmitted to His Majesty in Council in due course and the appeal is now pending before their Lordships of the Privy Council, and has been registered there as P. C. Appeal No. 84 of 1937 as affirmed by Mr. Madan Gopal.

On 20th April 1938, the present petition was submitted by the Official Liquidator, alleging that no security had been put in by the respondents on or before the 14th August, that it was furnished on the 22nd August, that it was accepted without any authority by the High Court office and that the order of 1st October 1936 was made in ignorance of the fact that no security had been furnished within the time prescribed by law. It was further stated that the ex parte order, dated 1st October, was not binding on the petitioner and that this Court had no power to extend the time fixed in R. 7 of O. 45. It was consequently prayed that the certificate granted by this Court to the respondents be cancelled. It appears that the petitioner, while submitting this petition, had the Privy Council judgment referred to above in his mind and it was presumably on that account that, in para. 7 of the petition he added that there being no cogent reasons, the delay could not be condoned by this Court. So far as the cogency of the reasons for furnishing security after the expiry of the time prescribed is concerned, there can be no two opinions. The money required for the purchase of the Government promissory notes had been deposited within a fortnight of the order and for the delay that occurred in securing the promissory notes, it was the Bank that was responsible and not the respondents.

Counsel for the petitioner has relied on A I R 1935 Lah 733,³ A I R 1938 Lah 207,⁴ 39 C W N 651,⁵ 55 All 432⁶ and 55 Mad 835.⁷ In A I R 1935 Lah 733,³ 55 Mad 835⁷ and 55 All 432⁶ were relied on and the Bombay judgment reported in 51 Bom 430⁸ which was to the contrary was dissented from. A I R 1938 Lah 207⁴ followed A I R 1935 Lah 733.³ In 55 Mad 835,⁷ it was conceded that the old rule empowered the High Court to extend the time but it was observed that in view of the change introduced in the wording of R. 7 of O. 45 in substituting "not exceeding 60 days" for "within six weeks" in connexion with another limit of time provided therein, the power so vested had been expressly taken away and could not therefore now be exercised. 55 All 432⁶ followed 55 Mad 835.⁷ In 39 C W N 651⁵ it was held that the object of R. 7 was to put a limit definitely, finally and completely upon the amount of extension that the High Court could grant in the matter of appeals to the Privy Council, but no authority was referred to therein or discussed. In 51 Bom 430⁸ however, it was held that the Court could enlarge the time for furnishing security. In view of the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council referred to above as well as of this judgment, it cannot be said that the law is well settled that the power of extending the time for furnishing security does not vest in this Court. It is in the case of obligatory provisions only that the hands of the Court are tied down, and if once it is held in view of the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council that the provision embodied in this rule is directory, the power of the High Court to condone such delays remains unaffected, whatever the change in the body of the Rule. Besides, the argument employed by the learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court in 6 All 250² also deserves consideration. As stated above while adverting to the language of S. 603, which now corresponds to R. 8, O. 45, Civil P. C., Sir Robert Stuart C. J. remarked that the words "to the satisfaction of the Court" as used in that Section, and which, as I have said before have been used in the corresponding R. 8 too, read in the light of the provisions made in Ss. 604 and 605 invest the Court with discretion to extend the time fixed in S. 602, especially as the words "as before provided" have not been used.

I need not however further dilate on this aspect of the question inasmuch as the petitioner is clearly guilty of laches and is not entitled to any relief on that score alone. As remarked above, the notice of admission of the appeal under Rule 8 was given to him in due course and he slept over it for full 18 months before he presented this petition. He knew full well that the records had been submitted to the Privy Council and the appeal had been registered there and that no proceedings were pending in this Court now. He further should have known that the only power of revoking the acceptance of the security furnished under R. 7 vested in this Court is the one given by virtue of R. 9, O. 45, Civil P. C., and that that Rule comes into play only before the admission of the appeal under R. 8 and not at any subsequent stage. That occasion, it is obvious, had long passed in this case before the present petition was submitted.

Counsel for the respondents contends that as soon as the records are transmitted to the Privy Council, this Court becomes functus officio and all further orders in relation to the appeal, except those which are expressly vested in this Court by virtue of the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, are to be made by their Lordships of the Privy Council. I need not however discuss this aspect of the case as I am clear that so far as the cancellation of the certificate granted to the respondents is concerned, the petitioner is not entitled to any relief inasmuch as (1) the delay had been condoned by this Court for reasons which cannot be described as cogent; (2) the stage for cancelling the acceptance of the security has long passed; and (3) the petitioner has been guilty of gross negligence. There is another aspect of the case also which may be referred to in this connexion. The High Court was closed for long vacation from 17th July to 30th September 1936 (both days inclusive) and the period of six weeks from the date of the certificate expired on 14th August when the Court was closed for all purposes relating to civil matters except certain urgent petitions which had been expressly provided for. The furnishing of the security under R. 7 falls under the Code of Civil Procedure and in my view, if on no other ground, on this ground alone the respondents could defer compliance with the order of security until the day when the Court re-opened. The following remarks in 39 C W N 651,⁵ an authority relied upon by the petitioner himself, support me in this conclusion:

Now the certificate was on 2nd August 1926. The Court closed for the vacation on the 26th of that month and the Court resumed after vacation on 8th November 1926. The applicants therefore would have been in time if on the reopening day, i. e. on 8th November, they had deposited the security.

In this case however, the respondents did not wait so long and deposited the Government promissory notes long before the vacation had come to an end, and were not therefore guilty of any delay at all. On the grounds mentioned above therefore I would dismiss this petition with costs.

Messrs. Durga Dass-Bhagwan Das, Kasur, Judgment-debtors and another—Respondents.

Letters Patent Appeal No. 141 of 1937, Decided on 10th March 1938, against judgment of Bhide J., reported in A I R 1938 Lah 123.

Civil P. C. (1908), O. 21, R. 57—Warrant for attachment of moveables belonging to judgment-debtor obtained by decree-holder—Bailiff on being informed on spot that property was already sold, submitting report to that effect—Executing Court passing order directing case to be consigned to record room—Order held did not amount to dismissal of execution application—Fresh application for execution held not barred : A I R 1938 Lah 123, Reversed.

On an application by a decree-holder, a warrant of attachment of certain moveable property belonging to the judgment-debtor was issued. When the bailiff went to the spot accompanied by the decree-holder's representative, he was informed that the property was already sold. On a report being submitted by him to that effect, the execution Court made an order that the case be consigned to the record room inasmuch as the decree-holder's representative had failed to get the property attached :

Held that the inability on the part of the decree-holder to get the property attached did not amount to a default contemplated by O. 21, R. 57 and the consignment of the execution case to the record room did not amount to a dismissal of the application so as to attract the penal provisions of O. 21, R. 57, and this being so a fresh application by the decree-holder for execution was not barred: A I R 1938 Lah 123, Reversed; A I R 1923 Mad 703 ; A I R 1915 Mad 885 and A I R 1926 All 734, Rel. on ; A I R 1935 Mad 17, Distinguishing. Bhagwat Dayal—for Appellant.

Din Mohammad J.—The facts of this case have been fully set out in the judgment under appeal and need not be recapitulated. The sole question now before us is whether the application for execution presented by the decree-holder on 19th August 1936 can proceed. The judgment-debtor contends that it cannot inasmuch as no application for attachment has been made along with it, while the decree-holder maintains that it can, inasmuch as the property sought to be sold was once before attached in 1933 and that that attachment subsists. Bhide J., from whose decision the present appeal has been preferred, has held that although the application for execution submitted by the decree-holder in 1933 ended in a compromise and the attachment consequently did not cease, the default of the decree-holder in connexion with the subsequent application submitted by him on 20th November 1935 and decided by the execution Court on 31st January 1936, put an end to the attachment and that therefore no fresh application could be made without first applying for the attachment of the property in question. It is necessary to determine therefore whether any such default was committed by the decree-holder in relation to the application dated 20th November 1935, as is contemplated in O. 21, R. 57, Civil P. C. This Rule reads as follows :

Where any property has been attached in execution of a decree but by reason of the decree-holder's default the Court is unable to proceed further with the application for execution, it shall either dismiss the application or for any sufficient reason adjourn the proceedings to a future date. Upon the dismissal of such application the attachment shall cease.

This Rule obviously contemplates the happening of two events before the application can be dismissed : (i) the attachment of the property and (ii) the decree-holder's default which disables the Court from proceeding further with the application. What happened in this case was that on an application made by the decree-holder a warrant of attachment of certain moveable property belonging to the judgment-debtor was issued and when the bailiff went to the spot accompanied by the decree-holder's representative, he was informed that the property had already been sold. On a report being submitted by him to that effect, the execution Court made an order that the case be consigned to the record room as the decree-holder's representative had not got the property attached. This obviously was the only default attributed to the decree-holder. Considering however that the property was already under attachment and that that attachment was perfectly legal and valid and was subsisting on the date when the bailiff went there with the decree-holder, it cannot be reasonably said that in not getting the property attached the decree-holder made any default. He was not expected to do what already had been done and in failing to do an unnecessary thing he could not be accused of any laches or negligence within the meaning of Rule 57. The consignment of the execution case to the record room therefore did not amount to a dismissal of the application so as to attract the penal provisions of R. 57 and this being so, the fresh application presented by the decree-holder could not be barred. Counsel for the appellant has referred to A I R 1923 Mad 703,¹ 28 I C 62² and 48 All 698³ and, in our view, these judgments lend a good deal of support to his contention. In A I R 1923 Mad 703¹ the following remarks are pertinent :

No doubt the first six words of the Section "where any property has been attached" are literally satisfied in the present case. But, we are not prepared to hold that such literal satisfaction is sufficient. It seems to us that the Section as a whole is applicable only to cases, in which the stage of attachment has been passed and in which the Court is conscious that the next stage is intended and is not applicable to an abnormal case, such as that before us, where no one concerned, neither the party nor the Court, was conscious of the true facts and where, if there was in fact an attachment, the party and the Court were not aware of it and were proceeding as though there were none . . . The order in respect of which default is contemplated, must clearly be one, which could be made after attachment, not one, as here appropriate only before it. Taking this view, we hold that O. 21, R. 57, was not applicable to the present case or to the order of dismissal now under consideration at all.

In the present case too, as stated above, both the Court and the decree-holder were under a misapprehension that the previous attachment did not exist and that a fresh attachment was necessary and learning that the property had been already sold by the judgment-debtor, the only order that was made by the Court was that inasmuch as the decree-holder had failed to get the property attached, the case should be consigned to the record room. This inability on the part of the decree-holder to get the property attached does not in our view amount to a default contemplated in Rule 57. In 28 I C 62,² which again is a case from the Madras High Court, the headnote reads as follows :

Under O. 21, R. 57, a previously existing attachment ceases to exist on the dismissal of an application for execution only when the circumstances required by the rule are established.

The object of the Rule is to prevent the continuance of an attachment for an indefinite period on the practice of 'striking off' an application for execution previously in vogue for statistical purposes and the operation of the Rule must therefore be confined within the smallest possible limits.

3. Bijai Saran Sahi v. Deo Kishen Prasad, (1926) 18 A I R All 734=97 I C 102=48 All 698=24 A L J 901.

In 48 All 598³ it was observed :

The Rule incorporated in the Code (R. 57 of O. 21) embodied the results of the decisions which had been arrived at by different Courts as regards the effect of an order striking off an execution proceeding on an attachment made in that proceeding, and in substance what it lays down is that if the decree-holder has been in default in not taking the necessary steps to proceed further with the application for execution, and the Court has to dismiss the proceeding, the legal result of such dismissal shall be that the attachment shall cease. That rule does not however apply to a case where a Court strikes off an execution proceeding or consigns the record to the record room to suit its own convenience, or to reduce its pending file, without any default having been committed by the decree-holder, or without his having been asked to take any further steps necessary for proceeding with it. . . . As there was no default it cannot be said that the order aforesaid was an order dismissing the application under O. 21, R. 57, Civil P. C.

No one has appeared for the respondents in this case and consequently the opposite view has not been satisfactorily discussed before us. Counsel for the appellant has on our enquiry referred us to A I R 1935 Mad 17⁴ as an authority against his contention, but we consider that that judgment is distinguishable on facts. As at present advised therefore, we consider that the view taken by the learned Judge of this Court is wrong. We accordingly allow the appeal, set aside the order of the single Judge and restore that of the execution Court. We however make no order as to costs.

Civil Revn. No. 709 of 1937, Decided on 11th January 1938, from decree of Small Cause Court Judge, Rohtak, D/- 1st June 1937.

* Usurious Loans Act (1918), S. 3 (as amended by S. 5 of Punjab Act 7 of 1934)—Subsequent mortgage independent of prior mortgage — Mere fact that consideration for second mortgage was amount due on first would not make them one transaction — In suit on second mortgage Court cannot reopen account of first mortgage.

In a mortgage of 1930, the property mortgaged comprised one-half of the house, and on the principal sum thus secured, interest was agreed to be paid at 18½ per cent. per annum and the term of that mortgage was two years. Accounts under that transaction were gone into and were finally closed. Another mortgage was executed on 7th March 1934 and the property mortgaged by it was the whole house and not one-half as before. The rate of interest fixed was Rs. 9 on the entire mortgage money. The term of this mortgage was also fixed different. The mortgagee brought a suit on the second mortgage :

Held that in these circumstances the two transactions were independent of each other and the mere fact that the consideration for the second transaction was the amount due on the first, would not make them one transaction. Hence it was not permissible to the Court to re-open account of mortgage transaction of 1930 under S. 3 of the Act, as that mortgage and the mortgage in dispute were two independent transactions. [P 730 C 2]

Held further that the suit was not brought on a series of transactions but was brought on the transaction of March 1934 only, which was independent transaction from the first. Hence the Explanation to Proviso (1) of S. 3 did not apply. [P 730 C 2]

Order — By a registered deed, dated 7th March 1934, the defendant mortgaged his house with the plaintiff for Rs. 875 for a term of three years. It was stipulated that the mortgagor would pay Rs. 9 per month in lump sum as interest on the mortgage debt. Interest was agreed to be paid monthly and on default the mortgagee was given the right to sue for its recovery without joining a claim for recovery of the principal amount in the same suit. Under this provision the mortgagee brought three suits for recovery of interest at Rs. 9 per month for a period aggregating eleven months, and the suits were decreed. By these decrees, the plaintiff realized Rs. 99 as interest. The defendant also paid out of Court interest at Rs. 9 per mensem for a further period of 21 months. In this way, the plaintiff has realized interest at Rs. 9 per mensem for 32 months. He has now brought the present suit for recovery of Rs. 27 as interest for three months, from 7th November 1936 to 6th February 1937. The defendant raised various pleas, of which the one important for our present purposes is that the dealings between the parties first began on 17th June 1930 when the defendant had borrowed Rs. 550 from the plaintiff on a mortgage of one-half of the house and on that transaction the amount due was Rs. 875 on 7th March 1934 in lieu of which the mortgage in dispute was executed. It was accordingly contended that under S. 3, Usurious Loans Act 10 of 1918, as amended by S. 5 of (Punjab) Act 7 of 1934, the whole account from 1930 should be re-opened, and if this were done it would be found that the plaintiff had been paid on account of interest much more than the maximum permissible under the Act. The lower Court has accepted this plea, and has dismissed the suit.

In my opinion, in the peculiar facts of this case it was not permissible to the Court to re-open account of the mortgage transaction of 1930 under S. 3 of the Act, as that mortgage and the mortgage in dispute are two independent transactions. In 1930 the property mortgaged comprised one-half of the house, and on the principal sum thus secured, interest was agreed to be paid at $18\frac{3}{4}$ per cent. per annum and the term of that mortgage was two years. Accounts under that transaction were gone into and were finally closed. The mortgage with which we are concerned was executed on 7th March 1934, and the property mortgaged by it is the whole house and not one-half as before. The rate of interest fixed was Rs. 9 on the entire mortgage money, which is much less than $18\frac{3}{4}$ per cent. per annum. The term of this mortgage was also fixed different. In these circumstances, the two transactions appear to be independent of each other, and the mere fact that the consideration for the second transaction is the amount due on the first, will not make them one transaction. This was practically conceded by the learned counsel for the respondent. The learned Judge has applied the Explanation to Proviso 1 of S. 3 which lays down that in the case of a suit "brought on a series of transactions" the expression "the transaction" means, for the purpose of Proviso 1, the first of such transactions. Admittedly, the present suit is not brought on a series of transactions but is brought on the transaction of 7th March 1934 only. The mortgage of 1930 was an independent transaction which had been closed and accordingly could not be re-opened in the present suit. To this extent therefore the learned Judge has erroneously applied the provisions of S. 3, Usurious Loans Act.

The plaintiff however is entitled to have the account re-opened from 7th March 1934, the date on which the present mortgage was effected. From that date under (Punjab) Act 7 of 1934, the maximum simple interest permissible (on a secured loan) is 12 per cent. per annum. At this rate, the mortgagee could not charge more than Rs. 8-12-0 per mensem on Rs. 875. In the mortgage deed however, interest was stipulated to be paid in lump sum at Rs. 9 per mensem, which is four annas in excess of the maximum permissible. The defendant has already paid him out of Court interest for 21 months at Rs. 9. For this period therefore, he has charged Rs. 5-4-0 in excess. Similarly for the three months covered by the suit, his claim is excessive by 12 annas. Deducting Rs. 6 from the amount claimed, the plaintiff is entitled to a decree for Rs. 21 only. Besides, this interest for 11 months at the stipulated rate had been realized by decrees of Courts. No deduction however can be made out of this amount, under Proviso 2 to S. 3 of the Act. I accept the petition for revision, set aside the decree of the Court below and in modification thereof pass a decree for Rs. 21 in favour of the plaintiff against the defendant. As neither party has been successful in full, I leave them to bear their own costs.

Criminal Appeal No. 13 of 1938, Decided on 16th March 1938, from order of Magistrate, First Class, Rohtak, D/- 20th December 1937.

Criminal Trial — Confession — Accused making confession, although coming from police custody, present before Court for considerable period — Overwhelming prosecution evidence recorded against him — Held that no inference could be drawn that confession was improperly induced.

Although the accused making a confessional statement (which he retracted later) had admittedly come from police custody that day, he was before the Court for a considerable period and overwhelming prosecution evidence was recorded against him before his statement was taken :

Held that no inference could be drawn that his confession was in any way improperly induced. It was more likely to have been due to the fact that he had an intelligence to see that he had been caught red-handed and that the evidence which had been given against him in his presence was overwhelming : A I R 1928 Lah 724, Disting.

Judgment.— Molar appeals from his conviction under S. 395 read with Section 398, I. P. C., and a sentence of seven years' rigorous imprisonment. The case for the prosecution is that on the night of 11th November 1937, after sunset time, a dacoity was committed in the village of Rabra in the shop of Suraj Bhan by 8 persons some of whom were armed with pistols and guns. The outcries of the victim attracted the villagers to the spot and the dacoits ran away firing their guns. Nevertheless the present appellant, who was not armed with a fire arm, was overtaken and caught. On being examined under S. 342, Criminal P. C., he admitted his guilt and pleaded guilty to the charge against him. There were two other co-accused : one was acquitted by the learned Magistrate on the ground that his name was not mentioned in the first information report and that although the first information report was not made by an actual eye-witness, he was known to so many other of the witnesses that if he had really been one of the dacoits his name would certainly have been mentioned in the report. The other, Divan Singh, was acquitted because the learned trial Magistrate was not fully satisfied with the evidence as to the identification parade in which he was picked out by certain witnesses. The Magistrate appears to think that because some of the witnesses picked out another person in the identification parade in his place, the persons who picked him out correctly must have done so through some trickery practised by the police.

The first point that has been made with regard to the conviction of the present appellant is that the confessional statement made by him on 20th November in the Court of the trial Magistrate should not be relied upon because it was retracted a few days later and because it appears to have been the result of some improper inducement. Reliance is placed on a judgment of a Division Bench of this Court reported in A I R 1928 Lah 724.¹ In that case an incomplete chalan was put into Court by the police and after three witnesses had been examined, the Court took the statement of the accused under S. 342, Criminal P. C., and on his admission and plea of guilty committed him in spite of the fact that some weeks later he had retracted. The learned Judges who heard that appeal were of opinion that they could draw an inference that the confessional statement had been improperly induced from the mere fact that the police did not have the confession recorded under S. 164, Criminal P. C., but took an incomplete chalan into Court.

Whether that inference was justifiable in the circumstances of that case is immaterial for the decision of this one. In this case there was no incomplete chalan and although the appellant had admittedly come from police custody that day, he was before the Court for a considerable period and overwhelming evidence for the prosecution was recorded against him before his statement was taken. In these circumstances one cannot say that there is any cogent inference that his confession was in any way improperly induced. It was more likely to have been due to the fact that he had the intelligence to see that he had been caught red-handed and that the evidence which had been given against him in his presence was overwhelming. It cannot be denied that the evidence on the record shows that even apart from the confession there cannot be the slightest doubt about his guilt. He was actually seen by a number of witnesses : he was caught there and then within a couple of minutes at a distance of a few fields from the village. It has been contended on his behalf that the mere fact that he was arrested shortly after the dacoity near the village does not prove that he was one of the persons who were committing the dacoity and he himself said in his subsequent statement that he had gone to the village to buy a bullock and that he was arrested by mistake although he was an innocent person. This argument might have been of some avail if the evidence against him had merely been that given by the witnesses in examination-in-chief. But, unfortunately for the appellant, these prosecution witnesses were all cross-examined at length after the charge and a perusal of their cross-examination leaves not the slightest doubt that the pursuit from the place where the dacoity was committed to the place where he was arrested was continuous and the same transaction. Moreover, there is evidence of more than one witness who deposed that he was seen by them actually at the shop where the dacoity was taking place. His plea that he had merely gone to the village to purchase a bullock is falsified by the clear evidence of the prosecution witnesses that no mention of this story was made at the time he was arrested. In my opinion there is no reasonable doubt of his guilt and I accordingly dismiss the appeal.

Kehru and another, Plaintiffs and others, Defendants — Respondents.

Second Appeal No. 891 of 1937, Decided on 22nd December 1937, from decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Ferozepore, D/- 11th May 1937.

* Contract Act (1872), S. 23—Security bond for appearance of accused on fixed date — No agreement between surety and accused that latter would reimburse former for amount of security which might be forfeited — Amount subsequently forfeited — Accused three years afterwards voluntarily executing mortgage in favour of surety, consideration being amount forfeited — S. 23 held did not apply — Even in case of agreement to reimburse, accused held could not recover mortgaged land, both parties being in pari delicto.

A surety furnished security for the appearance of the accused on a fixed date before the Magistrate. There was no agreement, express or implied, made between him and the accused at that time that the accused would subsequently reimburse him for such amount as might be forfeited. The security bond was subsequently forfeited as the accused failed to appear on the fixed date. Three years afterwards the accused voluntarily and out of gratitude executed a mortgage in favour of the surety, the consideration of the mortgage being the amount forfeited. The accused subsequently brought a suit for the recovery of the land on the ground that consideration for the mortgage was against public policy :

Held that S. 23 did not apply to the case and it was therefore not open to the accused to get back the land without paying the surety the amount for which the mortgage had been effected : 1 All 751; 32 Bom 449 and 1 P R 1899, Disting.

Held further that even if an agreement to reimburse had been made between the parties at the time when the security bond was executed, the plaintiff's suit would still fail on the ground that both parties being in pari delicto, the Court would help neither party and would let the estate remain where it falls, because a person who has transferred his property to another for an illegal or immoral purpose cannot get the transfer annulled on the ground that the consideration was illegal or immoral : A I R 1921 Oudh 132, Rel. on. [P 734 C 2]

Judgment. — This second appeal arises out of a suit instituted by two brothers,

Kehru and Mehru, plaintiffs-respondents, against their uncle Bur Singh, defendant-appellant, for possession of 17 kanals 10 marlas of land which the plaintiffs alleged belonged to them but of which the defendant Bur Singh had been in unlawful possession, for six years preceding the suit. The defendant admitted that the plaintiffs were the owners of the land, but pleaded that he was lawfully in possession as a mortgagee under a mortgage effected orally by Kehru, plaintiff, in 1930. In their replication, the plaintiffs denied the factum and validity of the alleged mortgage. The trial Judge found that the alleged mortgage had not been proved, and consequently Bur Singh, defendant, had no legal right to retain possession of the land. He accordingly decreed the suit. On appeal the learned Additional District Judge held that there was sufficient evidence on the record to prove that Kehru, plaintiff, had mortgaged the land to Bur Singh, defendant, in 1930 but he came to the conclusion that the mortgage was invalid as being against public policy.

The circumstances in which the mortgage was found to have been effected are as follows : In 1927 Kehru was placed on security under S. 110, Criminal P. C. He offered certain sureties and was released. After some time, the Sub-Inspector reported that the sureties were men of no substance and were otherwise undesirable persons and that Kehru be called upon to furnish fresh security. On this, proceedings under S. 122, Criminal P. C., were started against Kehru and warrants for his appearance were issued. He however evaded service of the warrants for some months. Eventually, he was arrested on 16th May 1927, and in execution of a bailable warrant requiring his appearance before the Magistrate at a certain named date, his uncle Bur Singh furnished security for Rs. 500 undertaking to produce him in Court on the date fixed. The bond was duly accepted and Kehru was released. On the date of hearing however Kehru failed to appear before the Magistrate. Efforts were made to secure his attendance, but they were unsuccessful. Proceedings were then taken against Bur Singh, surety, and eventually an order was passed on 18th August 1927 forfeiting the whole amount of the security bond, Rs. 500. This sum was paid by Bur Singh shortly after the order of forfeiture had been passed on 18th August 1927.

Three years later, in 1930, Kehru mortgaged the land in dispute to Bur Singh for Rs. 500, the consideration being the amount which Bur Singh had to pay on forfeiture of his bond by reason of the nonappearance of Kehru before the Magistrate in the aforesaid proceedings under S. 122, Criminal P. C. These are the facts found by the learned Additional District Judge, and are no longer in controversy. On the question of law the learned Additional District Judge has held that the consideration for the mortgage was unlawful being opposed to public policy. The transaction was therefore void and the defendant Bur Singh, was not entitled to continue in possession as mortgagee. In support of this conclusion, the learned Judge relied upon 1 All 751¹ and 32 Bom 449.² On second appeal it is urged by the learned counsel for the defendant-appellant that the rulings relied upon by the learned Additional District Judge are distinguishable, inasmuch as in both of them it was a condition precedent of the surety offering security for the accused that the latter would deposit with him the amount of the security, whereas in the present case no such condition had been entered into at the time when Bur Singh stood surety or later when the security bond was forfeited, and that it was three years later when Kehru out of gratitude for the good turn that Bur Singh had done him voluntarily gave him the land in mortgage.

In 1 All 751¹ the facts were these. The plaintiff in that case was required by the Magistrate to furnish two sureties for good behaviour, each in the sum of Rs. 600. The respondent agreed to become a surety on condition that the plaintiff would deposit with him the sum in which he was required to go bail. The deposit was made and the period of surety expired without any act having been committed by the plaintiff to forfeit the security. Subsequently the plaintiff sued to recover from the surety the amount of the deposit. It was held that the consideration of the agreement was unlawful in that it defeated the object of the law and therefore the plaintiff could not recover. It was observed that if the amount for which the surety is responsible is deposited with him by, or on behalf of, the person for whose conduct he undertakes responsibility, it is obvious that he is responsible only in name and the object of the law in taking security is defeated.

In 32 Bom 449,² while a criminal prosecution was pending against the defendant, his pleader entered into a bail bond for his appearance and to indemnify the pleader against any loss which he might suffer under the bail bond, a nominal sale deed and a nominal rent deed was simultaneously passed by the defendant to the plaintiff. The plaintiff subsequently brought a suit to recover two years' rent on the strength of the rent note. The defendant pleaded that the property did not belong to the plaintiff as there was no valid sale deed in his favour the consideration being opposed to public policy. The plea was upheld and the suit dismissed.

Similarly, in 1 P R 1899,³ it was held by the Full Bench of the Punjab Chief Court that it was against public policy for a surety who had given a bail bond for the appearance of his principal to answer a criminal charge and whose bail bond had been forfeited in consequence of the non-appearance of the principal, to recover the amount forfeited from his principal either on the ground of an express, or an implied, or a quasi-contract under S. 70, Contract Act, by the principal to indemnify the surety, or as an action in tort. This conclusion was reached on the principle that in taking sureties for the appearance of an accused person, the object of the law is to have a guarantee as it were from the sureties at their own risk that the accused will so appear and the pecuniary liability is imposed for the purpose of securing that the sureties will ensure the appearance of the accused. To hold that the surety could recover from an absconding accused, either under an express contract, or an implied, or quasi-contract, or by an action in tort, would be to defeat this object, and therefore contrary to public policy.

The rule laid down in these rulings is well-established and has not been challenged by the learned counsel for the appellant. The present case however does not fall within the mischief of this rule. As has been stated already, in this case there was no agreement, express or implied, made between the parties at the time when the appellant furnished security that Kehru would subsequently reimburse him for such amount as might be forfeited. Here, the mortgage was effected voluntarily by Kehru nearly three years after the forfeiture, and the appellant has been in undisturbed possession since. To such a case, S. 23, Contract Act, does not apply and it is therefore not open to Kehru and his brother to get back the land without paying him the amount for which the mortgage had been effected.

Further, it seems to me that even if an agreement to reimburse had been made between the parties at that time when the security bond was executed, the plaintiff's suit would still fail on the ground that both parties being in pari delicto, the Court will help neither party and will let the estate remain where it falls: 61 I C 985.⁴ It is well settled that a person who has transferred his property to another for an illegal or immoral purpose cannot get the transfer annulled on the ground that the consideration was illegal or immoral. Similarly, it has been held that money paid in furtherance of an illegal object cannot be recovered when the parties to the contract are themselves in pari delicto. Whatever the position might have been if the appellant had brought a suit to recover from Kehru the amount forfeited, or if he had sued to enforce the mortgage, there can be no doubt that Kehru or his brother cannot invoke the assistance of the Court to get back the land which they had voluntarily mortgaged to the appellant. I accept the appeal, set aside the judgment and decree of the Additional District Judge and dismiss the plaintiff's suit. Having regard to all the circumstances, I leave the parties to bear their own costs throughout.

Secondly, while a person can be called an 'office-holder' if he participates in the management or performance of public worship in a Gurdwara or in the management or performance of any rituals or ceremonies observed therein, he cannot be called a 'minister' unless he is vested with the control of the management or performance of public worship in a Gurdwara and of the rituals and ceremonies observed therein either solely or along with others. Din Mohammad J.—This is an appeal from an order of the Sikh Gurdwaras Judicial Commission dismissing an application of the Shiromani Gurdwara Parbhandak Committee, Amritsar. The application was presented under S. 142, Sikh Gurdwaras Act, claiming the following reliefs: (a) the removal of one Gurdial Singh from his office of president as well as from his position as a member of the committee of management, Gurdwara Bhai Karm Singhwala; (b) the reinstatement of one Sher Singh in his office as granthi in the said Gurdwara; (c) for payment of the arrears of Sher Singh's salary in full; and (d) for award of Rs. 500 as damages as well as costs. The Judicial Commission came to the conclusion that Sher Singh was not a 'minister' within the meaning of S. 2 (4) (vii), Sikh Gurdwaras Act, and consequently neither was he competent to appeal to the Shiromani Gurdwara Parbhandak Committee under S. 135 (4) of the same Act, nor was that Committee empowered to make any order under that sub-section. The president of the Commission however in concurrence with another member, held that Gurdial Singh was not justified in refusing to obey the order of the Shiromani Gurdwara Parbhandak Committee on the ground that it was ultra vires and that he was thus guilty of neglect of duty deserving censure of his conduct and a warning for the future not to conduct himself in that manner. The Parbhandak Committee has appealed.

The sole point urged on behalf of the appellants is that Sher Singh was a 'minister' and not a mere 'office-holder' inasmuch as he played an important role in the management and performance of public worship in the Gurdwara, and had thus, along with others, the control of the management or performance of public worship within the meaning of S. 2 (4) (vii). In order to appreciate the difference between an 'office-holder' and a 'minister,' it is necessary to refer to the meanings assigned to these terms in S. 2, Gurdwaras Act. S. 2 (4) (i) defines the term 'office' as follows:

Office means any office by virtue of which the holder thereof participates in the management or performance of public worship in a Gurdwara or in the management or performance of any rituals or ceremonies observed therein.

In the same clause 'office-holder' has been defined to mean any person who holds an office. Cl. (vii) of the same sub-section defines 'minister' as follows:

Minister means an office-holder to whom either solely or along with others the control of the management or performance of public worship in a Gurdwara and of the rituals and ceremonies observed therein is entrusted.

The distinction is obvious in more than one respect. In the first instance, it would appear that, while in the case of an 'office-holder,' participation in either the management or performance of public worship in a Gurdwara or in the management or performance of any rituals or ceremonies observed therein is sufficient, in the case of a 'minister' the control not only of the management or performance of public worship in a Gurdwara is essential but also of the rituals and ceremonies observed therein. Secondly, while a person can be called an 'office-holder' if he participates in the management or performance of public worship in a Gurdwara or in the management or performance of any rituals or ceremonies observed therein, he cannot be called a 'minister' unless he is vested with the control of the management or performance of public worship in a Gurdwara and of the rituals and ceremonies observed therein either solely or along with others. On reference to the Oxford Dictionary one finds that though "management" in certain circumstances involves control, the term "control" connotes the idea of exercising restraint or direction upon the free action of others, holding sway over or exercising power or authority over another or dominating and commanding others. The term "manage" means merely to conduct or carry on a business or an undertaking. It is clear that when the Legislature used two different terms in two separate definitions, it did intend to distinguish one from the other and that in using the word 'control' as distinguished from management, its intention was to import into the term "control" the idea of domination or command. In agreement therefore with the Judicial Commission, we find that Sher Singh was a mere 'office-holder' and as such he was not competent to appeal to the Shiromani Gurdwara Parbhandak Committee under S. 135 (4). Consequently, it was ultra vires of the Shiromani Gurdwara Parbhandak Committee to make any order on his appeal or to enforce it against the committee of management. Counsel for the appellants has urged in this connexion that when once the Shiromani Gurdwara Parbhandak Committee assumes jurisdiction in a certain matter the Judicial Commission cannot question it. We however do not agree. Unauthorized seizure of jurisdiction would be subject to the control of Courts and an act done which is not within the competence of the Shiromani Gurdwara Parbhandak Committee to do would be liable to be ignored. On these grounds we uphold the order of the Judicial Commission and dismiss this appeal with costs. The respondents have also put in cross-objections but they are without any force. We dismiss them but make no order as to costs in them.

Bashir Ahmed—for Appellant.

Judgment. — Ram Chand obtained a decree against one Dulla and in execution of this decree attached the house in dispute. The judgment-debtor filed objections under S. 60 (1) (c), Civil P. C., to the effect that the house in dispute was not liable to attachment in execution of the decree as he was an agriculturist. The decree-holder admitted that the judgment-debtor was an agriculturist and was in actual possession of the house in dispute. It was however contended by him that the judgment-debtor had mortgaged the house in dispute with possession with Gopal Das and Ram Lal, that the mortgagees had let out the house to the judgment-debtor on lease, that the possession of the judgment-debtor was that of a tenant under the mortgagees, and that the house was therefore liable to attachment in execution of the decree. The trial Court accepted the objection petition of the judgment-debtor and released the house from attachment. On appeal by the decree-holder, the learned Senior Subordinate Judge held that the judgment-debtor was not protected by Cl. (c) of sub-s. (1) of S. 60, Civil P. C. He accepted the appeal and set aside the order of the executing Court. Against this decision the judgment-debtor has preferred a second appeal to this Court.

Under the Civil Procedure Code, as amended by S. 35, Relief of Indebtedness Act, houses and other buildings, belonging to an agriculturist, and not let out on rent or lent to others or left vacant for a period of a year or more, are not liable to attachment or sale in execution of a decree. The house admittedly belongs to an agriculturist; he has not let it out on rent or lent it to anyone; he has been in occupation of the house throughout, and it has never been left vacant for a period of a year or more. In these circumstances it appears that the house is not liable to attachment and sale. The mere fact that the judgment-debtor mortgaged the house with possession in favour of Ram Chand and Dhanpat Rai, and took it on rent from the mortgagees does not disentitle him to the protection afforded by S. 60 (1) (c), Civil P. C., as the judgment-debtor never gave up possession of the house; and has been using it throughout for purposes subservient to agriculture. Reference may be made in this connexion to (1934) 35 P L R 144.¹ There are some observations in this judgment which support the case of the appellant, and show that Sec. 60, Civil P. C., does not become inapplicable simply because the agriculturist, though in possession of the house, has taken a lease thereof from a mortgagee. This ruling was given before S. 60, Civil P. C., was amended by S. 35, Relief of Indebtedness Act (7 of 1934), but the principle underlying the ruling appears to be applicable to the present case. For the reasons given above, I accept this appeal, set aside the judgment of the learned Senior Subordinate Judge, dated 15th March 1937, and restore that of the executing Court dated 5th December 1936. Having regard to all the circumstances, I leave the parties to bear their own costs throughout.

Second Appeal No. 1274 of 1937, Decided on 31st January 1938, from decree of Dist. Judge, Ludhiana, D/- 4th September 1937.

(a) Registration Act (1908), S. 17 (2), Cl. it, the compromise does not require registration according to S. 17 (2), Cl. (6), Registration Act, although the terms of the compromise are not actually embodied in the decree. The compromise can be proved by the petition, embodying the terms thereof, presented by the parties, as it forms part of the judicial order made by the Court thereon by virtue of reference made to the compromise: A I R 1930 Lah 855 and A I R 1932 Lah 24, Rel. on; A I R 1936 Lah 605, Disting.

(b) Co-sharers—Right to alienate — Some of co-sharers executing mortgage entering into compromise with mortgagee agreeing to deliver some land to him in consideration of his reducing mortgage charge — Co-sharers are bound by terms of compromise to extent of their share—Compromise is not illegal merely because one of the mortgagors is not party to it.

Even before partition, a co-sharer in possession may mortgage any portion of the joint property not in excess of his share subject to the adjustment of the rights of all the co-sharers at the time of the partition. [P 738 C 2; P 739 C 1]

Where therefore only some of the co-sharers who have executed a mortgage enter into a compromise with the mortgagee, whereby they agree to deliver some land to the mortgagee in consideration of his reducing the mortgage charge and releasing rest of the property from the mortgage, the co-sharers entering into the compromise are bound by it to the extent of their share and the compromise is not illegal merely because one of the mortgagors is not a party to it. [P 738 C 2]

(c) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 64—Attachment in execution of decree made subject to mortgagee rights of mortgagee — Subsequent compromise whereby mortgagors agree to transfer portion of mortgaged land in consideration of mortgagee reducing mortgagee charge is not illegal.

Where an attachment in execution of a decree is made subject to the mortgagee rights of the mortgagee holding a mortgage on the property, a subsequent compromise, whereby the mortgagors agree to transfer a portion of the mortgaged property to the mortgagee in consideration of his reducing the mortgage charge and releasing the rest of the property from the mortgage, is not illegal by reason of S. 64, Civil P. C., more specially so when the mortgagee had already become entitled to possession even prior to the attachment. [P 738 C 1; P 739 C 1]

Judgment.—The material facts of the case giving rise to this appeal are briefly as follows: On 27th July 1928, Pala Singh and Pritam Singh, two brothers, mortgaged 50 bighas of land in favour of the plaintiffs for the sum of Rs. 4700. The mortgage was without possession but it was agreed that if interest was not paid annually according to the terms of the mortgage, the mortgagees would be entitled to obtain possession.

The sons of Pritam Singh thereafter instituted a suit for a declaration that the mortgage was without necessity and consideration and should not affect their reversionary rights. This suit was compromised on 22nd February 1935, and it was agreed that the original mortgage charge should be reduced to a sum of Rs. 5500 only, that an area of 11 bighas 13 biswas 7 biswansis should be delivered to the mortgagees and the rest of the land considered to be redeemed. The compromise was embodied in a petition which was presented to the Court and the Court thereupon dismissed the declaratory suit. The terms of the compromise however were not fully embodied in the decree. Subsequently the present suit was instituted by the plaintiff-mortgagees as the area of 11 bighas 13 biswas 7 biswansis which was promised to be delivered to them, was not made over to them. The suit was resisted by Pala Singh and the sons of Pritam Singh on the ground that the compromise dated 22nd February 1935 on which the suit was based could not be proved as it was not duly registered. Secondly, it was also urged that the compromise was illegal as Pala Singh who was one of the mortgagors was not a party to it. Lastly, it was contended that the land in question had already been attached by certain decree-holders and the compromise was illegal inasmuch as it involved an alienation contrary to the provisions of S. 64, Civil P. C. The suit was decreed by the trial Court but was dismissed by the learned District Judge on appeal, on the finding that the compromise required registration and could not be proved. The suit being based on the compromise alone, the question whether the plaintiffs could fall back on the original mortgage of 1928 was not considered.

The learned counsel for the appellants has urged that the view taken by the learned District Judge that the compromise of 1928 required registration is not sound. It is contended that the compromise was embodied in a petition which was presented to the Court and the Court passed an order recording the compromise and also passed a decree on the basis of that compromise. The compromise therefore did not require registration, according to Cl. 6 of sub-s. 2 of S. 17, Registration Act. The learned counsel for the respondents urged in reply that the terms of the compromise were not embodied in the decree and therefore the compromise did require registration. In support of this contention he relied chiefly on A I R 1936 Lah 605.¹ That ruling however appears to be distinguishable inasmuch as the material terms on which reliance was placed in that case were not actually referred to in the statements made in Court, nor were they embodied in the decree. In the present instance there is no such allegation and it appears that the compromise petition was duly verified in Court and a decree was passed on the basis of the compromise. It is true that the terms of the compromise were not actually embodied in any decree but reference was made to the compromise in the order passed on the petition, which was to the following effect: "Fariquin razinama tasdiq karte hain barue razinama dawa maddaya kharij howe." The contention of the learned counsel for the appellants that this order was sufficient to exempt the compromise from the necessity of registration is supported by A I R 1930 Lah 855² and A I R 1932 Lah 24.³ I accordingly hold that the compromise can be proved by the petition embodying the terms thereof presented by the parties in the suit of 1935, as it formed part of the judicial order made by the Court thereon, by virtue of the reference made to the compromise.

The next contention of the learned counsel for the appellants was that the compromise cannot be considered to be illegal merely because Pala Singh was not a party to it. The land was originally held jointly by Pala Singh and Prem Singh, but the area which the plaintiffs are claiming is not in excess of the share of the defendants, Dharam Singh, Tilok Singh and Pritam Singh. I see therefore no reason why the plaintiffs' claim should not be decreed, as against these defendants, at least to the extent of their share in the land in dispute, as contended for the appellants. The learned counsel for the respondents urged that the area to be delivered to the mortgagees was not specified in the compromise by any definite khasra numbers and as Pala Singh was entitled to every bit of the mortgaged land, the compromise should be considered to be illegal. However, even before partition a co-sharer in possession may mortgage any portion of the joint property not in excess of his share subject to adjustment of the rights of all the cosharers at the time of partition. There is therefore no reason why the plaintiffs should not claim from the three defendants referred to above, (who at any rate, are bound by the terms of the compromise) an area to the extent of their share.

The last contention of the learned counsel for the appellants that the attachment of the land by the decree-holders prior to the compromise of 1935 did not invalidate the compromise also appears to me to be sound. The attachment was clearly made subject to the mortgagee rights of the plaintiffs. These rights were no doubt based on the mortgage deed of the year 1928 which was superseded by the compromise of the year 1935 but the compromise only served to reduce the encumbrance on the mortgaged property and did not in any way prejudice the rights of the attaching creditors. The mere fact that the plaintiffs were allowed possession of 11 bighas 13 biswas 7 biswansis by the compromise cannot be considered to impose any additional burden, as even according to the terms of the original compromise the plaintiffs were entitled to claim possession of the mortgaged property on the mortgagor's failure to pay interest as agreed. It was not denied that the mortgagors had failed to pay any interest and the mortgagees had already become entitled to possession even before the attachment, which took place in 1934. The present suit being only for possession, it is unnecessary to consider here whether the sons of Prem Singh could be properly held to be liable for the whole of the mortgage charge, when Pala Singh, one of the original mortgagors, was not a party to the compromise. That question can be decided at the time of redemption, if and when the necessity arises. On the above findings, it seems to me that the plaintiffs' claim must be decreed to the extent of the share of defendants 2 to 4 in the land in dispute, i. e. one-half of 11 bighas 13 biswas 7 biswansis. I accordingly accept the appeal and setting aside the order of the learned District Judge, pass a decree for possession of one-half of 11 bighas 13 biswas 7 biswansis out of this joint land specified in the plaint. This decree will be against defendants 2 to 6. The suit against defendant 1 is dismissed with costs. As against defendants 2 to 6, the plaintiffs will get one-half their costs throughout.

Criminal Revn. No. 632 of 1938, Decided on 1st July 1938, from order of the Sess. Judge, Ludhiana, D/- 2nd March 1938.

(a) Criminal Trial—Complaint—Defamatory allegations against minor daughter affecting father — Father and daughter can file separate complaints — Compromise and consequent acquittal of accused in father's complaint do not affect complaint by daughter.

Where a report is made to police by certain persons against another containing defamatory allegations against such person's minor daughter, both the father and the daughter can file separate complaints; and the compromise and consequent acquittal of accused in father's complaint will be no bar to the complaint by the daughter, because the complaint by the father although on same facts could not either have been filed on behalf of his minor daughter or compromised without the Court's permission: 32 Cal 425, Rel. on; A I R 1919 All 90, Disting. [P 740 C 1, 2]

(b) Criminal Trial—Revision — Acquittal on erroneous view of law can be set aside.

Revision of an order of acquittal may be allowed when the order of acquittal is based on an erroneous view of the law: A I R 1918 Lah 204; A I R 1924 Lah 286 and A I R 1930 Lah 159, Rel. on. [P 741 C 1]

Des Raj Sawhney — for Respondents.

Order. — The facts giving rise to this petition for revision are briefly as follows: The four respondents along with certain other persons presented a petition to the police against Hardit Singh, father of the petitioner Mt. Harbans Kaur, alleging that his house was visited by persons of bad repute who drank liquor and committed debaucheries and were thus a nuisance to the people of the mohalla. One of the allegations in the petition was that one Gurdial Singh also visited the house of Hardit Singh for immoral purposes and that he was in possession of letters from the present petitioner, Mt. Harbans Kaur, who is a young girl aged about 17. Hardit Singh filed a complaint for defamation against the respondents and the other signatories of the application under S. 500, I. P. C., which was eventually compounded upon the accused tendering an apology and withdrawing their allegations. The accused were therefore acquitted.

A second complaint was filed under Sec. 500, I. P. C., by Mt. Harbans Kaur, the present petitioner, with reference to the same application. An objection was raised that the second complaint was barred by the provisions of S. 403, Criminal P. C. This contention was rejected by the trial Magistrate who convicted the respondents and sentenced them to a fine of Rs. 100 each. The respondents appealed, and the learned Sessions Judge has upheld their preliminary objection that this complaint was barred by their acquittal in the previous complaint by Hardit Singh, and has set aside their convictions. Mt. Harbans Kaur has now filed a petition for revision of this order. The learned counsel for the petitioner has contended that the complaint of Hardit Singh did not purport to be on behalf of Mt. Harbans Kaur and that it could not have been filed at all on her behalf without the leave of the Court as she is a minor and permission was neither asked for nor granted: vide S. 198, Criminal P. C. It is true that the defamatory application contained matter which cast reflections on the character of Mt. Harbans Kaur and this was also the subject-matter of the complaint. But, the allegations against Hardit Singh's daughter's character might amount to his defamation also, and consequently this fact alone would not show that the complaint was on behalf of the present petitioner. It was further pointed out that had the previous complaint been on behalf of Mt. Harbans Kaur, it could not have been compounded without the permission of the Court: vide S. 345 (4), Criminal P. C. No such permission was asked for or given.

The learned counsel for the respondents on the other hand urged that the subject-matter of the second complaint by the present petitioner was in substance the same as that of the previous complaint by the father, that no man can be prosecuted twice for the same offence, that the petitioner had instituted a civil suit for damages also, that the present complaint was vindictive and was brought merely to harass the respondents and that there was no such miscarriage of justice as would justify interference in revision. After carefully considering the facts, I am of opinion that the previous complaint by Hardit Singh was legally no bar to the present complaint by Mt. Harbans Kaur. The previous complaint did not purport to be on her behalf and she being a minor, it could not, according to law, have been either instituted or compounded without permission of the Court. Admittedly no such permission was asked for or granted. The mere fact that the defamatory application contained reflections on the character of Mt. Harbans Kaur would not justify the conclusion that the complaint was on her behalf. For, the defamatory allegations with reference to Mt. Harbans Kaur were calculated to harm Hardit Singh's reputation also, and could therefore legitimately form the subject-matter of his complaint under S. 500. This view receives support even from 32 Cal 425¹ on which the learned Sessions Judge has relied. It would appear from the above that the application made by the respondents to the police contained matter which defamed Hardit Singh as well as Mt. Harbans Kaur and consequently the latter had an independent right to seek redress therefor in Civil and Criminal Courts. The learned counsel for the respondents referred to 18 A L J 85,² but that case is easily distinguishable as the accused had been previously tried for the offence of rioting, which is an offence against the public peace and for which each individual concerned has not a personal remedy as in the case of defamation.

As regards the allegation that the complaint is vexatious and vindictive, it may be noted that the petitioner readily gave up her complaint against one of the accused Des Raj who apologized. The present respondents however not only did not do so, but produced evidence in support of the defamatory allegations, although they had previously withdrawn them. They utterly failed to establish them and even the learned Sessions Judge did not take a different view on this point. The petitioner, who is a young girl had a right to vindicate her character, and in view of all the circumstances the complaint cannot be treated as merely vindictive. The respondents offered to apologize now at the last stage, but she naturally refused to accept the offer as the respondents had persisted in their allegations and had put her to the trouble and expense of leading a great deal of evidence to clear her character. It has been held in 8 P R 1918³ and

A I R 1924 Lah 286⁴ that revision of an order of acquittal may be allowed when the order of acquittal is based on an erroneous view of the law. In A I R 1930 Lah 159⁶ an order of acquittal under S. 500, I. P. C., was set aside. In view of the conduct of the respondents, I think, it is in the interest of justice that the petitioner should be given an opportunity to have her character fully vindicated. After undergoing the trouble and expense of a trial, there is no reason why she should be deprived of a decision on merits, on a technical ground, which has been found to be legally untenable. I accordingly accept the petition and setting aside the order of acquittal, remand the case to the learned Sessions Judge for decision on merits. Parties are directed to appear before the learned Sessions Judge on 1st July 1938.

ADDISON AND DIN MOHAMMAD JJ.

Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab—
Petitioner.

v.

Nawab Shah Nawaz Khan, Assessee —
Respondent.

Civil Ref. No. 30 of 1936, Decided on 14th December 1937, from the Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, North West Frontier and Delhi Provinces, Lahore, D/- 9th October 1936.

(a) Income-tax Act (1922), S. 30 — Act is self-contained — Assessee is not at liberty to withdraw appeal presented under S. 30.

The Income-tax Act is a special piece of legislation dealing with a special subject and so far as it goes it is self-contained. Once an assessee presents an appeal against assessment under S. 30, he is not at liberty to withdraw it; (1936) 1 K B D 487, Rel. on. [P 742 C 1]

(b) Income-tax Act (1922), Ss. 31, 34 — Power under S. 31 cannot be exercised irrespective of S. 34—Appeal under S. 31—Assistant Commissioner cannot enhance income assessable under S. 34, so as to include sum which has nothing to do with subject-matter of appeal — Nor is fresh assessment in respect of this sum permissible.

No doubt S. 31 empowers an Assistant Commissioner of Income-tax in general terms to enhance an assessment but that power cannot be exercised irrespective of the limitations imposed by S. 34.

On the one hand Sec. 34 arms the Income-tax Officer with a special power to rectify his mistakes and to save the exchequer from any loss accruing from his negligence, and on the other it protects the assessee against the arbitrary use of this Section and sets a limit of time within which such mistakes can be rectified. Again, this Section (S. 34) is confined to the items of income that have escaped and has no reference to the total income of the assessee. Thus, the Assistant Commissioner is not empowered so to enhance the income assessable under S. 34 as to include a sum which has nothing to do with the subject-matter of the appeal before him. Similarly the Assistant Commissioner of Income-tax cannot make any direction under S. 31 (3-b) so as to enable the Income-tax Officer to make a fresh assessment in relation to this sum: A I R 1927 Lah 248 and A I R 1929 All 919, Rel. on; Case law referred. [P 742 C 2; P 743 C 1, 2]

S. M. Sikri and J. N. Aggarwal — for Petitioner.

Malik Barkat Ali — for Respondent.

Din Mohammad J. — This is a case stated by the Commissioner, Income-tax, under S. 66 (1), Income-tax Act. The question propounded by him reads as follows:

Can interest-income as described in the case be brought into charge: either by enhancement under S. 31 (3-a) of the S. 34 assessment which does not include any such interest-income; or in fresh assessment to be directed under S. 31 (3-b)?

To this, another question dealing with the withdrawal of the appeal before the Assistant Commissioner was added by this Court at the request of the assessee on which a supplementary statement of the case has been submitted by the Commissioner. The facts are these: On 23rd June 1933, an assessment was made on the Mamdot Estate for the year 1933-34, the accounting year being 1932-33. On 16th February 1935, an additional assessment was made under S. 34, Income-tax Act, in respect of a sum of Rs. 8675 which the assessee was said to have earned from interest on securities. The assessee appealed against this order to the Assistant Commissioner of Income-tax, and while that appeal was pending, the Assistant Commissioner of Income-tax came to know that another item of income derived by the assessee from a certain mortgage transaction had also escaped assessment in respect of which a fresh notice was issued verbally on the 10th and in writing on 12th February 1936. On 10th February, when the Assistant Commissioner of Income-tax gave vent to his thoughts that he was considering this additional item for assessment, the attorney for the assessee verbally asked for the withdrawal of the appeal and later implemented his verbal request by presenting an application in writing. On 12th February 1936 however, the Assistant Commissioner holding that the appeal could not be legally withdrawn, ordered that the assessee's appeal would remain pending till it was decided whether he could enhance the assessable income by a sum of Rs. 88,796. It is in this connexion that the reference has been made.

Three questions arise for decision : (1) Whether an appeal presented under S. 30, Income-tax Act, can be withdrawn ; if so, whether the notice for enhancement could be legally given after the appeal had been withdrawn ? (2) Is the Assistant Commissioner legally competent to add a new item of income, after the expiry of the limitation prescribed in S. 34, when an appeal against an assessment made under that Section is pending before him ? (3) Is the Assistant Commissioner competent to set aside the assessment made under S. 34 and direct the Income-tax Officer to make a fresh assessment including a fresh item of income after the period of limitation prescribed in S. 34 has expired ? Questions 2 and 3 are the same as propounded by the Commissioner, though expressed in different words. In our view all these questions must be answered in the negative.

We take up question 1 first. The Income-tax Act is a special piece of legislation dealing with a special subject and so far as it goes it is self-contained. It will be seen that whereas the powers of a Civil Court are vested in the Income-tax authorities by virtue of S. 37, Income-tax Act, they have been restricted to the particular matters dealt with in the body of the Section itself. This clearly shows that in all other matters the Income-tax authorities cannot exercise the power ordinarily vested in a Civil Court. Similarly, they are under no obligation to conform to the procedure laid down in the Civil Procedure Code in respect of matters not expressly mentioned in S. 37. A right of appeal under the Act has been conferred by S. 30, Income-tax Act, and the method of disposing of appeals and the powers to be exercised in connexion therewith have been clearly defined in Sec. 31, Income-tax Act. These powers, among others, include enhancement of the assessment. Nowhere, however, has it been mentioned that an assessee is at liberty to withdraw an appeal which has once been presented under S. 30, Income-tax Act. If it were assumed that the power of withdrawal of an appeal vested in an assessee on the general principles of law governing appeals, it would clearly nullify the powers of the Assistant Commissioner to enhance an assessment inasmuch as at any time that an assessee would be convinced that the Assistant Commissioner was disposed to enhance the assessment, he would withdraw the appeal and thus prevent him from proceeding any further with the matter. In other words, this would obviously lead to an absurd result. It is to avoid such an absurdity and similar other complications which might arise that no power of withdrawal has been vested in the assessee. We are supported in our conclusion by (1936) 1 K B D 487,¹ which lays down that an appeal against an assessment cannot be withdrawn. It is true that that judgment has been given under a statute which is not in force here, but the principles governing the question are the same. In the words of Lord Wright at pp. 500-501 :

It would indeed be a curious position if notice of appeal having been given by the tax-payer in the hope of reducing his assessment, he should be able, when the information elicited shows quite conclusively that the assessment, so far from being an overcharge, was an undercharge, to prevent the Commissioners from estimating or valuing or assessing his liability according to the true facts which have been elicited, or that they should be debarred from proceeding further to develop the facts so as to ascertain the true position. . . . Having a duty to examine the facts, they are bound to give effect to what appears to them to be the proper assessment to be made in view of those facts.

We accordingly hold that the assessee was not competent to withdraw his appeal and in this view of the matter the second part of question 1 does not arise. Coming now to question 2. The material portion of S. 34 reads as follows :

If for any reason income, profits or gains chargeable to income-tax has escaped assessment in any year . . . the Income-tax Officer may, at any time within one year of the end of that year, serve on the person liable to pay tax on such income, profits or gains . . . a notice containing all or any of the requirements which may be included in a notice under sub-s. (2) of S. 22 and may proceed to assess or re-assess such income, profits or gains. . . .

It is obvious that under this Section no income, if it has escaped, can be touched after the period of limitation prescribed therein. On the one hand, this Section arms the Income-tax Officer with a special power to rectify his mistakes and to save the exchequer from any loss accruing from his negligence and on the other it protects the assessee against the arbitrary use of this Section and sets a limit of time within which such mistakes can be rectified. Again, this Section is confined to the items of income that have escaped and has no reference to the total income of the assessee. A notice issued under this Section therefore pertains to those items only which have escaped assessment and to no others. If it were permissible to the Assistant Commissioner of Income-tax to add fresh items of income under different heads to the items already detected by him as having escaped, even though the limitation prescribed by S. 34 had expired, it would deprive the assessee of the protection afforded by S. 34. No doubt S. 31 empowers an Assistant Commissioner of Income-tax in general terms to enhance an assessment but we do not consider that that power can be exercised irrespective of the limitations imposed by S. 34. One of the cardinal principles of the interpretation of statutes may be given in the words of Maxwell as follows:

It is an elementary rule that construction is to be made of all the parts together, and not of one part only by itself... for the true meaning of any passage is that which (being permissible) best harmonizes with the subject, and with every other passage of the statute. Perhaps as a general proposition the words of a statute should be construed in accordance with the dictum of Lord Watson, who says with regard to deeds, in an unrecorded case, the deed must be read as a whole in order to ascertain the true meaning of its several clauses, and the words of each clause should be so interpreted as to bring them into harmony with the other provisions... if that interpretation does no violence to the meaning of which they are naturally susceptible.

In 38 P L R 1107² a Division Bench of this Court held that the Commissioner when dealing with an appeal under S. 32 can pass orders only with respect to the subject-matter of the appeal and cannot suo motu proceed to enhance an assessment. It would be a curious state of affairs if what a Commissioner cannot do under S. 32, an Assistant Commissioner may be able to do under S. 31. In 41 C W N 905³ a Special Bench of the Calcutta High Court held that when an assessee rightly objects to an assessment or reassessment, the powers of the Assistant Commissioner are limited to annulling it and do not extend to enhancing an assessment which the Income-tax Officer had no jurisdiction to make. In 4 Pat 385⁴ a Division Bench of the Patna High Court held that under S. 31, Income-tax Act, an Assistant Commissioner of Income-tax has power to enhance an assessment made by an Income-tax Officer, but he is not empowered to make a new assessment in appeal by adding new sources of income which were not the subject-matter of the appeal. On these grounds we have no hesitation in holding that in the circumstances of the present case the Assistant Commissioner is not empowered so to enhance the income assessable under S. 34, Income-tax Act, as to include the sum of Rs. 88,796 which has nothing to do with the subject-matter of the appeal before him.

Similarly, the Assistant Commissioner of Income-tax cannot make any direction under S. 31(3-b) so as to enable the Income-tax Officer to make a fresh assessment in relation to this sum. If in such cases an Assistant Commissioner of Income-tax can be considered to be empowered to do so, this would mean that he is empowered to override the express provisions of law as regards limitation provided for in S. 34, Income-tax Act. Had this been the intention of the Legislature, it should have expressed itself in clearer terms. An income which has once escaped cannot be assessed or reassessed after the expiry of the period of limitation: see 8 Lah 354⁵ and A I R 1929 All 919.⁶ We therefore answer the third question also in the negative. The assessee will get his costs from the Commissioner.

Din Mohammad J. — The facts of the case out of which this appeal has arisen may shortly be stated. On 10—9—1908 one Mian Abdul Karim executed a mortgage deed in favour of Lala Bulaqi Mal and Lala Ram Das of certain properties situate at Rawalpindi for a sum of Rs. 10,000. The rate of interest which the mortgagor agreed to pay was 2 per cent. compound interest per mensem with monthly rests. On 22nd April 1909, the said Mian Abdul Karim executed a deed (Ex. D. 8) in favour of his father Mian Nabi Bakhsh, wherein, after acknowledging that the whole of the immovable property situate at Rawalpindi City and Cantonment and at other places was the self-acquired property of his father and was owned and possessed by him, he stated that the properties comprised in part I of that document had been given to him by his father by way of absolute ownership and that so far as properties comprised in part II were concerned, his father had conferred on him the right of realizing their rent by way of maintenance during the lifetime of the father, but that no right of sale or mortgage of the properties vests in him. On 12th May 1909, Mian Abdul Karim settled upon his wife, Mt. Zohra Jan Akhtar, the rights which he had acquired in the properties comprised in part II of the document mentioned above (Ex. D. 9). On 16th July 1909, Mian Abdul Karim made a gift (Ex. D. 10) of the entire property alluded to above in favour of Mt. Zohra Jan in lieu of her dower. On 7th March 1910, Mian Nabi Bakhsh conferred upon Mt. Zohra Jan the right to mortgage or sell all the properties mentioned in part II of Ex. D. 8. On 7th April 1910, Mt. Zohra Jan sold the shops now in suit along with some other property to Lala Ram Das and Lala Gauri Das for Rs. 15,000. On 23rd November 1914, the said vendees sold the shops only to the present plaintiffs, Messrs. Seth Lukmanji-Adamji and Company. In the sale deed executed by them, they undertook to indemnify their vendees if they suffered any loss or damage on account of any person putting forward a claim to the property sold. On 11th February 1920, Lala Bulaqi Mal and Lala Ram Das instituted a suit for the recovery of their mortgage money by sale of the entire property comprised in parts I and II of Ex. D. 8 against Mian Abdul Karim and along with him impleaded all the subsequent alienees including the present plaintiffs and their predecessors-in-title as defendants in the suit. On 29th March 1920, ex parte proceedings were taken against Lala Ram Das and Lala Gauri Das on account of their absence in spite of service. On 24th November 1920, the present plaintiffs put in their pleas professing ignorance of most of the allegations made in the plaint and alleging that they had purchased the shops in suit in good faith and for valuable consideration. They further stated that the property purchased by them was not mortgaged to the then plaintiffs and that consequently they could not proceed against that property.

On 18th June 1921, Mt. Zohra Jan pleaded that the entire property had been acquired by Mian Nabi Bakhsh himself, that no partition of any kind had been effected between him and her husband, Mian Abdul Karim, that the property given to her by Mian Abdul Karim was not mortgaged to Lala Bulaqi Mal and Lala Ram Das and that therefore that property could not be made to bear the burden of their charge. The Subordinate Judge who decided that suit did not differentiate between one kind of property or the other and allowed the mortgagees to recover the amount of Rs. 9700 found due by him from all the properties comprised in parts I and II of Ex. D-8. None of the defendants made an appeal against that decree and the only appeal that was put in was on behalf of the mortgagees. By its judgment dated 27th April 1933, this Court raised the decretal amount to Rs. 70,000 as claimed by the mortgagees and further allowed them interest from the date of the institution of the suit till the realization of the decretal amount at 6 per cent. per annum. It appears from that judgment that the question whether the property now in suit could be made liable for the mortgage decree was raised, but the learned Judges, while making some remarks in connexion with that contention, did not finally decide the matter in view of fact that no appeal or cross-objections had been presented by the present plaintiffs, Messrs. Lukmanji Adamji and Company. The eyes of the defendants were opened when the decretal amount was raised from Rs. 9700 to Rs. 70,000 with interest as stated above, and on 25th July 1933 the present plaintiffs applied to this Court for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. There they raised all those points which they should have taken by way of appeal or cross-objections against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, but which they had failed to take, possibly on account of the decretal amount being at a very low figure. On 29th January 1934, the present plaintiffs and the mortgagees entered into a compromise by which the mortgagees relinquished their claim to the property in suit on payment of Rs. 11,500. On 22nd February 1934, counsel for the present plaintiffs put in an application for permission to withdraw the petition for leave to appeal and the petition was consequently dismissed. On 16th August 1934, the plaintiffs instituted the present suit against the three sons of Lala Ram Das who had died in the meantime for the recovery of Rupees 14,500 by way of damages. This sum was made up of Rs. 11,500 which as stated by the plaintiffs they had paid to the mortgagees and Rs. 3000 which was said to have been spent on the previous litigation.

Various pleas were raised in defence. It was contended inter alia that the plaintiffs had been negligent, first, in not raising proper pleas in the Court of the Subordinate Judge who disposed of the mortgage suit and, secondly in not presenting any appeal or cross-objections to the High Court against the decree made in that suit and that if a proper defence had been raised or proper steps taken at the proper stage, the plaintiffs would not have suffered any loss whatsoever. It was further urged that the defendants were not bound by any arrangement arrived at between the mortgagees and the present plaintiffs and that in fact it was not necessary to have paid Rs. 11,500 to the mortgagees: the title that vested in the defendants was free from any defect and that that being so, if any cloud was allowed to be cast on it or any loss was suffered by the plaintiffs on that score, the plaintiffs were themselves to blame. The Subordinate Judge framed several issues in the case, most of which are not material for the purposes of this appeal. So far as the present appeal is concerned, he found that the defendants were not guilty of any fraudulent misrepresentation regarding their title, that they were not necessary parties to the mortgage suit, that the plaintiffs who were necessary parties did not prosecute that suit with due diligence, that it was not necessary for the plaintiffs to pay a sum of Rs. 11,500 to the mortgagees for the protection of their rights and that consequently the plaintiffs were not entitled to any decree against the defendants. The plaintiffs have appealed.

After hearing counsel of the parties at length in this matter we have arrived at the conclusion that the findings recorded by the Subordinate Judge cannot be disturbed on appeal. From the recital of the facts given above, it would be abundantly clear that although Mt. Zohra Jan had raised proper pleas which if pursued by the present plaintiffs would have secured a complete discharge of the properties owned by them from all sorts of obligations, the plaintiffs did not use any diligence whatsoever in prosecuting their case. They knew that ex parte proceedings had been recorded against their vendors and that in these circumstances it would not be possible for their vendors to clear up their title. They were also aware of the fact that Mt. Zohra Jan did not stand to lose in any manner if she did not choose to substantiate her pleas inasmuch as she was not in possession of any property. With a little amount of care and attention, the plaintiffs could have brought on the record all those documents which have been referred to above, the cumulative effect of which would have been to establish that the mortgagees could not proceed against that property at least which had been purchased by the plaintiffs. It appears that the plaintiffs did not take any active interest even in the course of arguments in the previous suit and the result was that the Subordinate Judge did not consider it necessary to discriminate between the various kinds of properties involved therein. Even assuming that inasmuch as the amount of the charge was insignificant as compared with the property on which it was charged, it was not necessary for the plaintiffs to prefer an appeal from the order of the Subordinate Judge; they should have preferred cross-objections at least when they knew that the mortgagees were insisting on the amount being raised to the original figure sued for. It was their laches therefore which was responsible for the matter of the liability of the plaintiffs' property being left undecided by this Court.

Counsel for the appellants however has contended that in view of the fact that (i) the defendants had assured the plaintiffs that the property was free from encumbrances and (ii) the undertaking given by the defendants was by way of indemnity and not a mere covenant for title and quiet possession, the plaintiffs are in any circumstances entitled to damages, inasmuch as by being dragged into litigation they actually suffered a very heavy loss and had to defend themselves against the attack made on the property purchased by them. In support of his contention he has referred to A I R 1929 Lah 388,¹ 66 I C 107² and A I R 1933 Nag 364.³ In A I R 1929 Lah 388¹ it was held that the clause in a registered sale deed that "if upon the objection of anyone any damage or loss accrues to the vendee, the vendor will be liable" amounts to a contract of indemnity and is not a mere covenant for title and quiet possession. In 66 I C 107² their Lordships of the Privy Council held that where a sale deed contains an express declaration that the property is sold free from encumbrances, the vendor by reason of S. 55 (1) (g) and sub-s. (2), T. P. Act, is deemed to contract with the buyers that he has power to transfer the property so sold and that the property is free from burdens. A purchaser of a property is deemed to be compelled to pay off mortgagees who have obtained decrees for sale of the property purchased by him, even though a sale is not immediately threatened. Their Lordships further added that where a vendor of immovable property binds himself to deliver the property free from encumbrances but the purchaser has to pay either for redemption of the mortgages existing on the property purchased by him at the date of such purchase, or for purchase of the property on sales under such mortgages or to prevent sales, he is entitled to a refund of all moneys so paid by him. In A I R 1933 Nag 364³ the Additional Judicial Commissioner held that where there is over and above the implied warranty under S. 55 (2) an express warranty of title given by the vendor to the vendee, the vendor is responsible in law to make good the loss which accrued to the vendee when he lost half the land in the third party's litigation with him. He further remarked that where the vendor himself is fully cognizant of the litigation regarding the title of the property sold that his own brother had started against the vendee, it is the duty of the vendor to suggest to the vendee to put forward the proper pleas which he says the vendee failed to take in that litigation and therefore he cannot say that the vendee's conduct in not raising proper pleas disentitles him to claim any damages or at any rate the costs of the suit for damages brought by the vendee against the vendor. We are in respectful agreement with the principles enunciated above, but they do not help the plaintiffs in this case. In the first instance as stated above there was no cloud on the title of the plaintiffs' vendors and with a little diligence exercised on the part of the plaintiffs the cloud that was sought to be cast upon it would have been cleared up. Secondly by withdrawing their application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council, the plaintiffs lost a valuable opportunity for having the liability imposed on their property removed. They were unnecessarily scared out of their wits and they paid an abnormally large sum to secure their freedom. The properties on which the burden of the mortgagees had been placed were of considerable value and this being so we are of opinion, in agreement with the Subordinate Judge, that there was no necessity for the plaintiffs to pay such an exorbitant sum to the mortgagees as the plaintiffs did. No attempt whatsoever has been made even on this record to show as to how that figure was arrived at and why it was considered necessary to pay such a heavy sum. Moreover, it is not even alleged that the defendants were ever consulted before this sum was paid. We do not consider therefore that the plaintiffs can legally call upon the defendants to indemnify them for the loss they have thus incurred.

Counsel for the respondents further supported the decision of the Subordinate Judge on the ground of limitation and relied on A I R 1934 Lah 305⁴ and A I R 1918 P C 151⁵ in that connexion. But we do not consider that it is necessary to go into the question of limitation in face of the finding arrived at above. We accordingly dismiss this appeal, but in view of the peculiar circumstances of the case we leave the parties to bear their own costs of this appeal.

Convicts — Appellants.

Emperor.

Criminal Appeal No. 56 of 1938, Decided on 1st March 1938, from order of Sess. Judge, Amritsar, D/- 7th January 1938.

Penal Code (1860), Ss. 34, 302 and 323 — Common intention — Common intention of accused only to abuse opposite party—Fight ensuing on mutual exchange of abuse—Common intention cannot be said to be one to commit murder although death is caused during fight—Accused can be convicted under S. 323—Each participant is responsible only for his own acts.

Where the common intention of the party of the accused appears to have been merely to abuse and possibly to use fists on the opposite party for an alleged insulting behaviour on their part, and there was mutual exchange of abuse before the fight ensued, a common intention to commit a murder cannot be inferred, even though death is caused in course of the fight. The whole affair is one of sudden fight in which each particular individual is responsible only for the individual acts which can be proved against him. The accused cannot in such a case be convicted for any offence other than one under S. 323, I. P. C. [P 748 C 2; P 749 C 1]

for the Crown.

Young C. J.— In this case Rajindar Singh, a retired military doctor, aged 70 years, his two sons Hardayal Singh aged 16 or 17, and Hardit Singh aged 12 or 13, and his son-in-law Mian Singh aged 30, were tried by the learned Sessions Judge of Amritsar under S. 302 read with S. 149 in respect of the alleged murder of Gulzar Singh and under S. 307 read with S. 149, I. P. C., with respect to an alleged murderous assault on Amar Singh. The learned Sessions Judge acquitted Rajindar Singh and Hardit Singh, but convicted Mian Singh under S. 302 read with S. 34 and also under S. 307 read with S. 34, I. P. C., and sentenced him to death on the murder charge and to transportation for life on the charge for attempt to murder. He also convicted Hardayal Singh under S. 307 read with S. 34 and sentenced him to transportation for life. We have heard Mr. Jai Gopal Sethi for the appellants in this Court and the learned Advocate-General in support of the conviction.

The occurrence took place on 26th June 1937, at about 7.15 P. M., near the railway station, Amritsar. The allegation of the prosecution was that on the morning of that day Mian Singh had booked a seat in a lorry that was going from Amritsar to Dera Babananak. As he sat in the lorry his shoulder rubbed against a woman, who was also seated in the lorry, and on her complaint the lorry owners asked Mian Singh to take another seat. Mian Singh said that he would only change his seat if he was allowed to sit in the front seat next to the driver. This was not agreed to by the owners of the lorry unless he paid two annas extra. On the refusal of Mian Singh to pay this surcharge there was a wordy altercation, the fare was returned to him and the lorry left without him. It is alleged that on account of this unpleasantness the four accused persons accompanied by two others came together at about sunset and began to abuse and assault the owners of the lorry. In this assault it is stated that they fatally injured Gulzar Singh and inflicted serious injuries with a kirpan and a dang on the person of his brother Amar Singh. The injured persons were taken to the hospital nearby by a constable on traffic duty, who telephoned from the hospital to the thana saying that a fight had taken place between the drivers at a motor-lorry stand. Thereafter the police at 8-30 P. M. recorded the statement of Sardara Singh, father of the two injured men, who is also the proprietor of the lorry in question and this has been treated as the official first information report in the case. Meanwhile Rajindar Singh, Hardial Singh and Mian Singh were apprehended on the spot and a small bloodstained kirpan was taken from Hardayal Singh. Hardit Singh apparently slipped away and so also did the two other persons whose names were disclosed by one of the witnesses as having joined in the assault, but as these two were discharged by the committing Magistrate, their case need not be considered further. The story for the prosecution is supported by the statements of Sardara Singh, Amar Singh, Indar Singh and Sher Singh, P. Ws. 5, 6, 7 and 8, who professed to be the eye-witnesses of this occurrence, Amar Singh being one of the two men seriously injured. Two other persons, Bal Singh and Nathu Ram, were mentioned in the early stages of the investigation as having also witnessed the occurrence and though they are either employees of or connected with the proprietors of the lorry in question they have turned hostile and have supported the version of the defence.

The defence version is that there was a fight between lorry-drivers and Rajindar Singh. Mian Singh and Hardayal Singh tried to intervene and stop the dispute and Rajindar Singh got injured. The real assailants escaped and Rajindar Singh reprimanded the policeman on traffic duty for not having arrested them, and thereafter got into a tonga with his son and son-in-law. The policeman on being annoyed at the reprimand administered to him by Rajindar Singh made a false report against them. We have no hesitation in rejecting this version as it appears to us that it was not till a very late stage that this version was mentioned by the accused. This version seems to us to have been suggested by a somewhat vague message sent by Atma Ram, constable on traffic duty, on the telephone to the thana. We refuse to believe that Rajindar Singh intervened in a dispute with which he had no concern and was falsely implicated for his pains by the complainants, who must have known who their real assailants were.

We consider that what actually occurred was that when Mian Singh mentioned to his father-in-law, who is apparently an irritable old gentleman of 70, that he had been insulted in the morning by the lorry drivers or owners, Rajindar Singh, his sons and Mian Singh all marched together to the lorry stand to demand an explanation of what they considered to be insulting behaviour. Their common intention could not have been more than merely to abuse and it is only on this hypothesis that we can understand the presence of a decrepit old man of 70 and a child of 12 or 13. When this party got to the lorry stand there was mutual exchange of abuse and a fight ensued. We do not agree with the learned Sessions Judge that in such circumstances a common intention to commit murder can be inferred, even though death is caused in the course of the fight. The whole affair seems to us to be one of a sudden fight in which each participant is responsible only for the individual acts, which can be proved against him. So far as Mian Singh is concerned some witnesses have stated that Mian Singh caught hold of Gulzar Singh while one of the two unidentified persons, who may possibly have been one of the two men discharged by the committing Magistrate, inflicted injuries with a kirpan. It is clear and in fact it is the case for the prosecution that on that day a very large crowd had collected and though it was still not dark it would be difficult to locate the particular blow which each of the accused delivered in this fight. The story is that Mian Singh was grappling with Amar Singh, when Hardial Singh and one of the unknown or unidentified men inflicted kirpan blows on the back of Amar Singh who fell down and was later beaten with sotas by Rajindar Singh and Mian Singh. At this stage Gulzar Singh deceased came to the rescue of his brother Amar Singh and Mian Singh caught hold of Gulzar Singh this time while one of the unknown men stabbed him in the abdomen. This story is repeated by Sardara Singh, P. W. 5, by Amar Singh, P. W. 6, by Indar Singh, P. W. 7, and by Sher Singh P. W. 8.

It appears to us difficult to believe that each of the four eye-witnesses produced by the prosecution should have witnessed all these incidents in the course of an assault which took place in the middle of a crowd of persons. It further appears to us that it is exceedingly unlikely that Mian Singh was carrying a sota. A man with a sota would prefer to use his sota rather than grapple with an adversary. Assuming, however, that he did grapple as alleged, it is difficult to believe that he still preserved the sota to beat Amar Singh with, when the latter fell down. But assuming even this, it is still more difficult to believe that he would discard the use of his sota when Gulzar Singh appeared to rescue Amar Singh and grapple with Gulzar Singh. The story that Mian Singh contented himself with catching hold of his adversaries while his friends stabbed them and of his using his sota, which mysteriously appears and disappears, is too artificial to believe. The story appears to us to show careful traces of preparation and is apparently designed to identify Mian Singh with the attack by the unknown men with kirpans and to account for the lathi blows that the doctor found on the person of Amar Singh. It is not without significance in this connexion that in the statement of Sher Singh, P. W. 8, no sota is placed in the hand of Mian Singh.

We hold therefore that it has not been proved that Mian Singh has been proved to have had a sota or to have used it. It is not alleged that he was carrying any other weapon and therefore no injury found by the doctor on any of the two injured men can be held to have been caused by him. We have already held that in this case there never was a common intention to do more than abuse and possibly use fists. In these circumstances Mian Singh cannot be convicted for any offence other than one under S. 323, I. P. C. He was arrested on 26th June 1937, and has been in custody since. We consider that for this offence he has been adequately punished. We therefore set aside the conviction under Ss. 302 and 307, I. P. C., and the sentence of death passed on Mian Singh under Sec. 302 and the sentence of transportation under S. 307 and alter his conviction to one under S. 323, I. P. C., and sentence him to imprisonment for the period already undergone.

The case of Hardial Singh presents no difficulty in this aspect. S. 34 not being applicable, the only thing proved against him is that he inflicted a kirpan blow in the back of Amar Singh. He only inflicted one injury out of the three found on the person of Amar Singh. The other two were apparently inflicted by the unknown assailant. Two out of these three injuries are grievous but the injury inflicted by Hardial Singh cannot be definitely identified. In the circumstances he can reasonably argue that he can be held responsible only for the simple injury and can be convicted only under S. 324, I. P. C. This injury was caused in the course of a sudden quarrel, with a weapon which is not formidable and is one which is generally carried by all Sikhs. Taking these factors into consideration, and also having regard to his extreme youth we consider that a sentence of one year's rigorous imprisonment would satisfy the ends of justice. We accordingly set aside the conviction under S. 307 and alter it to one under S. 324, I. P. C., and sentence Hardial Singh to one year's rigorous imprisonment under S. 324, I. P. C.

Respondent.

Civil Ref. No. 8 of 1938, Decided on 7th July 1938, referred by Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, North Western Frontier and Delhi Provinces, Lahore, D/- 25th April 1938.

 Income-tax Act (1922), S. 28 (1)—Proceedings under, started—Even after assessment is made and tax is paid penalty order can be made.

Once the Income-tax Officer starts proceedings under sub-s. (1) of Sec. 28 within the time prescribed there, he is empowered to make an order imposing a penalty under that sub-section, even after the assessment order has been finally made and the tax been paid. [P 749 C 2]

C. L. Aggarwal — for Petitioners.

J. N. Aggarwal — for Respondent.

Din Mohammad J. — This is a case stated by the Commissioner on the following question formulated by this Court under sub-s. (3) of S. 66, Income-tax Act, 1922 :

Whether, although notice issued under S. 28 of the Act a day before the assessment order was made by the Income-tax Officer, that officer had power on a date subsequent to the date of the assessment order to impose a penalty under S. 28.

The Commissioner contends that if once the Income-tax Officer starts proceedings under sub-s. (1) of S. 28 within the time prescribed there, he is empowered to make an order imposing a penalty under that sub-section even after the assessment order has been finally made and the tax been paid. On behalf of the assessee on the other hand it is urged that the Income-tax

Officer becomes functus officio after making the assessment order and that inasmuch as he is required to be satisfied and make his direction in the course of any proceedings under the Act, he can only impose a penalty at the time when he makes the assessment and not at any subsequent period, especially after the tax as assessed has already been paid. Unfortunately sub-s. (1) of S. 28 is not happily worded and it is on account of want of clearness and precision in the language employed there that this dispute has arisen. That sub-section runs as follows :

If the Income-tax Officer, the Assistant Commissioner or the Commissioner, in the course of any proceedings under this Act, is satisfied that an assessee has concealed the particulars of his income or has deliberately furnished inaccurate particulars of such income, and has thereby returned it below its real amount, he may direct that the assessee shall, in addition to the income-tax payable by him, pay by way of penalty a sum not exceeding the amount of the income-tax which could have been avoided if the income so returned by the assessee had been accepted as the correct income.

As regards the limit of time when the income-tax authorities are to be satisfied that any concealment has taken place or any particulars have been deliberately furnished inaccurate, there appears to be no ambiguity and consequently no dispute. It is common ground that this satisfaction must take place in the course of any proceedings relating to the assessee, whatever the nature of those proceedings may be. The difficulty arises only in the matter of determining the point of time when the direction as contemplated by that sub-section is to be given. The assessee draws our attention particularly to the word "payable" as used in the sub-section and urges that by the use of this term the Legislature intended to restrict the exercise of the power conferred by this sub-section to the period when the liability of an assessee was determined and before the tax was paid, and consequently this power cannot be exercised at a time when the tax has already been paid. The language as used in this Section may be susceptible of this interpretation, but it cannot be denied that the interpretation sought to be put upon it by the Commissioner is not impossible. Considering that the former interpretation may lead to absurd results and that the latter is more in consonance with reason, we have no hesitation in adopting the interpretation suggested by the Commissioner. There is no magic in the word

"payable." It is true that it has been frequently used in the Act to denote 'liability to assessment,' but had the word "paid" been used here as suggested by the assessee, it might have led to many complications in the matter of imposing penalties under sub-s. (1). In our view the words "payable by him" without any unnecessary straining of language can be taken to mean "to which he has been assessed" whether the amount has been paid or not, and taken in that light, it cannot be urged that the order contemplated by sub-s. (1) cannot be made after the assessment order has been made and the tax has been paid. We see no justification for holding that the order should either be contemporaneous or simultaneous with the order of assessment. Neither is it intended to delay the assessment proceedings in order to enable the Income-tax Officer to make up his mind as to the imposition of penalty, nor is the order of imposition to be accelerated merely to synchronize it with the assessment order. To insist on the order of penalty being simultaneous with the order of assessment is to ask for a physical impossibility : one is bound to precede or follow the other and if once it is conceded that the order of penalty may be made after the order of assessment has been made, there is nothing in the Act which would tend to restrict that period in any manner.

There is no direct authority in support of our view but we consider that the construction proposed by us to be put upon the sub-section is the only reasonable construction that can be put both in the interests of the department and of the assessee. The department will not be compelled to delay the assessment proceedings with a view to determine whether to prosecute an assessee under S. 52 or to impose a penalty on him under sub-s. (1) of S. 28 or to do neither and the assessee will not run the risk of being victimized by any rash or hasty order. We accordingly answer the question propounded above in the affirmative. We however in the circumstances of the case leave the parties to bear their own costs. We further draw the attention of the Commissioner to the desirability of approaching the Central Legislature with a view to remove the ambiguity that exists in the language of S. 28 as the matter of amending the Income-tax Act is already on the tapis.

Judgment. — The plaintiff sued in this case for a permanent injunction against the defendant restraining him from discharging the water from his roof and a latrine thereon to the roof of the plaintiff. The trial Court granted the injunction with respect to the water from the latrine only, holding that the right of easement claimed by the defendant had been established with respect to the ordinary water from the roof. Both parties appealed to the District Judge and he decreed the suit in full on the ground that the discharge of water from the latrine was an additional burden imposed by the defendant and the effect of this additional burden was to extinguish the right of easement altogether. In support of this view he relied on A I R 1920 Pat 689.¹ From this decision the defendant Partap Singh has preferred a second appeal.

The finding of the learned District Judge that the right of easement was established with respect to the discharge of ordinary water from the roof of the defendant is one of fact and cannot be challenged in second appeal. The learned counsel for the plaintiff-respondent argued that the finding was based on inadmissible evidence in the shape of a copy of khasra pamaish. No objection to the admission of this document however appears to have been taken in the Courts below. It is a document prepared under the orders of the Government and the right of easement on which the defendant relied was specifically mentioned in a column provided in the document. I do not therefore see why it should not be held to be relevant under S. 35, Evidence Act. The learned counsel referred to 16 Lah 313² in which it was held that there was no presumption of correctness attaching to the khasra pamaish but that is not the point which needs consideration in the present case. The document was admitted in the Court below without any objection and the only question which requires consideration is whether it is legally admissible or not. The weight to be attached to the document is a different matter. In my opinion, the document was relevant under S. 35, Evidence Act.

The next point urged on behalf of the appellant was that the question of the effect of the imposition of an additional burden in the shape of discharge of water from the latrine was not allowed by the learned District Judge to be argued when the appeal was heard and he was therefore not justified in relying on this point in his judgment. An affidavit in support of this argument made by the counsel who argued the case before the learned District Judge was produced. No counter-affidavit was produced on behalf of the respondent, although he had sufficient time for the purpose. I also find that an application with respect to this very point was made to the learned District Judge soon after the decision of the appeal. It was placed by him on the record without any remarks. I therefore assume for the purpose of this appeal that the point was not allowed to be argued at the hearing by the learned District Judge. He was therefore not justified in relying on this point and decreeing the plaintiff's claim in full. Moreover the view taken by the learned District Judge does not appear to me to be sustainable in law. The additional burden was in this case separable from the original burden and there is no reason why the right of easement should not have been upheld at least with respect to the discharge of ordinary water : see A I R 1922 All 28.³

3. Rameshwar Dayal v. Maharaj Charan, (1922) 9 A I R All 28=65 I O 643=44 All 343=20 A L J 202.

1. Keshri Sahay Singh v. Hitnarayan Singh, (1920) 7 A I R Pat 689=58 I O 967.

Lastly, it was urged that there was no specific issue with respect to the discharge of water from the latrine and herein the defendant-appellant was misled. The issue framed in the case was: "Has the defendant a right of easement as claimed?" A reference to the plaint shows that the plaintiff distinctly claimed an injunction both with respect to the ordinary water and the water from latrine, and the wording of the issue was wide enough to cover both. The parties were apparently cognizant of this fact and the defendant led some evidence which related specifically to the discharge of water from the latrine. It cannot therefore be said that he was misled or prejudiced. I therefore accept the appeal only to the extent of setting aside the decree of the learned District Judge restoring that of the trial Court. The plaintiff will get half his costs throughout.

Where a suit was instituted by A, a Hindu idol, for injunction against B restraining him from disturbing A in his possession, on the basis of an alleged transfer to B by a former mahant of the plaintiff:

Held that what A asked for was not only an injunction but for setting aside the transfer to B and the suit was governed by Art. 134-A.

Held further that if however B filed a suit against A, no period of limitation would run against A in his defence. [P 752 C 2; P 753 C 1]

Din Mohammad J. — The plaintiff-appellant, Thakarji Maharaj, a Hindu idol instituted a suit against the defendants for an injunction restraining them from interfering with the plaintiff's possession of the land in suit on the basis of a permanent lease alleged to have been executed in their favour by one Kundan Anand, a former mahant of the plaintiff. Various defences were raised to the suit of which at present we are only concerned with the plea of limitation. The trial Court decreed the suit holding that it was not time-barred. The lower Appellate Court allowed the appeal and dismissed the suit on the ground that it was barred by Art. 134-A, Limitation Act. On second appeal to this Court, Abdul Rashid J. maintained the judgment of the lower Appellate Court and dismissed the appeal.

Counsel for the appellant has contended that the suit is not covered by Art. 134-A, inasmuch as it is only a suit for a permanent injunction and that its decision does not involve the setting aside of the alleged transfer by Kundan Anand. We are not however disposed to agree with him. In para. 3 of the plaint, it is clearly stated that the defendants rely on a patta granted to them by Kundan Anand on 8th January 1909, on the basis of which they have even obtained decrees for the ejectment of the tenants and that the patta in question, if proved, was ultra vires of the grantor and was also ineffectual for want of consideration and necessity. It is obvious therefore that the object of this suit is to set aside the transfer alleged to have been made by Kundan Anand in favour of the defendants in 1909 and this being so it cannot be urged that Art. 134-A does not govern the suit. Counsel for the appellant has urged that inasmuch as Thakarji Maharaj has throughout been in possession of the land in suit, no period of limitation would run against it. This principle grounded on reasons other than those advanced by the appellant's counsel may hold good in certain cases, but in the present case it does not. To the suit as instituted, Art. 134-A clearly applies and it is not denied by the appellant that under that Article, the suit is time-barred, inasmuch as the terminus a quo there is the date of the knowledge of the plaintiff and the plaintiff through its Mahant Atma Nand had knowledge of the lease much longer than 12 years prior to the institution of the suit.

This decision however does neither prejudicially affect the idol's possession of the land in suit nor will it bar the defence which may be raised by the idol if an attempt is made to dispossess it, as it is well established that no period of limitation governs the defence. In other words, if a new suit is instituted against the idol, it will be open to it to raise all those points which have been taken by the idol in this case and to claim adjudication upon them without being met by the plea of res judicata. With these remarks we dismiss this appeal but make no order as to costs before us.

Civil Revn. No. 588 of 1938, Decided on 14th July 1938, from order of the Dist. Judge, Gurdaspur, D/. 19th May 1938.

Although no appeal or review is allowed from an order in summary proceedings by a District Judge under S. 192, yet there is nothing in the Section or the Act which takes away the right of revision by High Court : 66 P R 1882 (F B), Rel. on. [P 753 C 2]

(b) Succession Act (1925), Ss. 192 to 194—Joint Hindu family — Property passing by survivorship—Ss. 192 to 194 have no application—“Chundavand” rule of division does not bring case under Ss. 192 to 194.

Sections 192 to 194 will not apply to a case where joint Hindu family property passed by survivorship. And although parties may be governed by the “chundavand” rule which is a rule of division of property, mere mention of that rule will not bring the case under Ss. 192 to 194, because the “chundavand” rule will operate only when the property is to be divided and not when it is undivided : 12 C L J 8, Disting.; 34 Cal 929, Rel. on. [P 754 C 1]

Order. — This is a petition for revision of an order passed by the District Judge, Gurdaspur, under the provisions of Ss. 192 to 194, Succession Act, relating to the protection of the property of a deceased person, when the succession is in dispute. A preliminary objection is raised that no petition for revision is competent, as under S. 209, Succession Act, the decision of the District Judge in a summary proceeding 1938 L/95 & 96

under Part 7, Succession Act, (which includes Ss. 192 and 210) is final and no appeal or review is allowed. But the Succession Act does not say that no revision is competent. By virtue of S. 141, Civil P. C., the procedure of that Code would, in absence of a provision to the contrary, govern these proceedings and I do not see why revision should not be competent under S. 115 Civil P. C. It was held by a Full Bench of the Punjab Chief Court in 66 P R 1882¹ with reference to the corresponding provisions of Act 19 of 1841 (which have been now incorporated in the Indian Succession Act with some modifications), that revision was competent under S. 672 of the old Civil P. C. of 1877 and the same reasoning on which that decision was based applies to the present case also.

It was next contended that the order in question is an interlocutory one, and hence revision is not competent. But the contention of the learned counsel for the petitioners is that on the very facts alleged in the respondent's application, the District Judge had no jurisdiction to take any action under Part 7, Succession Act. The learned District Judge in issuing notice to the petitioner and appointing a commissioner to make a list of the deceased's property has certainly decided that the case came within the purview of Part 7. If the contention of the learned counsel for the petitioners is correct, it will be obviously abuse of the processes of Court and waste of time to allow these proceedings to continue. In my opinion, the learned District Judge's decision that the case is governed by Ss. 192 to 194, Succession Act, is open to revision in the circumstances. It may be mentioned here that when the present petitioners appeared in the Court below they raised the objection as to jurisdiction but the learned District Judge seems to have gone on with the proceedings relating to the preparation of an inventory without considering the petitioners' objection.

According to the respondent Sahib Diyal, the deceased Punnu Shah, his father, was the manager of a joint Hindu family consisting of himself and his sons. The petitioners are his sons by one wife while the respondent is his son by another wife. The respondent alleged that the petitioners had forcibly seized his share of the property and were making alienations to his prejudice and he therefore moved the Court to take action under the provisions of Secs. 192 to 194, Succession Act.

It would be clear from the above that the dispute related to the property of a joint Hindu family. In the case of such a family, the co-parceners are all entitled to the possession of the whole of the property and no co-parcener has any definite share in the property. The whole of the family, of which Punnu Shah was the manager, was therefore in possession and on Punnu Shah's death, his interest merely passed to the other members of the family by survivorship. In the circumstances, it seems clear that the provisions of S. 192 which relate to disputes relating to cases of succession and not of survivorship were not applicable: cf. 34 Cal 929.² The learned counsel for the respondent had to concede that Ss. 192 to 194 will not apply to a case where joint Hindu family property passes by survivorship but he contended that the parties were governed by the 'chundavand' rule of division according to which the property is divided per stirpes and not per capita and hence the Act applies. But chundavand is only a rule of division and will have to be enforced (if the respondents' allegation is correct) when the property is to be divided. At present, the property is undivided and the mention of the above rule in the petition does not seem to me to affect the question of jurisdiction. The learned counsel next referred to 6 I C 259.³ But that ruling only lays down that the Succession Act (Property Protection) is not limited in its application to cases when the dispute arises between persons each of whom claims title to the entire estate, but it also covers a case in which the claim relates to an undivided share of the estate of the deceased. The ruling relates to a family governed by Dayabhaga rule of succession and according to that rule property does not pass by survivorship.

Lastly, it was urged that the present petitioners alleged in their written statement that the property belonged to Punnu Shah and he had made a will. But this was not the respondents' case and the question of jurisdiction must be decided on the allegations made by him in his application.

3. Gopi Krishna Rai v. Raj Krishna Rai, (1910) 12 C L J 8 = 6 I C 259.

On these allegations it seems to me clear that Part 7, Succession Act, was not applicable to this case. I accordingly set aside the order of the learned District Judge and dismiss respondents' application with costs throughout.

Civil Revision No. 459 of 1937, Decided on 17th June 1938, from order of the Sub-Judge, First Class, Lahore, D/- 8th May 1937.

(a) Companies Act (1913), S. 171 — Appeal or application for revision arising out of action by company—Leave of Liquidation Court is not necessary.

An appeal or an application for revision arising out of an action brought by a company does not come within the purview of Sec. 171 and such appeal or application can be instituted, or proceeded with, without the leave of the Liquidation Court: A I R 1918 Lah 181 (F B); (1901) 85 LT 141 and A I R 1936 Pesh 97, Foll. [P 755 C 2]

Section 73 is to be read together with S. 63. Where the property of a judgment-debtor has been attached by two Courts of the same grade but the property has been sold by one of them, the proceeds so received shall be deemed to have been received by it on behalf of all the Courts in which there have been attachments in execution of the decrees, prior to the actual receipt of the assets, and the decree-holders in all such Courts are entitled to rateable distribution under S. 73. Mela Ram — for Petitioner.

Girdhari Lal Malhotra (for Indo-Swiss Trading Co.), Bhagwat Dayal (for Peoples Bank of Northern India) and M. L. Puri (for Simla Banking and Industrial Co. Ltd.) — for Respdts.

Order. — This is a petition for revision of the order of Mr. Mulkh Raj Bhatia, Subordinate Judge, First Class, Lahore, dated 8th May 1937, holding that the petitioner, the Simla Banking and Industrial Company Ltd. is not entitled to rateable distribution with the Indo-Swiss Trading Company Ltd., Calcutta and the Peoples Bank of Northern India (in liquidation), in the sale proceeds of a house in Lahore belonging to Mr. K. L. Gauba which had been sold in execution of a decree obtained by the Indo-Swiss Trading Company against him. The facts, so far as they are material for the disposal of this petition, are as follows:

In 1933 the Indo-Swiss Trading Company obtained a money decree against Mr. Gauba. Some time later, this decree-holder applied for execution by attachment and sale of a house belonging to the judgment-debtor. The house was attached on 24th July 1935, by order of Mr. Mulkh Raj Bhatia, Subordinate Judge, First Class, in whose Court those proceedings were going on. On 13th November 1935, the Simla Banking and Industrial Company also obtained a money decree against Mr. Gauba from the Court of Mr. Maharaj Kishore, Subordinate Judge, First Class, Lahore. This decree-holder applied to Mr. Maharaj Kishore for execution of its decree by sale of the same house. The application was granted, and the house was attached on 8th July 1936. A third creditor, the Peoples Bank of Northern India, had a decree against Mr. Gauba and proceedings in execution of its decree were pending in the Court of Mr. Bhatia.

On 1st August 1936, the house was sold in execution of the decree obtained by the Indo-Swiss Company. One-fourth of the sale-price was deposited by the auction-purchaser in Mr. Bhatia's Court on 5th August 1936, and the remaining three-fourths on 14th August 1936. On 24th August 1936, the Simla Banking and Industrial Company applied for the transfer of execution proceedings from the Court of Mr. Maharaj Kishore to that of Mr. Bhatia with a view to get rateable distribution of the sale proceeds of the house. This application was granted on 25th August 1936 and the record of this case received by Mr. Bhatia on 27th August. The learned Judge has held that the Peoples Bank and the Indo-Swiss Trading Company are entitled to rateable distribution, as applications for attachment had been made by them in his Court before the date of the sale; but that the Simla Banking Company is not entitled to share rateably in the sale-proceeds as no application for rateable distribution had been made by this decree-holder in his Court before the receipt of the assets. He has held that the attachment of the house by order of Mr. Maharaj Kishore, before the sale, is of no avail to the petitioner, and S. 63, Civil P. C., was inapplicable as the Courts of Mr. Bhatia and Mr. Maharaj Kishore were Courts of concurrent jurisdiction. The Simla Banking and Industrial Company has applied for revision of this order contending that the lower Court has declined jurisdiction on an erroneous view of the law.

A preliminary objection is taken on behalf of the respondents that this petition is not competent, as one of the respondents (the Peoples Bank of Northern India) is a company which is being wound up by the Lahore High Court and no proceedings against it can be taken without the previous sanction of the "Liquidation Court" under S. 171, Companies Act. This objection is in my opinion without force. In this case the Peoples Bank of Northern India had itself started proceedings in the executing Court claiming rateable distribution of the sale proceeds of the house in question. This application has been granted by the Court below. The petitioner, who is a rival decree-holder has preferred to this Court a petition for revision arising out of this order. It was held by a Full Bench of the Chief Court in 62 P R 1918,¹ following the decision of the House of Lords in (1901) 85 L T 141,² that an appeal or an application for revision arising out of an action brought by a company does not come within the purview of S. 171 and that such appeal or application can be instituted, or proceeded with, without the leave of the Liquidation Court: see also to the same effect 162 I C 416.³ I overrule the preliminary objection. On the merits, the order of the learned Judge appears to me to be erroneous. He has failed to take note of the important fact that the house in question had been attached in execution of the decree of the petitioner by the Court of Mr. Maharaj Kishore on 8th July 1936, before it was sold in execution of the decree of the Indo-Swiss Trading Company by order of Mr. Bhatia and before the sale-proceeds were received by that Court. In the circumstances, it was not necessary for the petitioner to have his decree transferred to Mr. Bhatia's Court and make a formal application to that Court for execution, before the receipt of the sale-proceeds.

Section 73 of the Code no doubt lays down that where assets are held by a Court and more persons than one have before the receipt of such assets made application to the Court for execution of their respective decrees the assets shall be rateably distributed among all such persons. But this Section is to be read together with S. 63, which is to the effect that where property, not in the custody of any Court, is under attachment in execution of decrees of more Courts than one, the Court which shall receive or realize such property and shall determine any claim thereto shall be the Court of highest grade, and where there is no difference in grade between such Courts, the Court under whose decree the property was first attached. The combined effect of these two provisions as pointed out by Wallis C. J. of the Madras High Court in 23 I C 909⁴ is that all the holders of money decrees, who have attached the property of their judgment-debtor in execution in several Courts before the actual receipt of the assets by the Court of the highest grade are entitled to share in the rateable distribution on application to such Court without getting their decrees transferred to it. Similarly, it has been held in A I R 1936 Cal 723⁵ that where the property of a judgment-debtor has been attached by two Courts of the same grade but the property has been sold by one of them, the proceeds so received shall be deemed to have been received by it on behalf of all the Courts in which there have been attachments in execution of the decrees, prior to the actual receipt of the assets, and that the decree-holders in all such Courts are entitled to rateable distribution under S. 73 : see also 61 Cal that in a case in which the Court is determining under S. 63 the right to rateable distribution, the true construction of S. 73 is that an application need only have been made to the Court which granted the decree before the receipt of the assets and need not be made to the Court which holds such assets.

The Allahabad High Court in 55 All 622,⁹ and the Rangoon High Court in 6 Rang 131¹⁰ have also taken the same view, and have held that in such cases no application for execution was necessary to be made to the Court, which held the assets, before the receipt of the assets. In our own Court, the latest decision is A I R 1936 Lah 519¹¹ by Jai Lal J. where the rulings cited above were followed, and it was held that in such cases no fresh application for execution was necessary. It will thus be seen that the consensus of opinion in all the High Courts is in favour of the view put forward by the petitioner. It is therefore not necessary to discuss the earlier rulings (some of which have been relied upon by the lower Court) in which the contrary had been held.

The learned Subordinate Judge sought to distinguish some of the recent rulings on the ground that in those cases the Courts were of different grades and observed that S. 63 had no application where the Courts were of concurrent jurisdiction. There is no doubt that this view of the learned Judge is erroneous, and Mr. Puri for the respondent frankly admitted that he could not support it. S. 63 covers all cases in which the same property is under attachment in execution of decrees of more Courts than one, whether they be of the same grade or of different grades. The only distinction is that where the Courts are of different grades, the assets are to be received and the distribution is made by the Court of highest jurisdiction, and where they are of the same grade then this is done by the Court in whose decree the property was first attached. It must therefore be held that as the property in this case had been attached by the petitioner before it was sold in execution of the decree of the Indo-Swiss Trading Company and before the sale proceeds had been received in the Court of Mr. Bhatia, the petitioner is entitled to claim rateable distribution.

As a last resort, Mr. Puri contended that this Court should not interfere in revision as there was a divergence of judicial opinion on the legal point involved. But I am unable to accept this argument. As has been stated above, the recent decisions of all the High Courts are in favour of the view put forward by the plaintiff and the Court below has, on the authority of obsolete decisions, declined jurisdiction to entertain the petitioner's prayer for rateable distribution. I accordingly accept the petition for revision, set aside the order of the Court below and remand the case to it with the direction that the sale proceeds be rateably distributed among the Indo-Swiss Trading Company, the Peoples Bank of Northern India Limited (in liquidation), and the Simla Banking and Industrial Company Limited. Having regard to all the circumstances I leave the parties to bear their own costs.

When a promise falls under S. 25 (3), it constitutes a valid agreement for the purpose of suing, whether there is a fresh consideration for the promise or not, and it is immaterial whether the debts covered thereby are within limitation or not. Acknowledgment is one of the usual forms which is usually treated in the Punjab as a promise to pay within the meaning of S. 25 (3).

Judgment.—It is alleged that the defendant had money dealings with the plaintiff. In 1934 the defendant made the usual acknowledgment of a balance due in the plaintiff's bahi, the sum acknowledged being Rs. 632-5-9. Subsequently, it is said that the parties entered into an agreement by which the defendant paid a certain sum of money and either mortgaged or agreed to mortgage some land in discharge of the remainder of his debt. When the parties appeared for mutation the defendant backed out of this part of the agreement and the plaintiff now sues for the balance due on the former acknowledgment. The suit was rejected by the trial Court on the ground that the plaintiff could no longer sue on the basis of the original acknowledgment but could only sue on the basis of the subsequent agreement. It has further held that the plaintiff had failed to show that the balance struck in 1934 was in respect of debts which were not yet time-barred. On appeal the Senior Subordinate Judge has held that the plaintiff was entitled to sue on the balance due in respect of the earlier acknowledgment. He was accordingly granted a decree for this balance, but without interest, as he had failed to comply with the statutory requirements governing the regulation of accounts. The defendant has appealed against this decree.

The arguments advanced before me are much the same which were advanced before the Courts below. As regards the question of limitation, it is to be observed that the acknowledgment is one of the usual forms which is usually treated in this province as a promise to pay within the meaning of S. 25 (3), Contract Act, 1872. When a promise falls under this Section it constitutes a valid agreement for the purpose of suing, whether there is a fresh consideration for the promise or not, and it is immaterial whether the debts covered thereby are within limitation or not. With regard to the existence of the original debt, there can be no doubt from the evidence that this debt was due and it is confirmed by the subsequent conduct of the defendant, who relies upon the agreement which is made for the purpose of discharging it. It is again clear from the conduct of the defendant that he did not consider that the new agreement was to be final until the time came for mutation and it is in evidence that the parties contemplated that there should be a reversion to the original position if the defendant failed to complete the transaction. If there is a proposal to discharge a debt in this way, but the right of reverting to original position is reserved unless the new transaction is complete, there is no true novation and there is no bar to a suit on the original cause of action. In my opinion, the judgment of the lower Appellate Court is in accordance with law and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Second Appeal No. 200 of 1938, Decided on 29th June 1938, from decree of Senior Sub-Judge, Amritsar, D/- 1st February 1938.

* Partnership Act (1932), S. 46 — Suit for accounts—Retiring partner inspecting accounts—Right to suit is not affected — Procedure for suit is governed by O. 20, R. 15, Civil P. C. — Decree to be passed is same as given in Form 21 Appendix D in Civil P. C.—Acceptance by partner of existing accounts — Accounts could however be examined from earlier date.

A suit to enforce the right provided in S. 46 is generally called a suit for an account, which means an account taken by a Court. The right is not affected by the fact that the retiring partner may have already inspected the accounts of the firm, for, it could be claimed by a partner who had kept the account himself. The procedure for such a suit is governed by O. 20, R. 15, Civil P.C., and the ordinary form for the preliminary decree is given as Form No. 21 in Appendix D. This form should ordinarily be followed unless there is any special reason for modifying it. Although the heading describes it as a form for a preliminary decree in a suit for dissolution of partnership and the taking of partnership accounts, yet, it is just as much applicable when the Court is asked to declare that a dissolution has taken place and an account is still required. In the standard form of preliminary decree, in the part relating to accounts, the third entry provides that an account will be taken of all dealings and transactions between the parties from the foot of the settled account exhibited in the suit and not disturbing any subsequent settled account. But if it is necessary to examine the account books of the firm from an earlier date in order to discover what credits are still due to the partnership, the examination of these accounts would not be barred out by the suing partner's acceptance of the existing accounts as correct. Judgment. — The parties are two brothers who formed a partnership under a written agreement. This provided for the termination of the partnership on notice, which was duly given by the defendant. The plaintiff then claimed an account, which was refused on the ground that he had accepted the accounts of the firm up to a date not long preceding the termination of the partnership. The plaintiff then came to Court to claim the same relief. He has been granted a preliminary decree by the Courts below, but he is not satisfied with the form of this decree and has come up in second appeal. Before we deal with the particular grievance of the plaintiff, it is necessary to observe that the Courts below have entirely misunderstood the nature of the relief claimed, and have confused the right of a retiring partner to have an account taken with the right of the principal to have account submitted by an agent under S. 213, Contract Act. The rights of a retiring partner are given in S. 46, Partnership Act 1932, which runs as follows:

On the dissolution of a firm every partner or his representative is entitled, as against all the other partners or their representatives, to have the property of the firm applied in payment of the debts and liabilities of the firm, and to have the surplus distributed among the partners or their representatives according to their rights.

A suit to enforce the right provided therein is generally called a suit for an account, which means an account taken by a Court. The right is not affected by the fact that the retiring partner may have already inspected the accounts of the firm, for it could be claimed by a partner who had kept the account himself. The form of suit is rendered necessary by the fact that one partner cannot sue another in respect of individual items unless an account is first taken. The procedure for such a suit is governed by O. 20, R. 15, Civil P. C., and the ordinary form for the preliminary decree is given as Form No. 21 in Appendix D. This form should ordinarily be followed unless there is any special reason for modifying it. It is true that the heading describes it as a form for a preliminary decree in a suit for dissolution of partnership and the taking of partnership accounts, while the firm in the present instance has already been dissolved; but it is just as much applicable when the Court is asked to declare that a dissolution has taken place, and an account is still required. In the present instance, the trial Court has not attempted to follow the usual form of decree but has simply granted a decree "for rendition of accounts" without specifying any of the other details which are necessary when the affairs of partnership are to be wound up. The first thing necessary therefore is that the decree should now be drawn up in the proper form. This brings us to the particular difficulty that has given rise to the present appeal, which would probably have been unnecessary if the trial Court had clearly kept in view the ordinary form of preliminary decree which has to be passed in a suit of this kind. The partnership is to be deemed to be terminated with effect from 26th May 1936. On 22nd March of that year the plaintiff went through certain accounts and signed an entry to the effect that he had received a sum of Rs. 506-3-0 on account of his share in the brokerage transactions for the firm. The entry also contains a statement that the accounts had been settled up to that date. This entry had been taken by the Courts below as precluding any inquiry into accounts of an earlier date and the plaintiff is afraid that this finding will be treated as depriving him of any share in the profits which may have been earned before a certain date but which had not been collected by that time.

In the standard form of preliminary decree, in the part relating to accounts, the third entry provides that an account will be taken of all dealings and transactions between the plaintiff and defendant from the foot of the settled account exhibited in the suit and not disturbing any subsequent settled account. From the nature of the other entries it is clear that this entry refers only to profits which had already accrued and been divided, though it might include an adjustment made between partners by which one partner received a portion of the accepted profits in advance. Any credits which are still outstanding are covered by the first entry; and unless there is any evidence to the contrary it is not to be presumed that the plaintiff intended to surrender his claim for a share of any subsequent profits which might accrue in respect of earlier transactions when he accepted the amount mentioned above as the amount due to him on account of profits. If it is necessary to examine the account books of the firm from an earlier date in order to discover what credits are still due to the partnership, the examination of these accounts would not be barred out by the plaintiff's acceptance of the existing accounts as correct, as certain remarks made in the judgment of the trial Court (but not incorporated in the decree) seem to suggest.

For these reasons I accept the appeal, set aside the existing decree and remand the suit to the trial Court under O. 41, R. 23, Civil P. C., in order that the trial Court may pass a preliminary decree in the proper form, with reference to the remarks made above in respect of the settled accounts. In view of the fact that the appeal has arisen out of the defective nature of the decree passed by the trial Court, the parties will bear their own costs in this appeal and in the lower Appellate Court, while costs so far incurred in the trial Court will form costs in the suit. Parties to appear before the lower Court on 21st July 1938.

Judgment.—A preliminary objection has been raised that no second appeal lies, on the ground that the suit is of a nature cognizable by a Court of Small Causes and that the value is less than Rs. 500. The plaintiffs are suing for the price of fruit removed by the defendants from certain trees which both parties claim to be growing on their own land. In support of his right to appeal, counsel for the plaintiffs relies on A I R 1921 Lah 72,¹ in which a suit for the price of fruit removed was held to be excluded from the cognizance of a Small Cause Court by Art. 35 (ii), Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. The judgment is brief and it is not clear what were the particular facts of the case which would have constituted an offence punishable under Ch. 17, I. P. C. In the present instance it is clear that the property was removed in the assertion of a contested claim or right so that the removal would not constitute theft as defined in S. 378 of the Code. It is not taken out of the scope of Ch. 17 by any of the provisions of Ch. 4, but does not constitute an offence under Ch. 17, simply because it does not fall within the wording of S. 378. In these circumstances, Art. 35 (ii) does not apply. Reference has also been made to *A I R 1933 Lah 172*² where Art. 35 was held to apply to the wrongful removal of grass. If this decision is to be taken as implying that the wrongful removal of property must be taken as falling under Ch. 17 of the Code even though there is no dishonest intention, I find myself with all respect unable to accept a proposition so widely worded.

An attempt has also been made to justify the appeal as one falling under Art. 4, which excludes a suit for the possession of immovable property or for the recovery of an interest in immovable property. Since the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act appeared before any definition of immovable property was included in the General Clauses Act, there have been conflicting decisions with regard to trees. But there never appears to have been any doubt that a suit for the value of fruit removed from trees is not covered by Art. 4. In this connexion reference may be made to 3 All 168,³ a case decided under the earlier Act, 11 of 1865. For these reasons, I hold that no appeal lies, and no sufficient grounds have been made out for treating the appeal as a petition for revision. The memorandum of appeal is accordingly rejected with costs.

Second Appeal No. 169 of 1938, Decided on 9th May 1938, from decree of Dist. Judge, Hissar at Gurgaon, D/- 8th October 1937.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 21, R. 63—Property subject to mortgage attached in execution of decree—Objection by mortgagee under O. 21, R. 58 dismissed—Suit by mortgagee having merely right to sue for possession on footing of alleged mortgage does not fall under O. 21, R. 63.

Order 21, R. 63 is intended to apply only to claims and objections which can properly be preferred under the provisions of O. 21. A mortgagee cannot come to Court under O. 21, R. 58 and argue that the mortgaged property is not liable to attachment, all the more so, when he is not a mortgagee in possession but merely has a right to sue for possession. Where such a mortgagee, after an unsuccessful objection under O. 21, Rule 58 institutes a suit on the footing of the alleged mortgage impleading the decree-holder as defendant along with the mortgagor, the suit cannot be said to be one under O. 21, R. 63 : A I R 1922 Pat 408, Rel. on. [P 761 C 2]

The principle that in a suit under O. 21, R. 63 the onus of establishing both consideration and good faith lies upon the plaintiff, who had raised unsuccessful objection before the executing Court, does not apply to the case of a plaintiff who claims certain rights under a mortgage and has adopted a mistaken and infructuous method of establishing those rights by way of an objection under O. 21, Rule 58 and subsequent suit under O. 21, Rule 63. Where in such a suit, the lower Court views the evidence as if the plaintiff lay under the necessity of dispelling a suspicion of fraud, it is sufficient to vitiate its judgment on point of law: A I R 1932 Lah 174, Expl.

Judgment.—The property in suit belongs to Sabaj Ram hereinafter called the judgment-debtor. The property is shown in the land revenue records as under mortgage with Har Chand, the plaintiff, the terms being that the property was to remain with the judgment-debtor but that the mortgagee would be entitled to obtain possession if interest was not duly paid. This transaction dates from 1929. Subsequently certain money decrees were obtained against the judgment-debtor by one Hira Lal. These decrees were obtained in 1930, 1932 and 1934 and Hira Lal then sought to bring the property to sale. The mortgagee unsuccessfully applied to have the property declared not liable to attachment, and then instituted the present suit for possession under the terms of the mortgage, impleading Hira Lal as defendant along with the judgment-debtor.

The suit has been described as one under O. 21, R. 63, Civil P. C., but this description is misleading. So far as the judgment-debtor himself is concerned, the suit is simply one for possession under the terms of the alleged mortgage arising out of the judgment-debtor's failure to pay the interest. So far as Hira Lal is concerned, the suit arises out of the fact that he is seeking to bring the property to sale and to this extent it may be said that he is concerned with execution proceedings. At the same time however it does not belong to general class of cases which arise in consequence of the provision of Rule 63, which is clearly intended to apply only to claims and objections which can properly be preferred under the provisions of O. 21. In the present instance, the objection was taken to attachment under R. 58. As held in 1 Pat 159¹ a mortgagee cannot come to Court under R. 58 and argue that the mortgaged property is not liable to attachment. This decision was given with reference to an application by a usufructuary mortgagee in possession, and it was held that the provisions of R. 63 did not apply to dismissal of such an application. The same principle applies with even greater force to the mortgagee who is not in possession of the property but merely has a right to sue for possession. The present suit is simply one for possession on the footing of the alleged mortgage, Hira Lal being impleaded in consequence of his denying the plaintiff's right to obtain possession.

This view of the case is sufficient to dispose of a preliminary objection with regard to court-fee. It is now admitted that the appeal had been properly stamped in the first instance, as the suit was for possession of the mortgaged property. The remarks made above also have a bearing on the disposal of the suit itself. The trial Court held that the mortgage had been proved, that there was no reason to suspect that the property had been mortgaged in order to defeat or delay the claim of Hira Lal and that the plaintiff was entitled to possession. On first appeal, the District Court reversed this decision, holding in effect that the plaintiff had failed to prove that the transaction had been carried through in good faith. It has been claimed that this is a finding on the question of fact which is sufficient to bar a second appeal. It seems clear however from a perusal of the judgment that the learned District Judge was under the impression that the burden of proving good faith lay heavily on the plaintiff. He refused to accept the evidence of the plaintiff or the defendant or even that of the patwari before whom the parties appeared as a preliminary to mutation. He also rejected the relevant entry in the patwari's diary on the ground that this was a document of title requiring registration. It has now been generally recognized in the Punjab that a report made to a subordinate land revenue officer under the statutory provision relating to changes in the land revenue records does not operate to create a title for the purposes of S. 17, Registration Act 1908, so that this objection was not correct.

The rest of the evidence appears to have been viewed by the learned District Judge on a mistaken application of the principle laid down in A I R 1932 Lah 174,² in which it is said that in suit under O. 21, R. 63, the onus of establishing both consideration and good faith lies upon the plaintiff who had raised an unsuccessful objection before the executing Court. As already pointed out, the present suit cannot be properly described as one under Order 21, R. 63. The decision just mentioned proceeds from the judgment of the Privy Council in A I R 1930 P C 255.³ In that case the plaintiff objected that part of the property was wakf and part was her own property, which would be a good ground for objecting to attachment. The executing Court held that the deeds on which she relied were merely fictitious documents created with fraudulent intention. She then brought a suit for a declaration that the deeds were valid. It was held that the findings of the executing Court were sufficient to throw on her the burden of proving good faith when her claim was renewed by means of a regular suit.

There is nothing in the principle thus enunciated which would apply to the case of a plaintiff who claims certain rights under a mortgage and has adopted a mistaken and infructuous method of establishing those rights beforehand. If he raises an objection which he was not entitled to make, it seems to me that his legal position remains unaltered. The plaintiff has produced a copy of an entry from the revenue records which shows that he held a mortgage on the land, and which is to be regarded under the statutory law as carrying with it a presumption of truth. It is then for the opposite party to rebut that presumption. There are no circumstances in the present case which raise any definite suspicion of fraud. It seems to me that the evidence has been viewed in the lower Appellate Court as if the plaintiff lay under the necessity of dispelling a suspicion of fraud which arose out of the dismissal of the infructuous application in the execution proceedings, and that this is sufficient to vitiate the judgment on point of law. For these reasons, I agree with the view taken by the trial Court. I accept the appeal, and restore the decree of the trial Court, with costs throughout.

(a) Criminal Trial—Concurrent jurisdiction—Lower Court should be moved first particularly in case of application for bail — Exception to general rule.

Although there is no hard and fast rule, it is desirable when the Sessions Court and High Court have concurrent jurisdiction that the ordinary practice should certainly be that the lower Court should first be moved and this is particularly desirable in a bail application where the appropriate Court to deal with the matter is the Court which is going to try the case and where an expression of opinion by a superior Court is likely to prejudice the trial in the lower Court. But where the lower Court's judgment is likely to be affected by some remarks made by the superior Court during the proceedings in that case, then the superior Court can be moved but only as an exception to the general rule. [P 763 C 1]

(b) Criminal Trial — Bail — Power of High Court to grant — Accused committed by competent Magistrate on serious charge — High Court should not lightly release accused on bail.

Although the High Court could admit to bail a person, who has been committed on serious charges yet in a case where after an exhaustive enquiry the accused has been committed by a competent Magistrate on grave and serious charges relating to non-bailable offences, the High Court should not lightly enlarge him on bail.

3. Mahomed Ali Mohammad Khan v. Mt. Bismillah Khan, (1930) 17 A I R P C 255 = 128 I C 647 (P C).

Order. — A preliminary objection was raised to this petition that as the High Court and the Sessions Judge had concurrent jurisdiction, the petition should have been presented in the first place to the Court of the Sessions Judge. No direct authority was quoted in support of this objection and counsel was unable to refer to any rule on the subject. He relied however upon the analogy of other petitions such as petitions for revision and petitions for transfer in which the High Court has concurrent jurisdiction where the rule is that the lower Court should be moved first. I consider that although there is no hard and fast rule, it is desirable that the ordinary practice should certainly be that the lower Court should first be moved and this is particularly desirable in a bail application, where the appropriate Court to deal with the matter is the Court which is going to try the case and where an expression of opinion by a superior Court is likely to prejudice the trial in the lower Court. But there are peculiar circumstances in this case which take it out of the ordinary and they are that I have already dealt myself on a previous occasion with this matter when it came before me during the pendency of the committal proceedings in shape of a petition for the revision of the order of the learned Sessions Judge of Rawalpindi enlarging the petitioner on bail. I accepted that petition and cancelled the petitioner's bail and in doing so I had occasion to make some adverse remarks upon the behaviour of the petitioner before the case came into Court. Counsel for the petitioner has urged that the existence of these remarks would be likely to prevent the Sessions Judge from giving a wholly free and independent consideration to that aspect of the case. This argument appears to me to have considerable force and as therefore I am satisfied that there is no bar to my entertaining the application direct, I do so.

Before coming to the actual merits of the petition, I wish to refer to one legal argument raised by the learned Assistant to the Advocate-General. He pointed out that an order of commitment once made cannot be quashed by the High Court except on a point of law. He therefore argued that, as in the circumstances of this case, when the petitioner has been committed to the Sessions by a competent Court on charges of non-bailable offences of considerable seriousness, any order by the High Court would inevitably be taken by the learned trial Court as an indication that the High Court believed the case to be groundless. In such circumstances the subsequent Sessions trial would be a farce as the Sessions Judge would feel himself bound to acquit the petitioner. Counsel contended that any such action by the High Court would be tantamount to an evasion of the statutory provision which bars the High Court from interfering with a commitment order on questions of fact. While I am not prepared to go so far as the learned Assistant to the Advocate-General and to hold that the High Court could never admit to bail a person who has been committed on such charges, I certainly think that in a case like the present where after an exhaustive enquiry the petitioner has been committed by a competent Magistrate on grave and serious charges relating to non-bailable offences, the High Court should not lightly enlarge him on bail. In view of these considerations I am of opinion that in spite of the lengthy arguments which he has addressed to me on the point, counsel for the petitioner has not succeeded in showing that there are sufficient grounds in this case for releasing the petitioner on bail. The petition is accordingly dismissed.

Mehr Chand Mahajan—for Appellants.

Achhru Ram — for Respondent 1.

Addison Ag. C. J. — The facts relating to this second appeal are as follows: On 31st March 1928, Karim Bakhsh mortgaged some land to Sidhu Ram for Rs. 1000, the deed being presented for registration the same day. The registration was refused as Karim Bakhsh denied execution of the document. Karim Bakhsh then sold the land to another person on 10th April 1928, the transfer-deed being registered the same day. The original deed of mortgage was compulsorily registered on 30th October 1928. Thereafter the mortgagee transferred his rights under the mortgage deed in favour of the plaintiffs. On 13th February 1936, they brought the usual mortgage suit for sale of the land. The representative of the original vendee pleaded that the mortgage deed was invalid as it was improperly registered. The trial Court decreed the suit in part but on appeal the learned District Judge held that the mortgage deed had been improperly registered and, accepting the appeal he dismissed the suit, leaving the parties to bear their own costs throughout. Against this decision the plaintiffs have appealed.

Under S. 32, Registration Act every document to be registered shall be presented: (a) by some person executing or claiming under the same or (b) by the representative or assign of such person, or (c) by the agent of such person, representative or assign duly authorized by power of attorney executed and authenticated in manner hereinafter mentioned. S. 33 lays down the manner in which the powers of attorney of such agents shall be executed and authenticated. When the document was first presented under S. 32, Sidhu Ram was himself present and no question of an agent arose then. Under S. 73, Registration Act, when a Sub-Registrar has refused to register a document on the ground that any person by whom it purports to be executed, or his representative or assign, denies its execution, any person claiming under such document, or his representative, assign or agent authorized as aforesaid, may, within thirty days after the making of the order of refusal, apply to the Registrar in order to establish his right to have the document registered.

The application contemplated by S. 73 was not put in by Sidhu Ram but by an ordinary agent, Manohar Lal. Admittedly his power of attorney was not executed and authenticated as required by S. 33 of the Act. It was for this reason that the District Judge held the document to have been improperly registered.

Some attempt was made to argue that the words "as aforesaid" in the phrase "or agent authorized as aforesaid" in S. 73 (1) of the Act were mere surplusage, but this is obviously not so and they can only refer to the special agent, mentioned in S. 32 and S. 33 of the Act. As Manohar Lal was not such an agent there is no doubt that his application to the Registrar under Sec. 73 (1) did not lie. The Registrar therefore had no power to order registration of the document. Though it was admitted before us that a document, registered under Sec. 32 of the Act, which was presented by an agent not of a class recognized by S. 33, could not be said to be registered at all, it was sought to distinguish the case of an application to a Registrar under the provisions of S. 73 on the ground that after his order was obtained the document was later properly presented before the Sub-Registrar, but this is a distinction without a difference. For the Registrar to have jurisdiction to order registration it was necessary that the application should have been presented in the manner laid down by Sec. 73, and it was not so presented or made. The Registrar's order was therefore illegal and invalid and nothing done upon it could be valid or legal. No such distinction therefore can be drawn. The same view appears to have been taken obiter by a Division Bench of this Court in A I R 1938 Lah 255,¹ at the bottom of the first column of page 257 and top of the second column, where it was said:

Hence I have no hesitation in holding that the first presentation by Mohammad Ismail of the document was not valid and the appeal filed before the Registrar was also not a validly filed appeal.

By appeal here of course is meant application under S. 73. I am not impressed with the view expressed by a single Judge in A I R 1933 Mad 407.² I might here refer to S. 77, Registration Act which enacts that where the Registrar refuses to order the document to be registered, under S. 72 or S. 76, any person claiming under such document, or his representative, assign or agent, may within thirty days after the making of the order of refusal, institute in the Civil Court, a suit for a decree directing the document to be registered. It will be noticed that the word "agent" is here used, not the words "agent authorized as aforesaid" and the reason is obvious, as an ordinary agent is allowed to bring a suit in the Civil Courts. For the reasons given, I would dismiss this appeal with costs.

1. Madan Lal v. Ganga Bishen, (1938) 25 A I R Lah 255.

2. Chittoori Chinnammi v. Venkayamma, (1933) 20 A I R Mad 407 = 142 I C 646 = 64 M L J 449.

First Appeal No. 453 of 1936, Decided on 5th January 1938, from decree of Senior Sub-Judge, Jullundur, D/- 6th March 1935.

Appeal — Jurisdiction — Suit for declaration by collateral that alienation, consideration for which was alleged to be Rs. 13,000, was without consideration and legal necessity and therefore not binding on him—Suit dismissed by trial Court—District Judge, on appeal, holding that consideration to extent of Rs. 6608 was for valid necessity, but refusing to pass decree on ground that Rs. 6608 was outside his appellate jurisdiction — District Judge held had jurisdiction to pass decree.

A suit for declaration by a collateral that an alienation, the consideration for which was alleged to be Rs. 13,000, was without consideration and legal necessity and therefore did not affect the plaintiff's reversionary rights was dismissed by the trial Court, which held that the alienation was made for consideration and valid necessity except for a sum of Rs. 1500 or thereabouts. On appeal the District Judge held that consideration to the extent of Rs. 6608 was alone proved to be for legal necessity but refused to pass a decree in favour of the plaintiff on the ground that the sum of Rs. 6608 was outside his appellate jurisdiction and returned the appeal for presentation to the High Court :

Dalip Singh J.—In this case the plaintiff brought the usual declaratory suit alleging that a certain alienation made was without consideration and legal necessity and therefore should not affect his reversionary rights. The trial Court held on the pleadings of the parties that the plaintiff was a collateral of the vendor, that the property was ancestral but that the alienation was made for consideration and valid necessity except for a sum of Rs. 1500 or thereabouts, and as the total consideration was Rs. 13,000 he refused to set aside the sale and dismissed the plaintiff's suit with costs. On appeal to the learned District Judge, he held that consideration to the extent of Rs. 6608 was alone proved to be for necessity and that if he had jurisdiction to pass a decree he would have decreed the plaintiff's suit and held that the land was subject only to a charge of Rs. 6608 qua the plaintiff's reversionary rights. But the learned District Judge was of opinion that as the sum of Rs. 6608 was outside his appellate jurisdiction therefore he was not entitled to pass such a decree on the authority of 15 Lah 512,¹ and therefore he returned the appeal to the plaintiff for presentation to the High Court.

The plaintiff has now presented this appeal in the High Court as a first appeal but he challenges the order of the learned District Judge and contends that the jurisdictional value being fixed under the Suits Valuation Act at thirty times the jama of the land, 15 Lah 512¹ has no application and the learned District Judge had jurisdiction to pass a decree setting aside the sale and fixing the charge on the property at the sum of Rs. 6608. It is conceded by the learned counsel for the respondents that 15 Lah 512¹ does not apply to the case, that being a case of a suit for accounts in which a tentative value is first fixed by the plaintiff and the decretal amount may vary considerably from the tentative value fixed by the plaintiff. The learned counsel for the appellant has cited A I R 1936 Lah 133² as an authority for the proposition that the learned District Judge had jurisdiction. In the circumstances I am of opinion that the contention of the learned counsel for the appellant is correct and the learned District Judge had jurisdiction to pass the decree which he would have passed but for his finding that 15 Lah 512¹ barred

An appeal from an order under O. 23, R. 3 recording a compromise is not incompetent merely because it is preferred after a decree is made. It is not necessary to prefer an appeal both from the order and the decree passed in pursuance of the order. So also, where the appeal is from an order recording compromise, no question of filing a copy of the decree along with the memorandum of appeal arises: A I R 1933 Cal 94 and A I R 1938 Lah 350, Rel. on. [P 766 C 2; P 767 C 1]

(Harnam Singh).

Judgment.—This appeal has arisen in the following circumstances. A suit was instituted by four plaintiffs, namely Karnail Singh and Jarnail Singh, as majors, and Atma Singh and Gian Singh as minors, against Mt. Narain Kaur, Harnam Singh and three others for possession of 21 kanals 4 marlas of land. They alleged that they had purchased mortgagee rights of the land in suit from Mt. Narain Kaur, to whom the land had been mortgaged by one Mohan Singh. This suit was resisted by the defendants. On the pleadings of the parties three principal issues were framed. The trial Court decided all the three issues in favour of the plaintiffs holding inter alia that Mt. Narain Kaur and not Harnam Singh was the real mortgagee and that full consideration had passed for the sale of mortgagee rights. Harnam Singh alone made an appeal against that order impleading all the other parties to the suit as respondents. On 13th November 1937 a statement appears to have been made by one Hazara Singh, pleader, to the effect that if Rs. 200 were paid to his clients, they would relinquish the land in suit in favour of the appellant. This statement bears the signature of Hazara Singh pleader and the thumb mark of Karnail Singh. On the basis of this statement the lower Appellate Court accepted the appeal and dismissed the plaintiffs' suit. Jarnail Singh has appealed.

Counsel for the respondent has raised two preliminary objections: (1) that no appeal lay from a consent decree, and (2) that the appeal was time-barred inasmuch as a copy of the decree of the lower Appellate Court was not put in within time. I do not however consider that there is any force in these objections. By O. 43, R. 1 (m) an appeal is allowed from an order under R. 3 of O. 23 recording or refusing to record an agreement, compromise or satisfaction. As observed by a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court in 141 I C 732¹ an appeal from an order under O. 23, R. 3, Civil P. C., recording a compromise is not incompetent merely because it was preferred after a decree had been made. It is not necessary to prefer an appeal both from the order and decree passed in pursuance of the order. In a recent case, when an appeal had been preferred in similar circumstances, Tek Chand J. made similar observations and, although the memorandum of appeal showed that the appeal had been presented under S. 41, Act 9 of 1919, he treated the appeal as an appeal under O. 43, R. 1 (m) and, setting aside the judgment of the Courts below based on the alleged compromise, remitted the case back to the Court of first instance for trial of the suit on the merits: Regular Second Appeal No. 834 of 1937, reported in A I R 1938 Lah 350.² I am in respectful agreement with the course adopted by Tek Chand J. and consider that it was quite justified by law. I hold therefore that the appeal is competent. This automatically disposes of the second objection inasmuch as the appeal being one from an order recording a compromise, no question of the filing of a copy of the decree arose along with the memorandum of appeal.

On the merits I consider that this order cannot be maintained. It is admitted that there is no power of attorney on the record in favour of Hazara Singh, pleader, and in the absence of any such authority he was not competent at all to effect a compromise so as to bind Jarnail Singh. It is not known even which respondents were represented by him. It is true that the statement of Hazara Singh bears also the thumb mark of Karnail Singh, but that does not advance the case of the respondents any further. Besides, in my view, the alleged compromise was clearly to the detriment of the minors' interests inasmuch as it had been held by the trial Court that full consideration which amounted to Rs. 689, had passed and the compromise was being effected on Rs. 200 only. On the grounds stated above, I set aside the order of the lower Appellate Court and remand the case to it for disposal in accordance with law. The appellant will have his costs from Harnam Singh, respondent.

Judgment. — The main question in this appeal is whether the suit is barred by the provisions of S. 69, Partnership Act. On 21st January 1935 Chhagan Lal as a partner in the firm known as Hira Lal.

Bhanwar Lal sued the firm Mangal Sain-Raj Narain for Rs. 1300 as damages arising from a forward contract for the purchase of 500 bags of wheat entered into on 19th July 1933. The plaintiff in his plaint named six other persons as partners in the plaintiff firm and joined them as pro forma defendants. The contesting firm was not served for a long time and a written statement was only filed on 23rd December 1935, when the point was taken that the suit was barred by virtue of S. 69, Partnership Act. The point was not at first put in issue, but in October 1936 the trial Judge dismissed the suit on this ground. The plaintiff appealed but the learned District Judge upheld the finding. The plaintiff has come here in second appeal through Mr. Nanak Chand Pandit. S. 69 (2), Partnership Act, runs:

No suit to enforce a right arising from a contract shall be instituted in any Court by or on behalf of a firm against any third party unless the firm is registered and the persons suing are or have been shown in the register of firms as partners in the firm.

Mr. Nanak Chand's first point is that the suit was not by a firm but by a partner of the firm no longer in existence and thus it escaped the operation of S. 69 under the terms of S. 69 (3). As pointed out by the Judges below, the plaint nowhere stated that the plaintiff was suing as the partner of a dissolved firm. A somewhat similar point was that two of the partners of the firm had died and that the firm was dissolved by operation of S. 42, Partnership Act. This point also is not taken in the plaint and probably nothing would have been heard of either of these points if the firm had been registered before suit. In point of fact the firm was registered on 18th October 1935, the partners being described as Sujanmal, Chhaganmal, Indraj and Bhairun Das. The final point urged was that taking it as good law that the suit could not have been instituted, nevertheless registration on 18th August 1935 validated the suit with effect from the date of registration which was within time. A I R 1937 Mad 767,¹ a Single Bench judgment of the Madras High Court, supports this view. It is however the only ruling to this effect, and A I R 1936 Mad 991,² another Single

1. Varadarajulu Naidu v. Rajamanika Mudaliar, (1937) 24 A I R Mad 767=(1937) 2 M L J 273.

Bench judgment, took the opposite view on the same point and it was held that any subsequent amendment of petition after getting the firm registered under the Partnership Act could not relate back to the date of institution so as to cure the defect. Similarly it was held in A I R 1935 All 898³:

Before instituting a suit by a partner against a firm, the firm must be duly registered Subsequently registering the firm and amending the plaint does not make a valid institution.

This case is under S. 69 (1) and not under S. 69 (2), but the principle is the same. Finally in A I R 1935 Lah 893,⁴ a Division Bench judgment of this Court, it is also held:

Section 69 clearly says that no suit falling within its purview shall be instituted. It is the institution of the suit that is barred. Hence an unregistered firm cannot file a suit nor can it after filing get the suit stayed till it gets itself registered.

To me the wording of the Section itself seems very clear and it is supported by all the authorities except A I R 1937 Mad 767.¹ There is a special reason for not following that judgment in the present case, because even now the certificate has not been placed on the record of the civil suit. The date is given in the District Judge's judgment, but the certificate was actually placed on criminal proceedings which were instituted against the mukhtar-i-am of the plaintiff firm on the allegation that he had falsely stated that the firm was registered. He produced the certificate in his defence. On the main point I concur with the findings of the lower Courts and with the reasoning given in those judgments. This appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Where a khasra number is a pond and is reserved for common purposes of the village and is not an ordinary shamilat field, no proprietor is entitled to encroach upon any part of the khasra or cut trees growing on it without the consent of the other proprietors. [P 768 O 2]

Judgment.—The parties to this dispute are the proprietors of mouza Khizapur, tahsil Sonapat, Rohtak District. The dispute relates to khasra No. 1429 which is admittedly a portion of the shamilat. The defendants have lately brought 3 bighas out of this khasra number under cultivation. The plaintiffs have sued under O. 1, R. 8, Civil P. C., as representing the rest of the proprietary body, for a permanent mandatory injunction directing the defendants to restore this plot of 3 bighas, to its original condition by removing their possession and restraining them from cultivating any portion of the land in this khasra number or cutting trees which stand thereon. The defendants admitted that khasra No. 1429 was shamilat, but denied that it was a pond and that they were entitled to appropriate their pro rata share of this khasra number out of the shamilat. The main issue in the case was whether field No. 1429 was a pond and reserved for the common purposes of the village, as alleged by the plaintiffs, or whether it was an ordinary shamilat field which could be taken possession of by some of the proprietors until partition. On this issue both the Courts below have concurrently found, after a detailed examination of the revenue entries and other evidence on the record that the whole of this khasra number is a pond and was reserved for the common purposes of the village. This a finding of fact which cannot be assailed on second appeal. On this finding, there can be no doubt that no proprietor is entitled to encroach upon any part of this khasra number or cut trees without the consent of the other proprietors. No question of law really arises in this second appeal. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

First Appeals Nos. 383 of 1936 and 384 of 1937, Decided on 17th June 1938, from preliminary decree of Sub.Judge, First Class, Amritsar, D/- 26th June 1936.

* (a) Debtor and Creditor—Composition—Arrangement to accept part of whole—Rights and liabilities of creditors—Creditor not being party to composition whether bound by it—Creation of trust—Rights of creditor when lost explained.

A composition is an agreement between the compounding debtor and all or some of his creditors, by which the compounding creditors agree with the debtor, and (expressly or impliedly) with each other, to accept from the debtor payment of less than the amounts due to them in full satisfaction of the whole of their claims. The consideration which in such a case enables the acceptance of part of a debt to operate as a discharge of the whole debt is the mutual agreement of the creditors to forgo parts of their claims. One method of arrangement of an insolvent debtor's affairs which the law recognizes is an assignment of the debtor's property to a trustee for realization and distribution of the proceeds rateably amongst all the debtor's creditors, or amongst those who assent to and take the benefit of the assignment. Such an assignment operates in effect to place the administration of the debtor's estate in the hands of a trustee for the benefit of the creditors. The assignment is the voluntary act of the arranging debtor, and the trusts to which the assignment is subject are those which the debtor himself creates. The deed becomes operative to release or suspend the operation of creditors' claims by virtue of the assent of the creditors thereto; and it only binds those creditors who in writing or otherwise expressly or impliedly assent to it. Until the deed of assignment to a trustee has been executed by or come to the knowledge of the creditors, the trustee is an agent only for the debtor under a revocable authority to deal with the estate. When the instrument expresses the arrangement to be with the creditors generally, or all creditors who assent to it, any creditor who actually or by his conduct assents to and elects to take the benefit of the arrangement within the proper time is entitled to share in the benefits of the arrangement, although he has not signed the deed; and in some cases the Courts will allow a creditor to come in under the arrangement and share in its benefits notwithstanding that the proper time for accession has elapsed. On the other hand, a creditor entitled to the benefit of an arrangement must perform fairly all the conditions of the arrangement which apply to the creditors. If he takes any step which is inconsistent with or opposed to those conditions, as, for instance, by bringing an action against the debtor to recover his debt, he will be liable to be excluded from the benefit of the arrangement. This obligation is binding not only on creditors who execute a deed of arrangement or expressly assent to it, but also on those who by their conduct put themselves in the same situation as if they had executed it. The principle is that if a creditor puts himself in the situation of having the benefit of the deed, he must bear its obligations although he has not literally executed the deed. There is however one benefit to which a secured creditor is entitled. If the composition deed reserves to creditors their rights over securities held by them on the property of the debtor, as by a mortgage charge, the terms of a general release contained in the deed of agreement will not prevent those creditors from realizing or dealing with and obtaining the benefit of their securities in reduction of the debts due to them. But this provision is limited to the extent of their securities, which must be clearly reserved by the deed. [P 771 C 2; P 772 C 1, 2]

* (b) Mortgage—Mortgagee accepting composition of mortgagor's debts under deed cannot fall back on original deed.

Mortgagee having once accepted the trust-deed by which a composition of debt was made between the debtors and creditors, cannot again fall back on any remedy on the footing of the original mortgage. [P 776 C 2]

M. C. Mahajan, Indar Deva for R. C. Soni and S. N. Bali — for Respondents.

Beckett J.—This suit arises out of a composition between a firm and its creditors. Early in 1922, the firm of Jowala Nath Kanshi Ram, trading in pashmina goods at Amritsar and Benares, found itself in financial difficulties. The proprietors of the firms, Nathu Mal, Hari Kishen Das and Bishen Das alias Bhola Shah, then entered into a deed of arrangement with their creditors. The deed was dated 27th January 1922 but was not registered until 20th March. Kishen Chand and Gokal Chand were appointed trustees from among the creditors for the purpose of winding up the affairs of the firm. The property made over to them included the old stock of the firm and some outstanding debts. It is stated in the deed that the debts of the firm amounted at this time to about Rs. 1,20,000. Nearly half this sum was due to a secured creditor Nathu Mal, who held a mortgage over two shops and three houses in Amritsar. Nathu Mal was not one of the creditors signing the deed and it is said that the arrangement was made without his knowledge. In spite of this, it was provided in the deed that the trustees were to sell the two shops and two of the houses just mentioned and were to apply the proceeds in clearing off the mortgage-debt. The remaining house was then to be made over to one of the members of the debtor firm together with a small sum of money. After this had been done, the creditors were to share the proceeds of the winding up pro rata.

The old stock of the firm was sold off by auction. Certain ornaments were also sold. Nothing much was done towards the collection of most of the outstanding debts, which the trustees did not consider worth the cost of realization, but a suit was brought for the recovery of one of the more important debts at Benares and a decree was obtained. Apart from this debt, the only property of any considerable value left with the firm consisted of the shops and houses, of which the shops were the more valuable. An attempt was at first made to sell the shops by private treaty, but it was eventually decided to sell them at auction. The sale was finally concluded on 7th August 1922 in favour of Sham Das, who offered the sum of Rupees 63,200, of which Rs. 15,800 was paid a few days later. Had the whole of the purchase money been promptly paid, the proceeds of this sale would probably have been sufficient to cover the whole of the mortgage charge outstanding at the time, leaving the proceeds of the two houses for rateable distribution among the other creditors.

Unfortunately a hitch occurred over the sale of the shops. It had been provided in the deed of arrangement that the debtors would sign any documents that were required if a demand was made. Sham Das asked the trustees to obtain the signatures of the debtors to the deed, although this had not been originally included in the terms at all, and the trustees agreed to accommodate him. When arrangements had been made to obtain these signatures, however, Sham Das insisted that the deed must be signed not only by the debtors who had been parties to the deed of arrangement but also by the various other members of the joint Hindu family to which they belonged, and this gave rise to further difficulties. Eventually, Sham Das sued the trustees for rescission of the contract of sale and the return of the money already paid, on the ground that he had not received a marketable title within a reasonable time. It is suggested that his reluctance to conclude the bargain was due to the fact that there had been a considerable fall in the value of real property since the auction. This view was accepted by the trial Court, which rejected the claim as put forward by Sham Das, but passed a decree requiring the trustees to obtain the signatures of the other members of the family within a certain time. Sham Das appealed to the High Court, which held that Sham Das had been within his rights in refusing to accept the conveyance which was not signed by the members of the family in accordance with the deed of trust, and granted a decree rescinding the sale and ordering return of the money paid. The result was that the trustees lost the benefit of the sale which had been concluded and further had to pay a large sum by way of costs, apparently out of their own pocket. These proceedings did not come to an end until 31st May 1927. In the meantime, no effective steps had been taken for the sale of the houses. The reasons given by the trustees for this delay are that the houses were occupied by the debtors who gave no assistance in the matter of selling them and that prospective purchasers were scared away by the prolonged litigation which had arisen over the sale of the shops. It may here be observed that these houses as well as the shops were held by the debtors under a deed of rent which had been executed for one year in 1919 but had not been renewed since then, so that the debtors were in the position of tenants holding over at the time when the composition took place. It has been suggested that the trustees should have realized rents for these properties after the composition; but the trustees took the view that the right to receive rents for the shops had passed to Sham Das after the sale and that they could not realize rent for any part of the house property without the assistance of the debtors.

While the litigation over the shops was in progress, the mortgagee brought a suit on the basis of his mortgage deed, for the realization of the sum due to him, with accrued interest, by sale of the two shops and all three houses, impleading the original mortgagors and their representatives together with the trustees. This suit, out of which the present appeal has arisen, was instituted on 6th October 1926. After the usual recitals suitable to a mortgage suit, the plaintiff stated in para. 4 of his plaint that the business of the original mortgagors had failed, that the two trustees had been appointed to manage their property and money dealings and that the property of the mortgagors had thus come into their hands. In para. 8, this statement was repeated. It was further stated that the trustees had "purposely neglected their duty which they did not perform," and that they were accordingly responsible for payment of the principal and interest due on the mortgage. In the last paragraph, it was prayed that a decree for sale of the mortgaged property might be passed and that a decree might also be passed against the persons of the defendants and their property. The trial Court granted the usual decree for the sale of the mortgaged property with a personal decree against the debtors but refused to grant a personal decree against the trustees on two grounds: first, that the plaintiff could not claim the benefit of a trust deed which he did not sign, and secondly, that relief under the deed of arrangement could not be combined with a claim based on the original deed of mortgage.

On appeal to this Court, it was held that the additional relief claimed by the plaintiff could not be summarily rejected in this way. In the first place, it is open to a creditor, who has not signed the deed of arrangement, to come in afterwards, if he chooses to do so within a reasonable time. In the second place, it may be possible for a secured creditor to combine the benefits of such an arrangement with his rights over the secured property. The suit was accordingly remanded for a decision on the merits with regard to this part of the plaintiff's claim. After the order of remand, the principal parties or their counsel were briefly examined. The case as stated for the plaintiff was that the trustees had been dilatory and negligent in disposing of both the immovable property and the moveable property of the debtors. The trustees denied that they had been negligent or guilty of undue delay in realizing the property. A single issue was accordingly struck on the question whether the trustees had been guilty of negligence, breach of the terms of the trust deed and misconduct, and if so, whether they were personally liable for the payment of the money due to the plaintiff. The finding of the lower Court was that the trustees might have been guilty of some negligence in realizing such assets as the outstandings due to the debtor firm, but that there had been no negligence in carrying out the terms of the deed of arrangement so far as it related to the claim of the plaintiff. The additional prayer against the trustees was accordingly dismissed and the plaintiff has again appealed against this decision.

The appeal has been argued principally upon the grounds that the trustees were in fact grossly negligent in disposing of the real estate and that their manner of dealing with the rest of the estate has had a prejudicial effect upon the legal interests of the plaintiff. But before it can be determined whether the trustees have been guilty of any breach of trust in relation to the plaintiff, it is necessary first to determine to what extent, if any, the plaintiff stood in a fiduciary position towards them. This, in turn, makes it necessary to consider to what extent the position of the plaintiff with regard to the deed of arrangement has already been determined by the previous order of this Court. As I read that order, it does not appear to me to have been intended to give any final decision on the rights of the plaintiff under the deed of arrangement; and I understand from my learned brother, who was a party to the judgment, that it was not meant to be conclusive. The additional claim of the plaintiff against the trustees had been summarily dismissed on the ground that it could not be entertained. The effect of the order was to direct that the claim should be entertained and should then be decided on the merits. It is only after the obligation of the trustees towards the plaintiff has been determined that it can be decided whether they have failed to carry out those obligations and what is the extent of the loss, if any, suffered by the plaintiff in consequence. In other words, the second part of the issue framed by the lower Court requires to be decided first.

The general nature of compositions and arrangements outside an Insolvency Court has been explained in Vol. II, Edn. 2 of Halsbury's Laws of England, under Part II of the Section relating to Bankruptcy and Insolvency. A composition is an agreement between the compounding debtor and all or some of his creditors, by which the compounding creditors agree with the debtor, and (expressly or impliedly) with each other, to accept from the debtor payment of less than the amounts due to them in full satisfaction of the whole of their claims. The consideration which in such a case enables the acceptance of part of a debt to operate as a discharge of the whole debt is the mutual agreement of the creditors to forgo parts of their claims. One method of arrangement of an insolvent debtor's affairs which the law recognizes is an assignment of the debtor's property to a trustee for realization and distribution of the proceeds rateably amongst all the debtor's creditors, or amongst those who assent to and take the benefit of the assignment. Such an assignment operates in effect to place the administration of the debtor's estate in the hands of a trustee for the benefit of the creditors. The assignment is the voluntary act of the arranging debtor, and the trusts to which the assignment is subject are those which the debtor himself creates. The deed becomes operative to release or suspend the operation of creditors' claims by virtue of the assent of the creditors thereto; and it only binds those creditors who in writing or otherwise expressly or impliedly assent to it. Until the deed of assignment to a trustee has been executed by or come to the knowledge of the creditors, the trustee is an agent only for the debtor under a revocable authority to deal with the estate. When the instrument expresses the arrangement to be with the creditors generally, or all creditors who assent to it, any creditor who actually, or by his conduct, assents to and elects to take the benefit of the arrangement within the proper time is entitled to share in the benefits of the arrangement although he has not signed the deed; and in some cases the Courts will allow a creditor to come in under the arrangement and share in its benefits notwithstanding that the proper time for accession has elapsed.

On the other hand, a creditor entitled to the benefit of an arrangement must perform fairly all the conditions of the arrangement which apply to the creditors. If he takes any step which is inconsistent with or opposed to those conditions, as, for instance, by bringing an action against the debtor to recover his debt, he will be liable to be excluded from the benefit of the arrangement. This obligation is binding not only on creditors who execute a deed of arrangement or expressly assent to it, but also on those who by their conduct put themselves in the same situation as if they had executed it. The principle is that if a creditor puts himself in the situation of having the benefit of the deed, he must bear its obligations although he has not literally executed the deed. There is however one benefit to which a secured creditor is entitled. If the composition deed reserves to creditors their rights over securities held by them on the property of the debtor, as by a mortgage charge, the terms of a general release contained in the deed of agreement will not prevent those creditors from realizing or dealing with and obtaining the benefit of their securities in reduction of the debts due to them. But this provision is limited to the extent of their securities, which must be clearly reserved by the deed.

The questions which fall to be determined in the light of these principles are whether the plaintiff has, either expressly or by his conduct, put himself in a position by which he has become entitled to share in the benefits of the deed of arrangement, or whether he has excluded himself from those benefits; and if he is entitled to share in the benefits of the deed, what are the benefits which he should have received, and if he has failed to receive them in full, what is the extent of the loss, if any, which he has sustained through the failure of the trustees to carry out their obligations. The first of these questions to be decided is whether the plaintiff should be regarded as a party to the arrangement. On the one hand, the course of plaintiff's actions up to the institution of the present suit would lead one to believe that he had accepted the deed. I should myself prefer to describe his action as one of acquiescence; but he appears to have accepted the proposal that the property should be sold free of encumbrance, which might be regarded as concession on his part so as to entitle him to any benefits which might arise from the arrangement. On the other hand, there is the plain fact that the plaintiff has instituted the present suit on pleadings which are hardly to be distinguished from those which should be submitted in an ordinary suit on the footing of a mortgage deed and he has asked for personal relief against the defendants, not in an alternative form but against all the defendants alike. This does not seem to be consistent with the surrender of his security or with the most important feature of the deed of arrangement, which is that the debtors should be free of further personal claim.

The original attitude of the plaintiff is best expressed in his own statement, which was made by him to the Court as a witness on 11th June 1935. He then stated that he accepted anything in the deed of arrangement which was in his own favour but that he did not consider himself bound by anything which was in favour of any one else. When a party adopts an attitude like this, it becomes difficult to grant him any form of equitable relief. Since then however the plaintiff has definitely taken up the attitude that he is seeking relief on the footing of the deed of arrangement. He has already come up in appeal on this very ground, and has had his appeal accepted. In those circumstances, it is no longer open to him to deny that he is a party to the arrangement. But one difficulty which again arises is that the property has been sold through the Court, which could not have been done if the security had been released. There is no appeal against the order for sale, which it is now too late to accept. In these circumstances my learned brother has suggested that the sale through the Court should be treated as if it had been conducted by the trustees, which seems the only solution. This is not a course which could be adopted in any ordinary circumstances; but as matters now stand, it seems to be the only way of squaring the claim against the trustees with the existing sale, unless it could be held that the plaintiff was entitled to resile from the agreement and then sue the trustees for the damages arising from undue delay. But this is not the case stated by the plaintiff himself who claims still to be a party to the agreement; and it is to be observed that the plaintiff brought the present suit before it was known whether the earlier sale by the trustee was to be treated as valid or not.

If the sale by the Court is treated as a sale on behalf of the trustees and if it can be held that the plaintiff is still entitled to seek relief on the footing of the deed of arrangement, it is then to be decided what relief he would be entitled to claim under the deed. The first difficulty is that the deed itself is silent on the very point which has now arisen. I accept the plaintiff's proposition that the original parties to the arrangement (who did not include the plaintiff) intended that the plaintiff should be paid his existing claims in full; but it was also clearly contemplated that the sale of part of the mortgaged property would be sufficient to meet the whole of these charges and no provision was made for what was to happen if the proceeds proved to be insufficient. The references in later parts of the deed to payments to creditors out of the rest of the estate obviously refer only to the unsecured creditors, for they provide for payments pro rata, which is inconsistent with the plaintiff's own contention that it was intended that he should be paid in full. When a deed is silent on a point like this, it is difficult to say how the deficiency should be supplemented. If it is clear that the immovable property was expected to raise the necessary sum to pay up the mortgage, it is also clear that the unsecured creditors expected to be paid something out of the rest of the estate and it is by no means certain that they would have accepted the provision that the plaintiff's charges would extinguish their claims against the moveable property, should any unforeseen eventuality arise. This would in effect mean extending the plaintiff's security to the whole of the moveable property, against which he would otherwise be entitled to proceed only on the same footing as the unsecured creditors.

If we assume that it was intended that the plaintiff should be paid in full and that he should be paid out of the proceeds of the moveable property in preference to the unsecured creditors, he would still only be paid to the extent of the estate. The trustees cannot be taken as having assented to the proposition that they should pay the whole of the plaintiff's claim whether the estate was sufficient for this purpose or not. It would have to be determined therefore how much the trustees could have realized and the plaintiff could claim damages only to the extent to which the sum realized by him out of the mortgaged property (and also apparently out of the personal property of the debtors) falls short of this amount. The principal accusation of negligence laid against the trustees is that they were guilty of undue delay in bringing the mortgaged property to sale. So far as the shops are concerned, I have no hesitation in agreeing with the lower Court that negligence has not been proved. The deed of arrangement was not registered until 20th March 1922; and in view of the objections which were raised afterwards with regard to title, it was certainly advisable for the trustees to guard against any similar difficulties that were likely to arise before taking the sale in hand. The sale of the shops was concluded a few months later. If the price had then been realized, the mortgagee would have received his money in full, so that he clearly suffered no loss from delay in bringing the property to sale.

An objection has been raised that the earnest money should have been collected at the time of auction; but here again it is obvious that the mortgagee suffered no loss when the amount was collected a few days later. In the subsequent negotiations over the conclusion of the sale, the trustees appear to have acted with the same amount of prudence as would have been exercised by an ordinary man in the conduct of his own business. In view of the provision in the deed of trust, it was not unreasonable for them to agree that they would try and obtain the signatures of the debtors. Although all these signatures were not obtained, it is in evidence that they produced the debtors for the purpose, and the negotiations eventually broke down because the signatures of other members of the family were not obtained. In seeking to enforce this sale, it is said that the trustees were acting in accordance with the wishes of the creditors, and I see no reason to disbelieve this statement.

The delay in the sale of the houses is another matter. The excuse given for this delay is that prospective purchasers were scared away by the litigation over the shops, which may well be possible. It certainly seems probable that they would have fetched a better price if the mortgage debt could first be cleared, so that there would be some justification for postponing the sale of the houses for a time, though this might not be sufficient justification for waiting until the litigation over the shops was concluded. It is also said that the debtors did not give reasonable help and were actually obstructing in the matter of selling the houses. These are matters which depend on oral evidence, the value of which is difficult to assess after a considerable time has elapsed. Had the mortgagee been serious in his claim that he intended to accept the arrangement, relying upon the trustees, and if he was of opinion in those days that it was the duty of the trustees to bring the shops to sale at once, one would have expected him to seek the aid of the Courts at an earlier date for the purpose of securing compliance with the terms of the trust. As it is, it seems to me doubtful whether there was any real negligence over the sale of the houses.

There is however another aspect of the matter which would be sufficient to debar the plaintiff's claim in the present suit. He has not only to show that there must have been negligence, but also that he has suffered some definite loss thereby. There is only oral evidence with regard to the value of property at different times, and there is no sufficiently certain evidence to show that there had been any serious depreciation in the value of the houses before he took matters into his own hand by bringing the present suit for realization of the property through the Court. The valuation given by the debtors themselves is obviously exaggerated; for the effect of accepting their valuation would be to hold that the value of their property exceeded the amount of their debts at the time of the arrangement, whereas the references to rateable distribution indicate that they considered themselves to be insolvent. At the time when the mortgagee decided to realize his securities through Court, there was still a possibility that the original sale would go through, for the vendee's appeal had not yet been accepted. If the appeal was rejected, as the trustees might reasonably hope would happen in view of the decision of the trial Court, it would also be reasonable for the trustees to expect that the price of the shops added to the price which the houses would then realize would be amply sufficient to pay off the whole mortgage debt.

The alleged negligence of the trustees in disposing of the rest of the property is only relevant if it is considered that the deed of arrangement should be read as implying that the secured creditor was to share in the distribution of proceeds realized by the sale of the property in the unlikely event of a failure to clear off the mortgage debt by sale of the immovable property. There is no express provision in the deed for any such failure; but if a right to participate in the distribution of other profits can be held to be implied, similar considerations would again apply. Even if it could be held that there was any negligence on the part of the trustees, it is impossible to ascertain the exact loss to the estate. The stock-in-trade of the firm was valued by the debtors at Rs. 15,000, but this seems to have been a mere book valuation. For example, a yard or two of old viyalla is valued at Rs. 2-4-0. It is obvious that such scraps of material cannot be expected to fetch their book value at a sale of old stock; and if they fetch a mere fraction of their original price, there is nothing surprising in this. No other estimate of the value of these goods has been given, so that it is impossible to say what loss, if any, was caused to the estate by the sale of these goods at auction. There is again no reliable estimate of the true value of the ornaments which were sold, and there is no particular reason to suppose that full value was not obtained.

Much stress has been laid upon the failure of the trustees to collect outstanding debts which were supposed to be due to the firm. The reason given by the trustees is that the debts were either time-barred or that insufficient particulars were given or that they were small debts due from persons residing at distant places and that generally they were not worth the cost of collection. It is again obvious that when a firm is forced into a deed of arrangement, the nominal outstandings are not likely to be worth very much, if they are worth anything at all. Proceedings of this kind are similar to proceedings in liquidation; and my own experience of liquidation work in this country has been that more is spent on collecting dues of the kind shown in the list supplied to the trustees than is brought in for the benefit of the estate. The pleas put forward by the trustees are for the most part borne out by the nature of the original entries. Steps were taken to obtain a decree in respect of the only large debt, and in the absence of further evidence I think that the trustees are correct in saying that it was not worth their while to incur the expenses which would have been necessary for the purpose of calling in these debts with very little prospect of realization.

Another charge was with regard to the rents which fell due in respect of the house property under the complicated arrangement by which the debtors were supposed to be tenants holding over under the plaintiff. The legal position is far from clear and the trustees did not apparently consider that it was for them to collect most of the rents. Even if this should be considered to be negligence on their part, the plaintiff's claim would again fail, for there is no material on which any definite estimate of the losses to the estate could be framed. In this respect, it is to be observed that the trustees appear to have considered themselves as being to some extent mere agents of the debtors, rather than trustees in the strict sense of the term. This doubt as to their true position is to some extent justified by the terms of the deed of arrangement itself. When referring to the sale of the houses, the deed runs as follows:

Trustees shall be competent to execute deeds of sale in respect of the said houses themselves, or get the same executed by us.

Had the deed of arrangement been a deed of trust in the strict sense of the term, it would no longer have been competent to the debtors to execute any further transfers in respect of this property. The position of the trustees was then left undetermined, and there is evidence to indicate that the debtors continued in possession of the house property in much the same way as before. As already remarked however nothing could be decided with regard to the claim in respect of rents when it is not known what rents were due. Had the mortgagee regarded himself from the first as a beneficiary under an ordinary deed of trust and had he considered that the trustees were not carrying out their duties properly, it seems to me that the proper course for him would have been either to seek the aid of the Courts at an early stage for the purpose of securing prompt disposal of the property or else to sue the trustees for an account with regard to the estate as a whole, in which case each item of the account could have been considered on a properly framed objection. As matters stand now, when the mortgagee has himself repudiated the arrangement by suing the original debtors in addition to the trustees, and has come up with a vague claim of negligence unsupported by any reliable evidence which would make it possible to frame a precise estimate of the loss caused to the estate, if any loss has in fact been caused, I do not see how it is possible to grant him any relief on the basis of the deed of arrangement. I would therefore dismiss the appeal with costs. Although there has been no appeal by the debtors against the decree granting personal relief against them, counsel has appeared and raised a claim on their behalf. His contention is that, since the mortgagee is now claiming under the deed of arrangement, this is sufficient to absolve his clients from personal responsibility and that, although they have not appealed, it is still open to this Court to pass a decree in the correct form, even though it involves the grant of relief to parties who have not appealed. I think that there is a certain amount of force in this contention and I gather that it has also found favour with my learned brother. As already observed, the plaintiff has now come up to this Court twice on the definite allegation that he is a party to the deed of arrangement and all concerned have been put to the trouble and expense of having this aspect of the case examined. The result of this examination undertaken at the instance of the plaintiff is that he must now be taken as a party to the arrangement but that he has failed to prove that he is entitled to any damages from the trustees.

The only logical conclusion from this finding is that the plaintiff is not entitled to any personal relief against the debtors who were released from their personal obligations by his acceptance of the deed of arrangement. The alteration of the decree against the appellant is again not a course to which I should be inclined in any ordinary circumstances; but the terms of O. 41, R. 33, Civil P. C., are very wide and the plaintiff has in both appeals insisted that he must be granted relief on the footing of the deed. For these reasons, I would alter the decree of the trial Court as a result of the appeal by omitting any personal relief against the debtors, and passing a decree in the form suggested by my learned brother in his judgment and since the proceedings are partly due to the somewhat haphazard arrangement made by the trustees (although it has not been possible to prove any definite loss arising therefrom) and as the other defendants are obtaining a relief in respect of which they have not appealed, I would leave the parties to bear their own costs throughout.

Bhide J. — The facts of the case have been given in the judgment of my learned brother Beckett J. and need not be repeated. The main points which require decision in this appeal appear to be as follows: (1) Did the plaintiff assent to the scheme of "arrangement" made by the mortgagors for the payment of their debts by the deed of trust dated 27th January 1922? (2) If so, can he now sue on the footing of the original mortgage? and (3) if not what relief is he entitled to under the deed of trust?

As regards the first point, the plaintiff did not actually sign the deed of trust, as many of the creditors did, but he has definitely taken up the position that he accepted the arrangement and I see no reason to doubt it. The plaintiff was the principal creditor and it is very unlikely that the mortgagors would have made any scheme for payment of their debts if the plaintiff had not or was not expected to assent to it. It must be remembered that the assignment of properties to the trustees amounted to an act of insolvency (vide S. 6, Provincial Insolvency Act), and if the plaintiff had not cared to accept it, he could have at once applied for the mortgagors being declared insolvents or instituted a suit on the basis of his mortgage and recovered his dues. As matters stood at the time, he had nothing to lose by the arrangement, for the deed provided for the payment of his debts in full. Besides, being related to the mortgagors, he was probably inclined to help them in paying off their creditors. Two of the shops were even sold by the trustees without any objection being raised by him. But when the sale of those shops gave rise to protracted litigation and owing to the delay in the sale of the houses etc. he apprehended loss, he seems to have instituted the present suit on 6th October 1926 on the basis of the mortgage as well as the trust deed.

(2) The trial Court at first dismissed summarily the claim on the footing of the trust deed on the ground of misjoinder of causes of action, but this was held to be not justifiable and the case was remanded for re-decision on merits, for reasons given in the remand order dated 1st June 1934. The remand order did not purport to decide the merits of the claim either on the footing of the mortgage or the trust deed and hence the whole case was ordered to be decided on merits. It may be noted here that the case was originally decided on the footing of the mortgage, but the plaintiff was not satisfied with this and he came up in appeal because he wanted to rely on the trust deed.

The first question which has now to be determined is whether the plaintiff, having once accepted the trust deed, can again fall back on any remedy on the footing of the original mortgage. In my opinion he cannot do so. The trust deed provided for the repayment of the debts of the creditors generally in a certain manner and for the mortgagors being absolved from their personal liability. Consequently, the plaintiff having by his assent or acquiescence led the other parties concerned, to act upon the deed he was in my opinion estopped from resorting to his remedies under the mortgage deed. The mere fact that the plaintiff sued on the footing of his mortgage as well as the trust deed seems to be immaterial as he can only get such relief as he may be legally entitled to. By accepting the trust deed, he seems to me to be legally debarred from seeking any relief on the basis of the original mortgage. The mortgagors strenuously opposed the plaintiff's suit so far as their personal liability was concerned. The trial Court has however again granted a decree on the footing of the mortgage, with liberty to the plaintiff to apply for a personal decree for the balance. This appears to be erroneous, as the plaintiff's rights on the basis of the mortgage had in my opinion merged in these under the trust deed.

(3) The next point for consideration is the position of the plaintiff as regards the trust deed. It is true that the plaintiff did not sue for "specific performance" of the trust but sued the mortgagors as well as the trustees jointly for realization of his debt. In (1841) 1 Dr & War 227¹ it was held that if a creditor takes any step inconsistent with the deed of arrangement he would be debarred from seeking any benefit under the deed. But in that case the creditor had brought an independent action against the debtor alone. In the present case, the plaintiff has sued the mortgagors as well as the trustees and it is for the Court to give him such relief against either or both of them as he may be legally entitled to. In these circumstances I do not think it would be equitable to hold that the plaintiff cannot get the benefit of the trust deed, merely because he has filed a suit of this description against the mortgagors as well as the trustees instead of suing for 'specific performance' of the trust. As I shall show presently, the plaintiff seems to be entitled to claim full satisfaction of his claim on the footing of the mortgage even under the trust-deed and it cannot therefore be said that anyone has been prejudiced by his instituting a suit in the present form.

Coming now to the provisions of the trust deed, we find that it provided that the present plaintiff's claims on the basis of the mortgage should be first satisfied by the sale of the mortgaged properties with the exception of one house which was to be given to one Bulle Shah. This was apparently because the value of the properties to be sold was considered to be more than sufficient to satisfy the mortgagee's claim. The deed did not provide for the contingency arising in the event of the proceeds of the sale of these properties proving insufficient for the satisfaction of his claim. But this was apparently because such a contingency was never expected. It may be noted in this connexion that only two shops were sold at first for a sum Rs. 63,200 and this sum alone was admittedly sufficient to meet the mortgagee's claim as it stood at the time. There is nothing in the trust deed to suggest that it was ever intended that the mortgagee should not be paid in full. If any such situation was apprehended, the mortgagee would certainly have never agreed to the arrangement, as he did, or failed to sue for a period of about 4 years. Unfortunately the sale of the shops eventually fell through and this was responsible for the present litigation. In view of all the circumstances it seems to me that the reasonable interpretation to be placed on the trust deed is that the claim of the plaintiff was to be satisfied in full at first from the mortgagors' properties—immovable or moveable—and then the other creditors were to be paid pro rata.

The properties mortgaged in favour of the plaintiff have now been already sold and part of the plaintiff's claim has been thereby satisfied. The properties were apparently sold in execution of the decree, but this sale has been accepted by all the parties concerned and the only dispute now is as regards the responsibility for the payment of the balance. The plaintiff also admitted that he has realized about Rs. 19,000 or Rs. 20,000 on the footing of a decree which the trustees had obtained against one Lachmi Narain of Madhoban on the basis of a pronote. Besides the above, the trustees seem to have realized the following amounts viz. :

Sale of Pashmina goods	...	4992	0	0
Sale of ornaments	...	1350	6	0
From Hari Kishen Das	...	84	15	3
Total		6427	5	3

Out of this amount they paid Rs. 2100 to a firm Bhai Gurmukh Singh-Thakar Singh who had not accepted the trust deed and had therefore to be paid in full (vide concluding portion of the trust-deed dated 27th January 1922) while the rest of the amount realized was apparently swallowed up in litigation and other expenses incurred by trustees, which came to over Rs. 7000 (see Ex. K C/1 the account printed at pages 119 to 136 of the printed record). The trustees, who were themselves creditors, say that they have suffered heavy loss and have not only not been able to realize over Rs. 10,000 which were due to them but had to spend about Rs. 6000 out of their own pocket (see statement of Kishen Chand dated 10th December 1935).

The plaintiff on the other hand contended that the trustees have been grossly negligent and they are therefore personally liable to pay the balance which is still due to him. There can be no doubt that if the plaintiff could prove his allegations that the trustees were negligent and that their negligence had resulted in loss to him, he would be entitled to a personal decree against them; but the evidence on the record does not seem to be either sufficiently clear or adequate for the purpose. It is true that the trustees have not been business-like in keeping a regular account of all their transactions at the proper time, but the plaintiff has not been able to prove that they have falsified or suppressed accounts. It is noteworthy that the trustees have been accused only of negligence and not of dishonesty. My learned brother Beckett J. has discussed in his judgment the question of the trustees' alleged negligence in connexion with the various items which the trustees had to dispose of and I agree with him that it has not been established that they were negligent and that the plaintiff suffered any loss as a result of the negligence. The trial Court had also absolved them from blame except in regard to their dealings in connexion with the outstandings of the debtor firm and realization of rents. As regards the outstandings, the lists Exs. D/1 and D/2 show that these were mostly petty debts. The most important item was that of Rupees 3736.13.6. Defendant Kishen Chand deposed that this had become barred by time and it has not been shown that this was not so. The trustees have deposed that most of the other items had also become time-barred or that it was not worth while to attempt to realize them as more would have been spent than the amount due. There seems to be no good reason to disbelieve their statements in this respect—especially in view of the fact that the debtor firm was on the verge of insolvency and it is not likely that they would have omitted to realize any debts which were worth realizing and realizable. As regards the rents, the position was not very clear. The mortgage in favour of the plaintiff was 'with possession' and the property had been leased out by the plaintiff himself to the mortgagors. It was therefore necessary for him to get the mortgagors and their sub-tenants to attorn to the trustees and give the tenants notice to pay rent to them. But he does not appear to have taken any such step. He too thus appears to have been negligent in the matter.

The trustees were working without any remuneration. Unfortunately, the first sale of two shops—for which they had obtained a good price—involved them in costly litigation and eventually the transaction fell through and they had to suffer heavy loss. Some other creditors also filed suits and they had to fight these suits as well. Neither the debtors nor the plaintiff appear to have taken much trouble to help them. The accounts produced show that they have incurred legitimate expenditure which exceeded the amount realized by about Rs. 7000 as already pointed above.

On the findings arrived at above, the decree passed by the trial Court on the basis of the mortgage does not appear to me to be correct. But the properties were sold long ago in the year 1928 in execution of the decree and this sale of the mortgaged properties is not being challenged by any of the parties concerned. The mortgaged properties had to be sold, whether in the hands of the mortgagors or of the trustees and as the execution sale is not objected to, it may be treated as though it had been carried out by the trustees themselves. The proper course for the plaintiff was perhaps to institute a suit for specific performance of the trust as against the trustees, but although he did not sue in the proper form, there is no doubt (on the finding arrived at above) that the whole of the mortgaged property was liable to be sold in his favour. As matters stand at present, it seems equitable to accept the sale of these properties in execution as though it had been effected by the trustees, as no objection has been now raised to the sale.

The only dispute now is as regards the personal liability of the trustees for the balance. As to this, as pointed out above, the plaintiff has already realized about Rs. 19,000 or Rs. 20,000 according to his own statement from the decree against Lachmi Narain, which the trustees had obtained. It is very significant that none of the creditors objected to this and this fact also supports the interpretation placed above upon the deed of trust that the plaintiff, as a mortgagee, was to be paid in full from the immovable as well as the moveable properties and then the other creditors were to be paid pro rata. As regards the balance, which the plaintiff still claims to be due, the plaintiff has failed to prove clearly that he had suffered any loss, which could be definitely attributed to the negligence of the trustees and hence his claim against the trustees personally was rightly dismissed.

It has been pointed out above that the decree passed against the mortgagors was not legally justifiable as the plaintiff having accepted the trust deed, the mortgagors were absolved from all liability. Although the mortgagors have not appealed, this Court has power under Order 41, Rule 33, Civil P. C., to pass any decree in appeal, which the trial Court ought to have passed or made. In view of the above findings the preliminary as well as the final decrees on the footing of the mortgage which the trial Court has passed and from which two different appeals have been filed (Regular First Appeals Nos. 383 of 1936 and 384 of 1937) do not appear to be legally justifiable.

The plaintiff has already realized in the course of the suits the amounts realized by the sale of the immovable properties and also from the decree against Lachmi Narain which the trustees had obtained. He has failed to prove that he is entitled to any other relief. I would therefore accept the appeal only to the extent of setting aside the decrees on the footing of the mortgage and formally substituting therefor a decree as against the trustees for the amount already realized by the plaintiff by the sale of the immovable properties and from the decree against Lachmi Narain. In view of the conduct of the parties and the peculiar circumstances of the case, I would leave the parties to bear their costs throughout.

Baru Mal — Plaintiff — Appellant.

Rala Ram and others — Defendants — Respondents.

Second Appeal No. 198 of 1938, Decided on 6th June 1938, from decree of Senior Sub-Judge, Karnal, D/- 27th November 1937.

Injunction—Suit for—Joint owners—Certain site, joint property of parties used as lane leading to property of one of them — One party roofing over part of lane adjoining his property—Other party is ordinarily entitled to sue for injunction for removal of structure—He is not however so entitled to sue where he makes similar use of lane opposite to his own property so long as his own structure remains — He is only entitled to damages.

Where certain site is the joint property of two parties and is used as a lane leading to the property of one of them and the other party roofs over the part of the lane which adjoins his property by means of chattra, over which a room is built, the party to whose property the lane is needed as a means of access is ordinarily entitled to sue for injunction for the removal of the structure, even though the damage be only very slight or hypothetical. [P 779 C 2; P 780 C 1]

Where however the party suing for injunction has made an exactly similar use of the lane opposite his own property, he is not entitled to ask the other party to remove his structure, so long as his own structure remains, even though the former encroachment may be greater than the latter. All the same, a legal right having been infringed, the plaintiff is entitled to a decree for damages: A I R 1938 Lah 208 and A I R 1928 Mad 810, Rel. on. [P 780 C 1]

Judgment. — The suit relates to a site which has been found to be the joint property of the parties, and which is used as a lane leading to property of the plaintiff. The defendants have roofed over the part of the lane adjoining their own property by means of a chhatra, over which a room has been built. The plaintiff sues for an injunction to compel the removal of this structure. The claim for injunction has been dismissed by the Courts below on the ground that no undue hardship has been caused to the plaintiff. Precedents of cases of this sort are not easy to find; suits relating to the exclusive use of joint property by one of the parties are generally concerned with some structure on the ground. Possibly, it is rare occurrence that one of the joint owners should be in a position to erect a roof of this kind in this way since the opportunity can only occur when he occupies the property on the other side of the lane. A case on very similar facts occurred in Madras A I R 1928 Mad 810,¹ but was decided merely on the question of laches.

A case of this province relating to the erection of chhatra over joint property was decided in *A I R 1938 Lah 208*² in which it was held that the structure was made in assertion of an exclusive right to the lane, which was in itself an injury to the plaintiff. In a case of this kind it is not practicable for the plaintiff to sue for partition, since the lane is needed as a means of access to the adjoining properties. It is again hardly practicable for him to sue for joint possession of a structure which can only be reached through the house of another owner. The only remedies left are by way of injunction or damages. In the ordinary way, I do not see why one of the owners should not sue for injunction for the removal of a structure of this kind, even though the damage only be very slight or hypothetical, and on this point I do not think that the view taken by the lower Courts was correct. There is however an entirely different reason for refusing to grant an injunction in this case. The plaintiff has made an exactly similar use of the lane opposite his own property, and in these circumstances I do not think that he can ask the defendants to remove their structure, so long as his own structure remains, even though their own encroachment may be greater than his.

At the same time, there seems to be no doubt that a legal right has been infringed, and this was accepted in A I R 1928 Mad 810¹ in which the considerations against the plaintiff were even stronger. An injunction was refused in that case, but the plaintiff was granted a decree for damages, and I think that the same course should be adopted in the present case. Neither party wishes to proceed to the lower Court for the assessment of damages. For these reasons I accept the appeal and grant the plaintiff a decree for Rupees 100 as damages. The parties will bear their own costs throughout.

Second Appeal No. 906 of 1937, Decided on 3rd January 1938, from decree of Dist. Judge, Hoshiarpur, D/- 3rd April 1937.

Punjab Relief of Indebtedness Act (7 of 1934), S. 26—Competency of application can only be decided when it comes before Board—Competency or otherwise of application does not affect question of extension of time.

In order to decide whether an application is or is not competent, and whether it comes or does not come within the jurisdiction of the Debt Conciliation Board, as determined by the provisions of the Act, a proceeding before the Conciliation Board is necessary and the mere fact that the decision of the Conciliation Board is that the application is incompetent or otherwise, cannot affect the question of the extension of limitation under S. 26.

Judgment. — In this case the plaintiff sued for the recovery of Rs. 1700. The sole question arising in this appeal is whether the suit is barred by limitation or not. Both the Courts below have held that the suit is barred by limitation, though on totally different and, as far as I can understand, opposing grounds. The question however turns on the interpretation of S. 26, Punjab Relief of Indebtedness Act which lays down that the time spent in proceedings before a Conciliation Board . . . shall be excluded when counting the period of limitation for any suit.

The learned District Judge has held that as the persons against whom the plaintiff applied to the Debt Conciliation Board were not debtors at all but only legal representatives of the original debtor, one Hamir Chand, therefore the application was incompetent and there was no justification for it and therefore the plaintiff was not entitled to the extension provided under S. 26. It appears to me however that in order to decide whether an application is or is not competent, and whether it comes or does not come within the jurisdiction of the debt Conciliation Board, as determined by the provisions of the Act, a proceeding before the Conciliation Board is necessary and the mere fact that the decision of the Conciliation Board is that the application is incompetent or otherwise, cannot affect the question of the extension of limitation under Section 26. I would therefore hold that the plaintiff was entitled to the limitation provided by S. 26 of the Act and I would therefore accept the appeal and hold that the plaintiff's suit is within time. The appeal is therefore remanded under O. 41, R. 23, Civil P. C., to the learned District Judge to give a decision on the other points arising in the appeal. The stamp on this appeal will be refunded and costs of this appeal will be costs in the cause. I have informed the learned counsel for the respondent that if his client chooses, he may apply for a Letters Patent appeal as the point is entirely new.

First Appeal No. 273 of 1937, Decided on 21st April 1938, from decree of Sub-Judge, First Class, Dera Ghazi Khan, D/- 27th April 1937.

(a) Contract—Construction—Wagering contract—Speculation does not necessarily involve contract by wager—Common intention to wager must be proved—No proof of bargain, express or implied, that goods were not to be delivered—Contract is not wagering contract.

Speculation does not necessarily involve a contract by way of wager, and to constitute such a contract a common intention to wager is essential. Even if one party to a contract were a speculator who never intended to give delivery, and that fact was known to the other party, yet in the absence of any bargain or understanding, express or implied, that the goods were not to be delivered, that would not convert a contract, otherwise innocent, into a wager; nor would the mere fact that as to the greater part of the goods there was no delivery but an adjustment of claims, vitiate the transaction. [P 783 C 2]

Where therefore although the transactions between the parties were speculative in their nature, there is no evidence showing that the transactions were to be on differences only, or that there was no intention to take delivery, the contract relating to such transactions cannot be held to be a wagering contract: A I R 1917 P C 101; A I R 1928 P C 30 and A I R 1924 Nag 290, Rel. on.

(b) Hindu Law—Joint family—Debts—Joint family consisting of father and sons—Debts incurred by father of speculative nature—Joint family estate is liable for payment of debt.

Where speculative debts have been incurred by the father in a joint Hindu family and the other members of the family are his sons, the joint family estate is open to be taken in execution proceedings upon a decree for payment of those debts: A I R 1935 Lah 761; 106 I C 183; A I R 1926 Lah 41 and A I R 1931 P C 136, Rel. on.

(c) Contract—Consideration—Original contract between parties a wagering transaction—Forbearance of plaintiff to sue and declare defendant defaulter constitutes good consideration for fresh agreement—Plaintiff is entitled to recover.

The forbearance of a plaintiff to sue coupled with his forbearance to declare the defendant a defaulter constitutes good consideration for a fresh agreement, although the original contract had been in the nature of a wagering transaction and the plaintiff is entitled to recover on the fresh agreement. The defendant is estopped from setting up the defence that the transaction was wagering: (1908) 2 K B 696, Foll.

Addison J. — Between 1913 and 1918, the father of the plaintiff, Sadhu Lal, namely Bodh Raj, under the name of Het Ram-Bodh Raj, dealt with the Karachi commission agency firm, Aya Ram-Tola Ram, and in course of the business struck balances from time to time. A large sum became due to the Karachi firm which sued in Karachi the Firm Het Ram-Bodh Raj, Rs. 1,14,449.8-0 with costs and further interest being claimed. A compromise was entered into on 12th April 1923, a decree being passed against Het Ram-Bodh Raj and the defendant Bodh Raj personally for Rs. 1,04,000 with interest at 6 per cent. per annum from the date of the decree until payment. It was further agreed that if six instalments amounting in all to Rs. 96,000, were paid, the decree would be liquidated. It was stated that the plaintiff firm could recover the decretal amount from the property of Het Ram-Bodh Raj, charged under the compromise, or from the defendant Bodh Raj, personally, but that the brother of Bodh Raj, namely Dharu Lal, was not to be personally liable as he had been joined in the decree only as surety so that his share in the joint family property would become liable. Provision was further made for execution for the full amount if default was made in payment of the instalments. Default was made and the decree-holder firm took out execution in the Court of the District Judge, Dera Ghazi Khan, in the Punjab, the decree having been transferred there.

In execution of the decree at Dera Ghazi Khan, the decree-holder proceeded not to sell the property charged but to attach the property of Bodh Raj, who was made personally liable under the compromise decree. The present plaintiff Sadhu Lal, who was the son of Bodh Raj on 15th October 1926, objected to the attachment on the ground that the property was ancestral and that his half share was therefore not liable as the dealings between his father and the Karachi firm were badni and therefore illegal. These proceedings dragged on for a long time but at length on 27th April 1928 the parties compromised by fixing new instalments and the proceedings in execution were therefore consigned to the record room after partial satisfaction of the decree. The order of the District Judge was to the effect that the compromise had been finally verified in Court and was an accomplished fact. The objectors, that is, Sadhu Lal and certain others who are not before us, had withdrawn their objections in view of this compromise.

This second compromise was also acted upon to a certain extent, the instalments fixed for 1929 and 1930 thereunder being duly paid while that for 1931 was partially paid. Default having again been committed the decree-holder firm restarted execution in 1932. The decree-holder was then met with the objection on behalf of Bodh Raj and Dharu Lal, his brother, that a new agreement, superseding the old decree, had come into existence by reason of the compromise of 1928 and that the decree could no longer be executed. The District Judge held that the decree was still executable and an appeal to this Court was dismissed. The matter was taken to the Privy Council and that appeal was also dismissed: see 42 C W N 509.¹ The appeal was dismissed by the High Court on 24th June 1935 and the appeal to the Privy Council was dismissed in December 1937. In the meantime Sadhu Lal, son of Bodh Raj, had brought the present suit on 7th February 1936 without waiting for the result of the appeal to the Privy Council. His claim is that the transactions had been entered into by his father as wagering contracts and that therefore the son's share of the ancestral family property was not liable to be attached and sold in execution of such a decree. Before the suit was filed the plaintiff put in fresh objections to the attachment of the property, which were summarily dismissed by the executing Court on 21st February 1935. The objections were similar to those which had been put by him in 1926. The trial Court has decreed the plaintiff's claim on the ground that the transactions were badni and illegal. The decree-holder firm has appealed against this decision.

In certain of his transactions with the Karachi firm Bodh Raj had as his partner one Khushal Ram. Bodh Raj however had other transactions with the Karachi firm on his own account. On 17th July 1918 Bodh Raj sued Jhanwar Das, son of Khushal Ram, for rendition of accounts in connexion with the joint transactions that Bodh Raj and Khushal Ram had had with the Karachi decree-holder firm. In that suit Bodh Raj was examined as a witness and stated what the partnership was between him and Khushal Ram. He said that Khushal Ram remained at Karachi to conduct the business but that Bodh Raj himself used also to have separate dealings on his own account with the decree-holder firm. He stated that Khushal Ram had had the books in his possession, having copied them from the books of the decree-holder Karachi firm of Aya Ram-Tola Ram, but that he had destroyed them. Bodh Raj further stated that he himself had struck one balance in Tola Ram's books at Karachi for both sets of transactions, that is the joint transactions of himself and Khushal Ram and also the transactions which he had entered into on his own account. This was because the Karachi firm of Tola Ram only recognized him. In this statement which was recorded on 17th May 1919, he also said that delivery of goods was taken by Khushal Ram in a large number of cases. He particularly remembered that sugar, gram and wheat had been delivered but he could not state from memory the quantities. He had at first instituted a criminal complaint against Khushal Ram and his son Jhanwar Das and then sued the son of Khushal Ram in the Civil Courts, the father having died in the meantime.

Bodh Raj was also examined as a witness in the present case: see p. 40 of the paper book. He still admitted that Khushal Ram was his partner in certain forward contracts with the decree-holder and that he had obtained a decree for Rs. 8000 or so against Khushal Ram in connexion with the partnership between the two in dealings with the Karachi firm. He could not however remember whether he pleaded and stated in the suit against Khushal Ram that Aya Ram-Tola Ram were their commission agents. He did not remember even appearing as a witness in that suit, though it was instituted by himself. His statement already referred to was then read out to him but even then he stated that he could not recollect the details after it was read. He might have made the statement that Aya Ram-Tola Ram were commission agents and that Khushal Ram used to take delivery but he was not positive. To every question asked about that previous suit and about what he stated as a witness, he gave the same reply: "he could not remember". He admitted having been in Karachi himself about 1915 or 1916. This was because Atma Parkash of the Firm Aya Ram-Tola Ram, who was then only 25 or 30 years old, came to his home in Dera Ghazi Khan and asked him to go to Karachi and speculate there. Bodh Raj was himself then about 43 years old and he yielded to the young man because he told him that no delivery would be taken or given and that the business would be in differences only. Obviously Bodh Raj is lying and his statement in this matter must be rejected, contradicted as it is by his former statement in 1919 and by the fact that he allowed a compromise decree to be passed against him in 1923 at a time when there would have been no difficulty for the defendant firm to produce their books. Further his denial that he himself kept no accounts of these transactions is incredible. The trial Judge has made much of the fact that the decree-holder firm has not produced their books but the firm was dissolved in 1927, and a decree had been obtained and it may well have been the case that the books containing these very old transactions were no longer in existence. We consider that no adverse inference should be drawn against the decree-holder firm for their non-production in these circumstances.

The plaintiff examined certain witnesses to prove that it was part of the course of dealings between Bodh Raj and Aya Ram-Tola Ram that no delivery would be given or taken. In the first place it is easy to get witnesses to say this, it being now well established that, if trading takes place on that basis, the transactions are wagering. The first witness is Jhanwar Das against whom Bodh Raj obtained a decree for Rs. 8000 in connexion with similar transactions entered into by Bodh Raj and Khushal Ram jointly. He stated that while he was in Karachi no delivery was in fact given or taken. He had to admit however that Bodh Raj got a decree against his father's estate for contribution for the losses they incurred jointly. He only stayed in Karachi for a few days on two occasions. The second witness Brahmin Lal is a prohibit. He stated that when Atma Parkash came to Bodh Raj's town in Dera Ghazi Khan, he assured Bodh Raj that no delivery in fact would be necessary or made and that the dealings would be in differences. This witness admitted that he was a friend of Bodh Raj. The third witness Moti Ram is a near relative of the plaintiff and his evidence is obviously false. Bila Ram (P. W. 4) was a Munshi of Bodh Raj some 20 years before. He is also connected by marriage with the plaintiff. He too has stated that Atma Parkash said that no delivery was contemplated. Such evidence is merely contemptible. On the other hand Gowardhan Das was examined as D. W. 1. He was one of the partners of the Firm Aya Ram-Tola Ram. Another partner was examined as D. W. 2. This is all the evidence.

On that evidence we are not prepared to find that the transactions were to be on differences only. It was held in 42 Bom 373² that speculation does not necessarily involve a contract by way of wager, and to constitute such a contract a common intention to wager is essential. Even if one party to a contract were a speculator who never intended to give delivery, and that fact was known to the other party, yet, in the absence of any bargain or understanding, express or implied, that the goods were not to be delivered, that would not convert a contract, otherwise innocent, into a wager; nor would the mere fact that as to the greater part of the goods there was no delivery but an adjustment of claims, vitiate the transaction.

A similar decision was given in 51 Mad 96;³ see also 78 I C 966.⁴ It was also held in 16 Lah 1077⁵ that if speculative debts have been incurred by the father and the other members of the joint family are his sons, the joint family estate is open to be taken in execution proceedings upon a decree for payment of those debts, unless the debts are proved to have been incurred for immoral or illegal purposes. In 106 I C 183⁶ it was held that the manager of a joint Hindu family has power to incur debts for business in speculative transactions, as such debts cannot be said to be immoral and that the pious obligation of Hindu sons to pay their father's debts extends to commercial debts. In 6 Lah

493⁷ it was said at p. 498 that speculative transactions cannot be said to be immoral and that the sons were liable for such debts incurred by their father: see also 58 I A 173.⁸

The conduct of the parties, apart from the evidence being obviously false, is also in favour of the view that these were possibly speculative transactions but not contracts by way of wagering. The dealings continued for a long time and the losses, incurred over the five years or so they lasted, does not indicate very heavy transactions. Bodh Raj as a witness has undoubtedly stated that the transactions amounted to 70 or 75 lacs of rupees but he cannot be believed and there is nothing to corroborate his statement. The next step taken was for Bodh Raj himself to sue Jhanwar Das, the son of Khushal Ram, who had been a partner with him in some of the Karachi transactions with this firm. There it was stated (and the suit was decreed), that delivery was taken in a large number of cases. Bodh Raj himself was then sued by Aya Ram-Tola Ram in Karachi and instead of raising the defence that the transactions were wagering he submitted to a compromise decree in which very favourable instalments were allowed. When default was committed in payment of those instalments and his property was attached in the Dera Ghazi Khan District, his son, the present plaintiff Sadhu Lal, did prefer an objection to the attachment of his share of the property but there was then a compromise entered into in which obviously the son Sadhu Lal participated. Other instalments were then fixed, some of which were paid in due course. When default was again committed and execution taken out a second time, the defence was first raised that Bodh Raj was no longer liable under the decree by reason of the new agreement in 1928 and that his brother Dharu Lal was also no longer liable as a surety as the position had been altered to his detriment by the decree-holder. This question was fought up to the Privy Council and decided against the family. Then the present suit was brought by the son to get his share of the family property released and in this case Bodh Raj came forward to give evidence at total variance with what he had given in 1919 when he was recovering from the son of his partner Khushal Ram his share of some of the losses incurred. The witnesses are obvious liars. In the present case therefore the conduct of the parties and the surrounding circumstances are not in favour of Bodh Raj and the plaintiff. This being so, it is impossible to hold that the transactions were of a wagering character and on this ground the suit must fail.

It was held in (1908) 2 K B 696⁹ that the forbearance of a plaintiff to sue, coupled with his forbearance to declare the defendant a defaulter, constituted a good consideration for the fresh agreement though the original contract had been in the nature of a wagering transaction and that the plaintiff was therefore entitled to recover. It seems to us that what took place at the time of the compromise on 27th April 1928, when fresh instalments were fixed and the plaintiff withdrew his objections to the attachment on this account, amounted to a fresh agreement which was for the benefit of the plaintiff and his father and that they are now estopped from setting up the defence that the transactions were wagering. For the reasons given we accept this appeal and dismiss the suit with costs throughout.

D. N. Aggarwal — for Respondent.

Judgment.—The sole point in this case is whether or not Lahauri Ram appellant is a statutory agriculturist. He is a Brahmin who belongs to village Gondpur, Tahsil Garhshankar in the Hoshiarpur District. Mr. Prakash Chandra Jain urges that as Brahmins have been notified as statutory agriculturists in the Una Tahsil, and as originally Lahauri Ram's people came from the Una Tahsil, therefore, he should be deemed to be covered by the notification which declares Brahmins as agriculturists in the Una Tahsil of the Hoshiarpur District. I am totally unable to see any force in this argument. The groups in the Land Alienation Act are territorial and a person who is a notified agriculturist in one district need not be an agriculturist for the purposes of the Land Alienation Act in another district. Similarly a person belonging to a particular tribe or caste may be an agriculturist in a particular Tahsil for the purposes of acquiring property in that Tahsil and enjoying the other benefits of the Act in that Tahsil. If Mr. Prakash Chandra's argument were to be accepted, the notification would not be confined in its operation to the Una Tahsil, to which its language confines it. I hold, therefore, that Lahauri Ram is not a statutory agriculturist within the meaning of the Land Alienation Act and with this finding this appeal is dismissed with costs.

Ghulam Mohy-ud-Din — for Appellants.

Barkat Ali and Hassan Jafri — for Respondents (Defendants).

Din Mohammad J. — The facts giving rise to this appeal are these: On 23rd August 1933, one Mt. Biman, widow of Sikandar Khan, made a gift of the entire holding of which she was in possession along with a house and one third share of a taur in favour of her two daughters Mt. Niamat Bibi and Mt. Hassan Bibi. Thereupon, on 31st May 1934, the four plaintiffs instituted a suit for a declaration that the gift was void. Mt. Biman died in the meantime and her name was struck off the record. The daughters contended that the land and the taur were the self-acquired property of their father and that the house had been acquired by their mother and that consequently the mother had full authority to gift the property in suit to them by way of acceleration of succession. They further denied that the plaintiffs were the collaterals of their father Sikandar Khan. They also stated that Mt. Biman had previously executed a registered will in their favour on 1st February 1912, and inasmuch as the plaintiffs had not taken any steps to secure the cancellation of that will they were barred by their conduct from contesting the gift. On behalf of the plaintiffs reliance was placed on para. 45 of Humphrey's Customary Law of Hoshiarpur District, which says that among Rajputs of Tahsil Garhshanker (the tribe to which the parties belong) a daughter cannot succeed in the presence of heirs and collaterals of any degree. No instances were however produced. The defendants on the other hand brought on the record certain previous instances where daughters had been allowed to succeed to the property of their father.

The Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that inasmuch as the entry in the Customary law was opposed to general custom and no instances had been brought on the record in support of the alleged custom, the plaintiffs, who had been proved to be the collaterals of Sikander Khan in the fifth degree, could not oust the daughters. He accordingly dismissed the suit. On appeal, the District Judge while holding that the plaintiffs were collaterals in the third degree upheld the decision of the Court below mainly on the ground that Question 45 referred to ancestral property only and that inasmuch as the property in suit was self-acquired, the daughters were entitled to succeed in preference to the collaterals. The collaterals have appealed. It would appear that the answer to question 45 taken at its face value favours the collaterals and that even standing by itself it would create a strong presumption in their favour in view of the following observations made by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 45 P R 1917¹:

The Riway-i-am was produced and exhibited as evidence at the very outset of the case; it is a public record prepared by a public officer in discharge of his duties and under Government rules it is clearly admissible in evidence to prove the facts therein entered subject to rebuttal. In their Lordships' opinion the statements contained in the Riway-i-am form a strong piece of evidence in support of the custom which it lay upon the plaintiffs to rebut. . . .

The contention however raised on behalf of the daughters is, as stated above, that the answer to Question 45 relates to ancestral property only and that even if it be taken to refer to non-ancestral property, the presumption created thereby in favour of the collateral stands amply rebutted by the production of the various instances where daughters were preferred to collaterals in the matter of succession to the self-acquired property of their father. In 6 Lah 332² a case which related to Arains of the Hoshiarpur District, a Division Bench of this Court composed of Harrison and Campbell JJ., discussed the probative value that could be attached to the answer to Question 45, and after taking into consideration the instances appended to the answer, and after referring to 5 Lah 473,³ where Humphreys' Customary Law had been held not to be a reliable piece of evidence, did not choose to follow the Customary law and upheld the decision of the Court below dismissing the suit of the brothers of the last male owner impeaching the gift by the last owner's widow to her two daughters and to a son of a deceased daughter. In A I R 1933 Lah 107,⁴ another Division Bench of this Court of which Harrison J. was a member, after explaining that the opinion expressed in 6 Lah 332² was to some extent obiter, recorded their conclusion in the following words:

We find it established that the custom of inheritance in the Hoshiarpur District is peculiar in that daughters up to a point are excluded both from ancestral and self-acquired property by near collaterals, but as a sort of return they come into their own again by excluding the more distant collaterals and in most cases those beyond the third degree.

In A I R 1936 Lah 157⁵ Bhide and Currie JJ. once more discussed the value to be attached to the answer to Question 45 so far as it affected the self-acquired property and after animadverting upon 5 Lah 473,³ 6 Lah 332² and A I R 1933 Lah 107⁴ remarked:

The questions in reply to which the tribesmen made a distinction between ancestral and self-acquired property though not specifically asked, appear to be very few. There is therefore justification for the appellants' counsel's contention that his clients could never have expected that the answer to Question 45 in the Customary law would be construed to cover non-ancestral property.

This being the state of the judicial decisions on the matter at issue and seeing that cases of custom must be decided mainly on the evidence produced in each case, we are inclined to hold that whatever the presumption created by the answer to Question 45 in favour of the collaterals, it stands rebutted by the instances relied upon by the respondents. Ex. D/A relates to Rajputs of Garhshanker Tahsil and it appears that the widow of one Ghulam Jilani Khan was successful in transferring the land inherited by her from her deceased husband in favour of her two daughters in equal shares. on appeal which relates to Rajputs of Dasuya and in that case too it was held that collaterals did not exclude daughters in the matter of succession to the non-ancestral property of their father. In Ex. D/C which is a judgment of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Third Class, Hoshiarpur, relating to Rajputs of Garhshanker, daughters appear to have excluded collaterals of the fourth degree. In Ex. D/E, which is a copy of the order of the District Judge of Hoshiarpur on appeal relating to Rajputs of Hoshiarpur Tahsil, it was not contested that the daughters succeed to the non-ancestral property of their father in preference to his collaterals. In Ex. D/F, which again is a copy of the order of the District Judge, Hoshiarpur, on appeal, the order of the Subordinate Judge referred to above was upheld.

In face of this documentary evidence, the mere entry in the Riwaj-i-am of Hoshiarpur relied upon by the appellants would not be of much use to them. The Riwaj-i-am as explained in 45 P R 1917¹ creates at best a rebuttable presumption only and whether a certain presumption of law is rebutted by the production of evidence by the parties or not is a question of fact, as remarked by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 11 Lah 199,⁶ and can therefore be determined finally by the District Judge. On these grounds we decline to interfere with the order of the District Judge and dismiss this appeal with costs.

Criminal Appeal No. 241 of 1938, Decided on 16th June 1938, from order of the Sessions Judge, Gujranwala, D/- 14th February 1938.

(a) Criminal Trial—Evidence—Admissibility—Entry made in daily diary of thana before recording of first information is inadmissible in evidence for any purpose being part of proceedings of police.

An entry caused to be made by a Sub-Inspector, before the recording of the first information report, in the daily diary of the thana, mentioning the names of some of the accused alleged to have been given to him by one of the persons alleged to have been assaulted and injured, is a part of the proceedings of the police and is therefore inadmissible in evidence for any purpose in Court.

(b) Penal Code (1860), Ss. 302, 307, 149—Prosecution evidence discussed—Evidence held to show sufficient amount of doubt in the case—Accused held entitled to benefit of doubt.

Where the deceased D along with his companions S and L were taking their buffaloes from one dera to another, the party of the accused, armed with hatchets and dangs set upon them, inflicting a number of injuries on D and killing him and a number of simple injuries on S; L fled away. The evidence of doctors who examined the body of the deceased and the person of S indicated that all the injuries received by the two victims of the assault were contusions, that the injuries in the case of the deceased were serious, causing fracture of the skull but all the 19 injuries in the case of S were simple scratches or contusions, none of them having been caused by a sharp weapon. In the first information report made by D's father the names of 8 culprits were mentioned. One of them absconded and the rest were tried for offences under Ss. 302, 307 and 149. S in his statement to the police taken subsequently, had implicated three persons, who had not been so far implicated. These were discharged by the committing Magistrate. The first thing noticeable in the case was that every able-bodied member of the family of the accused had been implicated at one stage or other by the witnesses for the prosecution. In the Court, the witnesses omitted to mention the names of three persons who were discharged by the committing Magistrate at the request of the police. It appeared that S who was the chief prosecution witness had deliberately given the names of the ten culprits in his early statement, making addition of three to the names given in the first information report. Though the members of the party were alleged to be armed with hatchets and spears, there was no incised or penetrating wound on the bodies of the persons alleged to have been assaulted, though nearly 40 injuries were inflicted on them. The occurrence was alleged to have taken place early in the morning in open field at a time when a number of persons would be doing husbandry work there. It was remarkable that the witnesses who appeared to support the prosecution case were either interested in the complainants and against accused or were shown to have deliberately exaggerated their story :

Held that there was sufficient amount of doubt in the case and the accused were entitled to the benefit of doubt.

Mukand Lal Puri — for Appellants.

R. C. Soni for Advocate-General —

for the Crown.

Ram Lall J. — Ahman son of Khalas, Shahu son of Fazal, Mohammad Din and Raja sons of Khushi have been convicted by the learned Sessions Judge of Gujranwala (at Gujrat) on charges under Ss. 302 and 307, read with S. 149, I. P. C., and sentenced to transportation for life on the murder charge and two years' rigorous imprisonment each on the attempted murder charge. They have appealed through Mr. Mukand Lal Puri, and Mr. R. C. Soni has appeared in support of the conviction. Mr. Asadullah Khan has put in a petition under S. 439 asking for enhancement of the sentences to death. Originally ten persons were cited as accused before the committing Magistrate, who discharged three of them, that is Ali and Roshan sons of Mauju, and Salehon son of Khalas. Seven persons were committed to the Court of the Sessions and one is said to be absconding still. Of these seven, the learned Judge convicted the four appellants and acquitted three. These three are Mirza son of Khushi, Bahadur son of Fazal and Muradi son of Dina. The absconder is one Ajit Singh who is said to be intimately connected with the deceased inasmuch as they have been involved in criminal cases together before.

The case for the prosecution is that on 5th August 1937, in the morning Shera deceased, Sai and Lala, P. Ws. were taking their buffaloes, from one of their deras to another. On the way, they had to pass the dera of the accused and when they had passed it by a distance of about three kilas, the whole party of the accused armed with hatchets and dangs and Ajit Singh, with a dang to which a chhuri was attached, set upon them. They inflicted a number of injuries on Shera and killed him. Sai, who is a cousin of the deceased and Lala, a little boy of eight or nine, who is a servant of Sai and whose father is a tenant of Roshan, uncle of the deceased, fled, but Sai was overtaken and a number of simple injuries were inflicted on his person. The statements of two doctors who examined the body of the deceased and the person of Sai respectively indicate that all the injuries received by the two victims of this assault were contusions, that the injuries in the case of Shera deceased were serious, causing fracture of the skull and of the ribs, but all the 19 injuries in the case of Sai were simple scratches or contusions, none of them having been caused with a sharp-edged weapon. It is stated that on a hue and cry, several witnesses turned up and on seeing them the assailants fled away. A message was sent to Salabat, the father of Shera deceased, who lodged the first information report at thana Phalia, a distance of 5 miles from the spot. at 11.30 A. M. The Sub-Inspector who is apparently young and inexperienced heard the story of Salabat, gave directions to the moharrir head constable to record a formal first information report and himself immediately left for the scene of occurrence. In the first information report made by Salabat on information received by him from Sai and other witnesses, the names of eight culprits were mentioned, that is, Ajit Singh absconder and the seven persons who were eventually tried by the learned Sessions Judge. Meanwhile, the Sub-Inspector commenced his investigation at the spot and statements of a number of prosecution witnesses were recorded on that and the following day. It appears that Sai in his statement to the police recorded on 5th August 1937, implicated three persons who had not been so far implicated in the first information report. These are Salehon, Roshan and Ali, who were discharged by the committing Magistrate.

Rehman, P. W. 8, Lala P. W. 11, Khushi, P. W. 12 and Maulu, P. W. 15 have appeared so far as the attack by eight culprits on Shera deceased is concerned and Malku, P. W. 9 and Sahibzada, P. W. 14 so far as the pursuit and attack on Sai is concerned. The first thing that is immediately noticeable in this case is that every able-bodied member of the family of the accused has been implicated at one stage or other by the witnesses for the prosecution. It appears from the statement of Salabat, the father of the deceased, that apparently the only male member of the family that was left out was a minor son of Dina. In Court the witnesses have omitted to mention the names of Ali, Roshan and Salehon, who were discharged by the committing Magistrate at the request of the police. Sai has denied that he gave the names of these three witnesses to the police as having taken part in this occurrence and Mr. Soni, who has appeared on behalf of the Crown, has actually suggested that the Sub-Inspector in order to spoil the case for the Crown deliberately introduced the names of these three persons though they were not mentioned by the witness whose statement he purported to record. Beyond the fact that the Sub-Inspector left for the scene of occurrence even before the first information report was recorded, no good reason has been suggested to us why the Sub-Inspector should falsely introduce these names. The statement of Sai was recorded by him on 5th August and has been proved by the defence as Ex. D/B. If the Sub-Inspector wished to spoil the case for the prosecution he had better ways of doing so than by implicating three members of the family of the accused on his own initiative. It is significant that these persons were actually discharged by the committing Magistrate and we are not prepared to hold that the Sub-Inspector acted in the manner and for the reason suggested by Mr. Soni.

It is then argued that, when the Sub-Inspector left the thana before the first information report was recorded, he caused an entry to be made in the daily diary of the thana and in this mentioned the names of six of the culprits alleged to have been given to him by Sai. It seems highly doubtful whether this statement is admissible at all. Mr. Puri argued that this should be treated as a first information report in the case but we are unable to agree with this contention. To us it appears to be a part of the proceedings of the police and therefore inadmissible as evidence for any purpose in Court. In any case it appears to us that if the Sub-Inspector was willing to deliberately exclude some of the culprits whose names had been mentioned, he would have equally done so in the statements of the alleged prosecution witnesses which he recorded on the 5th. The action of the Sub-Inspector in leaving the thana immediately appears to us to be rather due to the enthusiasm of a young and inexperienced officer and not to any mala fides on his part. It comes then to this that Sai, who is the chief prosecution witness, has deliberately given the names of ten culprits in his early statement, making an addition of three to the names given in the first information report, and thereby including every adult member of the family of the accused. We are not prepared to accept his explanation that this was done by the Sub-Inspector suo motu, and must hold therefore that the statement of the witness is unreliable to this extent.

The next important consideration, which affects the whole case, is that though the members of the party of the accused were said to be armed with hatchets and spears, there is no incised or penetrating wound either on the person of Shera or Sai, though nearly 40 injuries were inflicted on the two victims of this assault. It is doubtful whether, as suggested by Mr. Soni, the culprits deliberately used the blunt sides of their axes and spears. There are cases in which the head and other vital parts are carefully avoided in order to be able to urge eventually that the offence committed is not one of murder, but in this case the medical evidence discloses that serious injuries on vital parts, namely the head and the chest, were delivered and it is difficult to see therefore why the business ends of axes and spears should deliberately not have been used.

The next important consideration, which touches the whole case, is that the occurrence took place early in the morning in the open fields at a time when a number of villagers would be doing husbandry work there. The assault must have taken considerable time, having regard to the number of injuries and the pursuit of Sai. It is peculiar that in these circumstances witnesses who appeared in support of the case for the prosecution are either all interested in the complainants and against the accused, or have been shown to have deliberately exaggerated their story. (The judgment then discussed the evidence and proceeded.) It seems obvious that an incident of the nature put forward by the prosecution did take place. But in view of the partisan character of the evidence, in view of the doubt regarding the very presence of some of the prosecution witnesses at the spot, in view of the fact that the witnesses implicated 11 men originally, of whom three were dropped by the committing Magistrate, and in view of the fact that though they say that cutting and penetrating weapons were carried no such injury is found on the complainants, we consider we cannot say with any degree of reasonable certainty that the four appellants before us actually took part in the occurrence which resulted in the death of Shera and injuries on Sai. In our opinion there is not very much to distinguish between the case of the present appellants and that of those whom the learned Sessions Judge acquitted.

In our opinion there is sufficient amount of doubt in the case and giving the benefit of that doubt to the appellants, we accept their appeals, set aside the convictions and order their immediate release.

Second Appeal No. 367 of 1938, Decided on 8th July 1938, from decree of Senior Sub-Judge, Rohtak, D/- 23rd December 1937.

Benami — Suit by benamidar — Principle where applies stated — Benami transaction of mortgage offending against provisions of Land Alienation Act—Suit by benamidar for possession is not maintainable.

The principle that benamidar can maintain a suit against all persons except the beneficiaries and that a Civil Court has no power to decline to enforce a transaction on the ground that it was really intended to benefit a person other than the plaintiff, applies only to those cases where the benami transaction does not contravene the provisions of any law: A I R 1934 Lah 909, Expl.; A I R 1918 P C 140, Rel. on. [P 790 C 2]

One L orally transferred to J mortgage rights in certain land and further mortgaged some more land for a certain sum. This transaction was recorded in a mutation which was regularly attested. But J was a fictitious mortgagee on behalf of one P who was the real beneficiary under the transaction and had taken a mortgage in lieu of the debt owed by L to him. P was a non-agriculturist. Possession had not passed to J and no payment of land revenue had been made by J:

Judgment. — On 30th December 1933, Lala orally transferred mortgage rights in 1 bigha 18 biswas of land and further mortgaged 1 bigha 3 biswas of land for Rs. 650. This transaction was recorded in a mutation which was regularly attested. On 17th March 1936, the Assistant Collector made an order redeeming the land on a representation made by Lala that Jage Ram was a fictitious mortgagee on behalf of one Pokhar Mahajan who was the real beneficiary under the transaction referred to above and had taken a mortgage in lieu of the debt owed by Lala to him. On 12th May 1936, the suit out of which this appeal has arisen was instituted by Jage Ram for possession of the land referred to above. The suit was resisted by Lala, and the trial Judge, finding that the transaction stated above was without consideration, that no possession had passed, that no payment of land revenue had been made by the plaintiff and that the transaction offended against the provisions of the Land Alienation Act, dismissed the suit. On appeal, the Senior Subordinate Judge, referring to A I R 1934 Lah 909,¹ held that even if Jage Ram was a benamidar he was entitled to sue and, on the authority of 53 P R 1916,² further observed that it did not matter whether consideration had been paid or not. The appeal was consequently accepted and the suit decreed in terms of the relief prayed for. Hence this appeal.

After hearing counsel on both sides, I have no hesitation in holding that the judgment of the Senior Subordinate Judge cannot be maintained. It is true that in *A I R 1934 Lah 909*¹ Hilton J. held that a benamidar can maintain a suit against all persons except the beneficiaries and a Civil Court has no power to decline to enforce a transaction on the ground that it was really intended to benefit a person other than the plaintiff, but, with all respect, I consider that his conclusion, so far as the facts of the case before him were concerned, was obviously wrong. In support of his conclusion he has referred to A I R 1918 P C 140,³ but his attention does not appear to have been drawn to the fact that the principle laid down in the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council applied only to those cases where a benami transaction did not contravene the provisions of any law. Here in this case, as in the case before him, the transaction offended clearly against the provisions of the Land Alienation Act in so far as it effected a sale as well as a mortgage for an indefinite period, neither of which is permissible under that Act if once it is found that the real transferee is a non-agriculturist. The suit should have failed on this ground alone; but even on the question of consideration he has not a leg to stand on.

In my view the mortgagee in this case is on the horns of a dilemma. If he contends that he is the real mortgagee and that the transaction has nothing to do with Pokhar Mahajan, he fails on the ground that as no consideration has passed, the transaction is a nullity: see A I R 1924 Lah 381,⁴ *23 I C 805*⁵ and 35 I C 455.⁶ If, on the other hand, he admits that he is merely a benami-dar for Pokhar Mahajan, he fails because of the Land Alienation Act. Counsel for the respondent has referred to 37 I C 193⁷ and 53 P R 1916,² but neither of these cases is in point. Further, both these judgments have been considered and distinguished in A I R 1930 Lah 976⁸ where Tek Chand J. held that a person, an ostensible mortgage in whose favour is wholly without consideration, cannot sue for possession as against another person having an interest in property as purchaser, even though it is under unregistered sale deeds. It may further be remarked that the Senior Subordinate Judge was clearly in error when he observed that the mortgagor could sue for the mortgage money: see 17 Lah 270.⁹ On the grounds stated above I allow this appeal, set aside the judgment of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the trial Court. In the circumstances of the case however I leave the parties to bear their own costs before me.

Ujagar Singh Hakam Singh and another — Accused — Respondents.

Criminal Appeal No. 184 of 1938, Decided on 26th May 1938, from order of the Addl. Sess. Judge, Lyallpur, D/- 23rd November 1937.

Criminal Trial — Murder — Accused held to have acted in right of private defence and not to have exceeded the right.

Where the deceased persons and their companions come armed with barchis and dangs and drunk and feeling that they have a grievance against the accused, they attack them causing an injury with a sharp edged weapon to one of them, the accused can be said to have reasonable apprehension that grievous hurt with deadly weapons would be caused to them so as to give them the right of private defence. So also where it cannot be said that the reasonable apprehension of danger to the persons of the accused's party had ceased before injuries attributed to the accused were inflicted, it cannot be said that the right of private defence has been exceeded. [P 792 C 1]

Harnam Singh — for Respondents.

Tek Chand J. — Five persons, Ujagar Singh, Saudagar Singh, Fauja Singh, Kirpal Singh and Kesar Singh, were tried before the Additional Sessions Judge, Lyallpur, under Ss. 302/149, I. P. C., for having murdered Mangal Singh and Sadhu Singh. The learned Judge, agreeing with the unanimous verdict of the assessors, held the charge unproved and acquitted all the five accused persons. The Crown has appealed under S. 417, Criminal P. C., against the acquittal of two of the accused persons only, namely Ujagar Singh and Saudagar Singh. We have heard the Assistant to the Advocate-General in support of the appeal and Sardar Harnam Singh for the two respondents. The learned Additional Sessions Judge rejected the evidence for the prosecution as "useless" and held that the motive alleged by them was "not believable". He found, on the other hand, that the deceased's party felt themselves aggrieved at the respondents having taken more than their fixed share of water, and that they came drunk and armed with deadly weapons and attacked the respondents and their companions, when they were quietly sitting under the mulberry trees in their land. On these findings, he came to the conclusion that the deceased's party were the aggressors and that the accused persons acting in the exercise of the right of private defence inflicted injuries on Mangal Singh and Sadhu Singh which resulted in their death. He held therefore that their case was covered by S. 100, I. P. C. Accordingly he acquitted them. On appeal before us counsel for the Crown has not attempted to support the case for the prosecution as disclosed by the evidence produced by them at the trial. He contended that on the proved facts and circumstances of the case the accused persons had no right of private defence and that in any case they had exceeded that right. After hearing the learned counsel at length and examining the record, we see no reason to differ from the conclusions of the learned trial Judge.

We find it proved that the deceased persons and their companion, P. W. Pal Singh, came armed with barchis and dangs, that they were drunk, that they felt that they had a grievance against the accused, and they actually attacked them, causing an injury with a sharp-edged weapon to Sadhu Singh (D. W. 1), who was with the respondents at the time. The respondents thus had a reasonable apprehension that grievous hurt with deadly weapons would be caused to them and they clearly acted in the right of private defence. It is contended however that this right was exceeded. In support of this contention counsel referred us to the injuries which were found on the persons of Mangal Singh and Sadhu Singh, deceased, and Pal Singh (P. W. 16). An examination of these injuries however shows that though their number, as given by the medical witness, is large, in reality they were caused by a small number of blows. The medical witness himself admitted that in the case of Sadhu Singh, five of these injuries were superficial abrasions, which were probably caused while Sadhu Singh was falling down and that injuries Nos. (2) to (9) appeared to have been caused by Sadhu Singh 'grasping the assailant's weapon when it was pushed or drawn out'. This leaves us really with two injuries, caused by effective blows, viz. Nos. (1) and (10), on the person of Sadhu Singh. Similarly two effective blows appear to have been given to Mangal Singh. The whole incident according to the evidence of Jawand Singh (P. W. 15) lasted for about a minute only. In these circumstances it cannot be said that the reasonable apprehension of danger to the persons of the accused's party had ceased before these injuries were inflicted by them on Mangal Singh or Sadhu Singh. We agree with the learned Additional Sessions Judge in holding that the right of self-defence was not exceeded. We maintain the order acquitting the respondents and dismiss the appeal.

Second Appeal No. 349 of 1937, Decided on 7th July 1938, from decree of District Judge, Karnal, D/- 27th October 1936.

(a) Custom (Punjab) — Succession—Rajputs of Karnal District — Daughters succeed to self-acquired property in preference to collaterals.

Among Rajputs of District Karnal, daughters succeed in preference to the collaterals of their respective fathers to the self-acquired property left by them. [P 793 C 1]

(b) Custom (Punjab) — Proof — Instances of judicial decisions.

Apart from the fact that instances of other districts on questions of custom are not of much avail, judicial decisions are also not of much assistance as they proceed on their own facts and are based on the amount of evidence led in each case. [P 793 C 1]

Khwaja Feroze-ud-Din—for Appellants.

Shamair Chand — for Respondents
(Plaintiffs).

Judgment. — The suit out of which this appeal has arisen was instituted by Mt. Allah Di against the collaterals of her father, Lakha, for a declaration that she was entitled to succeed to the self-acquired property of her father in preference to his collaterals who were related to him in the seventh degree. Her suit was dismissed on 9th January 1934, but, on appeal, the Additional District Judge set aside the judgment of the Court below on the ground that the legal representatives of certain defendants who had died during the pendency of the suit had not been properly brought on the record and directed the trial Court to re-hear the case. The suit was again dismissed on 21st June 1935 and from that order an appeal was preferred to the District Judge once more. He came to the conclusion that, in the first instance, the riwaj-i-am was not very clear so far as its applicability to the non-ancestral property was concerned and secondly, that the presumption that it gave rise to was amply rebutted by the instances produced on behalf of the plaintiff. He, however, on the application of the defendants granted them a certificate under S. 41 (3), Punjab Courts Act.

Counsel for the appellants has urged that from time immemorial the custom among the Rajputs of the District of Karnal has been uniform and that daughters have always been excluded from inheritance irrespective of the nature of the property. He mainly places his reliance on the mass of oral evidence produced by the appellants and contends that the riwaj-i-am as supported by that evidence should prevail in this case. Counsel for the respondents, who are now on the record as the legal representatives of Mt. Allah Di, on the other hand urges that so far as the old riwaj-i-am is concerned, it applied to ancestral property alone, and inasmuch as it did not contemplate non-ancestral property, the questions and answers in that riwaj-i-am cannot serve as a valuable guide in the decision of this case. He further stresses the fact that it was only in 1910, when the distinction between acquired and ancestral property was for the first time introduced in the riwaj-i-am, that the persons responsible for stating the riwaj made the old riwaj applicable to the non-ancestral property and that, on this ground, no value should be attached to the statement of custom in the latest riwaj-i-am, inasmuch as it is not so ancient as a binding riwaj should be. In addition to this, he relies on the three judicial instances produced on behalf of the respondents, which clearly show that the daughters in those cases did succeed in preference to the collaterals of their respective fathers to the self-acquired property left by them. In view of the fact, therefore, that the sheet-anchor of the appellants is a bare statement in the latest riwaj-i-am, unsupported by instances, and on the other side there is a clear proof of the fact that on three occasions at least the riwaj-i-am, as stated in the Manual of 1910, was not followed, it cannot be reasonably urged that the District Judge has in this case come to such an erroneous conclusion as to justify my interference. Counsel for the appellants admits that there is no authority of this Court dealing with the matter but he seeks support from certain cases relating to the neighbouring Districts of Gurgaon and Hissar. In my view, however, apart from the fact that instances of other districts will not be of much avail, judicial decisions on questions of custom are not of much assistance as they proceed on their own facts and are based on the amount of evidence led in each case. I, accordingly, maintain the decision of the District Judge and dismiss this appeal. In view of the fact, however, that the District Judge had granted a certificate to the appellants under S. 41 (3), Punjab Courts Act, I leave the parties to bear their own costs before me.

Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 561-A — Application for expunging remarks by Magistrate—Remarks wholly unsupported by evidence on record even as legitimate inferences and wholly unjustified and likely to affect future of applicant—They should be directed to be expunged.

A Magistrate is, no doubt, entitled to draw legitimate inferences from the evidence on the record but where the remarks of the Magistrate, for expunging which an application under S. 561-A is presented, are wholly unsupported by the evidence on record even as legitimate inference and are wholly unjustified and reflect on the character of the applicant and are likely to affect his future career, it is only fair that they should be directed to be expunged. Order. — Criminal Revision No. 617 and Criminal Miscellaneous No. 130 of 1938 are connected and can be disposed of together. The respondents Jai Gopal (aged 25), Jagdish Singh (aged 20.21), Satyapal (aged 20) were prosecuted for offences under Ss. 329, 327 and 347, I. P. C., and Jagdish (aged 15) for abetting the offences. Jai Gopal was sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for two years, while others were only sentenced to imprisonment till the rising of the Court chiefly in view of their ages. On appeal, the learned Sessions Judge reduced the sentence of Jai Gopal also to a fine of Rs. 50. The petitioner Lachhman Das, who was the victim of the alleged offences, has filed a petition for enhancement of the sentences (Criminal Revision No. 617 of 1938) of the convicts on the ground that the sentences were grossly inadequate and have resulted in failure of justice and has also prayed under S. 561-A for the expunging of certain remarks in the judgment of the trial Court, which reflect on his character and which according to him are not supported by any evidence on the record.

The case for the prosecution was that Lachhman Das who is a teacher in the Arya High School at Hafizabad had admonished a boy named Lachhmi Narain (aged about 14) who was in his class and who is a brother of the respondent Jagdish, not to keep the company of vagabonds. The reference was taken to be to the other three respondents who are said to have taken great offence and decided to teach Lachhman Das a lesson. Accordingly Jagdish decoyed Lachhman Das to his house on the pretext that his mother wanted to see him, and when he went there, he was given a sound thrashing by the other three respondents. The defence version was that on the night of the occurrence, the four respondents returned to the house of Jagdish at about 9.15 P. M. after playing volley ball. They heard a cry from inside and on entering found the petitioner Lachhman Das with Lachhmi Narain, who complained that the former was trying to commit an unnatural offence on him by force. The respondents were enraged and gave Lachhman Das a few slaps and threatened to report the matter to the police. Lachhman Das then tendered an apology and was let off. The respondents however denied that Exhibit P/B was the apology, which according to the prosecution, Lachhman Das had been forced to write. Both the Courts below have held the prosecution story to be proved in substance and rejected the defence version. The learned counsel for the petitioner contended that in view of the serious nature of the offences, the sentences passed on the respondents are wholly inadequate. (The judgment then discussed the evidence and proceeded.) This petition for enhancement was filed more than three months after the judgment of the Sessions Judge was pronounced. No petition for enhancement has been filed on behalf of the Crown and in view of all the circumstances I do not think this is a fit case for enhancement of sentences at this stage. As regards the application under Sec. 561-A the petitioner has prayed for the following passage in the judgment of the trial Court being expunged:

At the same time, I think, Lachhman Das, teacher, has not enjoyed and does not enjoy an enviable reputation, and reading between the lines one can feel his partiality for the boy Lachhmi Narain. It seems this boy had somehow or other begun resenting this affection of the teacher who had then begun to treat him badly in the class. The boy complained of this treatment to his other associates and the present crisis seems to have developed.

It was urged that there is no evidence whatever on the record to support the above remarks which reflect on the character of Lachhman Das and would prejudice his future career. The learned counsel for the Crown drew my attention merely to the fact that the Sessions Judge had made somewhat similar remarks and also urged that the Magistrate was within his rights in drawing inferences from facts, although there was no direct evidence to support the remarks of the learned Magistrate. The only fact to which reference was made in this connexion was that some boys used to go to Lachhman Das's house at night for tuition and that this was against the rules of the school. The circular containing the rules has not been produced. But even if some boys were going to Lachhman Das at night for tuition, this would not necessarily show that he had immoral relations with them. It is to be noted in this connexion that Lachhman Das is a married man and has children. My attention was not drawn to any evidence to support the remark of the learned Magistrate that "Lachhman Das did not or does not possess any enviable reputation." Nor was any evidence on the record pointed out showing that Lachhman Das had "partiality for Lachhmi Narain" and that the boy had begun to resent it. It is noteworthy in this connexion that the boy Lachhmi Narain was not even produced as a witness in this case. The Sessions Judge's remarks on this point are somewhat confused, but I do not think he meant to give any finding that Lachhman Das was a man of a disreputable character.

Although a Magistrate may be entitled to draw legitimate inferences, the learned counsel for the Crown was unable to invite my attention to any evidence on the record, which would support the above remarks even as legitimate inferences. The case for the prosecution had succeeded, while the defence set up had failed. The above remarks being unsupported by any evidence on the record, were in my opinion wholly unjustified and as they reflect on the character of Lachhman Das and may affect his future it is only fair that they should be expunged. I accordingly direct them to be expunged.

Judgment.—It appears from the record that the application for mutation was made on 6th February 1934 and the presumption is that the applicant had made the gift when he applied for the transfer being noted in the Revenue records. The question of possession is not material in this case as the donee is a minor aged about six and is living with the donor. As regards S. 5, Lim. Act, it was conceded in the Court below that it does not apply and point has not been raised in the grounds of appeal. I see no good ground to interfere and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Second Appeal No. 828 of 1937, Decided on 1st February 1938, from decree of the Senior Sub.Judge, Gurdaspur, D/- 19th March 1937.

Evidence Act (1872), S. 13—Document purporting to be mortgage deed executed by predecessor-in-interest of plaintiff in favour of third party and documents in which plaintiff has asserted his right to deal with the property are admissible in evidence under S. 13—Such evidence is however of little value.

A document purporting to be a mortgage deed of property in suit executed by the predecessor-in-interest of the plaintiff in favour of a third party and other documents in which the plaintiff has asserted right to deal with the property are admissible in evidence under S. 13. The words "rights and customs" in S. 13 include a right of ownership. Such evidence is however usually of little value and a Court should not place exaggerated importance on this kind of evidence, which is little more than an admission in favour of the person making it and is often manufactured in this country for the purpose of creating evidence for use later in a claim to ownership: A I R 1937 Lah 688; 12 All 1 (F B); A I R 1921 Mad 383; 16 Mad 194 and 10 Bom 439, Rel. on; Case law discussed. [P 796 C 1]

Hem Raj Mahajan — for Appellant.

Addison J.—The only question involved in this second appeal is whether the documents Exs. P.1, P.2 and P.3 are admissible in evidence. If they are, the appeal must be dismissed as concluded by a finding of fact. Ex. P.1 is a document purporting to be a mortgage deed of the property in suit executed by the predecessors-in-interest of the plaintiff in favour of a third party in 1873 while Ex. P.2 and Ex. P.3 are other instances where the plaintiff asserted a right to deal with the property. In the Full Bench decision, 6 Cal 171,¹ it was held that the word "right" as used in S. 13, Evidence Act, referred to something distinct from ownership, that is, a right, which attaches either to some property or to status; in short, an incorporeal right which, though transmissible, is not tangible or an object of the bodily senses. If this decision is correct, the documents in question would be inadmissible in evidence. The same decision was arrived at by another Full Bench in 13 Cal 352.² In 2 C W N 501,³ another Full Bench, however pointed out that the rule laid down in the above mentioned Full Bench decision had been materially qualified by the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in 22 I A 60⁴ and 24 I A 10⁵ and in 55 Cal 355⁶ a Division Bench, presided over by the Chief Justice, held that a kabala in favour of the tenant which contained a recital that the holding conveyed by the said deed was the homestead land of the executant of the deed was admissible in evidence as a transaction within the meaning of S. 13, Evidence Act, in a suit in which the nature of the tenancy was agitated.

A Division Bench of the Patna High Court held in 1 Pat 375⁷ in a suit which the plaintiffs claimed the land as their man land and the defendant claimed it as his jote, that an ekrarnama, produced by the plaintiffs, addressed by a third person to an ancestor of the plaintiffs, in which the land in suit was described as man land, was admissible under Section 13, Evidence Act. in A I R 1933 Pat 656⁸ held that it was permissible to use recitals in sale deeds to show the nature of the title that was being asserted and as transactions relevant under S. 13, Evidence Act, by which a right was claimed or asserted on some past occasion. In 12 Pat 285⁹ however another Division Bench held that the word "right" as used in S. 13, Evidence Act, meant an incorporeal right as distinct from ownership of property, 6 Cal 171¹ being followed. The decisions of the Calcutta and Patna High Courts are therefore not very helpful on the question. The Bombay, Madras and Allahabad rulings are in favour of the view that such documents are admissible in evidence. In 10 Bom 439¹⁰ it was said that the words "rights and customs" in S. 13 must be understood as comprehending all rights and customs recognized by law, and therefore included a right of ownership. The same view was taken in 12 Mad 9,¹¹ 15 Mad 12,¹² 16 Mad 194¹³ and A I R 1921 Mad 383.¹⁴ The decision of the Allahabad High Court is 12 All 1.¹⁵ Only one decision of this Court has been referred to, namely A I R 1937 Lah 688,¹⁶ which was decided by a single Judge. It was held that such documents were admissible in evidence. It seems to us that the preponderance of authority is in favour of the view that these documents are admissible in evidence and we so hold. It might however be stated that such evidence is usually of little value and a Court should not place exaggerated importance on this kind of evidence, which is little more than an admission in favour of the person making it and is in this country often manufactured for the purpose of creating evidence for use later on in a claim to ownership. On this finding we dismiss the appeal but make no order as to costs of this Court.

Amar Singh — Accused — Respondent.

Criminal Appeal No. 164 of 1938, Decided on 21st June 1938, from order of the Addl. Sess. Judge, Lyallpur, D/- 13th November 1937.

(a) Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 337 (1), 10 (2) — Term "District Magistrate" in Sec. 337 (1) includes Additional District Magistrate empowered under S. 10 (2) — Pardon tendered by such Additional District Magistrate without sanction of District Magistrate is not invalid.

The term "District Magistrate" in S. 337 (1) includes an Additional District Magistrate empowered by the Local Government under S. 10 (2) to exercise all the powers of a District Magistrate and a pardon tendered under S. 337 (1) by such Additional District Magistrate without the sanction of the District Magistrate is not invalid. The Additional Magistrate in tendering such pardon, is not in any way affected by the Proviso to S. 337 (1) and is in his own right empowered under the law to tender the pardon. It was not the intention of the Legislature in using the definite article 'the' before the District Magistrate in S. 337 to specify the District Magistrate appointed as such and not the Additional District Magistrate empowered as such: A I R 1936 Lah 353, Commented upon. [P 798 C 1, 2]

(b) Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 337 (1), 337 (1-A) — Magistrate tendering pardon, stating in his order that pardon has been tendered to person concerned to make him approver to connect accused with offence of murder — It amounts to sufficient compliance with S. 337 (1-A).

Where a Magistrate tendering a pardon under S. 337 (1) states in his order that in order to connect the accused with the offence of murder, it is essential to make an approver in the case and that therefore he tenders pardon under Sec. 337 to the person concerned, it amounts to sufficient compliance with provisions of S. 337 (1-A), as no clearer reason for tendering the pardon can be imagined. [P 798 C 2]

(c) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 337 (1) — It is not necessary that acceptance of pardon tendered should be expressed in any particular manner — It is to be gathered from circumstances.

Where a pardon has been tendered under S. 337 (1), it is not necessary that the acceptance thereof should be in writing or that it should be expressed in any other manner; it is to be gathered from the circumstances; where the person to whom pardon is tendered appears before various Magistrates in the capacity of a witness and not that of an accused person, it is a clear indication of the fact that he has accepted the pardon tendered to him. [P 798 C 2; P 799 C 1]

(d) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 337 (2) — Magistrate other than Magistrate taking cognizance of offence is entitled to record statement of person to whom pardon has been tendered.

Although S. 337 (2) contemplates that every person accepting tender shall be examined as a witness, in the Court of the Magistrate taking cognizance of the offence and in the subsequent trial, if any, it is open to a Magistrate, other than the Magistrate taking cognizance of the offence to record statement of the person to whom the pardon has been tendered : A I R 1933 Lah 321, Rel. on. [P 799 C 1]

Mohammad Monir, Assist. to Advocate-General — for Appellant.

Chaman Lal — for Respondent.

Din Mohammad J. — This is an appeal from the order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Lyallpur, acquitting Amar Singh who had been convicted by a Magistrate, First Class, of an offence under S. 193, Penal Code, and sentenced to four years' rigorous imprisonment. The Additional Sessions Judge has based his decision on the following conclusions : (1) that Lala Sant Ram, Additional District Magistrate, was not empowered in law to tender a pardon to Amar Singh and consequently the whole proceedings following thereupon were void; (2) that no reasons having been recorded by the Additional District Magistrate as required by S. 337 (1-A), Criminal P. C., the tender of pardon was bad in the eye of the law; (3) that there was no evidence to show that Amar Singh had ever accepted the pardon; (4) that the statement of Amar Singh made before Mr. Allah Dad Khan, Magistrate, was not recorded in a free atmosphere, and (5) that the statement made before Mr. Allah Dad Khan, Magistrate, had been made under pressure from the police. After hearing the Assistant Advocate-General for the Crown and Mr. Chaman Lal for Amar Singh, we have come to the conclusion that not one of the reasons recorded by the Sessions Judge for the acquittal of Amar Singh is sound in law. We will take the points mentioned above seriatim.

(1) S. 337 (1) lays down that in the case of any offence triable exclusively by the High Court or Court of Session, the District Magistrate, a Presidency Magistrate, a Sub-divisional Magistrate or any Magistrate of the First Class may, at any stage of the investigation or enquiry into, or the trial of the offence, tender a pardon to such person on certain conditions. In the Proviso attached to this sub-section, it is made clear that where the offence is under enquiry or trial, no Magistrate of the First Class other than the District Magistrate shall exercise the power hereby conferred unless he is the Magistrate making the enquiry or holding the trial and, where the offence is under investigation, no such Magistrate shall exercise the said power unless he is a Magistrate having jurisdiction in a place where the offence might be enquired into or tried and the sanction of the District Magistrate has been obtained to the exercise thereof. The contention raised on behalf of Amar Singh which found favour with the Sessions Judge was that although Lala Sant Ram was an Additional District Magistrate and as such had been empowered by the Local Government under S. 10 (2), Criminal P. C., to exercise all the powers of a District Magistrate under the Code, he could not be treated as a "District Magistrate" under S. 337 inasmuch as the words used in S. 337 are "the District Magistrate" and not "a District Magistrate." It was consequently urged on his behalf that under the second part of the Proviso, Lala Sant Ram stood in need of the sanction of the District Magistrate for a valid tender of pardon and that as no sanction of the District Magistrate had been obtained by him to the pardon tendered to Amar Singh, the pardon could not be legally recognized. This, in our view, is an erroneous way of interpreting these provisions of law. We find however that in this matter the Sessions Judge is supported by an authority of this Court reported in 16 Lah 594.¹ The matter before the Division Bench in that case had nothing to do with the interpretation of S. 337 but in the course of his judgment Bhide J. made the following observations :

It would appear from the Proviso to S. 337, Criminal P. C., that when pardon is to be tendered during the course of an enquiry or trial, it must be tendered by 'the District Magistrate.' There is only one District Magistrate for a district (vide S. 10, Criminal P. C.), and although the Additional District Magistrate may have the powers of a District Magistrate he cannot be called 'the District Magistrate'.

Coldstream J. agreed with the judgment of Bhide J. Apart from the fact that this is an obiter dictum, we may say with all respect that we have not been able to realize on what ground the distinction between "the District Magistrate" and "a District Magistrate" is based. It is true that S. 10 (1) lays down that in every District outside the Presidency towns the Local Government shall appoint a Magistrate of the First Class, who shall be called the District Magistrate and in sub-s. (2) it is provided that the Local Government may appoint any Magistrate of the First Class to be an Additional District Magistrate and such Additional District Magistrate shall have all or any of the powers of a District Magistrate, under this Code as the Local Government may direct. But, that does not mean that the District Magistrate referred to in sub-s. (1) is a different functionary from the District Magistrate referred to in sub-s. (2). In Part 5 of Sch. 3, Criminal P. C., the ordinary powers of a District Magistrate have been specified and these powers include "power to tender pardon to an accomplice at any stage of a case" under S. 337. Consequently, sub-s. (2) of S. 10 refers to the powers of a District Magistrate evidently using the term in a general sense, and the mere fact that in sub-s. (1), the article 'the' has been used before the words "District Magistrate" does not, in our view, alter the situation in any manner.

Similarly, when the Legislature used the words 'the District Magistrate' in S. 337 (1), it did not intend to exclude an Additional District Magistrate upon whom the ordinary powers of a District Magistrate had been conferred under sub-s. (2) of S. 10. We cannot believe that by the use of the definite article before "District Magistrate" in Sec. 337, the Legislature intended to specify the District Magistrate appointed as such and not the Additional District Magistrate empowered as such. If this were so, the whole object of conferring ordinary powers of a District Magistrate including power to tender pardon is clearly defeated. There is no meaning in conferring on a person a power which cannot be exercised by that person. The Sessions Judge has referred to sub-s. (3) of S. 10 in support of his conclusion, but we are unable to see how that sub-section offers any help in that matter. It merely says that for the purposes of S. 192, sub-s. (1), S. 407, sub-s. (2) and S. 528, sub-ss. (2) and (3), such Additional District Magistrate shall be deemed to be subordinate to the District Magistrate, and inasmuch as those provisions of law deal with special matters relating to transfer or withdrawal of cases or appeals, it is not clear how the subordination of the Additional District Magistrate to the District Magistrate mentioned in connexion therewith deprives the Additional District Magistrate of the exercise of powers otherwise conferred upon him under S. 10 (2). To us this matter appears to be so obvious that it requires no further discussion and if once it is held that the Additional District Magistrate could act as the District Magistrate under S. 337, the argument employed by the Sessions Judge and repeated before us by counsel for Amar Singh falls to the ground. We hold therefore that the Additional District Magistrate was not in any way affected by the Proviso to S. 337 (1) and that he was in his own right empowered under the law to tender a pardon to the accused.

(2) Coming now to the matter of recording reasons, we are surprised to find that the Sessions Judge has devoted a substantial part of his judgment to discussing whether the non-compliance with sub-s. (1-A) of S. 337 is an illegality or a mere irregularity and whether all the proceedings taken subsequent to the pardon thus tendered are vitiated on that account. Sub-s. (1) of S. 337 contemplates that a pardon is to be tendered "with a view to obtaining the evidence of any person supposed to have been directly or indirectly concerned in or privy to the offence" and in Ex. P/G, which is the record of the pardon tendered to Amar Singh it is clearly stated that in order to connect the accused with the offence of the murder of Mt. Jamna, w/o Tara Singh, caste Bhatra of Gobindpura, Police Station Sadar Lyallpur, it is essential to make an approver in this case. I therefore tender pardon under S. 337, Criminal P. C., to Amar Singh, son of Pheru Singh,

What clearer reason could be recorded for tendering a pardon to Amar Singh cannot be imagined and we really fail to understand why the Sessions Judge in the face of this document failed to realize that the only thing required by law to be done had been amply done.

(3) It was contended before the Sessions Judge that there was no proof on the record to show that Amar Singh had accepted the pardon tendered to him. The same argument has been reiterated before us but, in our view, it has no force whatever. The very fact that Amar Singh appeared before the various Magistrates in the capacity of a witness, and not that of an accused person, is a clear indication of the fact that he had accepted the pardon tendered to him. So long as the pardon tendered is not accepted the person concerned is treated as an accused person in the case and it is only after it is accepted that he is removed from that category and treated as a witness. It is nowhere laid down in the Criminal Procedure Code that the acceptance should be in writing or that it should be expressed in any other manner; it is to be gathered from the circumstances, and there is no doubt whatever from the circumstances brought on the record that the pardon tendered to Amar Singh had been accepted by him. The fact is deposed to by the Additional District Magistrate and his Reader and, apart from the circumstantial evidence referred to above, this direct evidence is enough to establish conclusively that the pardon had been accepted by Amar Singh.

(4) and (5). The remaining two points relied upon by the Sessions Judge namely (a) that the statement of Amar Singh made before Mr. Allah Dad Khan, Magistrate, had not been reported in a free atmosphere and (b) that it was the result of torture by the police are not very material in this case inasmuch as the charge against the accused was that he had altogether denied having made any statement before Mr. Allah Dad Khan and the factum of a statement having been made by a person is quite a different matter from what its legal effect may be on account of the circumstances in which it was made. If it were necessary, however to record a finding on this aspect of the case, we have no hesitation in holding that no pressure was brought to bear upon Amar Singh to make the statement that he made before Mr. Allah Dad Khan and that the circumstances in which that statement was recorded do not support the conclusion that the statement was not voluntary or that it was being made at the time when Amar Singh was under any pressure from the police.

A new point was raised before us by Mr. Chaman Lal, counsel for Amar Singh, that inasmuch as sub-s. (2) of S. 337 contemplates that every person accepting a tender shall be examined as a witness in the Court of the Magistrate taking cognizance of the offence and in the subsequent trial, if any, no other Magistrate is empowered to record the statement of a person to whom pardon has been tendered. This matter is concluded by authority and need not be discussed any further: see 14 Lah 507.² Counsel for the accused finally urged that the case of Amar Singh is not covered by Part I of S. 193, I. P. C., but falls under Part II of that Section. This again is immaterial as it only affects the question of the sentence, and not of the conviction, of the accused.

It only remains to consider now whether the charge of perjury has been brought home to the accused and on that matter we are not in any doubt whatever. Lala Sant Ram and his Reader have deposed to the effect that Amar Singh was tendered a pardon which he accepted. Mr. Allah Dad Khan has stated that of his own free will and accord Amar Singh made a statement before him after he had accepted the tender of pardon and it is not disputed that his statement recorded by the committing Magistrate on 3rd September 1936, is in direct opposition to what he had made before Allah Dad Khan. Amar Singh's statement to the effect that no pardon had been tendered to him and that he had accepted none and that he had made no statement before Mr. Allah Dad Khan, Magistrate, clearly brings his case within the purview of S. 193 even if his statement before Mr. Allah Dad Khan and the contradictions introduced by him later in the statement before the committing Magistrate are ignored altogether. Holding therefore that the accused has committed an offence under S. 193, I. P. C., we set aside the order of the Sessions Judge, acquitting Amar Singh, and sentence him to eighteen months' rigorous imprisonment from to-day.

When O. 1, R. 10 provides that the Court may strike out the name of a party who has been improperly joined as plaintiff or defendant, these words have reference to the suit as framed and it cannot possibly be suggested that any person who claims to be the owner of an equity of redemption is not a proper party to a suit for redemption of the mortgage. that the claim of a necessary party should be first tried and that his name should then be struck off the record on the ground that his claim ought to be dismissed before any decree has been passed.

Where therefore a Court after trial thought that claim of one person out of other claimants should be dismissed, it cannot strike out the name of that person under O. 1, R. 10 but it should pass a decree dismissing that person's claim.

Judgment. — Four persons sued for redemption of a mortgage. After the trial of these claims, the trial Court came to the conclusion that the claims of two of these persons should be dismissed. Instead of dismissing their claim by means of a decree however it proceeded to strike out their names under O. 1, R. 10, Civil P. C., on the ground that they had not been properly joined as parties to the suit. An appeal was presented to the District Court, which ordered that the name of one of the plaintiffs should be restored, but not the other name. A second appeal has been preferred to this Court by the defendant asking that the name which has been restored should be struck out. I do not propose to enter into the merits of this case. It seems to me that the trial Court has entirely misunderstood the purpose for which O. 1, R. 10 is intended to be used. When the Rule provides that the Court may strike out the name of a party who has been improperly joined as plaintiff or defendant, these words have reference to the suit as framed and it cannot possibly be suggested that any person who claims to be the owner of an equity of redemption is not a proper party to a suit for redemption of the mortgage. It was certainly never intended that the claim of a necessary party should be first tried and that his name should then be struck off the record on the ground that his claim ought to be dismissed before any decree has been passed. Such a procedure can only lead to multiplicity of proceedings. In the present instance, the correct procedure would be to keep the names of all the plaintiffs on the record until a preliminary decree is passed. If the Court is then of opinion that any of the claims have failed, these claims can then be dismissed as part of the preliminary decree; and if an appeal is preferred against this decree, the claims of all the parties concerned can then be heard together. If the names of any of the parties are struck off the record after a preliminary decree has been passed against them and has become final, this would be quite a different matter, for they then would no longer be necessary parties to the proceedings.

For these reasons I direct that the two names which have been struck off should again be restored to the record until a preliminary decree is passed and becomes final, a course to which counsel on both sides agree. There will be no decision on the merits of their claims at the present stage, and the decision of the District Court on this point should be regarded as cancelled. Costs will be costs in the suit. Stay order is discharged.

Easement — Necessity — Convenience is not criterion but absolute necessity.

An easement of necessity is not to be granted merely on the ground of convenience and advantage, but solely on the ground of absolute necessity. D. N. Aggarwal — for Respondent (Plaintiff).

Addison Ag. C. J.—The plaintiff sued the defendants for a permanent injunction restraining the latter from obstructing his passage along the pathway X to T, leading to his fields. It was alleged that the pathway was sufficient for the passage of cattle and cars and that the plaintiff had an easement thereon as he had been passing as of right along it for more than twenty years. The passage was also claimed as an easement of necessity. The trial Judge held that the plaintiff had established the right to use such a pathway and further that he was entitled to it as an easement of necessity. He therefore decreed the suit.

The lower Appellate Court held that the plaintiff had completely failed to establish that he had been using this pathway as of right for the last twenty years and has noted that when it inspected the spot it could not even find a footpath there. As regards easement of necessity the lower Appellate Court held that the plaintiff's fields were surrounded by the fields of other persons as well as by the fields of the defendants and that therefore no question of easement of necessity arose. On these findings it accepted the appeal and dismissed the plaintiff's suit. On second appeal to this Court, the learned Judge accepted the finding of fact that no easement had been established as of right but came to the conclusion that as the plaintiff must have some means of access to his fields and as the land was once shamilat, the law presumed an easement of necessity, giving a right of passage over the defendants' fields to the plaintiff. On this ground he accepted the appeal and held that the plaintiff was entitled to a five feet wide pathway through the defendants' fields, and against this decision this appeal under the Letters Patent has been preferred.

It is correct that this land and other land round about was shamilat in 1869 when it was partitioned. That is a long time ago and the plaintiff has been getting to his fields all that time. In villages as a matter of fact the usual way of getting to fields is through one's neighbours' fields when those fields are vacant and there are only pathways in very few places. In order to give an easement of necessity where a partition has been made of joint property of several persons, the easement must be necessary for enjoying the share of one of the former joint owners. But it is obvious that other land was also shamilat and the persons owning the other land are not parties to this suit, so that it cannot be held that this is the only way along which the plaintiff can go to his fields. Indeed from the plan it is obvious that he can go from other directions, though of course he would then also be going through the fields of other persons. It was held by a Division Bench in A I R 1937 Oudh 263¹ that an easement of necessity is not to be granted merely on the ground of convenience and advantage, but solely on the ground of absolute necessity. Where there are other ways for ingress and exit, an easement of necessity cannot be claimed merely on the ground that such ways are inconvenient. It is impossible therefore to hold in this case that there is an easement of necessity along the pathway X to T, as claimed by the plaintiffs. Further the partition took place in 1869 and it is now much too late to claim such an easement. For the reasons given we accept this appeal and dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs throughout.

Judgment.—One Ram Rakha Mal obtained a decree on 16th November 1932, against Diwan Chand, his brother Munshi Ram, his son Khairaiti Ram, his father Ramji Das and Munshi Ram's son Walati Ram. So far as Diwan Chand was concerned, his person and property were both liable, but as against the other judgment-debtors they were liable only to the extent of the joint Hindu family property in their hands. An appeal was made to the High Court and the decree was modified on 26th April 1935, reducing the amount of the decree to Rs. 9700 and discharging Walati Ram. During the pendency of the appeal Ramji Das died and his share fell to his heirs. The result therefore was that Diwan Chand was still liable personally and Khairaiti Ram and Munshi Ram only to the extent of the family property in their hands. Ram Rakha Mal took out execution on 18th December 1932, and attached certain houses and shops, but because of the pendency of the appeal in the High Court and because of various objections the execution remained pending and the sale of the attached property was stayed. Ram Rakha Mal after the decision of the High Court applied for the revival of the execution proceedings and for the sale of three quarters of the property, Walati Ram's share having been absolved.

One Fateh Din had also got a decree against Diwan Chand and his son Khairaiti Ram for Rs. 13,000 on 16th November 1935. He sued out execution and half the property of the family was sold on 4th August 1936. At this sale Fateh Din himself purchased the property. On 6th August 1936, the Court of the Sub-Judge, First Class, in whose Court these proceedings were going on, made an order to the effect that the sale had taken place and for objections regarding the illegality of the sale the case was to come up on 3rd October 1936. In the meantime Ram Rakha Mal applied on 21st August 1936 and again on 5th October 1936, that execution proceedings in the Court of the Sub-Judge, First Class, be transferred to the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge for rateable distribution, as the Court of the Senior Sub-Judge was of higher grade than that of the Sub-Judge, First Class, who was dealing with the execution case of Fateh Din. Fateh Din contested Ram Rakha Mal's prayer for rateable distribution on the ground that the judgment-debtors in the two cases were different as they did not fill the same legal character and were in fact different legal entities. The records of the case were brought from the Court of the Sub-Judge, First Class, to that of the Senior Subordinate Judge, and on Fateh Din's objection the only issue struck in the case was whether Ram Rakha Mal decree-holder was entitled to rateable distribution in the sale proceeds realized in the execution of Chaudhri Fateh Din's decree?

The learned Senior Sub-Judge, by his order dated 29th October 1937, held that Ram Rakha Mal could claim rateable distribution in the sale proceeds realized by the junior Court, as the attachment was first made by Ram Rakha Mal, and further that the judgment-debtors in the two decrees were in fact the same. Fateh Din has appealed to this Court through Khawaja Feroze-ud-Din Ahmad and after hearing lengthy arguments in the case the parties took two dates from me on the ground that they wanted to compromise the matter. I acceded to this request on the belief that a compromise would be effected, but the parties have eventually informed me that they have not been able to come to terms, and therefore I proceed to give my decision on the appeal before me.

It appears to me that it makes no difference in law that the parties are two in one case and three in the other so long as the same share of the two parties, who are common in both decrees, is sought to be attached. The judgment-debtors, Diwan Chand and his son Khairaiti Ram, are common in both cases and I am of the opinion therefore that the learned Senior Sub-Judge decided correctly in holding that the proceeds of the sale in the execution of Fateh Din's decree could be made the subject of rateable distribution in this case. In A I R 1926 Bom 150¹ it was decided by a Division Bench of the Bombay High Court that where A obtained a decree against B and C, and in execution attached the property of both, and D, who held a decree against C alone, applied for rateable distribution, D was entitled to claim such rateable distribution in the assets found to belong to the share of C. It was objected on behalf of Fateh Din that the Senior Sub-Judge could not transfer the case to himself without the intervention of the District Judge, but I am of the opinion that it was competent for the Senior Judge to call for the sale proceeds to his Court to be rateably distributed amongst decree-holders qualified under S. 73, Civil P. C., and I am supported in this view by a Division Bench ruling of the Bombay High Court reported in 49 Bom 655.²

The questions decided by the Senior Sub-Judge were in fact one under S. 73, Civil Procedure Code. If the order was made under S. 73, it was an order in execution proceedings and not a decree and was therefore not appealable: see in this connexion 42 Cal 1,³ A I R 1921 Pat 401⁴ and A I R 1931 Bom 252.⁵ It appears to me that the judgment-debtor is not concerned in this dispute between two rival decree-holders and that therefore no appeal lies. Mr. Feroze-ud-Din Ahmad, in the course of his address, urged me to the matter before me as a revision application, if I hold that an appeal was not competent. He based his contention on the grounds, (a) that there was no regular application for execution but merely an application for rateable distribution, (b) that the transfer to the Court of the Senior Sub-Judge should have been through the District Judge, and (c) that his client having set off the sale proceeds against the amount of his decree the proceedings in the Court of the Junior Sub-Judge could not be upset by the Senior Sub-Judge.

So far as (a) is concerned, it is apparent that the application of Ram Rakha Mal for execution was previous in date and that the proceedings, having once been started, continued to remain pending, though because of appeals and objections, the sale proceedings were stayed. In these circumstances in my opinion it was enough to make a prayer for rateable distribution. (b) So far as the transfer of the case without the intervention of the District Judge is concerned, I have already dealt with the matter and held that it was competent to the Senior Sub-Judge to act without the intervention of the District Judge. (c) So far as the question of set off is concerned, it appears that there was no regular order of set off by the Junior Sub-Judge but merely permission to bid at the auction. It is significant in this connexion to note that on 6th August 1936, the Court did not decide the objections regarding the legality of the sale and in fact made no order to which reference has been made or which I have been able to trace out from the record allowing a set-off as contemplated by O. 21, Rule 72 (2), Civil P. C., wherein the executing Court entered up satisfaction of the decree in question in whole or in part. For the above reasons, I am of the opinion that an appeal in this case was not competent and that there is no good ground shown why I should treat this appeal as a revision application, particularly when Fateh Din has still got his remedy, if any, by way of regular suit. In these circumstances I dismiss the appeal, but, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, I leave the parties to bear their own costs throughout.

Their pictorial label also was followed by some words in Devnagri script conveying a similar meaning as those on the plaintiffs' device and the numerals and the letters of the figures showing the measurements of piece were exactly the same. There was also a seal in the corner. The plaintiffs alleged that the device adopted by the defendants was a colourable imitation of their device and prayed for an issue of permanent injunction against the defendants restraining them from using their device, get-up and labels and from passing-off or attempting to pass off their goods as those of the plaintiffs. It was established that the numerals "4424" and the letters "H R" were common to the trade. It was also found that the plaintiffs' goods were not known as 'Motor Chapp'. It was further proved that the plaintiffs' goods were known as "Lal Pagriwala" and that the dealers and customers who were particular in purchasing the goods of one of these firms generally expressed their desire by resorting to those expressions. The characteristic feature of the goods of the two firms was the pictorial label :

Held that there was no colourable imitation and no deceptive resemblance between the goods of the plaintiffs and those of the defendants entitling the plaintiffs to the relief prayed for. The distinctive mark of the plaintiffs had not been copied by the defendants and there was no possibility of illiterate persons confusing the distinctive marks. That having regard to the fact that the plaintiffs came into the market only a few months prior to the institution of the suit, it could not be said that they had acquired a reputation by long user or that their goods were associated in the minds of the customers with the peculiar marks attached to them. Judgment. — This judgment will dispose of Regular Second Appeals Nos. 112 and 113 of 1938. Regular Second Appeal No. 112 has been preferred from Original Suit No. 255 of 1936 while Regular Second Appeal No. 113 has been preferred from Original Suit No. 305 of 1936. In both cases the plaintiffs and the defendants were the same and so were the causes of action. It was alleged at the Bar that there was some difference in the allegations made by the plaintiffs in the two cases but a close reading of the plaints shows that the allegations are practically the same and both cases will therefore be disposed of together. They relate to a matter which in English law is known as "passing-off".

It was alleged by the plaintiffs that they were dealing in piecegoods and had their own dyeing and bleaching mills at Bombay wherefrom black mulls were being manufactured with a device or a trade-mark of their own. This trade-mark consists of the name of the firm in English at the top followed by a pictorial label containing the picture of a motor-bus with several passengers enjoying a ride therein and a tram-car in the background. Underneath the pictorial label it is given in Devnagri script that the goods have been manufactured in India. Below this appear the numerals "4424" and underneath these numerals are the letters "H R". The last line of this device gives the length of the piece as 24 yards and towards the right there is a seal of the firm. The defendants had also started manufacturing black mulls with a device closely resembling that of the plaintiffs. That device also consists of the name of firm in English followed by a pictorial label wherein the distinctive feature consists of a motor-car, a palm and an iron fencing with green foliage in the background. This pictorial label too is followed by some words in Devnagri script conveying a similar meaning as those on the plaintiffs' device, and the numerals, the letters and the figures showing the measurements of the piece are exactly the same. A seal has also been placed in the corner. It was averred that the device adopted by the defendants was a colourable imitation of the device of the plaintiffs and, as it was not permissible under the law to do so, the plaintiffs asked for the issue of a permanent injunction against the defendants restraining them from using their device, get-up and labels and from passing off or attempting to pass off their goods as those of the plaintiffs. It was further prayed that an order be issued directing the defendants to deliver the goods bearing their labels to the plaintiffs. In Suit No. 255 an additional prayer was made in the alternative that the defendants be enjoined to destroy their goods and also called upon to account for the sales made by them.

Both these cases were tried together and the principal issues framed in both cases were the same. The Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that though the get-up was practically the same in both cases and it was possible for an unwary purchaser to confuse the goods of the defendants with those of the plaintiffs, yet the goods of the plaintiffs were not known as

'Motor Chhap' and that inasmuch as the numerals, letters and figures, etc. were common to the trade and the plaintiffs' label was itself an imitation of the labels of other traders, the plaintiffs were not entitled to any relief. On appeal, the Senior Subordinate Judge practically endorsed the conclusions of the trial Judge and dismissed the appeals. The plaintiffs have appealed. It is obvious that there is no statute of civil law in India which governs this matter. The only provision of law which expressly deals with the subject to some extent is S. 486, I. P. C., which punishes the selling, etc. of any goods with a counterfeit trade-mark or property mark. In the domain of the civil law the only reference to this subject is contained in Illus. (w) attached to Sec. 54, Specific Relief Act, which runs as follows :

A improperly uses the trade-mark of B. B may obtain an injunction to restrain the user, provided that B's use of the trade-mark is honest.

The rest of the law on the subject is derived from English law and in the discussion of these cases it will therefore be necessary to refer to the principles deducible from the English authorities on the subject. In Kerly on Trade Marks "passing-off" has been defined as meaning 'to represent for trading purposes that the goods of one person are those of the other,' and it is added that it is immaterial whether the representation is effected by direct statements, or by using some of the badges by which the goods of the plaintiff are known to be his, or any badges colourably resembling these, in connexion with goods of the same kind, in such manner as to be calculated to cause the goods to be taken by ordinary purchasers for the goods of the plaintiff (p. 544). At p. 546 it is said that the basis of a passing off action being a false representation by the defendant, it must be proved in each case as a fact that the false representation was made. In cases where the representation is implied in the use or imitation of a mark, or get-up with which the goods of another are associated in the minds of the public, the point to be decided is whether, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, the defendant's use of such mark or get-up is calculated to deceive. No action however lies for passing off the defendant's goods as similar to those of the plaintiff, even though the statement is untrue and injurious to the plaintiffs (p. 552). Where the charge is one of indirect misrepresentation of the sort indicated above, the onus is cast upon the plaintiff in the first place to show that the things copied or imitated are reputed in the market to denote a connexion between himself and the goods; and in a label or get-up in which there is common matter, the plaintiff must show that the defendant has taken something that is distinctive of the plaintiff's goods (p. 558). Where the existence of repute is not shown the action cannot succeed (p. 559).

In the matter of colourable imitation there can be no infringement in cases where the plaintiff's mark is not actually copied, if there is no reasonable probability of deception (p. 459). The probable purchasers are to be considered in the decision of this question, not merely very careful or intelligent persons but ordinary unwary purchasers (p. 462). It may however be added that those purchasers should not be unusually stupid people, fools or idiots (p. 268). The admissible defences to a passing off action include the assertion that there is no infringement, as well as the contention that the plaintiff is debarred from suing the defendant for all or part of the relief he seeks by, among other things, his own trade being fraudulent or his trade-mark being deceptive (p. 468).

It is presumably in reference to this defence that Illus (w) to Sec. 54, Specific Relief Act, appears to have been incorporated in the Act. The Court in such cases will not interfere to protect the use of a deceptive trade-mark, or to assist the trader who is using his mark for the purposes of a fraudulent trade (p. 486). A mark which so nearly resembles another mark as to be calculated to deceive is not allowed to be used (p. 254). The law on the subject was summed up by Parker J. in a case involving the comparison of the two words as follows :

You must take the two words. You must judge of them, both by their look and by their sound. You must consider the goods to which they are to be applied. You must consider the nature and kind of customer who would be likely to buy those goods. In fact, you must consider all the surrounding circumstances If considering all those circumstances, you come to the conclusion that there will be a confusion then you may refuse the registration, or rather you must refuse the registration in that case.

An imitation of the mark which is calculated to deceive is known as deceptive resemblance. If some parts of the mark are common, it is necessary to consider whether people who know the distinguishing characteristics of the opponent's marks would be deceived (p. 268). But if the only resemblances between the two marks are in parts which are common, so that the owner of the one has taken nothing which is peculiar to the other, then there is at all events no infringement, at any rate unless the plaintiff had a distinctive arrangement of the common elements. As remarked by Lindley, M. R., when what is called the plaintiff's get-up consists of two totally different things combined, namely a get-up common to the trade and distinctive feature affixed, or added to the common feature, then what you have to consider is not whether the defendant's get-up is like the plaintiff's as regards the common features, but whether that which specially distinguishes the plaintiff's has been taken by the defendant. The defendant may take it more or less But if he so nearly takes it that when you look at it as a whole you can say that the defendant's goods are calculated to be taken for the plaintiff's goods when properly looked at, then the plaintiff is entitled to succeed (pp. 273-274).

In comparing the marks therefore, regard must be had not only to their form but also to the appearance they would present in actual use when fairly and honestly used (p. 277). The resemblance between two marks must be considered with reference to the ear as well as to the eye (p. 275). Expert evidence as to the circumstances usually attending the sale of the goods in the particular trade, and as to the ordinary class of customers served, their intelligence and education, what they particularly look for in purchasing the plaintiff's goods, and such like matters is admissible. The Judge can in the end act upon his own view on a comparison of the marks, having regard to the matters of fact referred to above (p. 293).

As to how these principles have been applied to cases coming before the Courts in England, the following illustrations taken from the discussions headed "Contrasted Devices" (pp. 295-300) will suffice. The following resemblances were not considered actionable: (1) A woman's head wearing a helmet with Athena beneath and a man's head with way beneath. (2) A tobacco pipe and dart as contrasted with a tobacco pipe alone. (3) A red deer's head and a moose's head. (4) A sphinx in combination with Egyptian scenery and a sphinx in a different position. (5) A label of which a signature was claimed as the essential feature as contrasted with the label similar in structure, but having the defendant's name prominently upon it. (6) Device of a black cat on a globe and the device of a black cat standing behind a circular device. (7) Defendants' device of an ox-cart and plaintiffs' device of an ox-cart. (8) "99" and words "double nine" as against "999".

It is well settled that the question of the relative excellence of the plaintiff's and the defendant's goods is not relevant to the right of the plaintiff to maintain an action either for infringement or for passing-off (p. 446). It has always to be determined as a matter of fact as to what are the characteristic features of the plaintiffs' trade mark and on these statements by the plaintiffs in advertisements or the evidence of trade witnesses is material. It is not an infringement to take non-essential particulars from a mark (p. 457). Marks common to the trade cannot be a 'trade-mark' (p. 38).

I have now to examine the cases before me in the light of the principles enunciated above. It is reliably established that the numerals '4424' and the letters 'H R' are common to the trade. It has also been found as a fact, which finding is not open to be disturbed in second appeal, that the plaintiffs' goods are not known as 'Motor Chhap'. It is further proved that the plaintiffs' goods are known as 'Lal Pagriwala' and the defendants' as 'Pili Pagriwala', and that the dealers and customers, who are particular in purchasing the goods of one of these firms generally express their desire by resorting to these descriptions. It is also patent that the characteristic feature of the goods of these two firms is the pictorial label bearing, in the plaintiffs' case, the combined picture of a motor bus with joy riders and a tram and, in the case of the defendants' goods, of a motor car with a different background. Obviously therefore the distinctive mark of the plaintiffs has not been copied by the defendants, and even if we take into consideration the illiteracy of the customers for whom these goods are designed, it cannot be argued that such illiterate persons cannot distinguish a riderless car of a different size and make from a motor-bus with a dozen of riders. There is therefore in my view no colourable imitation and no deceptive resemblance entitling the plaintiffs to the relief prayed for.

It is common ground that the plaintiffs came into the market in September 1935, i. e. hardly a few months before the institution of the present suits. It cannot be said therefore that they have acquired a reputation by long user or that their goods are associated in the minds of the customers with the peculiar marks attached to them. Counsel for the appellants has referred to 6 Rang 221,¹ 16 Lah 114,² 9 Lah 487,³ (1887) 36 Ch D 1,⁴ (1921) 2 Ch D 583,⁵ A I R 1935 Bom 101⁶ and A I R 1938 Sind 38,⁷ but, in my view, none of these decisions helps them in the least.

In 6 Rang 221¹ the plaintiffs sued the defendants to restrain them from using labels for matches of local manufacture bearing five red stars, alleging that they closely resembled in form, colour and general get-up, the plaintiffs' various star labels on their imported Sweedish matches. The plaintiffs claimed that their labels were known throughout Burma, in English, as the "Star Mark," in Hindustani as "Tara Marka" and, in Burmese as "Kyee tazeik," and that the defendants' matches were likely to be called by the same name. It was found that the plaintiffs had been using their labels in Burma for some six months or more ere the defendants introduced their mark. It was held by a Division Bench of the Rangoon High Court that the plaintiffs had not established a right to restrain everybody from using a design for matches in which any number of stars is a distinctive mark, and that their case as to colourable get-up failed entirely. This case, therefore instead of supporting the plaintiffs, in my view, goes to the root of their case.

16 Lah 114² was a case under S. 486, I. P. C., and being based on the wording of a particular statute would in the main be irrelevant, but even otherwise the observations made therein do not advance the plaintiffs' case any further. It merely lays down the general principles which have been enunciated above. In 9 Lah 487³ the main question involved was the abandonment of a trade mark and it is not clear as to how it helps the plaintiffs in the present case. In (1887) 36 Ch D 1⁴ at page 5 the question arose as to the similarity of two tablets between which there was a strong general resemblance and Cotton L. J. remarked that, even though there may be no monopoly at all in the individual things, yet if they were so combined by the defendants as to pass off the defendants' goods as the plaintiffs', then the defendants had brought themselves within the old common law doctrine in respect of which equity will give to the aggrieved party an injunction in order to restrain the defendants from passing off their goods as those of the plaintiffs. The principle in the abstract no doubt holds good but the question is as to its application to the case before us. In (1921) 2 Ch Dn 583⁵ at page 588, it was remarked by Lawrence J.:

Now it has often been said that it is wrong, in judging whether a combination mark is distinctive or not, to dissect the mark and to show that each of its component parts is not distinctive in itself and then, as the result of this process, to conclude that the mark as a whole is not distinctive.

This may be so, but as stated above, the only thing that is uncommon to the trade in the plaintiffs' device is the pictorial label and the defendants' label is clearly different from that of the plaintiffs. In A I R 1935 Bom 101⁶ it was laid down that in actions for infringement of trade-mark the plaintiff has to prove that his goods are known to the public by some distinct name, mark, badge, get-up or appearance, and that the defendant's use or imitation of the same is likely to mislead the public into a belief that the defendant's goods are those of the plaintiff, and the mark must have been used or employed long enough to render it probable that a reputation in the market has been acquired. The principle stated as it is goes against the plaintiffs' contention. In A I R 1938 Sind 38⁷ it was remarked that fraud has to be presumed where the similarity is close and remains unexplained, the surrounding circumstances of which will have to be considered in order to determine whether the defendant's mark is or is not a colourable imitation of the plaintiff's mark. It is not only necessary to look at the difference or at the resemblance between two given marks but it is necessary to compare the two marks as a whole and then come to a decision and the question whether the alleged colourable imitation has or has not deceived anybody is to be decided with reference to the ultimate purchaser. In passing-off cases the probability of misleading, not experts or persons who know the real facts but ordinary or unwary customers, is the mischief to be guarded against; non-deception of middlemen and vendors is immaterial. The propositions of law enunciated here are based on English decisions and are not open to any objection, but in my view to the facts of the present case they are not applicable. Counsel for the respondents has drawn my attention to A I R 1938 Mad 1,⁸ 24 Cal 364,⁹ A I R 1936 Mad 8,¹⁰ A I R 1934 P C 167¹¹ and A I R 1937 Lah 186.¹²

In A I R 1938 Mad 1⁸ it was held by a Division Bench that in India there are no statutory enactments of the nature of the trade-mark which have been passed in England and relief here can only be granted on the ground that the defendant has done something which is calculated to deceive. It is essential in a passing-off action to show that there has been a false representation. It is not enough for a plaintiff to claim that he has adopted the device as a trade-mark and that the defendant has copied this device or used one so like it that deception is probable. The plaintiff must show that he has used the mark claimed by him in his goods or in connexion with them and that the mark had become associated in the minds of the public with his goods. In the present case the evidence as remarked above is to the contrary. The plaintiffs' own witnesses have stated that their goods are known as "Lal Pagriwala" and that if any customer or dealer intends to purchase the plaintiffs' goods, he is never deceived.

In A I R 1924 Cal 364¹³ it was remarked that the question of the right to the exclusive use of a trade mark must depend upon whether the evidence in the case is sufficient to show such an association or connexion between a mark and the firm which used it as to indicate to the ordinary purchasers in the market that the goods are the goods of that particular firm. The rights to exclusive user of a name or a number as a trade-mark is not an absolute and unqualified right which would entitle the owner to prevent another person from using it under all circumstances. There must be a reasonable probability of purchasers being deceived; it is not enough to show the mere possibility of deception.

In A I R 1936 Mad 8¹⁰ it was held that before a dealer can restrain another from using a name or mark, it is not sufficient to show that the article with that name or mark has acquired a reputation in the market, but it must also be shown that the public have grown to associate that particular name or mark with himself as the manufacturer of or dealer in that article. Where there is absolutely no evidence to establish any such association in the public mind between the plaintiff's business and the goods bearing the mark in question, the suit must fail. It is not necessary to repeat that in the present case no such association has been established that the concurrent finding of the Courts below is against the plaintiffs on this matter.

It is quite probable, as suggested by both Courts, that the plaintiffs' goods if at all associated in the minds of the public with any particular mark, were so associated with the mark "Tram Chhap" or "Lal Pagriwala" as stated above and consequently the adoption of a pictorial label with a motor car is not intended to deceive the public.

In A I R 1934 P C 167¹¹ their Lordships observed that in an action for infringement of trade mark, in the absence of evidence of actual confusion, a strong case must be made to justify a conclusion that confusion will result from what the defendants are doing. It is true that the Senior Subordinate Judge has remarked in this case that confusion is likely to arise in the minds of the intending customers, but in the first place his conclusion is vitiated by the fact that it is not based on evidence which on the whole leads to a contrary conclusion, and, secondly, I am not prepared to agree with him that, even in the mind of an illiterate customer, a motor car with a peculiar background of its own can ever be confused with a motor bus with a different background. Much stress has been laid on the fact that the lines above and below the pictorial label written in English and Devnagri script respectively, combined with numerals and letters, tend to create a confusion in the mind of an illiterate purchaser, but I am not inclined to agree with this proposition. To an illiterate person letters and figures convey no meaning and they leave no such impression on his mind as can be said to last. Such minds are attracted by the picture alone and the picture, as remarked above, is entirely different in the two cases. There is no such strong case made out therefore as is envisaged in the Privy Council judgment.

In A I R 1937 Lah 186,¹² it was decided that nobody has any exclusive right or ownership in any mark alone, unless that mark is associated by use with a particular description of goods manufactured by him. It is open to a party claiming a right in a particular mark to establish that it had been so identified and associated with its products that its name would suggest itself to a purchaser on seeing it on any other allied product. The evidence of such association in this case is practically nil.

It will appear therefore that the authorities cited on behalf of the respondents fortify me in the conclusions at which I have arrived above.

The only other question that remains to be considered is whether the plaintiffs themselves have been honest. As remarked above both the Courts below have found against them on this point and there is abundant evidence on the record to show that the bus and tram used by the plaintiffs are used by different traders individually on their own goods and that the combination of the two is in itself fraudulent. In the view of the case that I have taken it is not necessary to dilate further on this matter inasmuch as in my opinion the distinctive features of the two devices are quite different from each other; but, even if it were necessary to come to a finding on this point, I would endorse the concurrent finding of the Courts below, and it is obvious that in the face of that finding no relief can be granted to the plaintiffs. The authority, 3 Bom L R 220,¹⁴ relied upon by the trial Judge, is in point and so is the Illustration (w) to S. 54, Specific Relief Act. I accordingly affirm the decision of the Court below and dismiss these appeals. In view however of the peculiar circumstances of the case I leave the parties to bear their own costs throughout.

(a) Bengal Land (Redemption and Foreclosure) Regulation (17 of 1806), S. 8—Mortgage without possession — Possession cannot be claimed—Foreclosure—No limitation for foreclosure.

Where the mortgage is without possession, the mortgagee is not entitled in law to sue for possession as such. His only remedy lies in taking foreclosure proceedings under the Regulation and for that purpose no limitation is prescribed: A I R 1926 Lah 302 and A I R 1918 Lah 198, Ref.

(b) Practice — Abandonment of objection — Argument not convincing — It does not mean that point is abandoned.

Where an order of a Court shows that arguments were offered on a particular objection but that they were unconvincing, it is not tantamount to the abandonment of the point. [P 810 C 2]

(c) Bengal Land (Redemption and Foreclosure) Regulation (17 of 1806), S. 8 — Suit for possession by mortgagee as owner—He must show that foreclosure proceedings were in order.

The application of Regulation is very strict and a mortgagee who relies upon it is bound to show that the proceedings were quite in accordance with S. 8. Judgment.—The facts of the case out of which this appeal has arisen are these. On 10th March 1891, Musharaf Ali, father of Ishrat Ali, mortgaged half of his house to one Ganga Sahai, father of Ram Sarup, for Rs. 300. The mortgage was however without possession. The limit of time fixed for redemption in the mortgage deed was a year and a half. This period expired on 10th September 1892, but no redemption had taken place until then. Nothing further happened in connexion with this mortgage until 1st October 1934, when Ram Sarup transferred his rights to one

Alla-ud-Din for Rs. 200. On 10th July 1935, Ishrat Ali transferred his rights to Ahsan Ilahi for Rs. 300. On 31st July 1935, Alla-ud-Din applied to the District Court for proceedings under Regn. 17 of 1806. The Judge issued the necessary notices. Ishrat Ali was served on 12th August while Ram Sarup on 15th August. There is no notice on the record which was issued to Ahsan Ilahi but he did appear and put in his written statement challenging, inter alia, the right of Alla-ud-Din to take foreclosure proceedings. No decision was however given on the points raised by Ahsan Ilahi as none is contemplated by the Regulation. The foreclosure proceedings terminated on 30th August. On 13th October 1936, Alla-ud-Din instituted the present suit against Ishrat Ali, Ram Sarup and Ahsan Ilahi, for possession of the property under mortgage on the basis of ownership. Various defences were set up by the principal contesting defendant, Ahsan Ilahi, but they did not find favour with the Additional Subordinate Judge who tried the suit. He accordingly granted Alla-ud-Din a decree in terms of the relief prayed for. His judgment having been upheld on appeal, Ahsan Ilahi has made an appeal to this Court.

It is contended on behalf of the appellant that the suit was time-barred and that at any rate the plaintiff was not entitled to any decree inasmuch as the foreclosure proceedings on which the suit is based were irregular and hence invalid in the eye of the law. So far as the question of limitation is concerned, I consider that the matter is concluded by authority. As stated above, the mortgage was without possession and consequently the mortgagee was not entitled in law to sue for possession as such. His only remedy lay in taking foreclosure proceedings under the Regulation and for that purpose no limitation is prescribed. The suit having been lodged within 12 years of those proceedings is consequently well within time: see 93 I C 688¹ and 79 P R 1918.² The appellant has drawn my attention to 94 P R 1912,³ but there also, as appears from the body of the judgment, the mortgagee was entitled to immediate possession from the date of the mortgage.

In the question of the invalidity of foreclosure proceedings however, the appellant is on firm ground. Counsel for the respondent has urged that this objection was abandoned before the Senior Subordinate Judge, but from his order it does not appear that it is so. The Senior Subordinate Judge no doubt remarks that "the point of invalidity of proceedings under the Regulation though taken up in the memorandum of appeal was not stressed in arguments"; but at the same time he adds that "nothing was shown as to how these proceedings were irregular," which evidently means that arguments were offered on this point but they were unconvincing and this is not tantamount to the abandonment of the point as remarked by the Senior Subordinate Judge. In the memorandum of appeal to this Court the objection is repeated once more and that clearly indicates that the point was not given up before the Senior Subordinate Judge. The Courts have been very stringent in the matter of the application of Regn. 17 of 1806, and a mortgagee who relies upon it is bound to show that the proceedings were quite in accordance with S. 8 of Regn. 17 of 1806. In 11 Cal 111⁴ the headnote reads as follows:

The Provisions of S. 8 of Regn. 17 of 1806 are not merely directory, but imperative, prescribing conditions precedent to the right of the mortgagee to enforce forfeiture of the estate of the mortgagor, and have for their object the protection of mortgagors from fraud. The prescribed procedure must be strictly followed. "Held, that although the mortgagor at the hearing of the foreclosure suit in the Court of first instance had not insisted on the insufficiency of the notification of the mortgagee's application to foreclose, but had relied on another defence, this could not be construed as a binding admission that notice had been duly given; that service of the copy of petition for foreclosure, and of the parwana signed by the Judge was essential; and that the mortgagor was not precluded from questioning the regularity of the proceedings in his subsequent appeal".

Similarly in A I R 1924 Lah 176⁵ a Division Bench of this Court composed of Martineau and Brasher JJ., observed:

It is settled law that the Court will not presume that all the formalities required by Regn. 17 of 1806 in proceedings for foreclosure have been observed, but the mortgagee must prove affirmatively the due performance of every necessary condition. . . . It is argued for the appellant that as Singhu appeared in Court in 1894 and admitted the receipt of the notice and took no objection to its validity it may be presumed that the notice fulfilled the requirements of the Regulation, but we cannot agree with the contention. Singhu may not have read the notice and he may even have been illiterate. At any rate, the mere fact of his raising no objection to the validity of the notice does not warrant the presumption that the notice fulfilled all the necessary conditions. The notice is unfortunately not forthcoming, and this fact makes it impossible for the appellant to prove that all necessary formalities were observed. We recognize the difficulty of his position, but we are unable to hold that the non-existence of the notice relieves him of the burden of proving that the notice satisfied the requirements of Regn. 17 of 1806. It was in fact held in 46 P R 1907⁶ that the non-existence of the notice was fatal to the validity of the foreclosure proceedings. We must therefore decide that as the defendant had not shown that the foreclosure proceedings in 1894 fulfilled the requirements of Regulation, the mortgage subsists.

1. Sardarmal v. Gangaram, (1926) 13 A I R Lah 302=93 I C 688.

That case is on all fours with the present case inasmuch as here also the notice that issued to Ahsan Ilahi is non-existent, and reliance is being placed on the statement made by him as a witness admitting its receipt. Sitting as a single Judge, I am bound to follow that decision, supported as it is by the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council. I accordingly hold that the mortgagee or his representative was not entitled to bring a suit for possession on the basis of ownership on account of the irregularity of the foreclosure proceedings and that his suit as lodged must fail. It is true that in the case relied on, it was held that the mortgage subsisted, but no such finding can be recorded here, as apart from the fact that the circumstances of this case are different, the question of the subsistence of the mortgage has not been thrashed out between the parties. I accordingly accept the appeal and dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs throughout.

Second Appeal No. 334 of 1938, Decided on 5th July 1938, from decree of Senior Sub-Judge, Lyallpur, D/- 23rd December 1937.

* Civil P. C. (1908), S. 11 — Decision of Small Cause Court on title in suit for rent is not res judicata in subsequent regular suit for rent and ejectment.

The general rule is that where S. 11 can be applied, it must be applied, and the general principles of res judicata can only be invoked where S. 11 is silent : 29 Cal 707 (P C); A I R 1933 Lah 551; A I R 1933 Lah 646 and A I R 1926 Lah 670, Rel. on ; A I R 1921 P C 11 and A I R 1922 P C 80, Ref. ; A I R 1926 Lah 603, Expl.

There is one apparent exception to the rule that the first Court must be a Court competent to try the subsequent suit, and that is where the first Court is a Court of exclusive jurisdiction, its decision on any matter on which it has exclusive jurisdiction is binding on the other Court. An instance of this is a decision by a Revenue Court on a matter on which it has exclusive jurisdiction : A I R 1929 Lah 586 and A I R 1932 Lah 623, Rel. on.

Similarly, if a Small Cause Court decides a matter on which it has exclusive jurisdiction, then that decision is binding on subsequent Courts : A I R 1926 Sind 236 ; A I R 1934 Sind 112 and A I R 1937 Lah 346, Rel. on. [P 813 C 1]

In a suit for rent the Small Cause Court has no exclusive jurisdiction to decide the question of title. Hence the decision of Small Cause Court on title in suit for rent cannot be res judicata in the subsequent suit for rent and for ejectment, because the prayer for ejectment takes the suit away from the jurisdiction of the Court of Small Causes : A I R 1937 Lah 346, Disting. ; A I R 1934 Lah 324 and A I R 1924 Bom 454, Rel. on.

Judgment.—The plaintiff, the Bar Gaushala Ltd., Lyallpur, sued Hayat Mohammad, defendant, for Rs. 72-14-0, house rent, and also sought his ejectment from the house. The trial Judge found that the plaintiff had not established its title to the house in suit, that this was not immediately relevant and all that was necessary to find was that the defendant was not a tenant of the plaintiff. Accordingly the trial Judge dismissed the suit. On appeal the learned Senior Subordinate Judge said : "I am in general agreement with the view taken by the lower Court so far as the merits of the case are concerned." He gave some reasons for this, but held relying on A I R 1937 Lah 346¹ that the suit was res judicata, because in a previous suit for rent Lala Chhakan Lal, Judge of the Small Cause Court, had found that the defendant was a tenant of the Gaushala and had ordered him to pay Rs. 72 as rent. The second appeal of Hayat Mohammad has been ably argued by Mr. Abdul Karim. I will say at once that the view of the learned Senior Subordinate Judge as to the application of res judicata is wrong. The facts of A I R

1. Ishwar Dutt Churamani v. General Assurance Society Ltd., (1937) 24 A I R Lah 346=174 I C 761.

1937 Lah 346¹ are different from the facts of the present case. On the other hand, it has been twice specifically laid down in 48 Bom 541² and in A I R 1934 Lah 324³ that the decision of a Small Cause Court on a question of title is not res judicata or binding in a regular suit. The point at issue in the present appeal is the application of S. 11, Civil P. C., in particular the words "in a Court competent to try such subsequent suit or the suit in which such issue has been subsequently raised." The learned lower Appellate Judge said in his judgment:

Under S. 11 the finding in the previous suit would have operated as res judicata, if the first Court had jurisdiction to try the subsequent suit. That Court had obviously no jurisdiction to try a suit for ejectment of a tenant. S. 11 therefore was not applicable, but since the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code are not exhaustive, the matter must be held to be res judicata on general principles independently of S. 11.

Now, the general rule is that where S. 11 can be applied, it must be applied, and that general principles of res judicata can only be invoked where S. 11 is silent. In 29 Cal 707⁴ at p. 715, their Lordships of the Privy Council said :

The essence of a Code is to be exhaustive on the matters in respect of which it declares the law, and it is not the province of a Judge to disregard or go outside the letter of the enactment according to its true construction.

In 48 Cal 499⁵ their Lordships following a previous judgment of their own, 11 I A 37,⁶ applied res judicata in an administration suit to which the terms of S. 11 did not apply. Similarly in 45 Mad 320⁷ they applied it to a dispute as to the title to receive compensation which had been referred to the Court, to which S. 11 also did not apply. A Division Bench of this Court took the matter further in 8 Lah 15,⁸ where Fforde J. said :

The plea of res judicata is not confined to the provisions of S. 11, Civil P. O., but may be invoked under general principles of law.

This was dissented from by two other Division Benches of this Court in 14 Lah 369⁹ and 14 Lah 437.¹⁰ In 14 Lah 369⁹ Tek Chand J. after quoting 29 Cal 707,⁴ criticized 8 Lah 15⁸ and said :

As regards matters which are specifically provided for in the Code, the Courts are bound to limit the operation of the rule in accordance with the phraseology used by the Legislature, and have no power to ignore the express provisions of the Statute in order to give effect to the general principles of law.

This judgment was approved by another Bench in 14 Lah 437¹⁰ which said :

The general rule of res judicata which exists apart from the provisions of S. 11 . . . can be resorted to only in those cases which do not strictly fall within the four corners of S. 11, and held that for the decision in a former case to be res judicata in a subsequent suit, the Court which tried the former suit must be competent to try the subsequent suit. A I R 1926 Lah 670¹¹ is also to the effect that general principles of res judicata cannot be extended to cases which are within the terms of S. 11. I am in respectful agreement with the three rulings last mentioned, but would observe in passing that although 8 Lah 15⁸ does not lay down the law correctly, I think the decision was correct on its particular facts. Fforde J. said :

Had the question of the superior claim of Mt. Nasir Begum and Mt. Wazir Begum been raised in the previous suit, Mohammad Umer could not have succeeded in establishing his claim to a portion of Mt. Abadi Begum's property. Having acquired an interest in some of the property upon a suppression of the fact that there were other persons with a superior right to it, he cannot now use that fact to defeat a claim for partition of another portion of the same estate.

Apparently then the case could have been decided on broader principles of estoppel without invoking estoppel by res judicata. There is one apparent exception to the rule that the first Court must be a Court competent to try the subsequent suit, and that is where the first Court is a Court of exclusive jurisdiction, its decision on any matter on which it has exclusive jurisdiction is binding on the other Courts. An instance of this is a decision by a Revenue Court on a matter on which it has exclusive jurisdiction: see A I R 1929 Lah 586,¹² a Letters Patent appeal, and A I R 1932 Lah 623.¹³ Similarly if a Small Cause Court decides a matter on which it has exclusive jurisdiction, then that decision is binding on subsequent Courts: see A I R 1926 Sind 236,¹⁴ A I R 1924 Sind 112¹⁵ and A I R 1937 Lah 346.¹ I think this exception is only apparent because S. 11, Civil P. C., does not consider or refer to matters tried by a Court of exclusive jurisdiction. In A I R 1926 Sind 236¹⁴ one party sued in the Small Cause Court at Amritsar and obtained an ex parte decree. Subsequently the other party sued on the same agreement before the Small Cause Court, Karachi and although the Small Cause Court at Amritsar had jurisdiction only up to Rupees 500 whereas the second suit was for Rs. 900, the matter was held res judicata with the remark that if the plea were not to prevail in suits of this nature, the very object of the Legislature in providing for a speedy and summary remedy by conferring exclusive jurisdiction on the Court of Small Causes would be frustrated. Similarly in A I R 1934 Sind 112,¹⁵ a decision of the Small Cause Court at Amritsar was held res judicata in another suit brought by the opposite party on the same agreement in the Small Cause Court at Karachi. A I R 1937 Lah 346¹ is also very similar. The plaintiff, the agent of an Insurance Company, brought a suit for Rs. 108-15-0 in the Small Cause Court, claiming commission from 1st January 1932 to 31st March 1932. His suit was based upon an agreement with the defendant insurance company but was dismissed on the finding that he had violated the terms of the agreement by joining a rival concern. After this he sued in a regular Court claiming commission for similar transactions from 1st January 1932 to 3rd August 1932. The suit was based on the same agreement and actually included the period previously in suit. I have no doubt that it was rightly held to be res judicata; but, with deference the statement of the law leaves something to be desired:

The principle of res judicata is of wider application, as pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 48 Cal 499⁵ and 45 Mad 320.⁷ It has been held to govern cases where the matter in issue is the same and has been previously decided by a competent Court. For instance, when a Court has exclusive jurisdiction to try any matter, its decision on that point will operate as res judicata.

This is correct but not complete; it is liable to be misunderstood, and in the present case it has been misunderstood. Rightly looked at, A I R 1937 Lah 346¹ does not govern the case before me. In the case before me the Small Cause Court had decided a question of title. It had to do so for the purposes of the rent suit it was trying, but far from having exclusive jurisdiction, it had no jurisdiction to try the question of title as such. Hilton J., in A I R 1934 Lah 324,³ put the matter with his customary clarity:

The judgment of a Court of exclusive jurisdiction can operate as res judicata only on a matter which that Court could exclusively decide. In the present case the Small Cause Court had no exclusive jurisdiction to decide the question of title, nor to decide the fact or character of the plaintiff's or the defendant's possession. At most there was an exclusive jurisdiction to decide the liability to pay rent, which is not the same thing.

This is the true way of putting the matter. Similarly in 48 Bom 541² a Division Bench of the Bombay High Court said:

No doubt the Small Cause Court had found that the defendant was a tenant of the plaintiff and passed a decree for the plaintiff against the defendant for rent. But that finding of the Small Cause Court could not be res judicata under S. 11, Civil P. C., unless the Small Cause Court had jurisdiction to decide this suit. This suit is for possession and therefore the finding of the Small Cause Court is not res judicata.

This is conclusive and the finding of the Small Cause Court in this case that the defendant is the tenant of the plaintiff is not res judicata. For the benefit of the lower Courts in this Province, I would repeat that the law is that S. 11 must be applied where it can be applied and that the general doctrine of res judicata can only be invoked in cases where S. 11 is silent. A decision by a Court of exclusive jurisdiction is final and operates as res judicata where it has exclusive jurisdiction but not unless it has exclusive jurisdiction. This is only an apparent exception to the rule that Sec. 11 must be applied where it can be. In the present case if instead of suing for ejectment the Gaushala had sued in the Small Cause Court for rent, the previous judgment would have operated as res judicata. It cannot be res judicata in the present case because the prayer for ejectment takes the suit away from the jurisdiction of the Court of Small Causes. The respondent's counsel in arguments before me said he was willing to give up the prayer for ejectment; but it was the prayer for ejectment which led to the present suit being lodged in a regular Court. But for that prayer the suit would have been instituted in the Court of Small Causes. I therefore accept this appeal, but as the lower Appellate Court, although agreeing with the lower Court, did not give a definite finding on the other matters, saying for instance he "would have found it difficult to hold that the relationship of landlord and tenant is established between the parties", I remand the case to the lower Appellate Court for re-decision on the merits. The respondent is to pay the appellant's costs in this Court. The parties are to appear before the Senior Subordinate Judge on 5th August 1938, and ask for a date.

Principal and agent—Agent of match factory entering into contract with third person to promote sale of matches—Latter required to pay for goods before he was allowed to sell them—Profits of sale to go to him — Latter held not agent of former but only favoured buyer.

The main test to determine whether a person selling goods supplied by other is his agent is whether he is supposed to be selling his own goods when the time for sale comes or whether he is supposed to be selling the goods of his principal, for the liability of an agent to render accounts is based on the assumption that he is dealing with money or goods entrusted to him. [P 815 C 1]

An agent of a match factory entered into a contract with a third person to promote sale of matches. The latter was required to pay for the goods before he was allowed to sell them. The profits of the sale apparently went into the pockets of the latter though the agreement was silent on this point :

Judgment. — The plaintiff holds an agency under a Company in Calcutta for the sale of a certain brand of matches. In order to further the sale of these matches, the plaintiff entered into an agreement with the defendant on 18th January 1936. Under this agreement, the defendant undertook to sell not less than fifty cases a month, in return for which he was to receive a commission of Rs. 2 per case, together with a bonus or rebate in accordance with the terms fixed by the Company in Calcutta. The matches were to be supplied direct from Calcutta. But the actual form of dealings between the parties was that the defendant received supplies only on payment of the invoice value of the goods, the payment being made either to a Bank or to the plaintiff himself. Purchases of matches were also made direct from the plaintiff, but this is said to have been an arrangement independent of the agreement. The plaintiff has now sued the defendant for rendition of accounts as an agent. Having regard to the actual course of dealings between the parties, however, both the Courts below have come to the conclusion that the true relation between the plaintiff and the defendant was not that of principal and agent but of seller and purchaser. In coming to this conclusion, they have placed reliance on certain remarks made by the Privy Council in *A I R 1925 P C 161*¹ with regard to the trend of modern business in this respect. On this view the plaintiff would not be entitled to demand an account and the suit has accordingly been dismissed.

If regard is had to the written agreement alone, it will fit in equally well with an ordinary contract of agency, since no mention is made of the manner in which the goods are to be sold, and it might be assumed that the intention of the parties was to defer payment for the goods until they had been sold, which would be the ordinary course of an agency business. It seems, however, clear from the evidence that this was never the intention of the parties. The wording of the agreement does not exclude the possibility of a different intention. If the intention was that the defendant should pay for the goods before they were sold, the agreement would not constitute an agency in the ordinary legal sense but would merely be a method of favouring a particular buyer. The fact that the word "agent" is often used in a loose sense, which does not attract to itself all the legal implications of the term, appears to have received judicial notice for the first time in (1871) 6 Ch A 397,² a case which was followed in 21 I C 322.³ It is to be observed, however, that both these cases were concerned only with relations of a supposed agent to a third party, whereas in the present instance we have to deal with relations between the supposed agent and a person appointed. It is quite possible that the person may stand in the position of a principal towards a third party and yet stand in the fiduciary position of an agent towards the person under whose instructions the goods are being sold.

The main test, it seems to me, is whether the so-called agent is supposed to be selling his own goods when the time for sale comes or whether he is supposed to be selling the goods of his principal, for the liability of an agent to render accounts is based on the assumption that he is dealing with money or goods entrusted to him. In the Chancery case, the agent was not expected to pay for the goods until he had sold them although he then became the purchaser, and he could reasonably be regarded as an agent up to this point. In the present instance the defendant had to pay for the goods before he was allowed to sell them and it would be difficult to say that he was ever entrusted with anything for which he was liable to account. The profits from sale were apparently to go into his own pocket and the agreement is again silent on this point.

The only argument advanced to support the proposition that the property in the goods was to remain with the plaintiff is a reference in the agreement to godown rent. This is a provision which would more naturally arise in a true contract of agency, but I do not think it is altogether inconsistent with the position of a favoured buyer. It seems clear from the course of dealings that the defendant was entitled to treat the goods as his own from the moment that he paid for them and was not expected to account for the profits made by selling. In this connexion it is pertinent to examine the relief which the plaintiff claims. So far as I have been able to discover in the course of arguments, it is not suggested that the defendant should make over the profits from the sale of matches less his fixed commission, as he would have to do under a true contract of agency, but the plaintiff simply requires certain information which will enable him to claim concessions from his own principal. I do not think that this is what is meant by an agent's liability to account.

In this connexion it is to be observed that the written agreement reads on the face of it as though the defendant was being appointed a sub-agent on behalf of the Company in Calcutta, in which case the plaintiff would not be able to sue in his own name. In order to meet this objection the plaintiff has been forced to take up the position that the agreement was one between himself and the defendant as principal and agent. His difficulties appear to have arisen from this cause, since the carrying out of many of the terms in the agreement is dependent on his relations with the Company in Calcutta. His own relations with the Company may have been those of an agent; but it seems to me that his agreement with the defendant was intended to confer upon the latter only the position of a favoured buyer. For these reasons I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Contempt—Contempt of Court — Complaint charging certain persons of abduction — Pending proceedings, complainant taking copy of complaint to editor of newspaper—Editor publishing complaint with scare headlines and comments of his own—Publication held contempt of Court.

A complaint was filed against certain persons charging them of abduction. While the proceedings were pending in the Courts, the complainant took a copy of the complaint to an editor of newspaper. The editor, without making any enquiry as to what happened, proceeded to publish the complaint with scare headlines. The headlines consisted of the following: "A case of abduction against . . . and his father . . ." "A sensation of extreme type has been created in the educated circle on account of the case":

Held that the publication was bound to tend to prejudice the hearing of the case and hence amounted to contempt. [P 816 O 1, 2]

Sohan Lal (Respondent No. 2) in person.

Young C. J. — Notice is issued to the four respondents to show cause why they should not be committed or otherwise punished for contempt of Court. The facts are that on 13th August 1937, a complaint was filed by Sayad Iqbal Hussain in the Court of the Tahsildar complaining that his wife had been enticed away by several persons whose names it is not necessary to mention. On 17th August the Magistrate in the preliminary enquiry took a statement by the complainant and proceeded thereon to issue warrants against the respondents to the complaint. The respondents took proceedings then before the Judge in revision asking that the complaint should be quashed. The learned Judge referred the matter to the High Court recommending that the complaint as against some of the respondents should be quashed. The learned High Court Judge on a further application by the respondents ordered the whole case to come up to be considered by him on the question whether the complaint be quashed against all these respondents. On 16th December 1937 the complainant Sayad Iqbal Hussain took a copy of his complaint to the editor of the newspaper 'Daily Guru' four months after the complaint had been filed and while the matter was pending both in the High Court and in the lower Court as against some of the respondents to the complaint. Without making the least enquiry as to what had happened, the editor proceeded to publish the complaint with scare headlines. The headlines consisted of the following :

"A CASE OF ABDUCTION AGAINST AND HIS FATHER"

This case has created a sensation in all the educational Muslim circle of Lahore. A sensation of extreme type has been created in the educated circle of Lahore particularly in the Muslim educated circle on account of a case. The facts of the case are alleged as follows :

Thereafter appeared the complaint in which gross allegations were made against the respondents to the complaint. It is to be noted moreover that the whole of the complaint was not published. That this publication amounts to contempt there can be no doubt. This is not a case of a newspaper reporting bona fide the proceedings in a Court. As noted above the complaint was taken to the editor of the paper by the complainant himself four months after the complaint had been filed and while the proceedings were actually pending in the High Court for quashing the complaint. To add to the mischief the paper proceeds to publish above the complaint its own comments. It is quite clear that nothing could be more in the nature of contempt than action of this character. It was bound to tend to prejudice the hearing of the case. It is quite clear that the publication by Sayad Iqbal Hussain was malicious. We suspect also that the same influence affected the newspaper. As regards the editor, he has appeared in Court. Counsel on his behalf has offered an abject apology and further in the issue of the paper dated 21st December 1937 the paper itself published an apology to one of the respondents in the case. This was however after the High Court had the matter of the contempt before it to the knowledge of the newspaper. The editor is a youth who apparently ought not to hold such a responsible position. His father is the printer and publisher of the newspaper and no doubt the chief person interested. He however apologizes. In fact all the respondents admit the error and the contempt and offer an apology.

We take this into consideration. As regards the keeper of the Press he is in this case under no liability and the proceedings against him are dismissed. With regard to the editor and the printer they will be jointly and severally liable for the payment of Rs. 100 costs. This leaves the question of Sayad Iqbal Hussain who is really responsible for the publication of the contempt and he also clearly had this contemptuous article published in order to bring pressure to bear upon the respondents. We order that he pay a fine of Rs. 200 and Rs. 50 costs. In all these cases, if the respondents to this petition fail to pay the amount of fine and costs within two months they will undergo a sentence of one month's imprisonment. Costs will be paid half to Government and half to the petitioners.

Criminal Revn. No. 246 of 1938, Decided on 4th April 1938, reported by Sess. Judge, Multan, D/- 4th February 1938.

Motor Vehicles Act (8 of 1914), S. 2 — Houses situated on two sides of motor stand of petitioner—City wall running along third side — Fourth side open looking towards public street — Land privately owned and leased out to petitioners—Deep city drain passing through portion leased — Bridge constructed to cross city drain — Lorries of petitioner parked over the bridge—Held that the place was not public place within meaning of S. 2.

The mere fact that a place would be styled as a public place for the purposes of the Gambling Act and the Penal Code, does not necessarily mean that it is a public place as defined in S. 2, Motor Vehicles Act. To make it a public place under the Motor Vehicles Act, it must be a road, street, way or a place over which the public have a right to pass or to which the public are granted access.

On the two sides of the motor stand of the petitioners, there were houses while the city wall ran along the third side. The fourth side, however, was open and looked towards a public street. The land was privately owned and had been leased by the petitioners. Through the portion leased by them ran a deep city drain which could only be crossed by means of a bridge and it was over the bridge that the lorries of the petitioners were parked. Thus to all intents and purposes the petitioners were keeping their lorries in an enclosed place except that apparently there was no gate at the bridge :

Held that the place was not a public place within the meaning of S. 2, Motor Vehicles Act : Criminal Revn. No. 922 of 1934, Rel. on; (1930) 1 K B 443, Disting. [P 818 C 2]

Shabir Ahmad — for Petitioners.

Mohammad Monir, Asst. to Advocate-General—for the Crown.

Facts. — On 18th March 1937, a plot of land situate in front of the Multan Municipality's lorry stand was leased by the owner Rai Bahadur Lala Madan Gopal to Faiz Mohammad, accused, who executed a deed of lease in favour of the owner Ex. P-A. This plot is being used as a private lorry stand for collecting passengers. Faiz Mohammad, lessee of this plot, and Abdul Hakim, lorry driver, were tried and convicted for breach of Rule 53 (a) of the Punjab Motor Vehicles Rules in that on 25th March 1937 Faiz Mohammad, accused, allowed Abdul Hakim, accused, to park his lorry at a public place for the purpose of collecting passengers which had not been approved for the purpose by the registering authority. Each of them was sentenced to a fine of Rs. 25.

The petition is forwarded to the Hon'ble High Court for revision of the Magistrate's order on the following grounds : The sole question for determination is whether the premises in question come within the definition of a public place. R. 53 (a) with the infringement of which the accused are charged originally read as follows :

A person in charge of a light motor-bus shall not allow such light motor-bus to stand elsewhere than at a place appointed for the purpose or loiter for the purpose of being hired in any public place.

The present rule which was amended by Punjab Government Notification No. 14761 dated 25th May 1933 reads as follows :

The person in charge of a light motor-bus shall not allow such light motor-bus to loiter in any public place for the purpose of collecting passengers or goods or to stand for the aforesaid purpose in any public place other than the one approved by the registering authority for the purpose.

It is undeniable that the lorry of Abdul Hakim in this case stood for the purpose of collecting passengers in premises which had not been approved by the registering authority. A comparison of the wording of the rules would go to show that the rigidity of the old rule has to some extent been relaxed. The definition of a public place is given in S. 2, Motor Vehicles Act. It means :

A road, street, way or other place whether a thoroughfare or not to which the public are granted access or over which they have a right to pass.

The plot of land in the present case is admittedly owned by a private individual and the mere fact that it is used by a motor-bus cannot convert its private into a public character. As the definition clearly shows in order to describe a piece of land as a public place there must be a grant of access to the public or the public must have a right to pass over it. It is quite clear that in the present case the public cannot claim a right to pass over this plot. The word 'grant' in the definition seems to have been used in the same sense as dedication. The private place may become a public place if it is dedicated by the owner for the public use. There must be an animus dedicandi of which the user by the public is evidence. There is nothing of the sort in the present case. The character and the user of the site in the present case depends upon the sweet will of the owner and his lessee. It is open to them to shut out the public at any time they liked. It will be ridiculous to describe a place as a public place when access to it depends not upon any grant or dedication but upon individual wish and expediency. I therefore recommend that the conviction in this case should be quashed and the fine refunded.

Order. — Faiz Mohammad allowed Abdul Hakim to park his lorry in land leased by the former from Rai Bahadur Lala Madan Gopal and both Faiz Mohammad and Abdul Hakim have been convicted for a breach of Rule 53 (a) of the Punjab Motor Vehicles Rules and sentenced to a fine of Rs. 25 each. The learned Sessions Judge of Multan has forwarded the case to this Court with the recommendation that the convictions be quashed. By S. 2, Motor Vehicles Act "public place" means a road, street, way or other place, whether a thoroughfare or not, to which the public are granted access or over which they have a right to pass, while Rule 53 (a) runs as follows :

The person in charge of a light motor bus shall not allow such light motor bus to loiter in any public place for the purpose of collecting passengers or goods or to stand for the aforesaid purpose in any public place other than one approved by the registering authority for the purpose.

According to the evidence of Amir Bakhsh there are two authorized lorry stands in Multan, one owned by the Municipal Committee of which Amir Bakhsh is the contractor and the other owned by a Mr. Sham Sundar. In cross-examination however, he admitted that there were 8 or 9 other unauthorized lorry stands in the city which had been in existence for many years. This witness being the contractor, who has paid a large sum to the Municipal Committee for the lease of their lorry stand, has admitted that an attempt is being made to stop any other place from being used as a lorry stand except that from which he is trying to make as much profit as he can. From the evidence of Abdul Rehman, P. W. 3, it is established that on two sides of the motor stand of the petitioners there are houses while the city wall runs along the third side. The fourth side however is open and looks towards a public street. The land is privately owned and has been leased by the petitioners. Through the portion leased by them runs a deep city drain which can only be crossed by means of one bridge and it is over this bridge that the lorries are parked. To all intents and purposes therefore the petitioners were keeping their lorries in an enclosed place except that apparently there was no gate at the bridge.

It is true that for the purposes of the Gambling Act and for the purposes of the Indian Penal Code, this place would properly be styled a public place. But that does not necessarily mean that it is a public place as defined in S. 2, Motor Vehicles Act. From the description given, it causes no inconvenience to the public or to traffic, but it may cause the Municipal Committee to get a smaller sum for the lease of the motor stand which they auction to the highest bidder and which the Committee seems to want as a monopoly. As the rights of private citizens are concerned, the expression has to be construed strictly. The Crown principally relied on (1930) 1 K B 443.¹ The question involved there was whether a stage carriage was plying for hire in a "public place." "Stage carriage" is defined in S. 4, Metropolitan Public Carriage Act, 1869, but "public place" does not appear to be defined in that Act just as it is not defined in the Indian Penal Code or in the Indian Gambling Act. It is for that reason that under these two Indian Acts a public place has always been held to be a place where the public go, no matter whether they have a right to go or not. But to make it a public place under the Indian Motor Vehicles Act it must be a road, street, way or a place over which the public have a right to pass or to which the public are granted access. It is claimed that this is a place to which the public are granted access, although the site is privately owned and is a private place which the owner can keep as private as he likes. Because the lessee allows a limited number of persons to cross the bridge over the ditch to ride on his lorries, it is not sufficient in my opinion to make it a public place within the definition given in S. 2 of the Act. If any one other than a passenger tries to go there the lessee has the right to make him leave at once. He could put up a gate at the bridge and exclude everybody except passengers who have paid their fare. Could it then be said to be a public place, that is, a place to which the public are granted access. What is being done now without the gate, is very much the same and I do not see that there would be any difference in principle whether there were a gate or not. I have already come to the same conclusion in Cri. Revn. No. 922 of 1934, decided on 16th August 1934 and after consideration I see no reason to change my opinion. If the argument of the Crown is correct, a motor shop would be a public place and under R. 44 no motor display or exhibition in which more than five motors took part, could be permitted in any such shop without the previous sanction of the Inspector-General of Police whose decision is final. That would mean that a motor firm could not advertise that their new vehicles for the season had arrived and would be displayed or exhibited at their shop, unless sanction had been previously obtained from the Inspector-General of Police. The English case relied upon by the Crown is distinguishable from the present for the reason already given, namely that there is no definition in the English Act as to what a public place is and also because there was in that case no sort of barrier, physical or other, to prevent the ingress or egress of the public. For the reasons given, I accept the recommendation of the learned Sessions Judge and set aside the convictions of the two petitioners. The fines, if paid, will be refunded.

Civil Revn. No. 796 and 797 of 1937,
Decided on 7th February 1938.

Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), S. 6 (e)— Execution sale when complete stated—Act of insolvency occurs when property is sold and not when sale is confirmed.

Execution sale is complete when the property is knocked down to the highest bidder and it is not open to the Court thereafter to offer the property to any person who may be prepared to purchase it for higher amount: A I R 1936 Lah 555, Foll.

[P 820 C 2]

Therefore an act of insolvency in S. 6 (e) occurs when the property is sold, and not when the sale is confirmed. Hence a petition by a creditor must be made within three months from the date of sale and not that of confirmation: A I R 1933 Cal 564,

Order.—This judgment will dispose of Civil Revisions Nos. 796 and 797 of 1937.
The petitioner, Lal Chand Chaudhri, has been adjudicated an insolvent by the Insolvency Judge, Lyallpur, on two petitions presented by Bogha Ram. The order has been confirmed on appeal by the District Judge. On revision, it is urged that the orders of the Courts below are contrary to law. On 15th January 1935, the respondent Bogha Ram who is admittedly one of the creditors of the petitioner, presented an application for his adjudication as an insolvent. The act of insolvency alleged to have been committed by the petitioner was that he had transferred certain property of his to another creditor, named Gurditta Mal who is related to the petitioner, and that in doing so he gave him fraudulent preference. While this petition was pending, another petition was presented by the same creditor on 27th April 1935, in which several other acts of insolvency were alleged to have been committed by the insolvent.

Of these the Insolvency Judge held the following two to be proved:

(1) that in execution of a decree which had been obtained by the wife of the insolvent against him, one-half share in a house belonging to the insolvent had been sold, and

(2) that on 12th February 1935, the insolvent had leased six squares of land to a creditor, Wasandha Ram-Kishan Chand, who had obtained a decree on an award against him and had thus given him fraudulent preference over the other creditors.

The trial Judge held the three "acts of insolvency" above mentioned to be proved and declared the petitioner insolvent. On appeal the learned District Judge agreed with the findings of the Insolvency Judge with regard to the first two acts, but did not give any finding as to the third. Before me, it is urged that the debt in favour of Gurditta Mal was genuine debt, that there had been litigation between him and the insolvent, and that in the circumstances of the case it should be held that the transfer in favour of Gurditta Mal was effected as a result of "pressure" by Gurditta Mal on him. It was also pointed out that the transfer had really been effected in July 1934, and not on 24th October 1934, as found by the Court and therefore it was more than three months before the date of the presentation of the petition for insolvency. I have heard the petitioner's counsel at length and have examined the record, but cannot find any adequate ground for dissenting from the conclusions of the Court below. The finding that the sale had been effected on 24th October 1934, is one of fact, based on evidence, and on examining the terms of the compromise between Gurditta Mal and Lal Chand and the other materials on the record, I am of opinion that no other conclusion was possible. The Courts have also concurrently found that no pressure had been exercised by Gurditta Mal on the insolvent in the matter of the transfer in question. On this point again, the materials on the record fully justify the conclusions of the Courts below. There is no proof whatever of the alleged pressure and it appears that the transaction had been effected by the transferor of his free will and accord, and with a view to give preference to a favoured creditor. I hold therefore that the Courts below had come to a correct conclusion in holding the first act of insolvency proved.

With regard to the sale of a half-share in the house of the insolvent, effected in execution of the decree obtained by the wife of the insolvent against him, the contention raised is that the sale, though effected in execution of the decree of the wife on 27th March 1935, had not been 'confirmed,' when the petition for insolvency had been presented. It was pointed out that both the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor had filed objections under O. 21, R. 90, alleging irregularities in publishing and conducting the sale, and that until the disposal of those objections and confirmation of sale by the Court, it could not be said that there was a 'sale' within the meaning of Cl. (e) of S. 6, Provincial Insolvency Act. The learned counsel has not been able to cite any authority in support of his contention, and he concedes that the only ruling in which this matter has been considered is against him. In A I R 1933 Cal 564¹ it was held that the act of insolvency in S. 6 (e) occurs when the property is sold, and not when the sale is confirmed. Hence a petition by a creditor must be made within three months from the date of sale and not that of confirmation.

With this conclusion I respectfully agree. The learned counsel referred me to a number of cases in which the question raised was whether a bidder could retract his bid after the sale had been completed by the Officer of the Court but before it had been confirmed by the Court. The rulings have no direct bearing on the point. It may be stated however that the view taken therein has been dissented from by a Division Bench of this Court in A I R 1936 Lah 555.² In that case it was held that :

When the officer of the Court or such other person as the Court may appoint to conduct a sale as provided in O. 21, R. 65 knocks down the property to the highest bidder, such person must be deemed to have been declared to be purchaser of such property. The sale is complete when the property is knocked down to highest bidder and it is not open to the Court thereafter to offer the property to any person who may be prepared to purchase it for higher amount.

I agree in holding that the second act of insolvency is also proved. In view of my findings given above, it is not necessary to go into the question as to whether the lease of six squares of land for one year in favour of Wasandha Ram Kishan Chand did or did not amount to an "act of insolvency." The petition for revision fails and is dismissed with costs.

First Appeal No. 31 of 1938, Decided on 21st June 1938, from decree of Sub-Judge, First Class, Gujrat, D/- 10th November 1937.

Punjab Alienation of Land Act (13 of 1900), S. 14 — Permanent alienation of agricultural land in favour of non-agriculturist — Sanction refused by Deputy Commissioner — Alienee cannot resile from transaction — Transaction not being void, S. 65, Contract Act, does not apply — Alienee cannot claim refund of money paid under alienation.

When a permanent alienation of an agricultural land by an agriculturist in favour of a member of a non-agriculturist tribe is effected, it is not void. If sanction of the Deputy Commissioner has not been given in advance it takes effect immediately as a usufructuary mortgage permitted under Section 6 (a) of the Act. If later the Deputy Commissioner does not sanction the sale it continues as a usufructuary mortgage in the terms permitted by S. 6 (a). If an alienee enters into such transaction, he comes under the terms of the Act and is bound by it. His sale compulsorily becomes a usufructuary mortgage as permitted by S. 6 (a) and he cannot resile from transaction when permission of the Deputy Commissioner is refused. As the transaction does not become void, S. 65, Contract Act, does not apply and the alienee is not therefore entitled to sue for refund of the money paid by him as consideration for the alienation : A I R 1934 Lah 979 and A I R 1930 Lah 331, Disapproved ; A I R 1935 Lah 401, Disting ; A I R 1937 Lah 408, Rel. on. some land by a deed, dated 3rd July 1922, and more land by a deed, dated 10th July 1924, for Rs. 2000 and Rs. 1500 respectively, these deeds being registered on the dates of their execution, although this was against the provisions of S. 17, Punjab Alienation of Land Act. It has been correctly found by the trial Court that both the vendor and the vendee knew that the vendee was a non-agriculturist and could not therefore purchase land from the vendor who was an agriculturist. Later, defendant 2 acquired an interest in the land and he was added as a defendant. Some time later, namely on 17th May 1933, the vendor moved the Deputy Commissioner of Gujrat to revoke the mutations sanctioning the transfers. This he refused to do and defendant 1 carried the matter to the Financial Commissioners. The revision before them was accepted on 3rd August 1934 and the Deputy Commissioner was ordered under the provisions of S. 3 (3), Punjab Alienation of Land Act, to inquire into the circumstances of the alienation and either to sanction the sales or refuse sanction. In the latter case it was the duty of the Deputy Commissioner, under the provisions of S. 14, to convert the sales into usufructuary mortgages in form (a) permitted by S. 6 for such term not exceeding 20 years and on such conditions as the Deputy Commissioner considered to be reasonable. Accordingly the Deputy Commissioner refused to sanction the sales and converted them into usufructuary mortgages for the full term of 20 years permitted. Thereafter, the plaintiff instituted the present suit for a declaration that he was the absolute owner of the land in question owing to his adverse possession for more than 12 years and in the alternative he sued for the refund of Rs. 8000 as the sale consideration, together with the cost of improvements effected by him. Various pleas were raised in defence. The trial Judge held that there was no question of adverse possession but he considered that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for refund of the purchase money, Rupees 3500, together with the cost of improvements effected to the value of Rs. 2170, total Rs. 5670, and he granted the plaintiff a decree for that amount with costs against the defendants, at the same time giving the plaintiff a lien on the land for that amount. Against this decision the defendants have appealed and the Deputy Commissioner has put in a revision petition under S. 21-A, Punjab Alienation of Land Act, on the ground that the effect of the decree was to contravene the provisions of the Punjab Alienation of Land Act, inasmuch as a lien on the land to the extent of the decretal amount had been ordered for an unspecified period, which was against the provisions of the Act.

Under S. 3 of the Act a person is at liberty to make a permanent alienation of his land if he is a member of an agricultural tribe, as the vendor here is, only to a person who is a member of the same tribe or of a tribe in the same group. In the present case, the plaintiff vendee is not a member of an agricultural tribe at all. Where such a sale as the present is effected, it is enacted by Sec. 3 (2) that such a permanent alienation of land shall not take effect as such unless and until sanction is given thereto by a Deputy Commissioner, and it is further provided that such sanction may be given after the act of alienation. By S. 3 (3) the Deputy Commissioner has full discretion to grant or refuse sanction. Then comes S. 14 which provides that in the case of such permanent alienation as the present, which under Sec. 3 is not to take effect as such until the sanction of a Deputy Commissioner is given thereto, it shall, until such sanction is given or if such sanction has been refused, take effect as a usufructuary mortgage in form (a) permitted by Sec. 6 for such term not exceeding 20 years and on such conditions as the Deputy Commissioner considers to be reasonable. The words are mandatory and the alienation shall take effect immediately as a usufructuary mortgage in form (a) permitted by Sec. 6 and also takes effect in the same form if such sanction has been refused. In the present case therefore ab initio the alienation took effect as a usufructuary mortgage under the law and when later sanction was refused it continued as a usufructuary mortgage under the law in form (a) permitted by Sec. 6, the Deputy Commissioner in the present case allowing the full term of 20 years. The form of usufructuary mortgage provided for by S. 6 (a) is that by which the whole mortgage is automatically redeemed without payment of any sum of money at the expiry of the term fixed by the Deputy Commissioner or which is agreed upon in the first instance. There are other forms of mortgage provided for in S. 6, but these we are not concerned with. S. 9 further enacts that if a member of an agricultural tribe makes a mortgage of his land in any manner or form not permitted under the Act, the Deputy Commissioner has authority to revise and alter the terms of the mortgage so as to bring it in accordance with such form of mortgage permitted by the Act as the mortgagee appears to him to be equitably entitled to claim. This Section is only mentioned to show that the Deputy Commissioner has again full power to alter a mortgage and must do so. Lastly, S. 21 of the Act runs as follows :

21 (1). A Civil Court shall not have jurisdiction in any matter which the Provincial Government or a Revenue Officer is empowered by this Act to dispose of.

21 (2). No Civil Court shall take cognizance of the manner in which the Provincial Government or any Revenue Officer exercises any power vested in it or in him by or under this Act.

It is clear from this Section that no Civil Court shall take cognizance of the manner in which the Provincial Government or any Revenue Officer exercises any power vested in it or in him by or under this Act. It follows from the provisions of the Act that when such a permanent alienation, as is involved in the present case, is effected, it is not void. If sanction of the Deputy Commissioner has not been given in advance, it takes effect under the law as a usufructuary mortgage permitted under S. 6 (a) of the Act. If later the Deputy Commissioner sanctions the sale, it becomes an out-and-out sale. If he does not, it continues as a usufructuary mortgage in the terms permitted by S. 6 (a) of the Act, the longest period of possession for the automatic redemption of the mortgage being 20 years. If an alienee enters into such a transaction, he comes under the terms of the Act and is bound by it. His sale compulsorily becomes a usufructuary mortgage as permitted by S. 6 (a) of the Act. That is the law and he cannot avoid the law by stating that he resiles from the transaction when permission of the Deputy Commissioner is refused.

There is no question of the application of S. 65, Contract Act. That Section is to the effect that when an agreement is discovered to be void or when a contract becomes void, any person who has received any advantage under such agreement or contract is bound to restore it or to make compensation for it to the person from whom he received it. The present transaction has not become void. Under the law it automatically becomes a usufructuary mortgage for such term, not exceeding 20 years, as the Deputy Commissioner fixes. It is obvious therefore that S. 65, Contract Act, does not apply and that the plaintiff is not entitled to sue for refund of the money. In this respect we do not agree with the single Judge decision, A I R 1934 Lah 979.¹ Nor we are in agreement with another single Judge decision, A I R 1930 Lah 331,² which held that such a lien as the trial Judge allowed in the present case was not in contravention of the Punjab Alienation of Land Act. A I R 1935 Lah 401³ is not in point, the provisions of the Punjab Colonization of Government Lands Act being entirely different from those of the Punjab Alienation of Land Act. That case therefore does not help towards the decision of the present case. The correct position appears to have been laid down in A I R 1937 Lah 408.⁴

It was not contended before us that the possession of the vendee was adverse and obviously from the provisions of the Act already quoted, there could be no question of adverse possession, the transaction taking effect as a usufructuary mortgage. All that was contended before us was that the transaction could be avoided by the alienee when the Deputy Commissioner refused sanction to the permanent alienation taking effect. It has already been made clear that he has no such option but that the transaction automatically becomes a usufructuary mortgage in the terms permitted by S. 6 (a) of the Act, the maximum period for automatic redemption being one of 20 years. For the reasons given, we accept the appeal and dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs throughout. On this decision the revision petition put in by the Deputy Commissioner becomes infructuous and may therefore for the present be struck off the register of pending cases. Had it been necessary to decide it, our decision would have been that the decree did offend against the provisions of the Punjab Alienation of Land Act in giving an indefinite mortgage of the land for the amount of the purchase money together with the value of the improvements.

Order.—This order will dispose of Civil Revision Nos. 317 and 318 of 1938. The facts are these. On 15th April, 1936, the Saraswati Sugar Syndicate Limited, Lahore, instituted a suit against the firm Chandu Mal Ghanshyam Das through Ghanshyam Das and impleaded Ghanshyam Das also as a defendant in the case. On 9th June, no one appeared on behalf of the defendants and an ex parte decree was made against them. On 18th July 1936, Ghanshyam Das made an application for setting aside the ex parte decree on the ground that he had not been properly served and that inasmuch as he was absent from his place of residence for about four months prior to the institution of the suit, a false service was manufactured against him. On 29th January 1937, the trial Court dismissed his application, but on appeal the District Judge allowed the application and set aside the ex parte decree. He however added that the decree had been set aside against the firm only. At the trial the question arose as to whether the decree against Ghanshyam Das could stand in the circumstances and the decision went against Ghanshyam Das. He again made an appeal to the same District Judge who interpreted his previous order to mean that the decree as against Ghanshyam Das had not been set aside. Civil Revision No. 317 of 1938 has been preferred against the original order of the District Judge allowing the appeal but setting aside the decree against the firm only and Civil Revision No. 318 of 1938 has been preferred from the subsequent order of the District Judge refusing to set aside the order of the trial Court dated 2nd February 1938.

Order 30, Civil P. C., deals with suits by or against firms and persons carrying on business in names other than their own. R. 1 lays down that any two or more persons claiming or being liable as partners and carrying on business in British India may sue or be sued in the name of the firm (if any) of which such persons were partners at the time of the accruing of the cause of action and further says that any party to a suit may in such case apply to the Court for a statement of the names and addresses of the persons who were, at the time of the accruing of the cause of action, partners in such firm, to be furnished in such manner as the Court may direct. Sub-r. (2) of R. 1 enacts that where persons sue or are sued as partners in the name of their firm, it shall, in the case of any pleading or other document required by the Code of Civil Procedure to be signed, verified or certified by the plaintiff or the defendant, suffice if such pleading or other document is signed, verified or certified by any one of such persons.

Rule 3 provides that where persons are sued as partners in the name of their firm, the summons shall be served either upon any one or more of the partners or at the principal place at which the partnership business is carried on, upon any person having, at the time of service, the control or management of the partnership business there, as the Court may direct. R. 4 lays down that where two or more persons may sue or be sued in the name of a firm and any of such persons dies whether before the institution or during the pendency of any suit, it shall not be necessary to join the legal representative of the deceased as a party to the suit. R. 6, says that where persons are sued as partners in the name of their firm, they shall appear individually in their own names, but all subsequent proceedings shall, nevertheless, continue in the name of the firm. R. 7, absolves the person having the control or management of the partnership business from appearing unless he is a partner of the firm sued.

It would thus appear that the principal defendant in the case is the firm and so long as the firm is represented, proceedings can continue. It follows, therefore, that the addition of the names of the individual partners is not obligatory and that the suit can proceed even in the absence of the partners' names. In 77 I C 1055,¹ plaintiff had brought a suit against the firm M and described the defendant C as the manager and owner of the shop M. It was subsequently discovered that C had died before the institution of the suit. A Division Bench of the Bombay High Court held in these circumstances that the suit was in substance, though not in form, against the firm M and the addition of the words "C as the manager and owner of the shop" in the description of the defendant was mere surplusage and that consequently it was not necessary to bring on the record the legal representatives of C and the suit could continue against the firm M as having been properly filed on the date of its original institution. This being so, the addition of the name of Ghanshyam Das was mere surplusage and the suit against the firm could proceed even in his absence. His name however having been mentioned in the plaint as a defendant in addition to the firm, the question is whether the decree which was made against both the defendants was not set aside in toto on the application made by Ghanshyam Das under Order 9, Rule 13.

There is a clear Proviso to R. 13 which says that where the decree is of such a nature that it cannot be set aside as against that defendant only who applies, it may be set aside as against all or any of the other defendants also. It is clear that the only reason for setting aside the ex parte decree in this case was the absence of Ghanshyam Das from the place of his residence and it was on this account that it had been found that no proper service had been effected on the defendants. It would be anomalous in these circumstances to say that the decree as against Ghanshyam Das stood and that it was set aside only in relation to the firm. This was the decree to which the Proviso pre-eminently applied and the District Judge had, in my view, in the exercise of his jurisdiction committed an illegality in not setting aside the decree in toto and in confining his order to the firm alone. The maintaining of the District Judge's order could result in grave injustice and even if there was any technicality in favour of the respondent, I will be disposed to amend the order of the District Judge on this ground alone. I therefore allow the petition for revision submitted against the order of the District Judge, dated 24th November 1937, and amend the order to the extent of setting aside the ex parte decree both against the firm and Ghanshyam Das. In this view of the case it is not necessary to dispose of Civil Revision No. 318 of 1938. The case will now be remanded to the trial Court for disposal in accordance with law against both the defendants. There will be no order as to costs.

Where the appellant raises a point that the Senior Subordinate Judge had omitted to determine one of the points raised by the appellant, namely that the reversioner had no right to succeed to the property of the deceased in the presence of daughter and her son according to Hindu law, the appellant is not raising any question of the existence or validity of a custom and in the circumstances the appeal does not fall within the purview of S. 41 (3): A I R 1938 Lah 33, Disting. [P 825 C 1]

Judgment.—One Harnam, an Aggarwal Mahajan, died on 27th September 1925 and his property was taken possession of by his daughter Mt. Sarti and her son Mutsaddi. Mt. Sarti and Mutsaddi sold a house out of this property in favour of Mt. Bholi for Rs. 400 on 18th April 1933. Thereupon the plaintiffs claiming to be the reversioners of Harnam instituted a suit to challenge the alienation. Mutsaddi resisted the suit contending that he was the adopted son of Harnam. In the alternative, it was also pleaded that the plaintiffs had no right to succeed to the property in the presence of the daughter and the daughter's son of Harnam, according to the Hindu Dharma Shastras by which the parties were governed. The trial Court dismissed the suit. On appeal the learned Senior Subordinate Judge held that the defendants had failed to prove that any adoption had taken place or that the custom of adoption obtained. On these findings he accepted the appeal and decreed the plaintiffs' suit with costs. From this decision Mt. Bholi, defendant, has preferred the present appeal. The only point raised by the learned counsel for the appellant is that the Senior Subordinate Judge had omitted to determine one of the points raised by the appellant, namely that the plaintiffs had no right to succeed to the property in the presence of Mt. Sarti and her son Mutsaddi according to Hindu law. The learned counsel for the respondents conceded that this point had not been determined by the learned Senior Subordinate Judge but he contended that the defendants were not entitled to agitate the point in the present appeal, as they had obtained no certificate from the learned Senior Subordinate Judge under S. 41 (3), Punjab Courts Act, on the question of custom involved. In support of this contention he relied on 18 Lah 642.¹ The facts of that case were however quite different. In the present case the appellant is not raising any question of the existence or validity of a custom and in the circumstances the present appeal does not appear to me to fall within the purview of S. 41 (3), Punjab Courts Act. I accordingly accept this appeal and remand the case to the learned Senior Subordinate Judge for decision of the aforesaid point on which he has given no finding. The stamp on appeal will be refunded. Costs will follow final decision. Parties are directed to appear before the learned Senior Subordinate Judge on 1st June 1938.

Civil Revn. No. 807 of 1937, Decided on 18th January 1938, from decree of Small Cause Court Judge, Delhi, D/- 14th June 1937.

(a) Contract — Mandi contract with pacca ahrti of Bombay A at Delhi placing with B a pacca ahrti of Bombay order for forward transaction of certain bales of cotton and undertaking to pay mandi — Contract held complete between parties and A held liable for mandi and loss suffered by B.

One A at Delhi placed with B a pacca ahrti of Bombay through his agent at Delhi an order for a forward transaction of 100 bales of Broach cotton asking B "to debit the amount of the 'mandi' in his khata," and undertaking "to pay the amount thereof as soon as a telegram was received." He also agreed to pay brokerage. The transaction was of the nature of what are called 'mandi' contracts in the Bombay market. The agent at once communicated by wire the contents of the order to B at Bombay, who entered into a forward contract of April-May delivery at the current market rate, and the next day he wired back to the agent, that the order had been placed at Rs 208-12-0 per candy at a (mandi) premium of Rs 7-8-0. Three days later, the agent communicated this to A who failed to pay the amount of the 'mandi' as agreed upon, in spite of demand by B. The rate varied to the disadvantage of A and he repudiated the contract, whereupon B sold the transaction to another party at a loss :

Held that there was no question of an "offer" by A and its "acceptance" by B. There was a completed contract between the parties and A was liable to pay the amount of the 'mandi' and he was also liable to pay B the loss which the latter had suffered in the transaction, together with brokerage at the stipulated rate : A I R 1922 Bom 408, Ref. [P 826 C 2]

(b) Contract Act (1872), S. 30 — Teji mandi contracts are not wagers without proof that common intention of parties was to deal only in difference.

Teji mandi contracts cannot be held to be wagers merely on their apparent nature and characteristic, without proof of the fact that the common intention of the contracting parties at the time of entering into the particular contract in question was to deal only in differences and in no circumstances to call for, or give, delivery : A I R 1922 Bom 408 and A I R 1933 Bom 348, Rel. on. [P 826 C 2]

Order.—The plaintiff brought a suit for recovery of Rs. 253.13.0 as damages for breach of contract, other expenses and interest. The suit has been dismissed by the Judge, Small Cause Court, on the finding that there was no completed contract between the parties, and that the transaction was of a wagering character. The plaintiff has come in revision under S. 25 of Act 9 of 1887. After examining the record and hearing counsel, I have no doubt that the decision of the learned Judge is erroneous and must be set aside. The plaintiff is a pakka ahrti of Bombay, who has an agent named Daulat Ram, at Delhi. The defendant works in Delhi under the name and style of Messrs. Kanhya Lal-Balak Ram. On 3rd February 1934, the defendant at Delhi placed with the plaintiff, through his agent Daulat Ram, an order (Ex. P-1) for a forward transaction of 100 bales of Broach cotton, April-May delivery, asking the plaintiff "to debit the amount of the 'mandi' in their khata," and undertaking "to pay the amount thereof as soon as a telegram was received." He also agreed to pay brokerage at the rate of seven annas per cent. The transaction was of the nature of what are called 'mandi' contracts in the Bombay market. Daulat Ram at once communicated by wire the contents of the order to the plaintiff at Bombay, who entered into a forward contract of April-May delivery at the current market rate, and the next day they wired back to Daulat Ram, that the order had been placed at Rs. 208-12-0 per candy at a (mandi) premium of Rs. 7-8-0. Three days later, Daulat Ram communicated this to the defendant. The defendant failed to pay the amount of the 'mandi' as agreed upon, in spite of demand by the plaintiff. The rate varied to the disadvantage of the defendant and he repudiated the contract, whereupon the plaintiff "sold the transaction" to another party at a loss.

The learned Judge has considered that the order contained in Ex. P-1 was merely an "offer" by the defendant to enter into a transaction, which would have become a completed contract only after "acceptance" of the "offer" by the plaintiff had been communicated to the defendant within a reasonable time. He also held that as in this case the acceptance was not communicated by Daulat Ram to the defendant until four days after the making of the "offer" by the latter, there was no binding contract. He has accordingly dismissed the suit.

The learned Judge has clearly misunderstood the nature of the transaction in dispute. It is quite clear from Ex. P-1 and the other evidence on the record that the transaction was of the nature of what are called "mandi" contracts with pacca ahrtis in the Bombay market. An account of these contracts will be found in 47 Bom 263¹ where its well-known incidents are summarized. The plaintiff is a pacca ahrti of Bombay, with whom several merchants of Delhi had been dealing, through his agent Daulat Ram, for 19 years, and there is no doubt that the defendant knew full well the nature of the contract. Obviously there was no question of an "offer" by the defendant and its "acceptance" by the plaintiff in this case. The terms of the document, Ex. P-1, clearly show that an order for entering into a transaction of 100 bales of cotton at the current market rate had been placed by the defendant with the plaintiff. The learned Judge appears to have been misled by some of the answers given by Daulat Ram to certain questions put to him, when examined as a witness, in which the words "offer" and "acceptance" were loosely used. Reading Daulat Ram's statement as a whole, there is no doubt as to what he really meant. On the evidence, it is quite clear that there was a completed contract between the parties, that the defendant failed to pay the amount of the 'mandi' when communicated to him, and that he is also liable to pay to the plaintiff the loss which the latter had suffered in the transactions together with brokerage at the stipulated rate.

The learned Judge is also in error in holding without any evidence on the record that the transaction was of a wagering nature. It is now well settled that transactions of this type cannot be held to be wagers merely on their apparent nature and characteristics, without proof of the fact that the common intention of the contracting parties at the time of entering into the particular contract in question was to deal only in differences and in no circumstances to call for, or give, delivery: 47 Bom 263¹ and A I R 1933 Bom 348.² Admittedly no evidence of such intention is forthcoming on the present record.

The plaintiff however is not entitled to charge any interest. No agreement to pay interest is proved, nor has any mercantile

I accept the petition for revision, set aside the judgment of the Court below and, in lieu thereof, pass a decree for Rs. 227-9-0 in favour of the plaintiff against the defendant. Respondents.

Civil Revn. No. 59 of 1938, Decided on 12th July 1938, from order of Sub-Judge, 1st Class, Amritsar, D/- 30th October 1937.

(a) Revision — Court having jurisdiction — Decision whether right or wrong is no ground for interference.

Where a Court has jurisdiction to decide points arising in a suit, whether his decision is right or wrong in law, that would not be a ground for interference in revision: A I R 1928 Lah 140, Rel. on. [P 827 C 2]

(b) Companies Act (1913), S. 152—Agreement for settlement by arbitration — Limited Company in Punjab being one of the parties — No specific reference to Arbitration Act—Arbitration Act held did not apply.

A company under the Companies Act stands in the Punjab on no different footing than a private individual governed by Punjab Act 1 of 1911. Therefore if an agreement between the parties of which one is a company makes no specific reference to the Arbitration Act, the Arbitration Act will not apply to the arbitration agreement between the parties: A I R 1936 Lah 721 (F B), Applied. [P 828 C 1]

Order.—This is a petition for revision of the order of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Amritsar, staying proceedings in a suit under S. 19, Arbitration Act. The parties entered into a contract for supply of certain goods, but the plaintiff firm refused to accept the goods on certain grounds, with the result that the defendant Company re-sold the goods and is alleged to have suffered a loss of Rs. 10,521-7-10. The defendant wanted to refer the dispute to arbitration in pursuance of the agreement between the parties but the plaintiff did not agree to do so and instituted a suit for a declaration that the defendant had no right to refer the matter in dispute to arbitration. The plaintiff prayed for an injunction restraining the defendants from making any reference to arbitration, but the defendants had in the meantime actually made a reference and obtained an award. So they opposed the application for an injunction about which notice had been served on them and at the same time made an application for stay of the suit. The latter application was opposed by the plaintiff on a large number of grounds but the learned Subordinate Judge rejected them and ordered the suit to be stayed under S. 19, Arbitration Act. The plaintiff has filed a petition for revision of this order.

The main points argued before me were:

- (1) The agreement was governed by Punjab Act 1 of 1911 and as it was not specifically stated in the agreement that the arbitration would be governed by the Arbitration Act, that Act did not apply and consequently the application for stay under Sec. 19, Arbitration Act, was not maintainable.
- (2) That the defendant Company having exercised its right of re-sale, the original contract of sale was rescinded and consequently the clause as regards reference to arbitration also ceased to have force.
- (3) The award given by the arbitrators to whom a reference was made by the defendants was void as it was admittedly given during the pendency of this suit and consequently the power to make a reference exhausted itself and there could be no fresh reference to arbitration. The suit must therefore proceed.

The learned Subordinate Judge has given his decision against the plaintiff on points Nos. (2) and (3). He had certainly jurisdiction to decide these points and whether his decision is right or wrong in law, that would not be a ground for interference in revision: 9 Lah 308.¹ The learned Subordinate Judge has however given no decision on point No. 1 and he seems to have acted with material irregularity in the exercise of his jurisdiction in staying the suit without deciding this point. The learned counsel for the respondent contended that the point should be considered to have been given up as it is not touched in the judgment and relied upon 4 Lah 364² in support of his argument. On behalf of the plaintiff, it was stated at the bar by his counsel, that as a matter of fact the point was never given up. The point was certainly included in the issue. It was the first and foremost point raised by the plaintiff and if it was dropped, one would have expected the learned Subordinate Judge to say so at any rate. In the circumstances of the case, I do not think it justifiable to assume that the point was dropped.

1. Sant Singh v. Mubarak Singh, (1928) 15 A I R Lah 140=106 I C 901=9 Lah 308=29 P L R 42.

2. Harjimal v. Devi Dittamal, (1924) 11 A I R Lah 107=77 I C 398=4 Lah 364.

The learned counsel for the respondent next urged that the point involves questions of fact and cannot therefore be gone into at this stage. However the point having been included in the issue, it was for the defendant to produce such evidence as they liked in support of the facts they wished to rely with reference to this point. They however led no evidence at all. Taking then the agreement between the parties to be executed at Amritsar, as it purports to be, the question which requires decision is whether, in the absence of any specific provision in the agreement that the arbitration will be governed by the Arbitration Act, that Act will apply. The only reply which the learned counsel for the respondent could make on this point was that the defendant being a limited company, the arbitration was governed by S. 152, Companies Act, and hence the arbitration must be held to be governed by the Arbitration Act. This contention does not appear to be tenable in view of the Full Bench decision of this Court reported in A I R 1936 Lah 721.³ It was held in that case that S. 152, Companies Act, is only an enabling Section and confers powers on a company to resort to arbitration under the Arbitration Act by an agreement in writing if it chooses to do so. This would mean that a company stands in the Punjab on no different footing in this respect than a private individual governed by Punjab Act 1 of 1911. In the present instance, the agreement between the parties makes no specific reference to the Arbitration Act. I must therefore hold that the Arbitration Act will not apply to the arbitration agreement between the parties. Consequently the application for stay of the suit under S. 19 of that Act was not maintainable.

The award given by the arbitrators during the pendency of the suit was admittedly null and void. The question whether the defendants can still enforce the arbitration clause under the ordinary arbitration law and whether they can apply for stay of the suit under Para. 18, Sch. 2, Civil P. C., is one which it is unnecessary to consider for the purpose of the present petition. If the defendants care to go to arbitration under the ordinary law, and if they wish to apply for a stay of the suit under Para. 18, Sch. 2, Civil P. C., they may do so if so advised. I accept this petition for revision and set aside the order of stay passed under S. 19, Arbitration Act, and direct the suit to proceed. In view of all the circumstances I leave the parties to bear their costs. Parties are directed to appear before the trial Court on 25th July 1938.

P had become friendly with one R who was a spend-thrift and drunkard. R died a premature death on 30th June 1936. On 2nd July, wife of P made an application to the Sub-Registrar that R had in March 1936 sold a house to her but was refusing to have the sale-deed registered and she prayed for compulsory registration. The Sub-Registrar issued a notice to R to appear before him. P having found out which process server was going to issue the process to R got hold of a third person and pointed him out to B, the process-server, as R. The person admitted to be R but refused to accept service and when B was taking him to Administrative Subordinate Judge, he slipped away. Enquiry followed and P was prosecuted and convicted under S. 419, I. P. O. The charge against P did not make clear by virtue of which of the several consequences referred to in S. 415, he must be held liable of the offence of cheating:

deceived into taking was such as would have caused or was likely to cause damage to him in mind, body, property or reputation. The almost certain result of the act brought about by P's deception upon B would have been a departmental enquiry against him. The term 'manner' in S. 223, Criminal P. B. R. Puri and L. Chaman —
for Petitioner.

M. Sleem, Advocate-General —
for the Crown.

Order.—Sardar Gian Singh, an ex-member of the Judicial Branch of the Punjab Civil Service and an advocate of the High Court, is a petitioner for revision of the order of the learned Additional District Magistrate of Lahore upheld on appeal by the learned Additional Sessions Judge of Lahore, convicting him under Sec. 419, I. P. C., and sentencing him to three months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rupees 100. The facts of this case are that Sardar Gian Singh had become friendly with one Roshan Lal, son of Rai Sahib Dr. Maya Das, retired Civil Surgeon. Roshan Lal was a drunkard and a spendthrift and died a premature death on 3rd June 1936. On 2nd July, the wife of the petitioner put in an application before the Sub-Registrar, Lahore, to the effect that this Roshan Lal had on 31st March 1936 sold a house to her for Rs. 6000 but was refusing to have the sale deed registered. Her prayer in this application was that there should be a compulsory registration and the Sub-Registrar accordingly issued process to Roshan Lal to appear before him. The finding of the Courts below is that Sardar Gian Singh wanted to get this compulsory registration effected ex parte knowing that Roshan Lal was dead and that his successor-in-interest would probably contest the alienation. He accordingly found out which process server was to issue the process upon Roshan Lal and having got hold of a third person, whose identity has not been discovered, pointed him out to Babu Ram, the process server, as Roshan Lal. This person admitted that he was Roshan Lal but refused to accept service. Babu Ram accordingly made a report to this effect on the back of the process, namely that service had been effected upon Roshan Lal who refused to accept it. In view of his refusal he took Roshan Lal to the Naib Nazir who directed him to take him to the Administrative Subordinate Judge. On the way Roshan Lal slipped away and was never seen again. Enquiry followed which resulted in the present prosecution and conviction of Sardar Gian Singh. There are three main points under consideration in this revision and I will deal with them in what appears to be their logical order, though this is not the exact order in which they were presented before me.

The first contention is that even on the findings of the Courts below no offence has been made out against the petitioner because one of the necessary ingredients of S. 415 does not exist. To complete the offence of cheating under S. 415 it is necessary not only that there should be a deception and that this deception should cause the person deceived to take some action but also that this action should be such as causes or is likely to cause damage to that person in mind, body, property or reputation. The Courts below have found that if Babu Ram had not been fortunate enough immediately to expose the deception which had been practised on him, he would certainly have had to face a departmental inquiry and that even if this departmental inquiry had resulted in his exoneration it would certainly have caused him considerable mental anxiety and some loss of property inasmuch as he would have had to spend some sum of money, however small, for the purposes of his defence. It was contended on behalf of the petitioner that the likelihood of Babu Ram suffering such harm was too remote to justify the Court in relying upon it for holding that the ingredients of the offence were all present. Counsel for the petitioner has relied upon three reported judgments. The first of these is 34 P R 1918 Cr.¹ In that case a lambardar had been cheated by being presented with some persons as recruits for the army who had as a matter of fact been already rejected as such. The lambardar being deceived by the representation that they had never been rejected anywhere presented them before the Recruiting Officer when it was discovered that they had already been rejected at another place. The learned Judges who heard that appeal referred to 17 Cal 606² in which it was held that the damage or harm caused or likely to be caused must be the necessary consequence of the act done or must be necessarily likely to follow therefrom.

With all due respect to the learned Judges who tried the case, 17 Cal 606,² I must frankly confess that I do not quite understand what is meant by the phrase "necessarily likely" which appears to me to be in the nature of an oxymoron. A consequence can either be necessary or it can be likely but I do not quite see how it can be necessarily likely. Presumably, as was later held by the Calcutta High Court in A I R 1924 Cal 495,³ what was meant was that the likelihood of harm must not be too remote. In the case cited by counsel it seems to me that the circumstances were entirely different. As the learned Judges pointed out it was not really likely that the lambardar would have to face any enquiry and in fact his explanation was immediately accepted and he did suffer no harm. The second case on which counsel has relied is a single Bench judgment of this Court : 36 Cr L J 274.⁴ This was a case of cheating by personation in mutation proceedings before a Naib Tahsildar. Again, the case is not on all fours with the present one and with the greatest respect I fully agree with the learned Judge who heard that revision petition that the Naib Tahsildar was not likely to suffer any harm to his reputation merely because he had passed orders forwarding the application to the Girdawar for entering the mutation and putting it up for orders at the time of his next visit to the village. Even less apposite is the third case on which the counsel has relied, the Calcutta case to which I have just made reference, namely A I R 1924 Cal 495.³ In that case the person cheated was not an individual but a juristic person, namely The East Indian Railway Company and therefore their Lordships, if I may say so, quite rightly found that it could not be expected that this corporation would suffer any harm in mind or reputation in consequence of the deception practised upon it.

On the other hand, the learned Government Advocate has drawn my attention to a judgment of this Court which appears to me to be very much closer to the present case, that is 36 P R 1888 Cr.⁵ That was a case in which the appellant who was an income-tax clerk having lost some files cheated the record-keeper by inducing him to accept some other files as those which were missing and to make an entry in his register that he had received the missing ones. Tremlett and Rattigan JJ. who heard that appeal were unhesitatingly of opinion that the necessary consequence had been made out. In fact Tremlett J. remarked :

It would be notorious to any person acquainted with the business of district offices, that a person who had acknowledged receiving files he could not produce, would be likely to suffer harm in reputation and also in all probability in property.

It was also remarked by Rattigan J. in a separate judgment :

Had the accused's deception not been subsequently discovered, the act was one which would in all probability have caused the record-keeper to be either fined or dismissed, or at least subjected to some other departmental punishment or censure. It was therefore an act which was likely to cause damage or harm to the record-keeper in property or reputation.

These remarks appear to me to be wholly applicable to the present case. To borrow the phraseology of Tremlett J. it would be notorious to any person acquainted with the business of District Courts, that a process-server who had entered a false report upon a process would be the subject of a departmental enquiry which would be certain to end either in his dismissal or some other serious punishment. It can of course be contended that in the present case the process-server could have established his innocence by the same evidence upon which the present petitioner has been convicted. This may be so but it is clear that if the deception had not been immediately discovered, as it was in the present case, the fact that the endorsement was false must have come to light as Roshan Lal was dead and there must have been some inquiry. Even if eventually Babu Ram could establish his innocence no reasonable person can contest the proposition that even an innocent person facing a departmental inquiry must be subjected to a considerable mental anxiety and strain and also, as I have said above, must spend some money on defending himself. It seems to me therefore that the first contention of the learned counsel for the petitioner is answered and that on the findings there is no reason to hold that an offence under S. 419 has not been made out. I might however add in passing that all this discussion would possibly have been quite unnecessary if the learned Additional District Magistrate had carefully studied the provisions of Ss. 108, 109, 192 and 193, Penal Code, and framed the charge accordingly after having done so.

The second point which is to be considered is whether it can be held to have been fairly established on the record that the result of this false endorsement would in all probability have been an inquiry against Babu Ram. Admittedly there is no direct evidence on this point; Babu Ram himself could not depose to this as he could only have offered an opinion which would not have been evidence. Possibly the Administrative Subordinate Judge might have been asked by the prosecution whether in the event of this false endorsement coming to his notice without the intervening circumstance of the deception by Gian Singh having been immediately discovered, he would have held a departmental inquiry against the process-server. One must confess that probably the learned Administrative Subordinate Judge's reply to that question would have been that this is a hypothetical question which he was not fully justified in answering and the case would have stood where it is now. It seems to me that the question whether the consequence is likely to follow from the act is not one which can be proved so much from the mouth of a witness as inferred by the Court from the circumstances of the case and from the natural course of human conduct and human business. Therefore I am of opinion that the learned Additional District Magistrate was fully justified in inferring as he did that the almost certain result of the act brought about by the petitioner's deception upon the process-server would have been a departmental inquiry against the process-server.

I now come to the third and what is possibly the most difficult point to decide in the case, that is, the contention that the charge as framed was defective within the meaning of S. 223, Criminal P. C., which lays down that when the nature of the case is such that the particulars mentioned in Ss. 221 and 222 do not give the accused sufficient notice of the matter with which he is charged, the charge shall also contain such particulars of the manner in which the alleged offence was committed as will be sufficient for that purpose. Illus. (b) to the Section runs:

A is accused of cheating B at a given time and place. The charge must set out the manner in which A cheated B.

In the present case the charge runs as follows:

I (Magistrate) charge you Gian Singh that you, on or about 7th July 1936 at Lahore Civil Courts cheated by personation by knowingly substituting a certain person for Roshan Lal (deceased) who had before that date died representing to Babu Lal that that person was Roshan Lal, a respondent to the notice Ex. P K.

It is pointed out that this charge did not make it clear to the petitioner by virtue of which of the various consequences referred to in S. 415 he must be held liable of the offence of cheating. Those consequences are not only the doing of an act which was likely to damage the actor's reputation, etc. but also include the delivery of property and the like. It is contended that not having had notice of the particular consequence of his act by virtue of which he was held to have cheated Babu Ram, the petitioner was handicapped in his defence or that he did not know what he had to rebut. It appeared to be part of argument of the learned Government Advocate that the manner of cheating is set forth in the charge as the charge does say that he cheated by knowingly substituting a certain person for Roshan Lal. But it seems to me that the word "manner" could fairly be interpreted as including every ingredient by virtue of which the act ceases to become one of mere non-criminal deception and becomes one of "cheating" within the meaning of S. 415 and the effect of the deception upon the victim's body, mind, reputation or property would thus be a part of the "manner" of cheating. But even if this is held to be too wide an interpretation of the word "manner", the illustration is only an illustration and I think that by analogy if S. 223 demands that the manner shall be set out it must also demand that in the case of cheating the particular consequence by virtue of which the deception becomes an offence should also be set out. Nor is it possible to accept the view that S. 225 cures this irregularity. The Court cannot profess to be a mind reader and it is impossible to say what evidence the petitioner might or might not have led if he had had notice of what the Court intended to infer against him to be the consequence by virtue of which his offence was complete. It seems to me, therefore, that the charge is defective in this case and that there is a material irregularity and that the present conviction must be set aside.

The question now arises whether there should be a re trial. Counsel for the petitioner has urged with some emphasis that in the circumstances of the case a re-trial would cause a considerable harassment to the petitioner whose sentence was only one of three months. But it seems to me, although the learned Additional District Magistrate has not expressly said that the only justification that he could have had for passing such a very lenient sentence in such a very serious case must have been the consideration that the petitioner was almost certain to be struck off the roll of advocates of this Court and might even lose his pension as a result of this conviction. It is impossible for me and would be most improper for me to make any attempt to pre-judge the result of any re-trial. But if the petitioner is guilty I think that it would be a gross miscarriage of justice that he should obtain a complete acquittal merely on account of this irregularity in the framing of the charge. If he is again convicted no doubt the imprisonment which he has already undergone will be taken into consideration by the learned Magistrate. I therefore accept this petition to this extent: that I set aside the charge and the proceedings in the lower Court subsequent to the charge and direct that a re trial be held from that stage. Before framing a new charge the Magistrate should also put to the accused under S. 342, Criminal P. C., any inference which he intends to draw from the prosecution evidence already recorded in order to give him an opportunity of explaining it away if he can. At the same time there would be nothing to prevent the Magistrate, if he is so advised, framing a charge under S. 193, I P C., either in place of the charge under S. 419 or as an alternative charge. Pending the fresh trial the petitioner will remain on his present bail.

Gurdas Singh v. Emperor.

Criminal Revn. No. 201 of 1938, Decided on 12th April 1938.

Criminal Trial — Revision — Retrial when ordered by High Court stated.

In the exercise of its revisional powers a retrial is ordered by the High Court only in cases where non-compliance with the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code has prejudiced the accused. The High Court is not bound to set aside a trial on a technical point on the revision side if no injustice has resulted. [P 832 O 2]

Khurshid Zaman for Advocate-General
— for the Crown.

Order. — The petitioner Gurdas Singh was convicted under Ss. 354/451, I. P. C. and sentenced to two months' rigorous imprisonment by Mr. Chaman Lal, Magistrate, Second Class, by his order, dated 14th December 1937. His appeal was summarily dismissed by the Additional District Magistrate. He preferred a revision in the Court of the Sessions Judge, Hoshiarpur Division. The learned Sessions Judge has recommended that the conviction of the petitioner may be set aside and a re-trial ordered on the ground that the provisions of S. 342, Criminal P. C., were not complied with and the accused was not examined after the prosecution evidence had concluded. In the exercise of its revisional powers a re-trial is ordered by the High Court only in cases where non-compliance with the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code has prejudiced the accused. The High Court is not bound to set aside a trial on a technical point on the revision side if no injustice has resulted. I have accordingly gone through the record of the case. After going through the statements of Mt. Gurdevi, Karta Ram, Chanan, Mohan and Lachhman Das, I am of the opinion that they have not given true evidence. It was impossible for the petitioner single handed to be able to confine Karta Ram, Mt. Gurdevi and their son in a kothri when they were proceeding to the police station in the company of Chanan and Mohan. Mt. Gurdevi and Karta Ram considerably improved their statements when they were recorded for the second time by the trial Court. No reliance can therefore be placed on their testimony. For the reasons given above, I accept this petition for revision and acquit the petitioner. He will be released from the bail bond forthwith.

Exn. First Appeal No. 225 of 1937, Decided on 8th November 1937, from order of Sub-Judge, First Class, Ludhiana, D/- 10th June 1937.

Civil P. C. (1908), S. 144 — S. 144 includes decrees as well as orders.

Section 144 can be extended to include orders as well as decrees. [P 833 C 2]

Judgment. — The firm Mukat Behari Lal-Tej Pal brought a suit against the firm Narain Das-Labhu Ram and took proceedings under O. 39, R. 1, Civil P. C. One Khushi Ram, son of Khushali Mal, and another Khushi Ram, son of Mula Mal, stood sureties in the proceedings on behalf of the Firm Narain Das-Labhu Ram. The trial Court passed a decree for Rs. 6704 with costs against the Firm Narain Das-Labhu Ram in favour of the firm Mukat Behari Lal-Tej Pal. On appeal the decree was enhanced by this Court by a sum of Rs. 2301.7.0. After the decision of the appeal, the decree-holders applied to realize the sum of Rs. 2301.7.0 from the sureties. The sureties objected and the trial Court upheld their objections against the realization of the enhanced sum from them. On appeal, however, the High Court held that the sureties were liable and on this order the sum was realized from the sureties. The sureties went in a Letters Patent appeal and there the decision of the single Judge was reversed and it was held that the sureties were not liable to pay this enhanced sum of Rs. 2301.7.0. The sureties have now applied for restitution under Ss. 144 and 151, Civil P. C., of this sum. The actual person making the application is an assignee of the sureties. The trial Court on objections taken by the Firm Mukat Behari Lal-Tej Pal rejected the objections and directed execution for restitution to proceed. The Firm Mukat Behari Lal-Tej Pal have come in appeal from this order.

not apply to sureties but only to parties, and 42 All 158¹ at p. 166 is cited in support of this proposition together with other rulings. It is contended that the order of the single Bench of this Court is only an order and not a decree and as Sec. 144 speaks of the variation or reversal of a decree and not of an order, it does not apply to the present case. It is also contended that the word 'party' in Sec. 144 means party to the suit. On behalf of the respondent it is contended that Sec. 144 is not exhaustive and there is inherent jurisdiction in the Court to correct any errors made by the Court itself whereby the party has been prejudiced. 2 Pat 10² is cited as authority for this proposition along with other rulings. It is also contended that in an earlier application which was made by the original sureties the decree-holder firm, the present appellants, appeared and entered objections but finally withdrew them and asked for time to pay. It is therefore contended that the objections not having been raised are barred by the rule of constructive res judicata and 15 Lah 869,³ and other rulings are cited in support. In reply to this last contention it is contended on behalf of the appellant that the matter is one of jurisdiction and therefore there can be no waiver nor can the rule of constructive res judicata be applied. It is unnecessary for me to decide anything beyond the simple fact that undoubtedly, and as indeed admitted by the learned counsel for the appellant, the sureties were parties to the order passed by the single Judge of this Court. The only question therefore that remains is whether S. 144 can be extended to include orders as well as decrees. The Privy Council themselves have extended Sec. 144 on the ground of inherent jurisdiction apart from the Section to the case of an order, for in the case before them an auction-purchaser who had purchased certain property in an auction sale was held entitled under S. 144 under the inherent jurisdiction of the Court to ask for restitution of the sale money when the sale itself was set aside on appeal. That being the case it is unnecessary for me to decide whether the order of the single Judge amounted to a decree as appears to be the opinion of Mr. Mulla in his Commentary in the Civil Procedure Code at page 8 (ii), nor is it necessary to decide whether the rule of constructive res judicata applies or not to the facts of this case. It is sufficient to hold that the surety was a party to the order of the single Judge of this Court and therefore under the inherent jurisdiction of the Court can apply to the Court for restitution. I therefore dismiss the appeal with costs.

Emperor.

Criminal Appeal No. 76 of 1938, Decided on 10th June 1938, from order of Sess. Judge, Ferozepore, D/- 5th January 1938.

(a) Penal Code (1860), S. 300 (3) — Murder — Number of serious injuries — Cumulative effect being death — Intention to cause sufficient injuries as will result in death, held established — Case held came under S. 300 (3).

The deceased had received no less than 28 injuries. Of these 12 were punctured wounds on the legs and arms, both the legs and arms had been fractured at several places; the right ulna bone had been dislocated; and one of the incisor teeth in the upper jaw was missing. There were also two contused wounds skin-deep on the head, and contusions on other parts of the body. It may be that none of these injuries individually was sufficient to cause death, but death was due to the cumulative effect of the multiple injuries. On these facts :

Held that the accused assaulted the victim with the intention of causing such bodily injuries as were sufficient, in the ordinary course of nature, to cause death. Their case, therefore, clearly fell within clause thirdly of S. 300.

(b) Penal Code (1860), S. 300 (2) — Constitutional or peculiar defect leading to death as a result of injuries not ordinarily sufficient to cause death — Neither presence of such defect nor its knowledge to accused established — Case held not covered by S. 300 (2).

Where it has not been shown that any constitutional or other peculiarity existed in the case of the deceased which would have made it likely that injuries which ordinarily would not cause death, would be fatal in his case, and where it has not been shown that his assailants were aware of any such defect :

Held that the case did not fall under S. 300 (Secondly) : 1 Bom 342; A I R 1929 Lah 157 and A I R 1932 Oudh 186, Rel. on. [P 835 C 2]

(c) Penal Code (1860), S. 300 — Sentence — Injuries not on any vital part — Merciless beating resulting in death — Sentence of death is proper.

In cases in which none of the vital parts has been touched, and yet the victim has been beaten in a most merciless manner and been practically pounded to death, sentence of death is proper in the absence of any extenuating circumstance.

Jhanda Singh for Advocate-General —
for the Crown.

Tek Chand J. — Waryam, Wattu, and Pala Singh, Jat, of Mauza Dabwali Roherianwali, Tehsil Fazilka, Ferozepore District, have been convicted of the murder of Gurdial Singh of the same village and have been sentenced to transportation for life. Against their conviction and sentences they have appealed. There is also before us an application for enhancement of the sentences from transportation for life to death, presented by Bhan Singh, brother of the deceased. The case for the prosecution is that there was old and bitter enmity between the deceased on one side and the appellants and Sardara and Abu (absconders) on the other. On the morning of 20th September 1937, at about 7.30 A. M., Gurdial Singh was returning from a neighbouring village to mauza Dabwali, and as he was passing through the lane near the houses of Pala Singh appellant and Abu absconder, Abu caught hold of him and shouted to Pala saying that he had caught their enemy. On this Pala Singh armed with a dang, Waryam with a khunda, and Sardara with a sela, came to the spot and began to beat Gurdial Singh. Gurdial Singh fell down. Abu went to his house and brought a sela and joined the other three in beating the victim. Gurdial Singh raised a cry, hearing which his sister, Mt. Maryan alias Nandi, (P. W. 10), who had gone to get water from the kassi and happened to be close by, ran towards the spot and tried to intervene. Pala and Waryam, however, beat her and caused her several injuries. Six other persons, Sajwara (P. W. 9), Nazar Singh (P. W. 11), Zabta (P. W. 12), Bahadur (P. W. 13), Jabru (P. W. 14), and Suleman (P. W. 15) also reached the spot and saw Gurdial Singh being beaten. But before they could do anything, the culprits had made good their escape. The first information report was lodged by Bhan Singh, brother of the deceased, at the police station, a distance of 10 miles, at 10 A. M. In the meantime, Gurdial Singh had died as a result of the injuries. The learned counsel for the appellants has criticized the evidence of the eye-witnesses. But after hearing him at length, I can see no reason to disbelieve them. The presence of Mt. Maryan at the spot cannot be denied as she herself had received injuries. Jabru (P. W. 14) is a wholly independent witness and nothing has been brought out to show as to why he should give false evidence against the appellants. The other witnesses, some of whom are no doubt relations of the deceased, corroborate their testimony. I hold, in agreement with the learned Sessions Judge, that Gurdial Singh died as a result of the injuries caused to him by the appellants along with two other persons. Counsel has pointed out that in the first information report the names of only four of the eye-witnesses were mentioned, and that besides the appellants and the absconders two other persons also were mentioned as the assailants. But, as has been stated already, the report was made by Bhan Singh, who had not himself seen the assault. His information was admittedly based on hearsay, and therefore this matter does not affect the case.

Counsel next argued that the offence does not amount to "murder" as defined in the Penal Code, but falls within S. 304-II, I. P. C. With this contention I am unable to agree. The medical evidence shows that the deceased had received no less than 28 injuries. Of these, 12 were punctured wounds on the legs and arms; both the legs and the arms had been fractured at several places; the right ulna bone had been dislocated, and one of the incisor teeth in the upper jaw was missing. There were also two contused wounds skin-deep on the head, and contusions on other parts of the body. It may be that none of these injuries individually was sufficient to cause death, but as pointed out by the medical witness, death was due to the cumulative effect of the multiple injuries caused by blunt and sharp-edged weapons, which had been used by the assailants. There can thus be no doubt that they had assaulted the victim with the intention of causing such bodily injuries as were sufficient, in the ordinary course of nature, to cause death. Their case, therefore, clearly falls within clause thirdly of S. 300, and they have been rightly convicted under S. 302. Before concluding this part of the case, it seems necessary to point out that the learned Sessions Judge has found that the case was covered by S. 300 "secondly as well as thirdly". The learned Judge is, however, clearly in error in holding that the second clause of the Section is also applicable to the facts as found by him. That clause lays down that "culpable homicide" is "murder", if the act by which the death is caused is done "with the intention of causing such bodily injury as the offender knows to be likely 'to cause the death of the person to whom the harm is caused. As was pointed out as far back as 1876 by Melvill J. in the celebrated case in 1 Bom 342¹ at p. 345 the essence of this clause appears to be found in the words which have been underlined (here italicized). The learned Judge observed :

The offence is murder, if the offender knows that the particular person injured is likely, either from peculiarity of constitution, or immature age, or other special circumstance, to be killed by any injury which would not ordinarily cause death. The illustration given in the Section is the following :

'A knowing that Z is labouring under such a disease that a blow is likely to cause his death, strikes him with the intention of causing bodily injury. Z dies in consequence of the blow. A is guilty of murder, although the blow might not have been sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause the death of a person in a sound state of health'.

See also to the same effect the judgment of Dalip Singh J. in 10 Lah 477² at p. 481 and 7 Luck 634.³ In the case before us it has not been shown that any constitutional or other peculiarity existed in the case of Gurdial Singh, which would have made it likely that injuries which ordinarily would not cause death, would be fatal in his case. Nor has it been shown that his assailants were aware of it. For these reasons, Cl. 2 is clearly inapplicable. The matter is however of no practical importance, as the act of the appellants is covered by clause thirdly of S. 300, as has been held above, and therefore they are guilty of murder.

Coming now to the question of enhancement of the sentence, I may say at once that I am unable to accept as adequate the reason given by the learned Sessions Judge for imposing the lesser penalty permissible under the law. He has observed that though there was no extenuating circumstance but considering "that there were no serious injuries on the head, chest or other vital parts of the body the alternative sentence of transportation for life would meet the ends of justice." But this circumstance, by itself, is no ground for not imposing the death sentence. Cases frequently occur in which none of the vital parts has been touched, and yet the victim has been beaten in a most merciless and brutal manner and been practically pounded to death. In such cases, in the absence of any extenuating circumstance, the capital sentence would be the only appropriate punishment. In the present case, however, there are other reasons for which I do not think it fit to interfere with the sentence. According to the evidence of the eye-witnesses, there is a clear distinction between the cases of the present appellants, and Abu absconder. He appears to have been the prime mover in the affair, and Pala Singh and Waryam Singh took a less prominent part. It was Abu who waylaid the deceased, and both the appellants came to the spot and joined in the attack at his instance. I do not therefore think that this Court should interfere with the sentence, in the exercise of its revisional powers. It may also be stated that counsel for the Crown does not support the application for enhancement, which had been made by a relation of the deceased. For the foregoing reasons I would dismiss the appeal and confirm the sentence of transportation for life passed against the appellants by the learned Sessions Judge. I would also reject the application for enhancement of sentence.

Civil Misc. Nos. 243 and 390 of 1937, Decided on 16th June 1937.

(a) Limitation Act (1908), Sec. 5—Sufficient cause— Agreement between parties to end litigation and accept High Court's decree as final — One party resiling and filing application for leave to appeal— Application for leave filed by other party some days out of time — Held there was sufficient cause for extending time.

Defendant did not apply for leave to appeal within time because plaintiff approached him, through certain relations not to continue this litigation any further and suggested that both parties might accept as final the decision of the High Court. But defendant afterwards received a notice which showed that plaintiff had gone back on the agreement and had filed an application for leave to appeal. Thereupon defendant also presented application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council. But it was some days out of time :

Held that in the circumstances there was sufficient cause for extending the time under Sec. 5.

(b) Civil P. C. (1908), Sec. 110—High Court varying decree of lower Court — Party held entitled to appeal to Privy Council as of right — Appeal need not involve substantial question of law.

Where in plaintiff's appeal, the High Court varied the trial Court's decree by a sum which was far in excess of Rs. 10,000 and though the variation was all in favour of the plaintiff and he could not have any appealable grievance against such variation, the decree of the High Court could not be said to be one of affirmance. Hence the plaintiff was entitled to appeal to His Majesty in Council as of right and it was not necessary for him to show that his appeal raised any substantial question of law : A I R 1925 P C 60, Foll.

Tek Chand J.—This judgment will dispose of two civil miscellaneous petitions Nos. 243 and 390 of 1937, for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council against the decrees of this Court passed in two cross appeals (Nos. 906 and 988 of 1934) which arose from the same suit. The suit was instituted by Hakim Rai against his brother Ganga Ram for dissolution of partnership and rendition of accounts. The value for purposes of jurisdiction was tentatively fixed in the plaint at Rs. 2000. A preliminary decree was passed in the suit, after which proceedings continued for determining the exact amount due. In the course of these proceedings the plaintiff claimed that a sum of over Rs. 70,000 was due to him by the defendant. The defendant denied that anything was due by him to the plaintiff. On the other hand, he averred that the plaintiff owed a large sum to him. The Subordinate Judge granted the plaintiff a decree for Rs. 3286. From this decree the plaintiff and the defendant filed cross appeals in this Court; the plaintiff prayed for an enhancement of the decretal amount by Rs. 29,647; and the defendant asked for a total dismissal of the suit. The two appeals were heard together, and were decided by this Bench on 7th January 1937. We dismissed the defendant's appeal, and accepted that of the plaintiff partially, raising the amount decreed to him from Rupees 3286 to Rs. 11,726 with interest thereon at six per cent. per annum from the date of the suit (13th January 1916) till realization. On 5th April 1937, Hakim Rai presented a petition in this Court for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. In the grounds for the proposed appeals, he mainly contests the findings of fact on various items with regard to which this Court, in agreement with the Court of first instance, had disallowed his claim. This petition was presented within 90 days of the date of the decree of this Court, as required by Article 179, Limitation Act.

On 17th May 1937, Ganga Ram, defendant, also presented a petition for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. This petition was one month and ten days out of time. Along with the petition, an application was made under S. 5, Limitation Act, for extension of time. This application was supported by an affidavit, in which it was stated that he intended to appeal to His Majesty in Council from the decree of the High Court and had obtained copies for the purpose, but early in March 1937 Hakim Rai approached him, through certain relations, not to continue this litigation any further, as it had already gone on for more than 20 years, and the parties had incurred enormous expense; he suggested that both parties might accept as final the decision of the High Court, and the defendant should arrange to pay him the amount decreed as soon as possible, that Ganga Ram agreed and on this understanding he did not apply for leave to appeal within time; that on 11th March he was surprised to receive a notice from this Court which showed that Hakim Rai had gone back on the agreement and had filed an application for leave to appeal; that thereupon Ganga Ram also took steps to present this petition, which was done on 17th May. He accordingly urged that there was sufficient cause for non-presentation of the petition within time and that the delay be condoned. Hakim Rai filed counter-affidavit denying that there had been any such agreement between them. The parties asked for, and were allowed, opportunity to lead evidence in support of their respective allegations. After hearing the evidence, we are of opinion that Ganga Ram's story is substantially true and that, in the circumstances there was sufficient cause for his not presenting the petition for leave to appeal within the time prescribed by law. We accordingly extend the time under Sec. 5, Limitation Act, and hold that his petition, presented on 17th May 1937, is within time. In this case the requirements of S. 110 have clearly been fulfilled, the subject-matter of the dispute is admittedly over Rs. 10,000, and this Court has varied the decree of the trial Court to the prejudice of Ganga Ram. We accordingly grant his petition.

With regard to the petition presented by Hakim Rai, the subject-matter of the suit as well as of the proposed appeal is over Rs. 10,000. It is however objected by the opposite party that leave should not be granted, as the proposed appeal does not raise any substantial question of law, this Court having affirmed the findings of the trial Court with regard to the particular points which Hakim Rai wishes to agitate before His Majesty in Council. The plaintiff's counsel urges in reply that under S. 110 what has to be seen is not whether the findings of the trial Court on any particular point have or have not been affirmed, but whether the decree of this Court has affirmed or varied that of the Court below. It is conceded that in Hakim Rai's appeal, this Court varied the trial Court's decree by a sum which is far in excess of Rupees 10,000. This variation no doubt was all in favour of Hakim Rai, and he cannot have any appealable grievance against such variation, but none the less, the decree of this Court was not one of affirmance and having regard to the clear wording of S. 110 and the ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council in 51 Cal 969¹ it must be held that the requirements of Section have been fulfilled and Hakim Rai is entitled to appeal to His Majesty in Council as of right. Counsel for the opposite party cited a large number of rulings, but it is not necessary to discuss them as in every one of them the suit comprised several distinct and separate "subject-matters," and leave to appeal to His Majesty was sought with regard to those "subject-matters" only, in which both Courts in India had concurrently decreed against the applicants. In the present case, there was only one single and indivisible subject-matter in dispute and therefore it clearly falls within the rule laid down by their Lordships in the case already cited. It is therefore not necessary for Hakim Rai to show that his appeal raises any substantial question of law. His petition was made within time and must be granted. We accordingly allow both the petitions, and grant Hakim Rai as well as Ganga Ram leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. The parties shall bear their own costs of these proceedings.

Civil Revn. No. 883 of 1937, Decided on 31st January 1938, from order of Addl. Dist. Judge, Amritsar, D/- 14th August 1937.

Arbitration—Additional District Judge can entertain proceedings if powers of District Judge are assigned to him — On considering circumstances powers held so assigned—Party not raising objection to jurisdiction of Additional District Judge at the time of disposing of case cannot subsequently raise it.

The contention that under the Arbitration Act jurisdiction to entertain proceedings is given to the District Judge alone and the Additional District Judge is not competent to entertain such proceedings is not maintainable as it is opposed to S. 21, Punjab Courts Act, which provides that the Additional District Judge can exercise all the powers of the District Judge, but the District Judge has to assign such powers to him.

Previously a case was on the record of the District Judge, who actually heard it and subsequently it went to the Additional District Judge who disposed of it. No objection was taken by the party to the jurisdiction of the Additional District Judge on that date :

Order.—This is a petition for revision of an order passed by the Additional District Judge of Amritsar directing that an award made by the arbitrators appointed under the Indian Arbitration Act be filed in Court. The main ground taken on this petition is that the Additional District Judge had no jurisdiction to entertain the proceedings. What appears to have happened is that the application was originally filed before the District Judge of Amritsar who continued to hear the case till 5th February 1937. On that date the case was postponed to 17th April 1937 and it was mentioned that the Additional District Judge was busy in hearing some Sessions case. But on 17th April 1937 the case was heard by the Additional District Judge and decided by him. No objection was taken by the petitioner to the jurisdiction of the Additional District Judge on that date. It is contended before me that under the Indian Arbitration Act jurisdiction to entertain proceedings is given to the District Judge alone and the Additional District Judge is not competent to entertain such proceedings. This contention seems to be opposed to S. 21, Punjab Courts Act, which provides that the Additional District Judge can exercise all the powers of the District Judge, but the District Judge has to assign such powers to him. The real question, therefore, in this case is whether the District Judge assigned the function of deciding the present case to the Additional District Judge. There is no express order on the record sending the case to the Additional District Judge, but previously the case was on the record of the District Judge, who actually heard it and on 17th April it went to the Additional District Judge who disposed of it. I consider that under the circumstances it must be assumed that the District Judge did assign this case to the Additional District Judge. In any case, the petitioner having taken no objection to the jurisdiction of the Additional District Judge is not now entitled to raise it on this petition for revision. This view is in conformity with the view taken in 52 I C 352¹ decided by this Court.

As to the merits of the petition I consider that there is no force in any of the grounds taken by the petitioner. One ground taken is that no proper notice of the arbitration proceedings was given by the arbitrators. But there is a notice on the record from which it appears that a notice was given to the petitioner. It is true that the time of the arbitration proceedings was not specified in this notice, but it appears that the petitioner had no misunderstanding about the matter because his case is that he went to the arbitrators at 4 o'clock but he did not find them there. One of the arbitrators, on the other hand, says that they waited for the petitioner from 4 to 5 P. M. but the petitioner did not appear and therefore proceeded with the case ex parte. The statement of the petitioner that he went to the place appointed by the arbitrators at 4 o'clock has been disbelieved by the Additional District Judge. But this is a clear indication of the fact that the petitioner knew at what time the arbitration proceedings were to take place. Another objection taken is that the arbitrators have decided the matters which were not referred to them. In order to establish this fact no good evidence was led by the petitioner. What he attempted to do was to attack the merits of the award and from that he wanted the Court to infer that the arbitrators could not have taken into consideration all the matters referred to them or that they took into consideration matters which were not referred to them. In my opinion, this was nothing but a clever attempt to attack the award of the arbitrators on the merits which the petitioner was not entitled to do. This petition in my opinion has no force and I dismiss it with costs.

* (a) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 522—Accused breaking lock of house in absence of person in possession and taking possession of house — Order under S. 522 is competent.

Where accused breaks the lock of a house in absence of the person in possession and takes possession of the house, he uses criminal force to the lock which he breaks, criminal because it involves the crime of mischief and therefore an order under S. 522 is competent : A I R 1934 Lah 454, Dissented. [P 840 C 2]

(b) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 522 — Judge not finding that there was criminal force but finding complainant's evidence regarding it as true — Order under S. 522 is competent.

Though a Judge has not actually found that there was criminal force, an order under S. 522 is competent if he has found as true the complainant's evidence that the accused used criminal force by breaking the lock of the house : A I R 1935 Lah 477, Ref. [P 840 C 2]

Section 522 (3) imposes no period of limitation on a Court of Appeal or revision. Order. — The facts which have led to the present revision are as follows: Autar Singh purchased a house belonging to Ilam Din at a court auction held in execution of a decree in favour of a third party against Ilam Din. The sale was held on 9th February 1934, Autar Singh was granted a sale certificate on 15th June 1934, and on 3rd August 1934, he was put into actual possession. He remained in possession until 17th May 1936, when he was dispossessed. The circumstances of dispossession are to be found in the complaint lodged by Autar Singh on 19h May 1936, and in his evidence in Court, the four petitioners, who are related to Ilam Din, broke the lock of the house. Autar Singh who was informed by Devi Das hurried to the spot and found that the accused were still there armed with kulharis and dangs. He went and reported the matter to the zaildar. The complainant was supported by Inayat Khan, zaildar, Bahadur Ali, lambar-dar of the village, Ilam Din, chowkidar and some others. The Naib Tehsildar found that the complaint was true, convicted the four accused under S. 448, I. P. C., and sentenced them each to pay Rs. 40 fine or in default suffer one month's rigorous imprisonment. The accused appealed to the Additional District Magistrate; their appeals were dismissed and they served the terms of imprisonment in default.

The Naib Tehsildar passed sentences on 16th September 1936, and the appeal was dismissed by the Additional District Magistrate on 16th October 1936. On 18th Nov.

ember 1936, the Naib Tehsildar issued warrants purporting to be under S. 522, Criminal P. C., ordering Autar Singh to be restored to the possession of the house. For some reason not quite clear on the record—possibly because of the delay of more than one month that had elapsed from the date of the convictions—these warrants were not executed. Subsequently the complainant Autar Singh applied to the Additional District Magistrate to be put in possession and on 23rd July 1937, the Additional District Magistrate passed an order under Sec. 522 (3), Criminal P. C., directing that a warrant for the restoration of possession of the immovable property be issued against the four respondents in favour of Autar Singh, complainant. Some difficulty arose about the boundaries of the house and on 6th January 1938, the case was made over to the Tahsildar for further proceedings. The Tahsildar ascertained the boundaries and sent the warrant to the police for compliance. The warrant was carried out, the four respondents were dispossessed and Autar Singh was put in possession.

The four persons convicted under S. 448, respondents in the petition under S. 522, have come here in revision through Mr. L. M. Dutta. The revision purports to be against the order of the Tahsildar, dated 14th March 1938. Mr. Dutta took two points: (1) that no order could be passed under S. 522 unless the offence was attended with criminal force; and (2) that the order was out of time. S. 522, Criminal P. C., runs:

(1) Whenever a person is convicted of an offence attended by criminal force 'or show of force or by criminal intimidation' and it appears to the Court that by such force 'or show of force or criminal intimidation' any person has been dispossessed of any immovable property, the Court may, if it thinks fit, 'when convicting such person or at any time within one month from the date of the conviction' order 'the person dispossessed' to be restored to the possession of the same.

(2) * * * * *

(3) An order under this Section may be made by any Court of Appeal, confirmation, reference or revision.

On the first point Mr. Dutta quoted A I R 1934 Lah 454,¹ the headnote of which runs:

'Force' contemplates the presence of the person using the force and of the person to whom the force is used. Where therefore a person breaks open the lock of a house in absence of the person in possession and enters into possession thereof the possession is taken without any 'force or show of force' and an order under S. 522 cannot be passed.

With deference I think this view of law is wrong. "Criminal force" is defined in S. 350, I. P. C., and "force" is defined in S. 349. Section 349 runs:

A person is said to use force to another if he causes motion, change of motion or cessation of motion to that other, or if he causes to any substance such motion, or change of motion, or cessation of motion as brings that substance into contact with any part of that other's body, or with anything which that other is wearing or carrying, or with anything so situated that such contact affects that other's sense of feeling. . . .

Section 350 runs:

Whoever intentionally uses force to any person without that person's consent, in order to the committing of any offence, or intending by the use of such force to cause, or knowing it to be likely that by the use of such force he will cause injury, fear or annoyance to the person to whom the force is used, is said to use criminal force to that other.

It will be noticed that these Sections define "criminal force" as applied to a person but they say nothing about "criminal force" as applied to a thing. Is it not possible to use criminal force to a thing? If a person or persons forcibly demolish a wall belonging to another, do they not use criminal force to the wall? I would say that in the present case the petitioners used criminal force to the lock which they broke, criminal because it involved the crime of mischief and that an order under S. 522 is therefore competent. Mr. Dutta also referred to A I R 1935 Lah 477² in which Currie J. said:

An order under S. 522, Criminal P. C., can only be passed in cases where criminal force as defined in S. 350, Penal Code, has been used and where a finding to that effect has been recorded.

From the reported facts of the case it does not appear whether there was any criminal force or not. In the present case Mr. Dutta argued that the Naib Tehsildar did not find that there was criminal force but, as pointed out by Sardar Harnam Singh, he found that the complainant's evidence was true. That evidence has already been summarized. The accused were seen by Devi Das breaking the lock and when the complainant reached the spot the four present petitioners were standing there armed with kulharis and sticks. In my judgment an order under Section 522 was competent.

Secondly Mr. Dutta argued that the present order was barred by time because it was made more than a month after the date of the conviction. On this point I was referred to several authorities. It has been held several times by the Patna High Court that sub-s. (3) of S. 522, which was added by the Amending Act of 1923, imposes no period of limitation on a Court of Appeal or revision. In 12 Pat 787,³ a Division Bench ruling, it was held that it was competent to a Court of Appeal or revision to pass an order restoring the property to the complainant even after the expiry of one month from the original conviction or from the disposal of appellate or revisional proceedings. In A I R 1934 Pat 154,⁴ another Division Bench ruling, this principle was again affirmed and the High Court made an order in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction. In A I R 1925 Pat 689⁵ it was laid down that :

An order under the Section may be passed by the Courts of Appeal, confirmation, reference or revision at any time howsoever long after the conviction by the Magistrate. Thus, where a Magistrate passes an order under Sec. 522 beyond the prescribed one month, though the order by the Magistrate is illegal, yet it is competent to the High Court as Court of revision to order the restoration of possession to the person dispossessed.

46 All 92⁶ was a case in which a learned Judge of the Allahabad High Court on 4th October 1923, passed an order restoring the complainant to possession on the revision side. It is not clear how long after the conviction the order for restoration was passed, but it could not have been within one month. On the other hand Mr. Dutta in reply referred to 33 P L R 481⁷ in which a learned Judge of this Court held that the order passed by the trial Magistrate after a month was without jurisdiction and set it aside. He differed from an earlier Patna ruling and said :

I cannot see that the words "Courts of Appeal" etc., can refer to anything except the Courts dealing with the original conviction or trial and do not refer to the High Court in reference from the order restoring possession.

Mr. Dutta also referred to A I R 1932 Cal 750⁸ where a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court set aside an order under S. 522 made by the trial Magistrate after the expiry of a month. The Bench did not consider whether they could take any action on the revision side. Mr. Dutta also referred to A I R 1937 Pesh 7⁹ where it was laid down :

Under S. 522, a month after the date of conviction, the trial Magistrate becomes functus officio in the matter of delivering possession. When once the lower Court has ceased to have the power of giving possession, the revisional Court cannot, when moved to consider the order of that Court refusing to give possession on the ground of limitation, enlarge that period and grant the relief. Sub-cl. (3) to that Section comes into play only when an appeal or revision has been preferred against the conviction. It is then that the appellate or revisional Court is seized of that jurisdiction to restore possession although the original Court may not have done so and such higher Courts are not bound by the limitation of one month in doing so. But this clause does not help if the Court of revision is considering the order of the trial Court under Section 522, Criminal P. C., refusing to grant possession because the time for making the order had passed.

This ruling does not help the present petitioners. The order restoring possession to Autar Singh was really made by the Additional District Magistrate on 23rd July 1937; owing to difficulties about boundaries the Tehsildar was named as a ministerial officer to carry out the order. The Additional District Magistrate's order was on an application made in his Court and thus according to the Patna and the Peshawar Courts the period of limitation did not apply. There is no authority directly to the contrary. In the authorities which have been quoted, those of Dalip Singh J. and the Calcutta High Court, the Court did not interfere on the revision side when the order of the trial Court was beyond the expiry of one month. This particular point is not before me. It is the Additional District Magistrate, the Appellate Court, that gave the order and it is the persons convicted who seek that I should interfere on revision with that order. I decline to do so. There is no doubt that convenience and justice are in favour of the Patna view. In the present case Autar Singh was the pur-

To eject him from possession now would be to force him to go to a Civil Court to recover possession of a house to which there is no doubt that he is legally entitled. I reject this revision.

Sikandar — Defendant — Appellant.
v.

Mt. Karam Nishan and others, Plaintiffs and others, Defendants — Respondents.

First Appeal No. 192 of 1937, Decided on 2nd May 1938, from decree of Senior Sub.Judge, Montgomery, D/. 10th March 1937.

(a) Punjab Colonization of Government Lands Act (5 of 1912), S. 21 (a)—Occupancy rights conferred on widow in land originally held by her husband as tahud khawahi tenant—Widow should be treated as person to whom tenancy was first allotted and succession is governed by S. 21 (a)—Fact that her husband was original lessee cannot be treated as tantamount to his having rendered service within meaning of S. 21 (a)—Nomination should therefore be made only from issue of widow.

The words 'first allotted' in S. 21 (a) describe the creation of tenancy. Hence where occupancy rights have been conferred on a widow in land originally held by her husband as tahud khawahi tenant, the widow should be treated as a person to whom tenancy was first allotted and the succession to the occupancy rights held by her would be governed by S. 21 (a). But the nomination cannot be made from the male agnates of her husband as the tenancy cannot be said to be allotted to her in recognition of the services of her husband. The word 'services' as used in S. 21 (a) refers to some sort of signal service rendered either in the Military or the Civil Departments or in any other way which may deserve the recognition of the Government, but it definitely does not allude to the mere fact of being a lessee from the Government. Consequently the nomination must be made from the issue of the female tenant. The Collector in making the nominations can make the choice of all the issues and is not enjoined to confine his choice to one only from among this group: A I R 1932 Lah 412, Approved; Reasoning in A I R 1930 Lah 474 and A I R 1931 Lah 271, Differed from; A I R 1933 Lah 293, Disting.; A I R 1937 Lah 329, Explained. [P 844 C 2; P 845 C 1]

(b) Custom (Punjab)—Succession—Khokhars—Daughters exclude collaterals.

Among Khokhars daughters exclude male collaterals in succession to the self-acquired property of their father. [P 843 C 1; P 845 C 2; P 846 C 1]

(c) Res judicata—Finding in favour of pro forma defendant is not res judicata in subsequent suit.

A finding in favour of a party joined as pro forma defendant and not a necessary party in previous suit does not operate as res judicata in subsequent suit: 23 P R 1907; A I R 1923 Lah 16; A I R 1928 Lah 493; 41 P R 1899 and A I R 1916 Lah 13, Rel. on; A I R 1933 Lah 66, Disting. [P 846 C 1]

Din Mohammad J.—The suit out of which this appeal has arisen was instituted by Mt. Karam Nishan, Mt. Ghulam Fatima and Mt. Amir Begum, daughters of one Ghulam Farid Khan, for a declaration that they were entitled to succeed to the property left by their mother, Mt. Subhano, in preference to the collaterals of their father. It was alleged in the plaint that their father was succeeded by their mother, Mt. Subhano, who died about 2½ years prior to the institution of the suit. They were four sisters, one of whom, Kher Nishan, had died in the lifetime of their mother leaving her surviving a son, Allah Yar Khan. Of the remaining three sisters, Mt. Ghulam Fatima was still unmarried. Their mother was in possession of a considerable area of land in some of which she had proprietary rights and in some occupancy rights. The land in which Mt. Subhano held occupancy rights was originally in possession of their father as a tahud khawahi tenant of which the occupancy rights were later conferred by the Government on Mt. Subhano. On the death of their mother they were entitled to succeed to the whole property of their deceased father which was non-ancestral and to which under the Customary law of the district they were entitled to succeed in preference to their father's collaterals. It was further alleged that in a previous suit between Riaz-ud-Din and Lashkar on the one hand and Mt. Subhano and her alienee on the other, it was held by the Chief Court of the Punjab that in the matter of succession to the non-ancestral property, the daughters had a preferential right to succeed and that that judgment operated as res judicata. They were still in possession of the land but as a cloud had

Five defendants were originally impleaded in the suit, of whom Allah Yar was made a plaintiff by an order dated 21st December 1935. Of the remaining four defendants, Mt. Sadan, daughter of Riaz-ud-Din, appeared in Court on 7th May 1936, and made a statement to the effect that although half of the property left by Mt. Subhano had been mutated in the name of her father, she disclaimed all connexion with that land and as the property was acquired by Ghulam Farid Khan the plaintiffs were entitled to succeed to it in preference to his collaterals. Muhammad, Sadiq and Sikandar, sons of Lashkar, were thus the only defendants who remained to contest the suit. These defendants raised several defences contending inter alia that under S. 21 (a) of Act 5 of 1912 they had been nominated by the Collector and as he was empowered to nominate a successor to Mt. Subhano as regards the occupancy rights that she held, the plaintiffs were not in a position to contest the Collector's action. So far as the proprietary lands were concerned, married daughters were excluded by collaterals and inasmuch as all the plaintiffs had married, they had no rights left. As regards the previous judgment of the Punjab Chief Court, it was urged that it did not operate as res judicata. It may be remarked that these defendants mainly based their case on the custom applicable to the Rajput tribe living in the Pakpattan Tahsil of the Montgomery District, although in the heading of the plaint it had been stated that the parties belonged to the Dipalpur Tahsil of the Montgomery District.

In the first instance certain preliminary issues raised by the defendants were disposed of and it was held that the suit as framed lay, that the plaint was properly valued for the purposes of jurisdiction, that the Secretary of State was not a necessary party and that the suit was not barred under S. 36 of Act 5 of 1912. Later, issues of facts were framed and after the parties had produced both oral and documentary evidence, the Senior Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that the decision in the previous suit operated as res judicata and that among Khokhars daughters excluded male collaterals in succession to the self-acquired property of their father. He consequently granted the plaintiffs a declaratory decree in terms of the relief prayed for. Sikandar alone has appealed. It may be remarked at the outset that the present appeal does not affect more than 1/12th of the property in suit. Riaz-ud-Din, in whose favour half of the property in suit was mutated, left only one daughter, Mt. Sadan, and as stated above she has confessed judgment. Similarly Allah Yar, who had succeeded to 1/4th of the property, has been joined as a plaintiff in the suit. Of the three sons of Lashkar, whose names were entered as owners of the remaining 1/4th of the property, Sikandar alone has appealed and he is not entitled to more than 1/12th. He has not submitted his appeal on behalf of his two other brothers under O. 41, R. 4, Civil P. C., and the suit being not one by the reversioners in which a declaration obtained by one would enure for the benefit of all, the appellant, even if successful, cannot claim any relief in respect of more than 1/12th of the land in suit.

It may also be observed that although an allegation was made in the plaint that one of the plaintiffs, Mt. Ghulam Fatima, was still unmarried, this position cannot be maintained in the present appeal. The allegation in the plaint was resisted by the defendants who had even at the time of the mutation urged that Mt. Ghulam Fatima had married and their plea was upheld. In spite of this clear denial by the defendants, the plaintiffs do not appear to have pressed the matter further and no issue was framed. Consequently, we shall proceed on the assumption that Mt. Ghulam Fatima's claim, if any, is on a line with her other sisters. In the disposal of this case it would be necessary to keep the two kinds of properties in suit apart from each other as different incidents attach to each. As stated above the bulk of the property consists of occupancy rights in the lands which were originally held by Ghulam Farid Khan as a tabud khawahi tenant. In order to understand how tabud khawahi tenants were dealt with at the time of the colonization of this district, reference may be made to Para. 201 of the Punjab Colony Manual (revised edition), the material portion of which reads as follows :

There was also in the Nill Bar area a large number of lessees of Government waste land, of areas varying between 6000 acres and 4 or 5. Detailed inspections of all these leased lands were carried out, and recommendations made according to the extent to which the conditions of the leases had been fulfilled. Eventually, Government sanctioned, for the smaller lessees, allotment on ordinary peasant conditions of 150 per cent. of the existing cultivated area . . . There was also an immediate conferment of occupancy rights. The price to be eventually charged for proprietary rights was the ordinary peasant price . . . The same principles were applied to most of the large leases.

It was in pursuance of this policy that occupancy rights were conferred upon Mt. Subhano by an order of the Government dated 22nd December 1927, and it is in these circumstances that it is now to be determined as to how the succession to the occupancy rights will follow. The two principal Sections which deal with succession to tenants under the Colonization of Government Lands Act are Ss. 20 and 21. S. 20 comes into play only when an original tenant dies. The term 'original tenant' excludes a female tenant and consequently it is not to be considered in this case. S. 21 unfortunately is not happily worded and before coming to a definite conclusion as to whether it governs the present case and if so which part of it, it will be necessary to reproduce it at length. It is couched in the following terms :

When, after the commencement of this Act, any male tenant, who is not an original tenant, dies, or any female tenant dies, marries or re-marries, the succession to the tenancy shall devolve

(a) in the case of a female, to whom the tenancy has been first allotted, on the successor nominated by the Collector from the issue of such female tenant, or from the male agnates of the person on account of whose services the tenancy was allotted to her ;

(b) in all other cases on the person or persons, who would succeed if the tenancy were agricultural land acquired by the original tenant.

The substantive part of this Section evidently applies as this is a case where a female tenant has died. So far the matter is clear but the question whether Cl. (a) or Cl. (b) would come into play is not free from difficulty. On the one hand, it is contended for the appellant that Cl. (a) applies and as the Collector was fully empowered to nominate a successor to Mt. Subhano by virtue of the powers conferred upon him by Cl. (a) and inasmuch as he has made a nomination, the plaintiffs have not a leg to stand on. On the other hand, it is urged by the respondents that Mt. Subhano not being the tenant to whom the tenancy was first allotted, Cl. (b) will come into operation and inasmuch as under the custom applicable to the parties daughters succeed to the self-acquired property of their father in preference to the collaterals, they would be preferential heirs in this case and would exclude the collaterals both in the case of proprietary and in the case of occupancy rights. After giving full weight to the arguments addressed to us, we have come to the conclusion that in the matter of succession to the occupancy rights held by Mt. Subhano, Cl. (a) of S. 21 is applicable and not Cl. (b); but at the same time we are disposed to hold that the nomination of the reversioners of Ghulam Farid Khan by the Collector was ultra vires and that he could make his choice only from among the daughters of Mt. Subhano and from none else. The Collector exercised his power of nomination on the ground that although Mt. Subhano was the person to whom the tenancy was first allotted it was allotted to her in recognition of the services of her husband or his father and the fact of their being the original lessees was treated as tantamount to their having rendered a service within the meaning of Clause (a).

On appeal the Commissioner merely contented himself by saying that the tenancy was first allotted under the Act to Mt. Subhano and that the persons nominated by the Collector were the proper persons to have been nominated under S. 21 (a). We are inclined to agree both with the Collector and the Commissioner to this extent that it was Mt. Subhano to whom the tenancy was first allotted under the Act, but we are not prepared to concede that it was on account of the services of either Ghulam Farid Khan or his father that the tenancy was so allotted. The fact of a person being the recipient of a lease and his continuance in possession as such is to render no service to the Crown. The word 'services' as used in this clause evidently refers to some sort of signal service rendered either in the Military or the Civil Departments or in any other way which may deserve the recognition of the Government, but it definitely does not allude to the mere fact of being a lessee from the Government. Consequently the Collector was not empowered under the law to make a nomination from among the male agnates of either Ghulam Farid Khan or his father. His choice, in these circumstances, was confined under S. 21 (a) to the issue of the female tenant to whom the tenancy was first allotted and it was the plaintiffs who came under this category and none else. In this view of the law it is not necessary to discuss Cl. (b) of S. 21 as that clause comes into play only if Cl. (a) does not apply. We have no hesitation in holding therefore that the proper group from which a successor could be nominated was that of the plaintiffs and inasmuch as they are in possession of the property they are entitled to the relief prayed for. It was argued in this connexion that in so far as the Collector could make his nomination from the issue of Mt. Subhano, he could nominate only one of the plaintiffs and that inasmuch as all plaintiffs were claiming the relief, it could not be granted to them. This however is an erroneous view of looking at the matter. In our opinion, the Collector could, if he so desired, make his choice of all the plaintiffs and was not enjoined to confine his choice to one only from among this group.

We may in passing refer to the authorities which were relied upon by the parties in the matter of the applicability or otherwise of S. 21 (a). In 11 Lah 282¹ the land was originally allotted to one D in 1899 as abadkar, who however died before he had fulfilled the conditions of the grant. The land was then mutated in the name of his widow who acquired the tenancy rights in 1904. On her death in 1923 a question arose as to whether her daughter or the brother of her deceased husband succeeded to her. A Division Bench of this Court held that the tenancy had been first allotted to a female and consequently S. 21 (a) applied. This decision was relied upon in 12 Lah 529² by another Division Bench of this Court where also a widow had been granted occupancy right in the land of which her husband was the abadkar. In 14 Lah 168³ however a Division Bench of this Court differed from the reasoning employed in the two judgments referred to above and remarked that the words "first allotted" described its creation. We are in respectful agreement with the principle of law enunciated there and it is on that basis that we have treated Mt. Subhano as the person to whom the tenancy was first allotted. In A I R 1933 Lah 293,⁴ it was observed that where the widow of an original grantee is in possession in accordance with S. 20 (b), the succession would prima facie be governed by the provisions of S. 21. This judgment is beside the point. 18 Lah 220,⁵ so far as it goes, is correct but it affords no help in the decision of the present case.

It now remains to consider whether the daughters exclude collaterals in the matter of succession to the land held in proprietary rights. The appellant mainly relied upon the Answer to Question 59 in the Customary law of the Pakpattan and Dipalpur Tahsils of the Montgomery District compiled in 1925, which says that among Rajputs daughters in the absence of sons get a share only until their marriage and that after their marriage the reversioners exclude them. It is true that Khokhars are described as Rajputs by some witnesses and that the answer to the question so far as it goes creates an initial presumption in favour of the reversioners, but in this case we consider that this presumption has been rebutted by a large number of instances in the family itself. It cannot be denied that when Mt. Subhano alienated a part of her property to one Sham Din, it was held by the Chief Court of the Punjab that according to the customary rules generally prevailing among the agricultural tribes of this province, daughters have a preferential right of succession to it as against the reversioners and that the statement in the Customary law referred to ancestral immovable property only and not to acquired property. It is also proved that when the present plaintiffs contested the gift which Mt. Subhano had made in favour of one Kunda Wattu, it was held that the daughters had a preferential right to succeed and were consequently empowered to challenge the gift. It is further in evidence that Mt. Subhano gifted a considerable area of the proprietary land in favour of the present plaintiffs and that the reversioners did not consider it expedient to challenge that alienation. Only recently when one of the reversioners, Riaz-ud-Din, died, his daughter, Mt. Sadan, was held entitled to succeed to him in preference to the collaterals. It is true that both the oral and the documentary evidence led by the plaintiffs is of a very inconclusive character and does not throw much light upon the matter in issue, but in the face of what had happened in the family itself and in the absence of any instances to the contrary, we consider that we will not be justified in reversing the judgment of the Subordinate Judge on the question of custom.

In this view of the case it does not appear to us to be necessary to discuss whether the previous decision of the Chief Court in Sham Din's case operated as res judicata or not as regards the proprietary land, although if it had been necessary to arrive at a decision on the point, we would have been inclined to hold that it did not operate as res judicata inasmuch as the plaintiffs derived their title as regards that land from their father and not from Mt. Subhano. Further, Mt. Subhano as an alienor was a pro forma defendant and not a necessary party, and for that reason too the decision in the previous case will be no bar in this case. On the grounds stated above we maintain the decision of the Court below and dismiss this appeal with costs.

Second Appeals Nos. 196 and 229 of 1938, Decided on 30th June 1938, from decree of Dist. Judge, Hissar, D/- 15th November 1937.

(a) Evidence Act (1872), S. 13 — Recitals in documents of transfer by sale or mortgage are admissible in proof of title as assertions of right though assertions may be in favour of person relying.

An act of transfer by way of sale or mortgage of property necessarily involves an assertion that the transferor owns the interest transferred and is therefore a transaction by which such a right is claimed or asserted. Hence recitals in the documents of such transfer are admissible in evidence under S. 13, though assertions in those documents may be in favour of the person relying upon them. The more recent the transaction, the less value to be attached to it : A I R 1937 Lah 688, Rel. on ; A I R 1921 Mad 383; A I R 1928 Cal 315 and 16 I C 746, Ref. [P 848 C 1]

(b) Highway—Street belonging to individual but accessible to public—Persons having wall facing street have right to make openings in wall.

Where a street which is the private property of an individual is accessible to the public, any one has a right to make openings in his own wall facing such a street. Hence the owner of such street cannot obtain injunction restraining such person from making such openings. [P 848 C 2]

Judgment. — The plaintiffs, Lachhmi Narain and others, originally sued for a perpetual injunction restraining defendant 1, Manak Chand, from opening any door or jhanki in a wall overlooking a blind alley, which the plaintiffs claimed as their own. They also sought a mandatory injunction directing Manak Chand to close a lattice and a parnala, which he had opened shortly before suit. Subsequently the plaint was amended, as Manak Chand had opened two windows and a door in the lower storey. The amendment is now of no great importance, but it is convenient to note that the suit concerns a jhanki (lattice) and a parnala (water-spout) in the upper storey of the defendant's house, and a door and two windows in the lower storey. The plaintiffs sought an injunction directing the defendant to close all these things and not to open any more in the future. Manak Chand pleaded that the jhanki and parnala first mentioned were old, that the blind alley in question was the property of the Municipal Committee of Bhiwani and that the Committee had given him permission to make the more recent openings. After the suit had been pending for about 18 months, defendant 1 assigned his rights to one Mt. Rama Nandi, who was then impleaded as defendant 3. The plaintiffs also impleaded the Municipal Committee of Bhiwani as defendant 2, because the Committee had claimed that the alley was a public street, and had given permission to Manak Chand to construct the openings. The learned trial Judge, the Senior Subordinate Judge of Hissar, found that the plaintiffs were owners of two-thirds of the blind alley and the Municipal Committee of the remaining third, adjacent to the public street. He granted the plaintiffs an injunction directing defendant 3 to close the jhanki and such parts of the door and windows as opened on what he had found to be the plaintiff's private property. All three parties appealed to the learned District Judge of Hissar. He found that the jhanki and water-spout in the upper storey were more than 20 years old, and that defendant 1 and his successor, defendant 3, had acquired a right of easement about them. As to the blind alley, he found that the plaintiff had not been able to prove his exclusive ownership, nor had the Municipal Committee. He held, professing to follow A I R 1927 Lah 351,¹ that it was jointly owned by all the parties whose houses abutted on it. This was not incorporated in the decree, which merely dismissed the plaintiffs' suit for an injunction.

The principal plaintiff, Lachhmi Narain, has appealed to this Court through Mr. Jagan Nath Aggarwal, and the Municipal Committee has appealed through Mr. B. C. Varma. The defendant-respondents are represented by Mr. Mehr Chand Mahajan. This judgment will dispose of both appeals (Nos. 196 and 229 of 1938). Mr. Jagan Nath Aggarwal first pointed out that it was not open to the learned District Judge to hold that the blind alley was the property of the persons whose houses abutted thereon, as Manak Chand, like the Municipal Committee, had pleaded that the blind alley was the property of the Municipal Committee. This finding must therefore be set aside. He also argued that recitals in various title-deeds relative to the property, admissible under Sec. 13, Evidence Act, proved that the blind alley was the private property of the plaintiffs.

Mr. Varma urged that a plan of Bhiwani, not relied upon by the lower Courts, ought to have been relied upon and that the blind alley was the property of the Committee. Mr. Mehr Chand Mahajan pointed out that the finding that the par-

nala and jhanki in the upper storey had existed for more than 20 years was binding on me as a finding of fact and that the District Judge's judgment must be accepted on this point. The following pedigree table will be useful :

The following are the recitals on which Mr. Jagan Nath relies : Ex. P. 10 (called by me Ex. P. 10/1 to distinguish from another Ex. P. 10) is a deed of 1856, whereby Ram Rattan bought the property from one Bhupan. It refers to the site in dispute as gali share am milkiyat wa maq-buziat muzhir mukirka. Ex. P. 10, is a deed of mortgage effected by Ghisu in favour of the father of Lachhmi Narain. This simply speaks of the site in dispute as a gali, but in the plan attached it is described as gali mushtarika zauja Hazari. This description gali mushtarika zauja Hazari is repeated in another mortgage deed of 1907, Ex. P. 8, executed by Ghisu in favour of Khubi Ram, and in a sale deed in favour of Lachhmi Narain himself, executed in 1911, Ex. P. 9. The deeds, Exs. P. 8, P. 9 and P. 10 refer to half the property. The other half of the property was sold to Joti Ram, father of Lachhmi Narain, by Bujan in the year 1931 by another deed, Ex. P. 7. The operative part of this deed speaks of half the share in a gali in which the vendor is owner, the boundary describes it as gali share am. These documents were relied upon by the trial Judge, but the learned District Judge discounted them with the remark that the weight to be attached to an admission in one's own favour cannot be much.

Mr. Jagan Nath Aggarwal quoted A I R 1937 Lah 688,² 70 I C 389,³ 55 Cal 355⁴ and 16 I C 746⁵ to the effect that such recitals are admissible in evidence under S. 13, Evidence Act. It is unnecessary to enter into any legal discussion in detail, because Mr. Mehr Chand Mahajan admitted this proposition. It is sufficient to refer to A I R 1937 Lah 688,² which lays down that an act of transfer by way of sale or mortgage of property necessarily involves an assertion that the transferor owns the interest transferred and is therefore a transaction by which such a right is claimed or asserted. It may be an assertion in one's favour, and broadly speaking the more recent the transaction, the less value to be attached to it; but the oldest assertion of title in this case was in the year 1856, and there are subsequent assertions of the years 1899, 1907 and 1911. The lower Courts did not mention the deed of 1856. It was argued in the trial Court and again before me that this deed was a forgery. The trial Judge gave no distinct finding but accepted the document. The District Judge did not mention it, and there is no finding of fact. Having inspected the document, which was given by Ghisu to Khubi Ram, and having read the evidence about it, I am of opinion that it is genuine. The genuineness of the other documents was never questioned. To my mind these assertions repeated at such long periods of time leave no doubt that the blind alley was and is private property and is now the property of the plaintiffs. The assertions however state not only that it is private property but that it is gali share am, and this leads me to the appeal preferred by the Municipal Committee. A street is defined in S. 3 (13) (a), and a public street in Sec. 3 (13) (b), Municipal Act 3 of 1911:

A street shall mean any road, footway, square, Court, alley, or passage, accessible, whether permanently or temporarily to the public and whether a thoroughfare or not; and shall include every vacant space, notwithstanding that it may be private property.

A "public street" means any street inter alia paved or metalled out of municipal or public funds, and vests in the Committee. These definitions were substituted by an Amendment Act of 1933. The definitions of "street" and "public street" were made for the first time in the Punjab Municipal Act of 1911, not being found in the previous Act of 1891. In 1856 there were of course no municipalities at all. It appears to me that the expression "gali share am" in the deeds cannot be held to mean a public street as defined in recent legislation, but merely a street to which the public have access. The learned District Judge found that the Committee had failed to prove that it was a public street, and I agree. I would hold that it is a street but the property of the plaintiff. It is in evidence that the street was being cleansed by a sweeper of the Committee for ten years, but this does not make any difference. It is also in evidence that one-third of the street is paved, and this is why the learned trial Judge found that this one-third was the property of the Committee. It is however not a finding of fact binding on me, for the District Judge has held otherwise, and according to the evidence the pavement in the blind alley is of small vertical bricks, while the public street is paved with large modern bricks, which were laid down only a year ago. My finding is that it is a street accessible to the public, but at the same time the private property of the plaintiffs.

The learned counsel for the Committee wished to rely on the Committee's map, but it is inadmissible in evidence. Sec. 36, Evidence Act, lays down that maps and plans generally offered for public sale, or prepared under the authority of Government, are admissible. Other maps and plans have to be proved in the ordinary way. So far from being proved, it is not known when or by whom this plan was prepared, though the words "District Engineer, Hissar" can be deciphered on it. It is material that in the year 1921 the Municipal Committee passed a resolution that it was unsatisfactory, in fact applying to the map the epithet "naqis." This map is inadmissible in evidence. Now I find that the blind alley in suit is a street, although the private property of the plaintiffs and the plaintiffs cannot obtain an injunction restraining defendants 1 or 3 from making openings in the wall of their own house. Anyone has a right to make such openings in his own wall facing on a street. Both the appeals are therefore rejected. In the circumstances the parties are to bear their own costs throughout.

Mela Ram Aggarwal and Nathu Lal

Judgment. — The land in suit was held by Jaimal, a childless Jat proprietor of patti Jassa in village Dholewal, which is situated in the Ludhiana Tehsil of the Ludhiana District. The land is now occupied by the khewatdars of the patti, but has been claimed by the defendants as the sons of Jaimal's sister. The plaintiffs are consequently suing for a declaration of ownership. They do not appear to be related to Jaimal, but sue in their capacity as proprietors. The general compilation of Customary law merely states that sister's sons do not succeed in the presence of collaterals, but does not state whether they have any rights in the absence of collaterals. There is however a separate compilation of Customary law applicable to Jats in certain parganas, one of which includes the village Dholewal, and this states that sisters and their sons do not succeed in any circumstances. The same answer was given in 1882 and again in 1910. There are certain instances of gifts to sisters but none of succession by them or their sons. The plaintiffs were accordingly granted a decree by the trial Court. This decision was reversed in appeal by the District Judge, who held the alleged custom excluding sisters to be doubtful and applied the personal law of the parties in favour of the defendants.

The plaintiffs have now come up on second appeal. A preliminary objection has been raised on the ground that the appeal is not within the scope of the certificate granted by the District Judge. The certifi.

cate is certainly defective, for, it states that the question involved is whether distant collaterals exclude the sons of a sister. It will be seen from the summary of the case given above that this is not the matter in issue between the parties, the only question being whether sisters or their sons are entitled to succeed in the absence of collaterals. This is further brought out by the order of the District Judge for the grant of the certificate, which makes it clear that the real question is whether sisters do not succeed in any case, and it is not suggested that there is any conflict on the question whether they are debarred from succeeding in the presence of collaterals. If the plaintiffs had relied upon this order in accordance with 4 Lah 434,¹ they would have been entitled to appeal. The reference to collaterals in the certificate itself is clearly the result of a clerical error; and when the real nature of the dispute is evident from the order of the District Judge granting the certificate, I do not think that the appeal can be excluded by a defect of this kind.

On the merits I am in agreement with the finding of the trial Court. The entry in the Customary law for the whole district does not contradict the local entry. It is merely silent on the question whether sisters or their sons succeed in the absence of collaterals. When the Customary law is silent on a point of this kind, which must be of rare occurrence, there is no reason why the local riwaj-i-am should not be accepted. As the entries are public documents, these entries can be used as evidence of the existence of a custom, whether instances exist or not. The failure to produce any instances of true succession by a sister is in itself sufficient to corroborate the existence of the custom. The local custom in the village therefore is that sisters do not succeed in any circumstances at all. It has been found that the property in suit was acquired by Jaimal and the learned District Judge has attached importance to this fact. In the ordinary way, an entry in the riwaj-i-am would cover only ancestral property. The present entry however lays down that sisters are not to succeed in any circumstances and the application of the general rule to such an entry has been discussed in A I R 1933 Lah 553,² a case which also relates to Jats of the Ludhiana District, although from another tehsil. When it is stated that females do not succeed in any case, it has been held that this covers the self-acquired property as well as the ancestral property.

It has been further argued that the exclusion of a sister is not in itself sufficient to prove that the plaintiffs have any right to succeed to the land and that the plaintiffs have even less claim than usual, since the village is heterogeneous. To this there are two answers. In the first place, the plaintiffs are in possession of the land, and if the defendants are altogether excluded from succession, they are entitled to rely upon their possessory title as against the defendants. It might be otherwise if an escheat was claimed by the Crown but that question does not arise in the present proceedings. In the second place, the plaintiffs have succeeded in finding a judicial instance of 1861 whereby the proprietors of the patti were allowed to succeed in preference to a person claiming a connexion through a female, and this itself refers to an earlier instance. Further one of the witnesses appearing for the defendants has deposed to a third instance in which the proprietors were preferred to a sister's son. It may be true that there is no general rule under which the proprietors of a heterogeneous village can claim to succeed for want of a better claimant, but the plaintiffs are not relying upon any such general rule. It seems to me that the plaintiffs have succeeded in proving that they cannot be ousted by the defendants, and I see no reason why they should not be granted a decree in the form in which they have asked for it to be given, in view of the local instances of similar succession. For these reasons I accept the appeal and restore the decree of the trial Court with costs throughout. Counsel for the defendants has asked for a certificate which would enable him to file a Letters Patent Appeal. This prayer is granted.

(a) Criminal Trial — Judgment — Proper course of dealing with criminal case stated— Judge dealing first with accused's statement and then with prosecution evidence believing that part which supported accused's admission of guilt—Procedure held illegal.

The proper course for a Magistrate to deal with a criminal case is first to discuss the prosecution evidence and come to an independent finding on the truth or falsity of the story related by them and should then examine the statement of the accused and criticize it in the light of the circumstances brought on the record. After having weighed the prosecution evidence and the statement of the accused, he should then formulate his conclusion as to the guilt or innocence of the accused. [P 851 C 2]

Where the Sessions Judge dealt with the statement of the accused first and having found it untrustworthy, except to the extent of his admission that he had killed his wife, he then animadverted upon the prosecution evidence and finding it to be entirely unreliable, he believed the evidence only to the extent to which it agreed with the admission of the accused :

Held that the Sessions Judge had approached the case in an illegal manner. [P 851 C 1]

(b) Criminal Trial—Confession—Exculpatory part inherently improbable — Court can act upon only inculpatory part.

Where there is evidence to show that any portion of the exculpatory statement in a confession of the accused is inherently improbable, the Court is at liberty to reject that portion of the statement which appears to it to be so improbable and to act only upon that part of the statement which is inculpatory: A I R 1931 All 1 (F B), Rel. on. [P 851 C 2]

Anant Ram Khosla for Advocate-General — for the Crown.

Din Mohammad J.—Ghulam Nabi has been convicted of an offence under S. 302, I. P. C., for having caused the death of his wife, Mt. Akbar Jan, and sentenced to transportation for life. He has appealed through the jail authorities. After going through the record and hearing counsel for the Crown we have arrived at the conclusion that this appeal must fail. There is ample material on the record to justify his conviction. We cannot however help remarking that the Sessions Judge approached the case in an entirely illegal manner in so far as he dealt with the statement of the accused first and having found it untrustworthy, except to the extent of his admission that he had killed his wife, he then animadverted upon the prosecution evidence and finding it to be entirely unreliable, he believed the evidence only to the extent to which it agreed with the admission of the accused. This is, to say the least, a topsy-turvy way of dealing with a criminal case. He should have first discussed the prosecution evidence and come to an independent finding on the truth or falsity of the story related by them and should then have examined the statement of the accused and criticized it in the light of the circumstances brought on the record. After having weighed the prosecution evidence and the statement of the accused, he would then have been justified in formulating his conclusion as to the guilt or innocence of the accused. We are not prepared to reject the prosecution evidence altogether nor do we consider that the prosecution witnesses without any exception deserve all the epithets used by the Sessions Judge while discussing their individual testimony. Even if the statements of some of the prosecution witnesses were discarded in certain particulars, the accused, in view of the admission made by him, would escape punishment only if his statement satisfied all the requirements of the law. No doubt the admission of an accused is to be taken as a whole, but a Court of law is not bound to accept even those portions of the statement made by the accused which in face of the evidence led by the prosecution appear to be palpably absurd. The leading authority on this subject is 52 All 1011.¹ There five Judges of the Allahabad High Court, including the present Chief Justice of this Court, observed as follows :

Where there is no other evidence to show affirmatively that any portion of the exculpatory element in the confession is false, the Court must accept or reject the confession as a whole and cannot accept only the inculpatory element while rejecting the exculpatory element as inherently incredible.

This would evidently show that where there is evidence to show that any portion of the exculpatory statement is inherently improbable, the Court is at liberty to reject that portion of the statement which appears to it to be so improbable and to act only upon that part of the statement which is inculpatory. Tested in the light of these remarks, the admission of the accused would clearly establish the offence with which he was charged, inasmuch as the evidence on the record, even if partially disbelieved, is sufficient to justify a Court of law in excluding those portions of his admission on the basis of which he claims grave and sudden provocation. With these remarks we dismiss this appeal.

Net interest received from vendees of securi-on its own facts whether the investment was a part of the ordinary business of the investor or some securities and shares and earned profits. The income-tax authorities found that though these profits were utilized in increasing the reserve fund they were trading profits as the assessee had been dealing in securities and shares as part of his business for several years. There was evidence that the assessee had securities worth several laos as part of its circulating capital and that the securities which were sold were not earmarked :Held that in view of this evidence it could not be said that the finding of the income-tax authorities that the profits were trading profits was based on no material. The fact that the profits had not been utilized in the revenue account and that they had been carried to the reserve capital en bloc was quite consistent with the finding that they were trading profits. The income derived by the assessee could not be deemed to be casual. The amount of profits was therefore taxable.

Mehr Chand Mahajan and Ratan Lal Chawla — for Petitioner.J. N. Aggarwal and S. M. Sikri — for Respondent.Din Mohammad J.—The facts involved in this reference are fully set out in the statement of the case drawn up by the Commissioner of Income-tax under S. 66 (2), Income-tax Act, and need not be recapitu-lated. The questions propounded by the Commissioner are :

(1) Whether in the circumstances of the case the amount of Rs. 1,42,588 realized by the assessee on the sale of securities and shares over their cost price is taxable ;

and

(2) Whether under the circumstances of the case the net interest amounting to Rs. 2764 received from vendees of securities on de die in diem basis is taxable ?We may at the outset point out to the Commissioner the desirability of framing questions on a more precise and definite basis so that the issues of law referred to this Court may not admit of any ambiguity. The words "in the circumstances of this case" inserted in both the questions reproduced above leave the matter vague and indefinite. The facts are to be determined finally by the income-tax authorities and the findings of fact arrived at by them are not liable to be disturbed by this Court. By using the words "in the circumstances of the case" the duty is, so to say, cast upon this Court to search out the circumstances on which the questions are founded and this is not the right way of dealing with the matter. It is common ground that the assessee is a banking concern and that the profits in question accrued from the sale of securities and shares. The only question that falls to be judged therefore is whether these profits form part of the capital or the revenue account of the assessee. If they are in the nature of capital, they are exempt, but if on the other hand they are in the nature of revenue, they are taxable. The Income-tax Officer while dealing with these profits observed:Apart from bringing in any such considerations whether the Bank is dealing in securities or not, the income is taxable on the footing that when a person is dealing not in goods but in money and is taking money from his customers, and has to hold that money as a part of his business, and does so in the ordinary business course in the form which is most profitable having in mind the security and the requisite degree of liquidity, then all his dealings in that money lie in revenue account with this difference that investments are not stock-in-trade and to be valued as stock, but only brought in when there is realization in some form. I therefore hold that the profit is taxable.On appeal the Assistant Commissioner also adopted the same view and upheld the decision of the Income-tax Officer ;
while disposing of the assessee's application under S. 66 (2), the Commissioner has stated that although the profits realized from the sale of securities and shares were utilized in increasing the reserve fund, the only inference possible is that the assessee had been dealing in securities and shares as part of his business since 1934. The Commissioner however did not reject the conclusions arrived at by the Income-tax Officer and the Assistant Commissioner and considered that that was also a permissible way of looking at the matter. The assessee contends that the opinion of the Commissioner as well as that of his subordinate officers is wrong and that inasmuch as the profits have admittedly gone to swell the reserve fund, they cannot be taxed. In support of his contention he has relied on 16 Tax Cas 381,¹ 2 I T C 184,² 18 Lah 706,³ 8 I T C 395⁴ and 19 Tax Cas 390.⁵ In 16 Tax Cas 381¹ the assessee was an insurance company and like most insurance companies it had a reserve fund. The company sold a small part of the Government securities in which that reserve fund was invested and invested the proceeds in other Government securities of a different denomination, making a substantial profit. The question arose whether the profit so made was a profit of the company's business. The General Commissioners held that it was not a trading profit. On appeal, the Lord President remarked that the question whether a person is or is not engaged in a trade is not a question of law but a question of fact and that the finding is only open for consideration if it was possible to say that there was no evidence before the Commissioners upon which they could reasonably arrive at their conclusion. In this connexion his Lordship did not attach any importance to the fact that under the Articles of Association there was a power to invest the funds of the company in certain classes of securities and also to vary the investments of the company and observed:

It does not necessarily follow from the circumstance that the company sees fit to sell a block of its Government securities, whether the purpose be to get a better return, or whether the purpose be to increase the reserve fund by taking profit from the realization of a particular block, that therefore the company is trading in the purchase and sale of the securities forming its reserve fund.

In a concurring judgment delivered by Lord Sands, it was said:

If the directors treat the profit from appreciation just as a trading profit, this may help the inference that the company was trading.

On the finding that the assessee company was not carrying on the business of an investment company, the appeal was disallowed. In 2 I T C 184² the assessee, a banking concern, claimed deduction on account of depreciation in the value of Government securities held by it, and it was held that the deduction claimed was not permissible under the Act as the securities are permanent investment of part of the fixed capital so retained as an emergency reserve and not part of the stock-in-trade. In 18 Lah 706³ this Court considered the true implications in 2 I T C 184² and remarked that it was not possible to lay down a rule of general application that in every case an investment in securities should be treated as fixed capital. It was however observed that if it could be found that an investment had been made for the purpose of permanently excluding a certain sum from the floating capital of a concern, it might be permissible to hold that that sum had no concern with the stock-in-trade. It is upon this observation that the assessee relies in connexion with this case. In 8 I T C 395⁴ where the assesseees who were general produce dealers trading in salt had on the abolition of the system of deferred payment for salt sold the Government securities deposited by them with the Commissioner of Salt, it was held that the loss incurred by the sale was a capital loss and not one sustained in business. In 19 Tax Cas 390⁵ Lord Macmillan drew a distinction between fixed and circulating capital in the following terms:

Circulating capital is capital which is turned over and in the process of being turned over yields profits or loss. Fixed capital is not involved directly in the process and remains unaffected by it.

The assessee has further relied on 6 I T C 178⁶ and urged that in view of the definition of income as given by their Lordships of the Privy Council, such casual and irregular monetary return in the shape of profits on the sale of securities as is involved in this case cannot be treated as assessable income under the Act. On behalf of the Commissioner, reliance has been placed

In 3 Tax Cas 231⁸ it was held that if an Investment Trust Company takes powers in its Memorandum of Association to vary its investments and generally to sell or exchange any of its investments, the net gain by realizing investments at larger prices than were paid for them constitutes profits chargeable with income-tax. It was remarked by the Lord President who delivered the judgment that the power of varying the investments and turning them to account took their place among what are the essential features of the assessee's business and were the appointed means of the company's gains.

In 5 Tax Cas 159⁹ a company formed for the purpose, inter alia, of acquiring and reselling mining property after acquiring and working various property, resold the whole to a second company, receiving payment in fully paid shares of the latter company. It was held that the difference between the purchase price and the value of the shares for which the property was exchanged is a profit assessable to income-tax. While differentiating between cases where enhanced values on realization of investments are assessable and those where they are not, Lord Justice Clerk observed:

What is the line which separates the two classes of cases may be difficult to define and each case must be considered according to its facts; the question to be determined being, 'Is the sum of gain that has been made a mere enhancement of value by realizing a security, or is it a gain made in an operation of business in carrying out a scheme for profit-making'?

In 13 Tax Cas 378¹⁰ Scrutton L. J. at pages 390.91 of the report observed that the question whether a trade is being carried on is a question of degree and fact and it was impossible to say that there was no evidence on which the Commissioners could find that the transactions were part of, incidental to and arose out of the appellants' trade or business. In 14 Tax Cas 22¹¹ it was held that the surrender of the old stocks enabled the result of the company's holding of those investments to be definitely ascertained and was equivalent to a realization. In this case the company admitted that any profit made on the realization of an investment was part of its profits for income-tax purposes. In 17 Tax Cas 381,¹² it was held that the conversion of war bonds was equivalent to the realization of investments. Here also it was admitted by the assessee that profits on realization of investments should be included in their profits for income-tax purposes.

On a review of the authorities cited at the Bar, we are again led to the same conclusion as was arrived at in 18 Lah 706,³ viz. that in every case that arises it is to be determined on its own facts whether the investment was a part of the ordinary business of the investor or otherwise, and in this matter the finding of fact arrived at by the income-tax authorities is conclusive unless it is found that that finding was based on no material. On going through the two balance-sheets put in by the assessee as also the auditor's note, Ex. F, and taking into consideration the fact that the assessee held securities worth more than 30 lacs as part of its circulating capital and that the securities which were sold were not earmarked, it is difficult to say that the opinion of the income-tax authorities is based on no material. It is true that the profits have not been utilized in the revenue account and that they have been carried to the reserve capital en bloc, but that circumstance is quite consistent with the finding of the income-tax authorities that they were trading profits. The fact that no securities were sold during the first six years of their purchase was also present to their minds, and if they still did not draw a conclusion favourable to the assessee, they were at liberty to do so. In this view of the case the income derived by the assessee as remarked in 18 Lah 706³ can on no account be deemed to be casual. We consider therefore that the answer to the first question should be in the affirmative and we answer it accordingly. The assessee admits that the answer to the second question depends on the decision given on the Civil Revn. No. 159 of 1938, Decided on 10th May 1938, from order of Senior Sub-Judge, Amritsar, D/- 5th November 1937.

Abdul Hamid — Respondent.

(a) Workmen's Compensation Act (1923), S. 20 — Commissioner appointed under Workmen's Compensation Act is "Court subordinate to High Court."

A Commissioner appointed under the Workmen's Compensation Act and adjudicating a claim made under the Act is a "Court subordinate to the High Court" within the meaning of Sec. 115, Civil P. C. or S. 44, Punjab Courts Act, and a petition for revision lies against an order passed by him provided all the other necessary conditions are present. [P 855 C 2; P 856 C 1]

(b) Workmen's Compensation Act (1923), S. 2 (1) (n), Sch. 2, Cl. (iii) — Workman claiming compensation under S. 2 (1) (n) and Sch. 2, Cl. (iii) — It must be shown that fifty or more persons are employed in the premises or precincts.

Before a person can claim compensation under S. 2 (1) (n) and Sch. 2, Cl. (iii), Workmen's Compensation Act, it is not necessary for him to show that the number of persons employed is fifty or more in the whole business or the factory concerned; what is necessary is that this number should be employed in the 'premises' or within the 'precincts'. [P 856 C 1]

Where the facts found were that the employer carried on business in two factories, in one of which 40 persons were employed and in the other 11 persons, and that both the factories were really branches of one and the same business :

Held that the finding was insufficient to bring the case within S. 2 (1) (n), Sch. 2, Cl. (iii) and the real question was whether the two buildings were in one and the same premises. [P 856 C 1]

C. L. Aggarwal — for Petitioners.

A. D. Malik — for Respondent.

Order.—The petitioners before me, Firm G. D. Gian Chand, are manufacturers of perambulators in Amritsar. The opposite party, Abdul Hamid, was employed as a hammer-man in the firm's workshop on a salary of Rs. 10 per mensem. On 30th August 1936, Abdul Hamid was beating a piece of iron with a hammer in the workshop, when a small bit went off and injured one of his eyes. As a result of this injury Abdul Hamid lost the sight of this eye permanently. He accordingly presented before the Senior Subordinate Judge, Amritsar (who is the Commissioner appointed under the Workmen's Compensation Act) for award of compensation to him under S. 19 of the Act. The firm contested the application on numerous grounds. They pleaded inter alia that the applicant was not a "workman" within the meaning of the Act, and therefore he had no locus standi to apply; that the injury in question was not caused by an accident arising out of, and in the course of, his employment with the firm; and that the injury had not resulted in such disablement as to entitle the applicant to compensation under the Act. The Senior Subordinate Judge has decided all these points against the firm and has awarded the applicant Rs. 210 as compensation.

The firm has presented in this Court a petition for revision of the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge. In the petition, several Sections of different Acts were mentioned, but at the time of the argument, counsel for the petitioners stated that the petition was under S. 115, Civil P. C. (Sec. 44, Punjab Courts Act). Counsel for the respondent raises a preliminary objection that no revision is competent as (a) an officer acting as a Commissioner under the Workmen's Compensation Act is not a "Court"; and (b) that even if he is a "Court", he is not a Court subordinate to the High Court. After hearing counsel, I am of opinion that this contention is without force. It is clear from Ss. 23 to 30-A of the Act, that in adjudicating a claim of this kind, the Commissioner acts judicially, and for several purposes he has all the powers of a Civil Court. It is also provided that the orders passed by the Commissioner in this behalf, are under certain circumstances, subject to appeal to the High Court. It is thus clear that the Commissioner is, for these purposes, a "Court subordinate to the High Court" and as in this particular case no appeal lies, the amount awarded being below Rs. 300, a revision is competent under S. 115, if the Commissioner had no jurisdiction to entertain the application, or has acted illegally or with material irregularity in the exercise of his jurisdiction. I therefore overrule the preliminary objection. Counsel for the petitioner firm ought to argue three points before me :—(i) That the applicant Abdul Hamid was not a "workman" as defined in the Act, and therefore the Senior Subordinate Judge, as Commissioner under the Act, had no jurisdiction to entertain the application; (ii) that the accident occurred between 12 noon and 2 P. M. when the factory was closed, and not at 11 A. M. as found by the lower Court; and (iii) that no notice was given by the applicant to the firm before presenting the application to the Commissioner and therefore the application was incompetent. The last two of these points are concluded by findings of fact, based on evidence on the record and I find no substance in them. The first question however requires consideration. It is common ground that this workshop is not governed by the Factories Act. The applicant can therefore claim compensation under S. 2 (1) (n) and Sch. II, Cl. (iii) if he was employed for the purpose of making . . . for use, transport or sale, any article, or part of an article in any premises wherein, or within the precincts whereof on any one day of the preceding twelve months, fifty or more persons have been so employed.

It must therefore be found out that at any time during the preceding year fifty or more persons must have been employed in the "premises" wherein, or within the precincts whereof, the respondent worked. There is no clear finding on this all important point by the lower Court. The facts found are that the employer carried on business in two factories in one of which 40 persons were employed for making perambulators and in the other 11 persons were employed for nickel-plating, and that both the factories are really branches of one and the same business. This finding however is insufficient to bring the case within the definition mentioned above. The definition does not say that the number of persons employed should be fifty in the whole business or in the factory concerned, but what is necessary is that this number should be employed "in the premises" or within the precincts thereof. The attention of the parties or the learned Judge does not appear to have been directed towards this essential point. One of the witnesses no doubt says that the two branches of the business are in separate buildings, but another says that the buildings are contiguous. The real question however is whether the two buildings are in one and the same premises.

As the decision of the case turns upon this matter and the evidence led by the parties is vague and indefinite, I think it proper to remit the case to the Senior Subordinate Judge for further inquiry. A plan shall be got prepared showing the situation of the two buildings, and both parties shall be allowed to produce such further evidence bearing on the point as they wish to do, and the Subordinate Judge will give his finding thereon. Counsel have been directed to cause their respective clients to appear before the Senior Subordinate Judge, Amritsar, on 6th June 1938, when a date for further proceedings will be fixed. The return shall be made in three months.

Judgment. — The material facts of the case giving rise to this appeal may be briefly stated as follows : On 25th November 1930, Malak Hira, defendant 2, mortgaged a plot of land for Rs. 3500 in favour of his own daughter Mt. Walait Begam, defendant 1. The plaintiff Din Mohammad, who is a creditor of the mortgagor, instituted this suit under S. 53, T. P. Act, for a declaration that the mortgage was intended to defeat and delay the creditors of Malak Hira, and was therefore void as against the creditors. This suit was instituted after Malak Hira had been adjudged an insolvent and the Official Receiver was also impleaded as a party in the trial Court. The trial Court decreed the plaintiff's suit. From this decision an appeal was preferred by Mt. Walait Begam to the District Court, but the Official Receiver was not impleaded as a respondent to the appeal. A preliminary objection was taken before the learned District Judge that the appeal was incompetent as the Official Receiver, who was a necessary party, had not been impleaded. He rejected this objection. On merits he found that the mortgage in question has been effected to defeat and delay the creditors as held by the trial Court, but he further held that the suit itself was incompetent without the leave of the Insolvency Court and as such leave had not been obtained, he accepted the appeal and dismissed the plaintiff's suit, leaving the parties to bear their own costs throughout. From this decision the present appeal has been preferred. The learned counsel for the plaintiff-appellant has urged two points ; (1) that the learned District Judge was not right in holding that the Official Receiver was not a necessary party to the appeal before him and (2) that no leave of the Insolvency Court was necessary for the purposes of this suit.

As regards the first point reliance was placed by the learned counsel for the appellant on 148 I C 329¹ and A I R 1926 All 29.² The learned counsel for the respondent urged in reply that these cases were distinguishable as they arose out of proceedings taken under the Provincial Insolvency Act. He urged that the Official Receiver was not a necessary party to the present suit which could be instituted by any creditor under S. 53, T. P. Act, in the interest of all the creditors. In support of his contention that the Official Receiver was not a necessary party, the learned counsel relied on 7 Lah 12³ and A I R 1935 Cal 15.⁴ On the second point the learned counsel for the appellant relied firstly on the provisions of S. 28 (2), Provincial Insolvency Act, and also on 141 I C 146⁵ and 119 I C 46.⁶ The learned counsel for the respondent on the other hand relied on 9 Rang 7⁷ and 42 Mad 684.⁸ He also cited certain other authorities, which were to the same effect, but it is unnecessary to refer to them here. I shall now deal with these points separately.

As regards the first point, I am of opinion that the Receiver was a necessary party to the appeal. The transaction sought to be set aside in the present case was a mortgage and the mortgagor had still a subsisting interest in the property. On the mortgagor being adjudged insolvent the property vested in the Receiver under Sec. 28, Provincial Insolvency Act, though subject to the mortgage and consequently the Receiver was, in my opinion, a necessary party to the suit and also to the appeal. It is true that a creditor has a right to impeach a fraudulent transfer under Sec. 53, T. P. Act, and such a suit can be instituted by any creditor in the interests of all the creditors. But after adjudication of the debtor as an insolvent, it is the Receiver, who is the proper representative of the creditors for the administration of the insolvent's estate and consequently even, if he does not himself institute the suit, he must, I think, be considered to be, at least a necessary party to the suit. The cases relied upon by the learned counsel for the respondents, viz. 7 Lah 12³ and A I R 1935 Cal 15,⁴ are not in point. In the former case, the question whether the Receiver was or was not a necessary party does not appear to have been raised or considered. In A I R 1935 Cal 15,⁴ a Single Bench ruling of the Calcutta High Court, there was no question of any insolvency and consequently there was no occasion to consider the position of a Receiver under the insolvency law. It seems to me that in view of the dual position held by such a Receiver, as the representative of the creditors as well as the insolvent, he has an interest not only in any property which is actually in his possession, but which can be made available for the insolvent's estate. It would be obviously dangerous to leave litigation in such circumstances in the hands of a creditor, who may perhaps collude with the alienee and serve his own interests to the prejudice of the interests of the other creditors and the insolvent. I hold accordingly that the Receiver was a necessary party to the appeal before the learned District Judge. On the above finding the appeal must, I think, succeed.

It is unnecessary on the above finding to consider the other point argued, viz. whether leave to sue was necessary, on which there seems to be a conflict of authority. But I may add that though the wording of Sec. 28, Provincial Insolvency Act, is not very happy, I incline to the view that leave to sue would be necessary when a creditor seeks any relief, which is intended to secure directly or indirectly the realization of his debt in the insolvency proceedings.

On the whole the better view in the interests of the administration of the insolvent's estate appears to me the one taken in 42 Mad 684⁸ and 9 Rang 7⁷ and I should have upheld the decision of the learned District Judge on this point, if it were necessary to decide it. But as stated above I am of opinion that the appeal before the learned District Judge was incompetent owing to the fact that the receiver, who was a necessary party, was not impleaded. I accordingly accept this appeal and affirm the decision of the trial Court, but in view of all the circumstances leave the parties to bear their costs throughout.

Second Appeal No. 399 of 1938, Decided on 11th July 1938, from decree of Dist. Judge, Jullundur, D/- 12th January 1938.

Custom (Punjab)—Alienation—Legal necessity — Joint debts incurred by members of a family for ordinary household necessities is just antecedent debt, unless expenditure covered by debt has been wastefully extravagant.

It is quite a usual practice for agricultural families to incur joint debts for ordinary household necessities and both parties commonly gain the benefit of the joint credit so obtained. Where there is no reason to suppose that the expenditure covered by a joint debt has been wastefully extravagant, a joint debt can be regarded as a just antecedent debt: 112 P W R 1906 and A I R 1928 Lah 702, Disting. [P 858 C 2; P 859 C 1]

Judgment.—The only question for decision in this second appeal is whether one of the items of consideration mentioned in a sale deed should be regarded as a matter of legal necessity under Customary law. This item consisted of a sum due on a previous mortgage. The mortgage deed had been executed jointly by the vendor and his brother and the consideration for the mortgage consisted of payments to the creditors in respect of debts, some of which were due from both the brothers and one from the vendor alone.

Mr. Achhru Ram for the appellant seeks to draw an analogy from the cases reported in 112 P W R 1906¹ and A I R 1928 Lah 702,² in which it was held that the payment of a debt incurred as a surety is not a matter of legal necessity. When a person stands surety, this is usually a purely gratuitous transaction and there may be good reasons for holding that a debt so incurred is not a just antecedent debt. On the other hand, it is quite a usual practice for agricultural families to incur joint debts for ordinary household necessities and both parties commonly gain the benefit of the joint credit so obtained. If there is no reason to suppose that the expenditure covered by a joint debt has been wastefully extravagant, there does not seem to be any particular reason why a joint debt should not be regarded as a just antecedent debt; and I do not think that the analogy of debts incurred by a person standing surety can be extended to cover this class of cases. The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Din Mohammad J.—This Letters Patent Appeal has arisen in the following circumstances: The Firm Salig Ram-Bhagat Ram of Patiala, had dealings in forward contracts with the Firm Kishen Singh-Sant Ram. One of the conditions of their business was that in case any dispute arose between them, it would be referred to two members of either of the Produce Merchants Association or the Traders Association or both, one to be nominated by each party. In case any party failed to nominate an arbitrator within seven days of the date when requested to do so, the party making the request would be entitled to nominate both. In the case of the arbitrators' disagreement, they would select an umpire and the award of the arbitrators or the umpire, as the case may be, would be binding on both parties. Differences between the two firms arose and according to the plaintiff firm, Kishen Singh-Sant Ram, they nominated Sundar Singh as their arbitrator and requested the defendant firm, Salig Ram-Bhagat Ram, to nominate an arbitrator of their own. This happened on 9th June 1936. On 17th July the defendant firm informed the plaintiff firm that they had nominated one Sohan Lal. A draft agreement was then drawn up by the plaintiff firm and was forwarded to the defendant firm for signature. The defendant firm however refused to sign this agreement and on 2nd October the plaintiff firm nominated the same Sohan Lal on behalf of the defendant firm and referred the matter in dispute to the arbitration of the two arbitrators so nominated. Sohan Lal refused to act and consequently the plaintiff firm made an application under Para. 17 of Sch. 2, Civil P. C. Various defences were taken by the defendant firm, but at present we are mainly concerned with the contention of the defendant firm, that inasmuch as one of the arbitrators had refused to act, the Court had no power to nominate an arbitrator or to refer the matter to arbitration. The Subordinate Judge, holding on another issue that the application was not competent, dismissed the application remarking at the same time that if he had not taken that action, he would have found that the Court was competent to nominate an arbitrator in place of the one who had refused to act and refer the matter to the arbitration of the two arbitrators, one appointed by the plaintiff firm and the other by the Court. The plaintiff firm appealed to this Court and the appeal came for hearing before Bhide J. He set aside the judgment of the Court below on the point on which it had been decided against the plaintiff firm and holding at the same time that the application could be entertained in spite of the objection of the defendant firm he remanded the case to the Court below to dispose of it in accordance with law. Hence this Letters Patent Appeal.

Counsel for the appellant has urged that although the provisions relating to 'arbitration in suits' apply mutatis mutandis to 'order of reference on agreement to refer' by virtue of Para. 19 of Sch. 2, yet in this case no reference could be made inasmuch as the agreement between the parties did not contemplate the appointment of an arbitrator in case an arbitrator nominated by the party refused to act and the action of the Court in this respect would accordingly be inconsistent with the agreement. In support of his contention he referred to 71 P R 1918,¹ 155 P R 1919,² 54 Mad 469³ and A I R 1937 Cal 388.⁴ In 71 P R 1918¹ it was held by a Division Bench composed of Scott-Smith and Le Rossignol, JJ. that an agreement to refer a matter in dispute to several specified arbitrators becomes incapable of performance when one of those arbitrators dies, and if such death takes place before an application is made under Para. 17, Sch. 2, Civil P. C., this is sufficient reason for refusing to file the agreement in Court. It was further observed that Para. 19 only comes into operation when an order of reference has been made under Para. 17. In 155 P R 1919² it was held that under Para. 17 of Sch. 2 an agreement to refer to arbitration may be filed in Court notwithstanding one of the arbitrators named therein has declined to act if the agreement makes provision for another arbitrator being appointed in place of one declining to act. In 54 Mad 469³ a Division Bench, in a case where parties had privately agreed to refer their disputes to certain named arbitrators and to abide by their unanimous decision and one of the arbitrators had died in the course of arbitration proceedings and prior to the matter being brought before the Court, held that the agreement became inoperative and came to an end on the death of the arbitrator inasmuch as it did not contain any provision as to what should be done in case any of the arbitrators died in the course of the arbitration proceedings. The agreement could not be filed in Court under Para. 17, for the Court could not thereafter make an order of reference in accordance with the agreement within the meaning of Cl. (4) of Para. 17 and consistently with it within the meaning of Para. 19 of that Schedule. In A I R 1937 Cal 388⁴ it was held by Cunliffe and Henderson JJ. that where in a dispute the parties agree that the dispute should be decided by certain named persons, the Court is not entitled to appoint another in the event of one of the arbitrators being unable or unwilling to act. 54 Mad 469³ was referred to in this case with approval. The learned Judge of this Court has sought to distinguish these cases on the ground that here no arbitrators were specified and as they were to be chosen from among the members of the two associations named in the agreement, the Court had full authority to make a choice from among the persons so specified and that consequently if it did, the action of the Court would be consistent with the agreement so as to attract the provisions of Para. 5 of Sch. 2. We are however unable to agree. A choice had been made under the agreement and specified persons had been nominated by the parties and it was only after that choice had been made and that nomination had taken place that one of the persons so nominated had refused to act. It cannot be said therefore that no specified person had been named in the agreement, in fact the draft agreement contains the names of these two persons and, in these circumstances, we do not consider that it is possible to distinguish the present case from the cases mentioned above.

On behalf of the respondents our attention has been drawn to 44 All 523,⁵ 17 Mad 498⁶ and A I R 1937 Lah 851.⁷ In 44 All 523⁵ a Division Bench of the Allahabad High Court observed that in the case of a private arbitrator refusing to act, the Court may, on the application of either party to the reference, make an order under Paragraph 17 and take action under Para. 5 by appointing a new arbitrator, although there is no provision to that effect in the deed of agreement. Reference in this case was made to 17 Mad 498⁶ with approval. In that case the words "so far as they are consistent with any agreement so filed" were given a wide interpretation and it was remarked that the reasonable construction is that the action of the Judge should not be inconsistent with the agreement if it contains any special provision on the subject. It is noteworthy however that a Division Bench of the same High Court in a later case reported in 17 I C 389⁸ held that where certain matters in dispute had been referred to three named arbitrators, two of whom had expressed their unwillingness to act, the agreement did become inoperative and ineffectual, inasmuch as it did not contain any provision to appoint arbitrators in the place of those unwilling to act. A I R 1937 Lah 851,⁷ so far as we can see, proceeds on different grounds. These authorities therefore can be of no avail in the present case. Even otherwise we are disposed to think that if parties to an agreement leave a contingency unprovided for, the Court will not be proceeding consistently with the agreement if it makes a provision for such contingency. The lacuna, if any, is to be filled by the parties themselves and not by the Court and inasmuch as the agreement now before us made no provision for the nomination of an arbitrator in case any arbitrator already nominated refused to act, the Court had no power to make the necessary appointment so as to make the agreement operative and effectual. We accordingly accept the appeal, set aside the order of the learned Judge of this Court as well as that of the trial Judge and dismiss the application. In view of the peculiar circumstances of the case however we leave the parties to bear their own costs throughout.

The action of a Magistrate asking the police to hold a preliminary enquiry and submit a report in connexion with a petition made to him for taking action against certain person under S. 107 is not illegal because there is nothing in the Criminal Procedure Code which forbids a Magistrate before whom information has been lodged for taking proceedings under S. 107 to refer the matter to the police for preliminary enquiry: A I R 1924 Lah 630; A I R 1932 All 670 and 2 Weir 51, Rel. on; A I R 1926 Mad 521, Expl.; A I R 1928 Lah 694=111 I C 450=29 Cr L J 866=29 P L R 666 and Criminal Revn. Mohd. Monir, Assistant to Advocate-General—for the Crown.

Tek Chand J. — The facts of the case which has given rise to this reference are as follows: Ismail, petitioner, presented a petition before a Magistrate of the First Class at Gurdaspur alleging that owing to enmity with him the respondent, Jagat Singh, was threatening to assault him, and as there was apprehension of a breach of the peace, he prayed that the respondent be bound down under Sec. 107, Criminal P. C. The Magistrate examined the applicant, but before issuing notice to the respondent to show cause he thought it proper to get a report from the local police. He accordingly passed an order directing that a copy of the petition be sent to the police for local inquiry and report. The petitioner, Ismail, moved the Sessions Judge to set aside this order on the ground that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to direct the police to make an enquiry into the matter and that if he considered a preliminary enquiry necessary he should have held it himself. Before the learned Sessions Judge the Public Prosecutor conceded that the order was illegal in view of an unreported Single Bench decision of this Court in Cr. R. No. 703 of 1936.¹ The learned Sessions Judge held that the case was covered by the ruling cited, and he has forwarded the case to this Court with the recommendation that the order of the Magistrate be set aside.

The reference was heard in the first instance by Coldstream J. sitting in Single Bench. At the hearing before him neither the petitioner nor the opposite party appeared, but counsel for the Crown opposed the recommendation of the learned Sessions

1. Crown through Ram Sarup v. Kishan Ohand, Cr R No. 703 of 1936.

Judge. He contended that in asking the police to make an enquiry and report, the Magistrate had not contravened any provision of the law, and that the view taken in the Single Bench ruling in Cr. R. No. 703 of 1936,¹ which the Sessions Judge had followed, was not correct. Coldstream J. was inclined to agree with this contention which is supported by rulings of the Allahabad and Madras High Courts. But in view of the conflict of decisions he has referred the case to a Division Bench.

We have carefully considered the matter and have examined the rulings bearing on the point, and the conclusion at which we have reached is that the order of the Magistrate was not illegal. Part 4 of the Code in which Sec. 107 appears deals with "Prevention of Offences" and lays down a procedure which is materially different from that prescribed in Part 6 for "Proceedings in Prosecutions". In this Part the provisions relating to proceedings for security to keep the peace are contained in Ss. 107, 112, 117 and 118. Sec. 107 prescribes the mode for the initiation of these proceedings. Sec. 112 gives the contents of the order calling upon the person from whom breach of the peace is apprehended to show cause why he should not be bound down. S. 117 lays down the mode in which (after such person has been brought before the Magistrate) enquiry as to the truth of the information is to be held; and Sec. 118 gives the terms in which the final order is to be passed. In the present case we have to consider Sec. 107 only which deals with the preliminary stage relating to the initiation of proceedings. It lays down that where a Magistrate (of one of the classes mentioned in the Section) is "informed that any person is likely to commit a breach of the peace or disturb the public tranquillity . . . the Magistrate, if in his opinion there is sufficient ground for proceeding, may require such person to show cause why he should not be ordered to execute a bond," etc. It will be seen that in order to start proceedings under this Section it is not necessary that the Magistrate should have been moved by a written petition. All that is required is that he be "informed" of the apprehended breach of the peace. The information may have been received orally or in writing, by post or in any other way. On receipt of such information the Magistrate has to see if "in his opinion there is sufficient ground for proceeding" and it is after he has satisfied himself that this is so that he will issue notice to the person, by whom breach of the peace is apprehended, to show cause why he should not be bound down. It will be seen that the Section is very wide in its terms. It does not prescribe any particular mode in which the Magistrate has to satisfy himself of the sufficiency of grounds for taking action under the Section. The Legislature appears to have purposely left the matter open and given a wide discretion to the Magistrate. He may do so, by holding an enquiry himself, or by the police, or through any private person, or in any other manner as he thinks fit. The enquiry may be public or private; it may be held in open Court or in camera. Having regard to the wide phraseology of S. 107, and particularly the words underlined (here italicized) above, which were added by the Amending Act 18 of 1923, we see no reason to hold that the only way in which the Magistrate might satisfy himself before issuing notice is to hold an enquiry himself and that he is precluded from seeking the aid of a local enquiry by the police in this matter.

The opposite view taken in the ruling cited is based on the ground that S. 202 of the Code, which authorizes a Magistrate to hold a preliminary enquiry into a "complaint" either himself, or by the police or such other person as he thinks fit, does not in terms apply to proceedings under S. 107, as such proceedings do not fall within the definition of a "complaint" as given in Sec. 4 (1) (h) of the Code. This is no doubt so, but, as has been pointed out already, the procedure for proceedings relating to "Prevention of Offences" in Part 4 of the Code is materially different from that relating to "Proceedings in Prosecutions" in Part 6. S. 202, which is included in Part 6 was enacted to make provision for proceedings in the particular form of prosecution for an offence initiated on a "complaint" and not to other forms of prosecution. The omission of a similar specific provision from Part 4 does not indicate in any way that the Legislature intended to lay down that no such enquiry could be held in proceedings under S. 107 and the other preventive Sections of the Code, especially when the wording of these Sections is so wide. In our opinion, the law relating to the matter was rightly laid down by Zafar Ali J. in 76 I C 25² in the following terms:

2. Shamas-ud-Din v. Ram Dyal Singh, (1924) 11 A I R Lah 630=76 I C 25=25 Or L J 89.

An application under S. 107, Criminal P. C., does not fall within the definition of a "complaint" under S. 4 (1) (h), Criminal P. C., and Sec. 203 of the Code has therefore no applicability to such an application. But every Magistrate possesses the inherent power of refusing an application which he finds to be groundless, and in the case of an application under S. 107, Criminal P. C., if a Magistrate is satisfied after making an enquiry himself or through some other agency that the apprehension of a breach of the peace complained of does not exist, he need not make an order under Section 112 of the Code and must dismiss the application.

This ruling does not appear to have been brought to the notice of Din Mohammad J. in Cr. R. No. 703 of 1936.¹ The learned Judge based his conclusion principally on a Single Bench decision of Shadi Lal C. J. in A I R 1928 Lah 694.² The judgment in that case is very brief, and the question was not discussed at any length. Reference was made only to Ss. 202 and 207 and it was observed that they apply only to prosecutions brought on a "complaint" as defined in S. 4 (1) (h). A I R 1928 Lah 694³ has since been dissented from by the Allahabad High Court in 54 All 1036⁴ on what appear to us to be very good grounds. It was held there that in proceedings under S. 107 a Magistrate has, independently of Ss. 202 and 203 the right to call for a report from the police before issuing a notice under S. 112. It was pointed out that the proceedings at that stage before the Magistrate were more or less of an administrative nature and it was only after he had passed an order under S. 112 and issued notice to the opposite party to show cause why he should not be bound down that the proceedings before the Magistrate become judicial proceedings. Therefore, if the Magistrate before issuing a notice under S. 112 thinks fit to consult the police in order to form an opinion as to whether or not the matter is one in which such a notice should be issued, there is nothing in the Code to prevent him from doing so. With great respect, we think that this lays down the law correctly.

Din Mohammad J. in the case cited, also referred to 49 Mad 315,⁵ but, so far as we can see, that case in no way supports the view taken by him. On the contrary there are observations in the judgment, which lead to the opposite conclusion. The real question involved in that case was as to whether statements made in a complaint to a Magistrate under Sec. 107, Criminal P. C., praying that security should be taken from a person for keeping the peace, and repetition of the same statements before a police officer to whom the Magistrate had referred the complaint for enquiry and report, were privileged and no action for defamation in respect of such statements could be maintained. One of the arguments urged before the learned Judges was that the Magistrate before whom a petition for taking proceedings under S. 107 had been made had no authority to order a police investigation and therefore the statement made to the Sub-Inspector was made to an officer who had no authority to hold any investigation. In rejecting this argument one of the Judges comprising the Bench, Viswanatha Sastri J., observed as follows:

Section 107, Criminal P. C., appears in Part. 4 which is headed "Prevention of Offences." The prevention of offences is a part of the administrative machinery for maintaining "law and order," and this task is laid on Magistrates. These Magistrates have control over the police, whose assistance they can seek in the discharge of their duties. Such being the case, it appears to me that it is perfectly open to a Magistrate, who is asked to set in motion S. 107, Criminal P. C., to avail himself of the help which is available to him under S. 202, Criminal P. C., when a complaint of an offence of which he is authorized to take cognizance is made to him.

The other Judge, Coutts-Trotter C. J., did not say anything in his judgment to the contrary but merely remarked that in order to put the matter beyond doubt it was desirable that an express provision be made in the statute conferring power in terms upon Magistrates to refer petitions under S. 107 for investigation. There is also an earlier ruling of the Madras High Court in 2 Weir 51,⁶ in which it was laid down that the action of a Magistrate asking the police to hold a preliminary enquiry and submit a report in connexion with a petition made to him for taking action against a certain person under the security Sections is not illegal.

We hold therefore that there is nothing in the Code, which forbids a Magistrate before whom information has been lodged for taking proceedings under S. 107, to refer the matter to the police for preli. minary enquiry, and that the contrary view taken in Single Bench decisions of this Court in Cr. Rev. No. 703 of 1936¹ and A I R 1928 Lah 694³ cannot be supported either on principle or authority. We hold that the order of the Magistrate in this case was legal and proper. We decline to accept the recommendation of the Sessions Judge and dismiss the petition. Let the records be returned.

Income-tax Act (1922), S. 66 (2) and (3)— Application under Sec. 66 (3) is incompetent without previous application under Sec. 66 (2).

Before an assessee can put in an application to the High Court under sub-sec. (3), it is incumbent upon him to apply to the Commissioner under sub-sec. (2) of Sec. 66. That he can do only if an order in respect of the assessment complained of is made under Sec. 31 or Sec. 32, or if an order under Sec. 33 enhances the assessment made on him or is otherwise prejudicial to him, or if a Board of Referees decides any question relating to his assessment under Sec. 33-A. Where none of these conditions exists, no application under sub-sec. (2) of S. 66 is competent, and consequently sub-s. (3) of S. 66 does not come into play at all: A I R 1932 Pat 167; A I R 1927 Lah 513 and 2 I T R 339, Rel. on. [P 864 C 2]

Order.— This is an application by an assessee under sub-s. (3) of S. 66, Income-tax Act. A preliminary objection has been raised by the respondent that this application is incompetent on the ground that an application under sub-s. (3) of S. 66 can be made to the High Court only if an application under sub-sec. (2) of Sec. 66 is previously made to the Commissioner and that where no such application has been made by an assessee, he cannot move the High Court under sub-s. (3) of S. 66. The material portions of the relevant provisions of law read as follows:

Section 66 (2). Within sixty days of the date on which he is served with notice of an order under S. 31 or S. 32 or of an order under S. 33 enhancing an assessment or otherwise prejudicial to him or of a decision by a Board of Referees under S. 33-A, the assessee in respect of whom the order or decision was passed may, by application require the Commissioner to refer to the High Court any question of law arising out of such order or decision

Section 66 (3). If on any application being made under sub-s. (2) the Commissioner refuses to state the case on the ground that no question of law arises, the assessee may apply to the High Court

It would appear therefore that before an assessee can put in an application to the High Court under sub-s. (3), it is incumbent upon him to apply to the Commissioner under sub-s. (2) of S. 66. That he can do only if an order in respect of the assessment complained of is made under S. 31 or S. 32, or if an order under S. 33 enhances the assessment made on him or is otherwise prejudicial to him, or if a Board of Referees decides any question relating to his assessment under S. 33-A. Where none of these conditions exists, no application under sub-s. (2) of S. 66 is competent, and consequently sub-s. (3) of S. 66 does not come into play at all. In the present case it is admitted on behalf of the assessee that no appeal was made to the Assistant Commissioner, nor was an application under sub-s. (2) of S. 66 made to the Commissioner. All that the assessee did was to make an application to the Commissioner under S. 33 along with sub-s. (1) of S. 66. The Commissioner while rejecting the assessee's application neither enhanced his assessment nor did he make any order prejudicial to him under Sec. 33. Clearly therefore no application under sub-s. (2) of S. 66 could be made to the Commissioner and none was actually made. This being so, the present petition under sub-s. (3) of Section 66 is incompetent. No authority is needed for this obvious proposition of law, but reference may be made to 4 I T C 324,¹ 2 I T C 430² and 2 I T R 339. These judgments, though not exactly in point, support the conclusions arrived at above. We accordingly dismiss this application with costs.

Customary law in Hoshiarpur District compiled by Mr. Humphreys — Ban imposed by question 72 not to be extended — Descendants of appointed heir can succeed to descendants of natural father.

The ban as contained in question 72 in Customary Law of Hoshiarpur District as compiled by Mr.
Humphreys cannot be extended to any succession other than the initial succession, inasmuch as it is not clearly provided for in the Customary law. As the appointed heir succeeds to the appointer's estate he may reasonably be passed over at the time when the succession to his natural father's estate opens but as the relationship between the appointer and the appointee not being the same as exists between the adopter and the adoptee under the Hindu law, neither he nor his descendants lose any right of succession to the descendants of the natural father. Hence among Rajputs of Garhshankar Tehsil in the District of Hoshiarpur, the descendants of an appointed heir can succeed collaterally in the family of the appointee's natural father : Case law discussed.

Din Mohammad J.—The only question involved in this appeal is whether among Rajputs of Garhshankar Tehsil in the District of Hoshiarpur the descendants of an appointed heir have no right to succeed collaterally in the family of the appointee's natural father. The trial Court held against the appointee's descendants but on appeal the District Judge reversed the judgment of the Court below and found in their favour. From this decision a second appeal was preferred to this Court which came for hearing before Jai Lal J. From the trend of his judgment, it appears that he was inclined to affirm the decision of the lower Appellate Court, but as remarked by him he was constrained to accept the appeal on the basis of a judgment of a Division Bench of this Court reported in A I R 1934 Lah
1938 L/109 & 110

781.¹ The appointee's descendants have appealed. Both sides agree that question 72 in the Customary Law of the Hoshiarpur District as compiled by Mr. Humphreys applies to the facts of this case. We have therefore to see whether the rule as laid down there is applicable and, if so, which party stands to be benefited by it. This question reads as follows :

Is an adopted son entitled to succeed to his natural father in case of the latter having no other lineal male issue ?

The relevant portion of the answer is couched in the following words :

Generally an adopted son can only succeed to the estate of his natural father if the latter dies without lineal male descendants.

To this is appended a long note by the compiler which however may for the present be ignored. Reading the question and answer together one is forced to the conclusion that the scope of the rule laid down there is very narrow and is confined to the case of an adopted son succeeding to his natural father. On the terms of the question and answer therefore it cannot be denied that the plaintiffs' case is not supported by the Customary law. It was presumably on this ground that the onus was placed upon the plaintiffs to establish that the descendants of the appointee did not succeed to the property in suit. It is conceded before us that no evidence has been adduced by the plaintiffs to support the position maintained by them and inasmuch as in cases of custom it is for the plaintiffs to prove definitely what the custom is upon which they rely, the plaintiffs' suit could not be decreed on this ground alone. The trial Court however referred to certain authorities of the Punjab Chief Court as well as of this Court while decreeing the plaintiffs' suit and it becomes necessary therefore to examine the state of law on this subject, although in our view it would be a mere act of supererogation as the Courts are not expected to create custom nor to curtail or extend it. It is to adjudicate upon it as they find it in the manuals of the Customary law.

The earliest authority to which we may refer in this connexion is 37 P R 1910.²
In that case it was held by Ragan J. that the ordinary rule under the Customary law is that an adopted son does not lose the right of succeeding in his natural family except possibly in the Eastern Punjab, where the appointment of an heir approaches in nature more nearly to the adoption of the Hindu law. In 45 P R 1912³ a Division Bench of the Punjab Chief Court composed of Robertson and Rattigan JJ. gave a decision of which the head-note reads as follows :

Held that the ordinary rule among agricultural tribes in the Punjab is that a person who is appointed as an heir to a third person does not thereby lose his right to succeed to the property of his natural father.

Held also that a corollary to this general rule is, that among many tribes it is recognized that the appointed heir and his lineal descendants have no right to succeed to any share in the family of the natural father as against other sons (and their descendants) of the latter.

Held further that, generally speaking, the tribes recognize a preferential right on the part of the appointed heir to succeed to the property of his natural father, where the only other claimant is the collateral heir of the latter.

Held consequently, that among Hindu Jats of Man got of Mauza Nangal, Tehsil and District Ludhiana, the sons of an appointed heir were entitled to succeed to the ancestral property left by their father's natural father in preference to collaterals, notwithstanding the entry in the Customary Law of the Ludhiana District to the contrary, the entry not being supported by a single instance.

We have given this quotation in extenso as it would appear later that a judgment of this Court holding against the appointee's descendants is based on this judgment. In Lah 362⁴ a Full Bench of this Court composed of Sir Shadi Lal C. J. and Scott-Smith and Harrison JJ. had an occasion to discuss the position of an appointed heir as the appointer and observed that the relationship established between the appointed heir and the appointer is purely a personal one and resembles the kritrima fori of adoption under the Hindu law. Such an appointment only affects the parties hereto and the appointed heir does not become the grandson of the appointer's father nor does the appointed heir's son become the grandson of the appointer. Consequently, the son of an appointed heir, has no right of succession to the appointer. In this case although the principal judgment was delivered by Scott-Smith J. Sir Shadi Lal C. J. appended a brief judgment of his own agreeing with his conclusions. In the course of his judgment, Sir Shadi Lal C. J. after referring to a previous case of his reported in 99 P R 1914⁵ observed :

Customary appointment of an heir does not involve the transplanting of the heir from one family to another. The tie of kinship with the natural family is not dissolved, and the fiction of blood relationship with the members of the new family has no application to the appointed heir. The relationship established between the appointer and the appointee is a purely personal one and does not extend beyond the contracting parties on either side.

Founding his decision on these remarks, as well as referring to 99 P R 1914⁵ and 37 P R 1910² and distinguishing 45 P R 1912,³ Moti Sagar J. in a case reported in A I R 1923 Lah 485⁶ held that in the absence of a special custom among the jats of Hoshiarpur Tahsil, that in the presence of descendants of the appointee's natural father, the descendants of the appointee are excluded from inheritance in his natural father's family, it must be held that the tie of kinship with the natural family was not dissolved and that the descendants of an adopted son can succeed to the estate of the adopted son's natural family in the presence of the descendants in that family. A Letters Patent Appeal was presented against this decision which came for hearing before Sir Shadi Lal C. J. and LeRossignol J.: A I R 1934 Lah 287⁷ decided on 3rd April 1934. The question before Moti Sagar J. was whether the descendants of the deceased's grand father's brother, Ram Dayal, who was appointed an heir by his own uncle were entitled to succeed to a share in the property left by the deceased as against the descendants of his other brothers. The Letters Patent Bench referring to question and answer 72 and relying upon the circumstance that Ram Dayal while inheriting the property of his adoptive father was excluded by his natural brothers from participating in the inheritance of his natural father, came to the conclusion that Ram Dayal's descendants had no right to succeed to a share in the estate of his natural brothers. In support of this conclusion they referred to 45 P R 1912³ and on this basis they allowed the appeal and reversed the decision of Moti

7. Hukam Singh v. Ishar, (1934) 21 A I R Lah 287.

Sagar J. We may respectfully observe that neither did question 72 cover the case before the Letters Patent Bench nor did 45 P R 1912³ justify a departure from the principles enunciated by one of the Judges of the Letters Patent Bench in 99 P R 1914⁵ and 3 Lah 362.⁴

The question before the Letters Patent Bench was not whether the appointee excluded the natural brothers, which case alone is dealt with in question 72, but was of a much wider scope. If as laid down in 3 Lah 362⁴ the relationship between the appointer and the appointee is a mere personal relation and no transplantation takes place as contemplated by the Hindu law, it does not stand to reason that the appointed heir should for all practical purposes be treated as having been cut off from his father's family, for it is only on this assumption that his descendants can be excluded from inheriting the property of his natural father's descendants. The ban contained in answer to question 72 is reasonable and based on obvious considerations. The appointee succeeds to the appointer's estate and can thus be justifiably divested of the estate of his natural father so as not to create any friction with his brothers but the same consideration does not apply to the case of his descendants as against the descendants of his brothers.

In 11 Lah 615⁸, which corresponds to A I R 1930 Lah 700,⁹ Sir Shadi Lal C. J. and Abdul Qadir J. had again an occasion to consider the position of an appointed heir. Here too, Sir Shadi Lal C. J. wrote a separate judgment agreeing with the conclusion arrived at by Abdul Qadir J. that a person appointed an heir under the Customary law of the Punjab is not debarred from succeeding collaterally in his natural family in the presence of his natural brothers, although he cannot compete with them in the matter of succession to the estate of his natural father. In A I R 1934 Lah 781¹ the judgment which, as stated above, was reluctantly followed by Jai Lal J., a Division Bench of this Court composed of Tek Chand and Abdul Rashid JJ. among other authorities relied on A I R 1934 Lah 287⁷ and observed that as the adopted son cannot succeed collaterally in the family of his adoptive father, he is allowed to succeed collaterally in the family of his natural father. But an adopted son is not entitled to succeed to his share in his natural father's property in the presence of his natural brother. There the question was whether the appointed heir could succeed to his own brother having once inherited the appointer's property.

We may say with all respect that we are not prepared to extend the ban as contained in question 72 to any succession other than the initial succession, inasmuch as it is not clearly provided for in the Customary law. In our view as the appointed heir succeeds to the appointer's estate he may reasonably be passed over at the time when the succession to his natural father's estate opens but as laid down in so many authoritative judgments referred to above the relationship between the appointer and the appointee not being the same as exists between the adopter and the adoptee under the Hindu law, neither he nor his descendants lose any right of succession to the descendants of the natural father. It may be that in certain cases under the Customary law a fiction may be introduced, as laid down in 4 P R 1891,⁹ that the property of a man who dies without issue first reverts to the ancestor and then descends; but this principle cannot be so interpreted as to debar the appointee's descendants from claiming inheritance in the family of the appointee's natural father. We accordingly accept this appeal, reverse the judgment of Jai Lal J. and restore that of the lower Appellate Court with the result that the suit of the plaintiffs shall stand dismissed. In view of the conflict of authority however we shall leave the parties to bear their own costs throughout.

Kirpa Ram — for Petitioner.

J. N. Aggarwal — for Respondent.

Din Mohammad J.—On an application made by the assessee, we issued a mandamus to the Commissioner requiring him to state the case on the following two questions:

(1) Whether there was any material or evidence for the enhancement under S. 34 by increasing sales from Rs. 12,700 to Rs. 40,000?

(2) Whether, in the circumstances of the case, a part of the income, profits and gains from the sale of books in the accounting year 1933-34 can be said to have escaped assessment within the meaning of S. 34 at the time of the original assessment for the year 1934-35?

The material facts are these. The assessee is a book-seller and also owns some immovable property. In the return submitted by him for 1934-35, he showed his sales at Rs. 12,699 and charging profit at the rate of 10 per cent. he returned his total income assessable to income-tax from the sale of books at Rs. 1300. To this he added Rupees 546 as rent from house property and debited the total amount with an expenditure of Rs. 2175 thus claiming a loss of Rs. 329. The Income-tax Officer did not challenge the figure of sales but enhanced the rate of profit to 25 per cent. The assessee took an appeal from that order but it was dismissed.

In connexion with the 1935-36 assessment, the Income-tax Officer scrutinized the assessee's accounts more carefully and came to the conclusion that the accounts could not be depended upon. It transpired that the assessee had purchased immovable property worth Rs. 8000 in his own name on 19th November 1932; again on 1st April 1933, he had purchased immovable property worth Rs. 21,000 in the name of his wife and had further spent Rs. 4000 in renovating his business premises. It was obvious that these acquisitions could not be properly explained in face of the returns previously submitted by the assessee, inasmuch as in 1931-32 he had made a return of Rs. 900 only, in 1932-33 of Rs. 1031 only and in 1933-34 of Rs. 237 only. The Income-tax Officer accordingly issued a notice to the assessee under S. 34 and eventually raised the figure of sales to Rs. 40,000, in which he was supported both by the Assistant Commissioner of Income-tax and the Commissioner.

The question is whether the estimate now arrived at by the income-tax authorities is based on any material. The leading authority on the subject as to what constitutes 'material' in such cases is the latest pronouncement of their Lordships of the Privy Council reported in I L R 1937 Nag 191.¹ Lord Russell of Killowen who delivered the judgment of their Lordships observed at pp. 201 and 202:

The Officer is to make an assessment to the best of his judgment against a person who is in default as regards supplying information. He must not act dishonestly, or vindictively or capriciously because he must exercise judgment in the matter. He must make what he honestly believes to be a fair estimate of the proper figure of assessment, and for this purpose he must, their Lordships think, be able to take into consideration local knowledge and repute in regard to the assessee's circumstances, and his own knowledge of previous returns by and assessments of the assessee, and all other matters which he thinks will assist him in arriving at a fair and proper estimate: and though there must necessarily be guess-work in the matter, it must be honest guess-work. In that sense too the assessment must be to some extent arbitrary. Their Lordships think that the Section places the officer in the position of a person whose decision as to amount is final and subject to no appeal; but whose decision if it can be shown to have been arrived at without an honest exercise of judgment, may be revised or reviewed by the Commissioner under the powers conferred upon that Official by S. 38.

In the present case the income-tax authorities not only took into consideration the recent acquisitions made by the assessee but also the fact that since 1931-32 none of his returns was ever held to be genuine. In 1931-32, his estimate of Rs. 900 was raised to Rs. 3092, in 1932-33, from Rs. 1031 the estimate was raised to Rs. 3751 and in 1933-34, his estimate of Rs. 237 was raised to Rs. 2110. In the circumstances explained above, we are not in a position to say that the Income-tax Officer who formed the original estimate had no material or had acted "dishonestly or vindictively or capriciously" or that he did not "honestly believe the estimate arrived at by him to be a fair estimate of the proper figure of assessment." If the assessee considers that the estimate is far in excess of the actual income earned by him, the remedy lies in his own hands. He should try to be honest in his dealings with the income-tax authorities and keep accurate accounts of all the business done by him and if the income-tax authorities are satisfied that his accounts are reliable, we are sure that they will never resort to the 'best judgment' assessment in future. Counsel for the assessee relies on 7 I T C 47² in support of his contention that when once an estimate has been made, no second estimate can be made under S. 34, but, even if the observations made in that case were correct, they do not govern the present case, as it proceeds on different facts. We accordingly answer question No. 1 in the affirmative. Question No. 2 need not detain us long. This matter is again concluded by authority. In a recent judgment reported in A I R 1938 P C 175,³ their Lordships of the Privy Council have held :

When once a final assessment is arrived at, it cannot be reopened except in the circumstances detailed in S. 34 and S. 35 of the Act and within the time limited by those Sections.

This evidently implies that even the 'best judgment' assessment can be reopened under S. 34. As to the circumstances in which a second assessment can be made, although the first assessment had become final, reference may be made to 1934 I T R 236.⁴ It is true that the language of S. 125, English Act, is different but the governing principle is the same. In that case the Inspector of Taxes had accepted the contention of the assessee and made no assessment in respect of a certain item of income and some time later he re-considered the facts and came to the conclusion that the income was taxable. Finlay J. held that the income could be taxed and that the act of the Inspector was not open to any legal objection. Counsel for the assessee has drawn our attention to 6 I T R 265⁵ where it has been held that in deciding whether income had escaped assessment, an Income-tax Officer must not act on suspicion or conjecture and must decide the question upon a fair and reasonable consideration of such information and materials as are available to him. This judgment however does not help the assessee in the least, inasmuch as no principles laid down there have been violated in this case. On the grounds stated above we answer this question too in the affirmative. In the circumstances of the case however we leave the parties to bear their own costs before us.

4. Williams v. Grundy, (1934) I T R 286.

(b) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 92—Suit by person claiming to be trustee of property dedicated for religious purposes, against rival trustee, for declaration that he is trustee and entitled to manage institution as such does not fall under S. 92—Sanction of Collector before institution of suit is not a necessity.

Where a suit is instituted by a person claiming to be a trustee of property dedicated for religious purposes, for a declaration that he is a trustee and is entitled to manage the institution as such but the relief he claimed is in his individual capacity and not in a representative capacity and the suit is against a rival trustee or one who claims to be a trustee, such a suit does not fall under S. 92 (1). No injury to public right or interest is involved; whoever happens to succeed will hold the property as trustee and not in his own right. The dispute between the rival trustees inter se is neither a suit for removal of any trustee nor one for appointing a new trustee nor for vesting any property in a trustee and does not fall under any heads from (d) to (g) or under head (h) of S. 92.

A suit by a person claiming to be a mutawalli of a certain mosque against a registered corporation which has been managing the mosque, for a declaration that he is the mutawalli of the mosque and as such entitled to manage all the affairs connected with it, does not therefore fall under S. 92, Civil P. C., and does not require the sanction of the Collector required by S. 92 and the institution of the suit in such a form does not amount to a circumvention of law: A I R 1931 Rang 322; 19 I C 740; A I R 1927 Mad 338; A I R 1931 Lah 727 and A I R 1928 P C 16, Rel. on; Case law discussed.

(c) Specific Relief Act (1877), S. 42, Proviso—Suit for declaration against registered body managing mosque for declaration that plaintiff is mutawalli and is entitled to manage mosque—Plaintiff admittedly out of possession—Suit for mere declaration does not lie.

Although it may be not necessary to institute a suit for possession in certain cases yet, unless some sort of further relief is obtained, mere declaration will not be of any use to those persons who are out of possession and who on the basis of mere declaratory decree cannot obtain possession.

Where a person brings a suit against a registered corporation which has been managing a mosque, for a declaration that he is the mutawalli of the mosque and as such entitled to manage all the affairs connected with it, his suit for mere declaration does not lie, when he is admittedly out of possession and both the control and management of the mosque together with the building appertaining thereto vest in the defendant corporation. The grant of a declaratory decree would be useless as the plaintiff will not be able to resume the control and management of the mosque on the basis of that declaration alone and this being so the decree would be infructuous: 33 Mad 452; A I R 1931 Rang 322; 101 P R 1909; A I R 1937 Rang 427 and A I R 1936 Mad 605, Rel. on; 15 Mad 307; A I R 1920 Sind 92 and A I R 1938 P C 73, Disting.; A I R 1938 Oudh 517, Commented upon; Case law discussed.

(d) Mahomedan Law—Waqf—Person declaring certain property to be waqf and appointing permanent mutawalli, subsequently surrendering his right of management in favour of body called Jamiat—He is not empowered to cancel arrangement so made by executing document to that effect.

Where a person declares certain property to be waqf property and appoints himself a permanent mutawalli but subsequently ceases to hold that position by reason of execution of a document under which he surrenders his right and confers the rights of management of the property and the mutawalliship in favour of a body called the Jamiat, he is empowered neither at law nor in equity to revoke the arrangement thus made by executing a document cancelling the previous document and his unilateral act is not sufficient to divest the Jamiat or the registered corporation which subsequently replaces it, of the control and management that it has of the waqf property; so also where such person continues to hold the office of President of the Jamiat, his removal from the office of President is not enough to invalidate the registration of the Jamiat as corporation or to end its being, although it may entitle him to seek some sort of relief from the Civil Courts.

— for Respondent.

Din Mohammad J.—The suit out of which this appeal has arisen was instituted on 1st October 1934, by one Mohammad Shariff against a registered corporation working under the style of "Jamiat Dawat wa Tabligh Islam" for a declaration that he was the mutawalli of the Jamia Mosque called "Mohammad Sharif Wali" standing on Khasra Nos. 2793 and 2794 and of the adjoining land measuring 6 sarsahis with no khasra number situate in the town of Montgomery and that as such he was entitled to manage all affairs connected with the mosque and to realise and disburse the income derived from the said property for the benefit of the mosque.

It was alleged by the plaintiff that on an application made by him on 20th September 1921 to the President of the Montgomery Municipal Committee, he was granted a part of the land in suit at a concession rate for the construction of a mosque and the sinking of a well and that he accordingly obtained possession of the land on 8th June 1922 on payment of a sum of Rs. 877-12-6. On 19th September 1922, he again applied to the Deputy Commissioner for another piece of land for the same purpose and he obtained possession of another part of the land on payment of Rs. 954-8-0. The land thus acquired was situate in khasra Nos. 1071, 1072 and 1073 measuring 16 marlas 7 sarsahis in each of the three numbers and was mutated in his favour on 12th June 1925. At the time of the said mutations the property in suit was declared to be waqf and the plaintiff and his descendants to be the mutawallis thereof. Later, it was discovered that he was in possession of 6 sarsahis in excess of the area acquired by him and he was allowed to retain the excess land on payment of Rs. 40. On 23rd December 1929, he executed a registered document which he called a will by which he made certain provisions for the management of the income of the mosque by a body named "Jamiat Dawat wa Tabligh Islam". On 6th December 1933, he cancelled the said document but the mutation based thereon was refused and he was referred to a regular suit. On 24th May 1934, a registered corporation was set up under the name of 'Jamiat Dawat wa Tabligh Islam' which claimed the management of the mosque as against him. That corporation however was not entitled to interfere with the affairs of the mosque and hence the necessity of the declaration stated above.

The corporation submitted its pleas on 3rd November 1934. It averred inter alia that the property in suit was waqf with the corporation as its trustee and inasmuch as the object of the suit was to remove the corporation from its present position, the suit could not proceed without the sanction of the Collector. It was further contended that the suit was barred both by the Proviso to S. 42, Specific Relief Act, and under the Limitation Act. It was denied that the property was purchased by the plaintiff entirely from his own funds or that the plaintiff and his descendants were declared to be its mutwallis. It was further denied that the document executed on 23rd December 1929 was a will. On the other hand, it was stated that inasmuch as the property was waqf and the corporation had been managing it ever since it had come into existence but the name of the plaintiff was mentioned in the column of ownership in the revenue records, an admission in writing was obtained from the plaintiff to testify to these facts. The mosque came to be known as "Masjid Mohammad Sharif Wali" as the land had been acquired by the Muslim community through the plaintiff, but the entire management of the property in suit rested with the corporation and this fact was conceded by the plaintiff at the time of the mutation that followed the document in question.

The Muslim community being assured of this state of affairs collected a large amount of money and constructed a magnificent building on the site of the old mosque. The old corporation had never ceased to exist and the mere fact that it was registered in 1934 did not bring into existence any new institution in place of the old institution. The plaintiff was neither the founder of the mosque nor the creator of the waqf. He was merely "an honorary mutwalli" and as such not entitled to interfere in the management of the mosque so long as the corporation existed and consequently not entitled to any declaration. The object of the plaintiff was to have the old scheme abrogated and a new scheme sanctioned and this object could not be achieved without undergoing the formalities laid down in the law relating to public trusts.

To these averments a reply was made by the plaintiff on 1st December 1934, traversing all the pleas raised by the corporation and reiterating the position taken up by the plaintiff in the plaint. Issues arising from the technical points raised by the defendant were framed in the first instance and were disposed of by an order dated 28th June 1935. It was held that S. 92 Civil P. C., did not apply and that the suit could proceed without the sanction of the Collector. It was also decided that the suit was within time. On the question of the frame of the suit however it was observed that the plaintiff should either prove that he was in possession of the mosque and the property attached thereto or he should amend the plaint and ask for further relief in the shape of possession, etc. Thereupon the plaintiff examined Mehr Din, P. W. 1, Pandit Bihari Lal, P. W. 2, Imam Din, P. W. 3, Jamal Din, P. W. 4, Bhagwan Das, P. W. 5, Jagat Narain, P. W. 6, Mohammad Ashfaq, P. W. 7, Nazir Ahmad, P. W. 8 and Abdul Rehman, P. W. 9. Mehr Din after stating that he was employed by Mohammad Sharif as a water carrier to supply water for ablutions, admitted that the building operations of the mosque were supervised by Bashir Khan who was the Secretary of the mosque; that the management vested in the Anjuman which was managing it still and that the rent of the houses attached to the mosque was also being realized by the same body. Pandit Bihari Lal stated that the electric connexion of the mosque stood in the name of the Jamia Mosque through Mohammad Sharif. Imam Din stated that for the last fourteen months he had been paying the rent to the Anjuman and a similar statement was made by Jamal Din, P. W. 4, who further added that it was the Anjuman which was receiving the rent of all the kothas and houses attached to the mosque. It may be mentioned that the terms 'Jamiat' and 'Anjuman' are one and the same. Bhagwan Das, Jagat Narain, Mohammad Ashfaq and Nazir Ahmad gave formal evidence in respect of the rent deeds executed by the various witnesses. Abdul Rahman produced certain revenue excerpts. The defendant corporation also examined Mistri Ghulam Nabi, D. W. 4, Master Mohammad Din, D. W. 5, Mohammad Suleman, D. W. 6, Ghulam Nabi, D. W. 7 and Sheikh Mohammad Sharif, D. W. 8 and they all deposed that the possession of the property was with the Anjuman. On 26th March 1936, the Senior Subordinate Judge relying on 15 Mad 307¹ held that the suit could proceed in the form in which it was instituted. His successor accordingly proceeded with the trial of the suit and after recording the statement of Mohammad Sharif framed the following issues :

1. Were the land under the mosque and under the buildings attached thereto acquired by plaintiff with his own funds and were his property ?

2. Is the property in dispute a religious public trust ?

3. Is plaintiff the mutwalli of the mosque and the property appertaining thereto and if so, what are his powers as such ?

4. When was the waqf in respect of the land under the mosque and the land under the buildings appertaining thereto created ?

5. Was plaintiff competent to execute the document dated 23rd December 1929 ?

6. What is the nature of the document dated 23rd December 1929, and how it affects the present case ?

7. Was plaintiff competent to revoke and cancel the document dated 23rd December 1929 ?

8. If so, was the document dated 23rd December 1929 revoked by the document dated 6th December 1933 ?

9. Is plaintiff estopped from denying the right of the defendant to manage the waqf property ?

Both parties led further evidence in the case and the Senior Subordinate Judge granted the plaintiff a declaration to the effect that he was the mutwalli of the Jamia Mosque and all the property appertaining thereto and was competent to manage and administer all the affairs of the waqf as such. His conclusion on which this decree was based were as follows : (1) that the site under the mosque and the other buildings attached thereto was acquired by the plaintiff with his own funds and was his property to start with ; (2) that the property in dispute was a religious waqf and that it could not vest in anybody as trustee, in view of the peculiar nature of a Muslim waqf which implies detention of a thing in the implied ownership of Almighty God ; (3) that the plaintiff was the mutwalli of the mosque and the properties attached to it and that he never divested himself of the powers he possessed as mutwalli ; (4) that the waqf was created on 12th June 1925 ; (5) that the document dated 23rd December 1929 was not a will but a waqfnama by which the plaintiff formally acknowledged and declared the property to be waqf ; (6) that the plaintiff co-opted the Jamiat for help and assistance in the management of the waqf property and that that body which was co-opted ceased to exist as soon as the plaintiff was removed from the office of President and that that portion of the document which related to the scheme of administration was ipso facto revoked ; (7) that the plaintiff was competent to revoke and cancel that part of the document dated 23rd December 1929, which related to the management of the waqf property ; and (8) that the defendant corporation not being the body which was co-opted, the plaintiff was not estopped from proceeding in the manner in which he had done. It is against this decision that the defendant corporation has appealed.

Counsel for the parties have addressed lengthy arguments both on questions of law and fact. On behalf of the appellant it has been urged that the suit could not be instituted in its present form, that the sanction contemplated by S. 92, Civil P. C., was necessary and that in any circumstances the suit was barred by time. On facts it has been contended that the document dated 23rd December 1929, laid down a scheme for the administration of the waqf property and for succession to the office of mutwalli and that the plaintiff was debarred from revoking or cancelling it in 1933, especially as he occupied no such position at that time as would entitle him to exercise that power. It has further been averred that the plaintiff deceived the Muslim public into believing that he had made over the management of the waqf property to the representatives of the community in the shape of 'Jamiat Dawat wa 'Tabligh Islam' and thus induced them to construct a new mosque by public subscription and that the plaintiff could not, now that the mosque had been completed at a heavy cost, go back upon that document and grab the waqf property once more to further his secular ends. The respondent on the other hand has stressed the fact that he was the founder of the waqf, that as such he was at liberty to make any scheme for its administration that he liked and to unmake it whenever he liked, that he had constituted himself as 'mutwalli' in the first instance, and could continue to be so until his death and that the defendant corporation being a newly constituted body could not oust him from the privileged position that he occupied in relation to the mosque.

We take up the legal issues first. So far as the question of limitation as well as that of the applicability of Sec. 92, Civil P. C., is concerned, we are disposed to think that the judgment of the Court below is not open to objection in any manner. On the point of limitation the most that is contended by the appellant is that Art. 91, Limitation Act, applies to the case and inasmuch as the object of the suit is to secure the cancellation of the document dated 23rd December 1929, the cause of action accrued to the plaintiff on the day that the document was executed. Reliance in this connexion is placed on 29 I C 968,² but in our opinion that authority is distinguishable. It was held there by a Division Bench of the Allahabad High Court that the limitation for a suit for a declaration that a mortgage deed executed by the plaintiff was without valid consideration and ineffectual and that the defendant had no right under it begins to run from the date of the execution of the document. It may be remarked that Richards C. J., who wrote the principal judgment, clearly stated that he was deciding the case on its own facts and circumstances. Even if Art. 91 be held applicable to the case, we are in agreement with the respondent's counsel that so long as the plaintiff held the position of president of the Anjuman and had an active hand in the management of the affairs of the mosque, no occasion had arisen for him to institute any suit to avoid that document. The terminus a quo for a suit under Art. 91 is the time "when the facts entitling the plaintiff to have the instrument cancelled or set aside become known to him." On the perusal of the document in question it appears that the plaintiff had in a way reserved for himself a perpetual connexion with the Anjuman in his capacity as president and as he admittedly occupied that office within three years of 1st October 1934, when the present suit was instituted, we consider that his suit was well within time.

Similarly, we are not impressed by the argument advanced by the appellant's counsel that the suit could not proceed without the sanction contemplated by Sec. 92, Civil P. C. The authorities relied upon in this behalf do not afford much help to the appellant. In 165 I C 158,³ a case from the Sindh Judicial Commissioner's Court, a sewak of a certain temple had instituted a suit on behalf of himself and other sewaks for a declaration that the property in suit was a public charitable property and that neither the defendant nor anyone else was entitled to alienate it. It was further prayed that an injunction be issued restraining the defendant from selling the whole or any portion of it to any person. On these facts it was remarked that the relief claimed fell within Sec. 92, cl. (h), having been instituted against trustees who were intermeddling with the charitable property. It was further observed that the relief in cl. (h) of Sec. 92 indicated a relief which while falling under the Section did not fall under any of the other clauses, namely (a) to (g). In 97 I C 630⁴ the plaintiffs in their representative capacity sued for possession of a school building and site which had been sold by some members of their community to a person of antagonistic religious persuasion. Spencer J. held that if there was a valid creation of trust, the suit in the circumstances could not be brought without the sanction required by S. 92, Civil P. C. In 150 I C 193⁵ Smith J. of the Oudh Chief Court remarked that where the allegation made in a case was that a person was entitled to the office of the trustee of a fund, the allegation brought the relief sought within the purview of Section 92, Civil P. C.

The respondent on the other hand relied on 9 Rang 459,⁶ 19 I C 740,⁷ 97 I C 480,⁸ A I R 1931 Lah 727⁹ and 55 Cal 519.¹⁰ In 9 Rang 459⁶ Carr J. held that where the plaintiffs claimed that they were the lawfully appointed trustees of certain trust properties and sued the defendants for possession of the trust properties the suit did not fall within Sec. 92, Civil P. C. This judgment was mainly based on a dictum of Woodroffe J. in 33 Cal 789¹¹ and on the observations made by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 55 Cal 519¹⁰ to which we shall advert later. In 19 I C 740,⁷ Wallis J. of the Madras High Court held that the scope of S. 92 (2) is to protect the right of the public and it is not aimed at the infringement of private rights and should not, if possible, be so construed as to deprive individuals whose rights have been infringed of their remedy. In 97 I C 480⁸ Wallace J. reiterated the principle enunciated above and stated that the real test whether Sec. 92, Civil P. C., applies to a suit or not is whether the suit is fundamentally on behalf of the public for the vindication of a public right, or on behalf of a private individual for the vindication of his private rights. In A I R 1931 Lah 727⁹ in a case in which a mahant had brought a suit for possession of certain lands which he alleged belonged to his institution, it was held by a Division Bench of this Court that as the plaintiff was not suing in any representative capacity but was claiming to enforce his personal right as the duly appointed mahant of an institution, S. 92 had no application. In 55 Cal 519¹⁰ their Lordships of the Privy Council traced the history of S. 92 and came to a definite conclusion that the words as to "further and other relief" in head (h) are used in connection with the specified heads (a) to (g) and not in connexion with the words at the beginning of the sub-section. Lord Sinha, who delivered the judgment of their Lordships, remarked :

6. M. S. A. Ganny v. Mahomed Ebrahim, (1931) 18 A I R Rang 322=135 I C 332=9 Rang 459.

11. Budri Das Mukim v. Ohuni Lal, (1906) 33 Cal 789=10 C W N 581.

The reliefs specified in sub-ss. (1) (a) to (h) do not cover any of the reliefs claimed in this suit unless the words 'further or other relief' in Cl. (h) can be held to cover them. It is argued that the words 'such further or other relief as the nature of the case may require' must be taken, not in connexion with the previous Cls. (a) to (g), but in connexion with the nature of the suit, viz. any relief other than (a) to (g), that the case of an alleged breach of an express or constructive trust may require in the circumstances of any particular case. Their Lordships are unable to accept this argument. First, because the words 'further or other relief' must on general principles of construction be taken to mean relief of the same nature as Cls. (a) to (g). Secondly, because such construction would cut down substantive rights which existed prior to the enactment of the Code of 1908, and it is unlikely that in a Code regulating procedure the Legislature intended without express words to abolish or extinguish substantive rights of an important nature which admittedly existed at that time.

At page 530 his Lordship observed :

Their Lordships see no reason to consider that S. 92 was intended to enlarge the scope of Sec. 539 by the addition of any relief or remedy against third parties, i. e. strangers to the trust. They are aware that the Courts in India have differed considerably on the question whether third parties could or should be made parties to a suit under S. 539, but the general current of decisions was to the effect that even if such third parties could properly be made parties under S. 539, no relief could be granted as against them. In that state of the previous law, their Lordships cannot agree that the Legislature intended to include relief against third parties in Cl. (h) under the general words 'further or other relief'.

On a consideration of the authorities referred to above, we are of opinion that this suit does not require any sanction under S. 92, Civil P. C. It is true that the suit has been instituted by a person claiming to be a trustee for a declaration that he is a trustee and is entitled to manage the institution as such, but the relief he claims is in his individual capacity and not in a representative capacity. The suit is against a rival trustee or one who claims to be a trustee. In neither case is an injury to a public right or interest involved. Whoever happens to succeed will hold the trust property as mutwalli and not in his own right. The dispute between the two rival trustees inter se therefore is neither a suit for the removal of any trustee nor for appointing a new trustee, nor for vesting any property in a trustee, nor does it fall under any other head from (d) to (g) and will consequently, in view of the dictum of their Lordships of the Privy Council, not fall under head (h). Counsel for the appellant contends that the plaintiff in bringing the suit in its present form has tried to circumvent the law, but we do not consider that this is so. We accordingly hold that S. 92, Civil P. C., is no bar to the suit.

The objection of the appellant corporation on the ground of the non-maintainability of the suit in its present form however must prevail. The plaintiff is undoubtedly out of possession and both the control and the management of the mosque together with the buildings appertaining thereto vest in the defendant. In these circumstances, a suit for a mere declaration cannot lie inasmuch as the plaintiff has omitted to seek further relief which he was able to do. The Senior Subordinate Judge found against the defendant on this point mainly relying on 15 Mad 307.¹ But the facts of that case as well as of the other cases now relied upon by the respondent before us are clearly distinguishable. In 15 Mad 307,¹ the ratio decidendi of the judgment appears to us to be this, that most of the lands in suit were in the possession of the tenants, some of whom recognized one claimant as their landlord and some the others. In 63 I C 685,¹² though the head-note says that the Proviso to Sec. 42 is no bar to a suit for a declaration of title to lands in the possession of tenants and lessees, yet a reference to the judgment shows that the position has not been correctly portrayed in the head-note. At p. 687 it is observed:

It would appear in this case that the tenants and lessees have not denied the tenancy but have refused to attorn to either party until the question of ownership as between the claimants is settled.

The state of affairs here is however different. As stated above, even the plaintiff's witnesses have deposed to the effect that they have been paying rent to the defendant corporation for more than a year before the institution of the suit. In A I R 1938 P C 73¹³ their Lordships of the Privy Council remarked:

The Subordinate Judge held that a suit for declaration did not lie, on the ground that the plaintiff was neither in possession nor in control of the management of the school and that the proper form of the suit would have been one for possession and management of the school and not merely a declaration of such right, and that the plaintiff had omitted to seek this further relief. The High Court took the contrary view, on the ground that the defendants were not in possession or in a position to deliver possession of the properties, and that therefore there was no further relief available to the plaintiffs against the defendants. Their Lordships agree with the High Court in this view; and it may be added that where it is not open to the plaintiff to pray for possession also as against the defendant, injunction is further relief within the meaning of the Proviso.

Firstly, in this case the defendant corporation is managing the property and is in a position to deliver the goods so to say and consequently the principle of law enunciated by their Lordships of the Privy Council does not apply. Secondly, in the case before their Lordships the plaintiff had prayed for a relief by way of injunction while in the case before us no such relief has been asked for. In 9 Luck 170¹⁴ a Division Bench held that a person suing in his personal capacity for a declaration that he is entitled to represent a certain interest is not debarred from obtaining a decree, by reason of the fact that he does not in the same suit ask for possession over the property of the interest which he claims to represent and especially so in a case, where the defendants have not set up any title adverse to that interest, and applying this principle to the case of a mutwalli who had instituted a suit for possession of the waqf property held that the suit was not barred by the provision of S. 42. With all respect we consider that this judgment goes too far. It may not be necessary to institute a suit for possession in certain cases, but it cannot be denied that unless some sort of further relief is obtained, mere declaration will not be of any use to those persons who are out of possession and who on the basis of a mere declaratory decree cannot obtain possession.

The view that we take in this matter is supported by ample authority. In 33 Mad 452,¹⁵ where the trustee of a temple, who had been ousted from possession by his co-trustees, had sued for a declaration that his dismissal from the trusteeship was invalid and for an injunction restraining his co-trustees and the temple committee from interfering with the exercise of his rights as trustee, there being no prayer for consequential relief in the nature of possession against his co-trustees, it was held that the suit was not maintainable. In that case the learned Judges who decided the case remarked that notwithstanding the lands belonging to the temple were in physical possession of tenants, yet the plaintiff's right to receive rents was capable of possession which if disturbed entitled him to bring a suit for possession. In view of A I R 1938 P C 73¹³ and 159 I C 237,¹⁶ which is our own judgment, we may not be prepared to go to the length of saying that injunction is not further relief within the meaning of the Proviso to S. 42, Specific Relief Act, but we are in respectful agreement with the principle laid down in this judgment that if further relief is available, mere declaration cannot be given. In 9 Rang 459,⁶ Carr J. held that the plaintiffs being out of possession cannot merely ask for an injunction restraining the defendants from interfering with the exercise by the plaintiffs of their duties as trustees. Such a suit is barred by the Proviso to S. 42, Specific Relief Act. This judgment was considered in 9 Luck 170¹⁴ and dissented from. But we are of opinion that the principle enunciated in this judgment, so far as it relates to those persons who are entitled to sue for possession, is perfectly sound.

In 101 P R 1909¹⁷ a Division Bench of the Punjab Chief Court held that the fact that the land in dispute is in possession of tenants who hold under the defendants, in no way entitles the plaintiff, who is out of possession, to bring a declaratory suit. In such a case the plaintiff is able to seek further relief than a mere declaration of title within the purview of S. 42, Specific Relief Act. It may be remarked in passing that 15 Mad 307¹ was animadverted upon in this judgment. In 25 Mad 504,¹⁸ in a suit brought by a plaintiff against his brother and other relations for a declaration of invalidity of a will by which certain property had been bequeathed to one of the defendants, it was held by a Division Bench that the suit as lodged was barred, inasmuch as the plaintiff could have sued for partition of his share in what he claimed to be the joint family property. It was further remarked that even though the lands were in the possession of tenants entitled to continue in occupation under subsisting leases, that would be no bar to a partition of the property among the members of the family. In 16 C W N 838¹⁹ it was observed that Courts in this country should see that plaints, which pray for declaratory decrees only, conform to the terms of S. 42, Specific Relief Act. It was further observed that an injunction is a consequential relief. In A I R 1930 All 600,²⁰ where defendants were in joint possession of the properties in the same manner as the plaintiffs, it was held that a suit for a declaration that the plaintiffs are owners and in possession of those properties and that defendants have no proprietary right in them is incompetent and the plaintiffs are bound to ask for some consequential relief by way of ejectment or injunction. We, accordingly, hold that in the circumstances brought upon the record in this case it was not open to the plaintiff to seek a mere declaration and that the suit as lodged by him is therefore not maintainable.

Further, as observed by Mukerjee J. of the Allahabad High Court in 87 I C 182,²¹ a declaratory decree should not be granted where the grant of a decree would be a useless affair. Supposing the decree of the lower Court was maintained in this case, the plaintiff will not be in a position to resume the control and management of the mosque or the buildings appertaining thereto on the basis of that declaration alone and this being so, the decree will be infructuous. Reference may also be made in this connexion to A I R 1937 Rang 427²² and 59 Mad 1052.²³ Our finding on this matter concludes the appeal, but we consider it necessary to express our opinion on the other matters also which have been raised on appeal and which we consider material to the question already discussed by us in this judgment.

Much stress was laid by the respondent on the fact that he was the founder of the trust and as such he was at liberty to make or unmake any schemes he liked and at any time he liked. In our view this position is untenable. It may be that the respondent purchased the site under the building before 1925 and in 1925 declared it to be waqf along with the structure put upon it and appointed himself a permanent mutwalli of the waqf property. But he ceased to hold this position in 1929 when he executed the document referred to above and he was empowered neither at law nor in equity to revoke the arrangement he had thus made. According to his own showing he surrendered his rights in 1929 and conferred upon the Jamiat the privilege of managing the mosque. The only position assigned to him was that of the President of the Jamiat. He was no doubt described as mutwalli in the mutation that followed the document of 1929, but that was merely to appease his vanity. The actual duties pertaining to the office of mutwalli were discharged by the Jamiat and not by the respondent. In fact it is in this sense that the secretary of the defendant corporation has stated that the respondent was an "honorary mutwalli" meaning thereby that he was a mutwalli in name and not in fact. Subsequent to the execution of this document the old buildings whatever they were, were demolished and new buildings were constructed at a great cost. Subscriptions were collected by the Jamiat on a large scale with the knowledge and the consent of the respondent and it appears that it was on account of the management being in the hands of the Jamiat that the members of the Muslim Community liberally contributed towards the building of the mosque. The construction of the mosque went on for about three years and throughout this period the respondent actually co-operated with the Jamiat in the collection of the subscriptions and in the supervision of the building operations. As soon however as the building was completed and became a lucrative concern, the respondent went back upon his previous agreement and without consulting the Jamiat or other members of the Muslim Community, who by then had acquired a real interest in the institution, executed a registered deed cancelling the previous document. In our opinion he held no such position in 1933 in relation to the mosque as would have entitled him to revoke the document of 1929. He was neither the founder of the trust as it existed then, nor its mutwalli. His unilateral act therefore was not sufficient to divest the Jamiat, or its successor the corporation, of the control and the management that it had of the waqf property.

It has been further contended before us that the document of 1929 was legally invalid inasmuch as it was a transfer of the office of mutwalli which transfer is not permissible under the Mahomedan law. Here also we do not agree. The respondent cannot blow hot and cold in the same breath. If prior to 1929 he was both the founder and mutwalli of the institution, as founder he could settle any scheme for the management of the institution and the document of 1929 is nothing else but this. It was competent to him therefore to execute that document, surrendering the rights which he possessed as the founder and investing the Jamiat with the mutwalliship of the institution. He however could not cancel the scheme as explained above. Before we close, we may remark that we do not agree with the Subordinate Judge where he holds that the Jamiat ceased to exist when the plaintiff was removed from the office of president and the body then existing was converted into a registered corporation. The respondent's ouster from the office of president may entitle him to seek some sort of relief from the Civil Courts, but it is not enough to invalidate the registration of the Jamiat as corporation or to end its being. In the result we allow the appeal, set aside the judgment and decree of the Court below and dismiss the plaintiff-respondent's suit with costs throughout.

Second Appeal No. 1392 of 1934, Decided on 9th May 1935, from decree of Dist. Judge, Lyallpur, D/- 1st June 1934.

Punjab Colonization of Government Land Act (5 of 1912), S. 21 (a)—B who had acquired occupancy tenancy succeeded by F—F dying without heirs prescribed by S. 59, Tenancy Act—M, mother of F, L, grandmother of F, widow of B and K, step-mother of F, mutated as persons originally entitled to tenancy—M remarrying and her share mutated equally between K and L—Death of K—Collaterals of B claiming to be entitled to succeed to K's share—Collector following decision of Commissioner purporting to sell proprietary rights to collaterals — Decision of Commissioner reversed — Proprietary rights acquired by L — Suit by collaterals that they were heirs of K — S. 21 (a) held did not apply — Invalid sale could not be ground for supporting collateral's claim to oust person in possession.

One B acquired occupancy tenancy rights under the Government Colonization of Land Act and was succeeded by F. F died and under S. 59, Tenancy Act, there were no heirs of F who were entitled to succeed to the occupancy tenancy and the occupancy tenancy would have lapsed to the Crown. As a matter of fact however, M, mother of F and L, grandmother of F and widow of B deceased, put in a petition claiming that they, along with K, step-mother of F, were originally entitled to succeed to the tenancy. The Assistant Colonization Officer accepted the position that these persons were the heirs and mutation was accordingly sanctioned. M remarried and in consequence of this remarriage, her share in the occupancy rights was mutated equally in the names of K and L. Then K died and the collaterals of B claimed that they were entitled to succeed to her share in the occupancy rights. The claim was resisted by L, who succeeded before the Collector but, on appeal, the Commissioner reversed that decision holding that the collaterals were entitled. Following this decision the Collector purported to sell the proprietary rights in the land to the collaterals. But possession was not given. The matter was taken before the Financial Commissioner and he reversed the decision of the Commissioner and held that L was entitled to succeed to the share of K. Thereupon the Collector cancelled or purported to cancel the sale of the proprietary rights to the collaterals and the proprietary rights were acquired by L. The collaterals then brought a suit claiming that they were heirs of K :

Held that assuming that as there was no heir to the occupancy rights of F therefore a grant to these ladies must be taken to be a fresh grant to them, it was impossible to make any presumption either that B did render service or that, if he did render such service, that there was any presumption that the grant was made to the females concerned because of those services. Hence S. 21 (a) did not apply. [P 879 C 2]

Held further that there was no force in the contention that the collaterals became the heirs of K or L. The enumeration of heirs in the riwajiam was not exhaustive and, in any event, even if the Court were to fall back on the personal law, the grandmother was an heir under the Mahomedan law. [P 880 C 1]

Held also that as no possession passed under the sale, a sale which was not valid could not be held to be a ground for supporting the collateral's claim to oust a person in possession from the land. [P 880 C 1]

Dalip Singh J.—The facts of this appeal are as follows: One Bhula acquired occupancy tenancy rights under the Government Colonization of Land Act and was succeeded by his son Nathu. Nathu died and was succeeded by his son Fateh Muhammad. Fateh Muhammad died in 1908 and, under 14 P R 1908,¹ the rule of succession applicable was S. 59, Tenancy Act. Under that Section there were no heirs of Fateh Muhammad who were entitled to succeed to the occupancy tenancy and the occupancy tenancy would have lapsed to the Crown, the guarantor, presumably. As a matter of fact however, Mt. Bhano, mother of Fateh Muhammad and Mt. Lado, grandmother of Fateh Muhammad and widow of Bhula deceased, put in a petition claiming that they, along with Mt. Imam Khatun, step-mother of Fateh Muhammad, were originally entitled to succeed to the tenancy. The mutation was put up before the Tahsildar who stated the facts and referred the matter for decision to the Assistant Colonization Officer recommending that the three ladies be jointly entered as occupancy tenants in place of the deceased Fateh Muhammad. The Assistant Colonization Officer appears to have accepted the position that these persons were the heirs and mutation was accordingly sanctioned. In 1908, Mt. Bhano remarried and, in consequence of this remarriage, her share in the occupancy rights was mutated equally in the names of Mt. Imam Khatun and Mt. Lado. Then Mt. Imam Khatun died and the present plaintiffs, the collaterals of Bhula, claimed that they were entitled to succeed to her share in the occupancy rights. The claim was resisted by Mt. Lado. Mt. Lado succeeded before the Collector but on appeal the Commissioner reversed that decision holding that the collaterals were entitled. Following this decision the Collector purported to sell the proprietary rights in the land to the collaterals. The matter was taken before the Financial Commissioner and he reversed the decision of the Commissioner and held that Mt. Lado was entitled to succeed to the share of Mt. Imam Khatun. Thereupon the Collector cancelled or purported to cancel the sale of the proprietary rights to the plaintiffs-collaterals and the proprietary rights were acquired by Mt. Lado. The plaintiffs-collaterals then brought the present suit claiming that they were the heirs of Mt. Imam Khatun.

Pending the suit Mt. Lado died and her daughters were appointed her legal representatives. Peculiar questions therefore arise in this case which have led to varying decisions. The trial Court appears to have held that S. 21 (b), Government Colonization of Land Act, applied and therefore the heirs of Bhula, who, according to it was the original tenant, had to be sought for. Upon the question in the riwajiam of the enumeration of heirs it held that the enumeration was exhaustive and that as the grandmother was not mentioned as an heir in the riwajiam therefore Mt. Lado had no right to succeed to the occupancy tenancy rights of Fateh Muhammad. So far as the second question was concerned, about the order of the Collector cancelling the sale in favour of the plaintiffs collaterals upon the decision of the Financial Commissioner, which upset the decision of the Commissioner, it held that the Collector had no power to do so and the conveyance in favour of the plaintiffs was absolute and therefore on this ground all the plaintiffs were entitled to succeed. The Secretary of State, who was impleaded by the plaintiffs had only claimed costs but these were disallowed by the trial Court.

On appeal the learned District Judge also held that S. 21 (b) applied, but, upon the question of the Customary law and the heirs, he held that the answer in the riwajiam was not exhaustive and that it did not displace the ordinary rule of succession by which a grandmother would succeed either as such or as widow of the male holder by rights of representation. On the question of the sale he held that the Collector had no power to sell the land to the collaterals and that, in any event, it was not open to the Court under S. 36 to challenge the acts of the Collector, and that, whether the Collector could or could not resell the rights of Mt. Lado, he had done so and it was not open to the Court to question it. The defendants, according to him, could not be ousted because the grant by the Collector was in their favour. He therefore held that the daughters of Mt. Lado were heirs and that Mt. Lado herself was an heir to the occupancy rights of Bhula which had descended to Fateh Muhammad. He therefore accepted the appeal and dismissed the plaintiffs' suit. The plaintiffs were further ordered to pay the costs in the appeal to the Secretary of State.

The plaintiffs have come in second appeal and the learned counsel have contended first of all that Sec. 21 (a) gives the rule of succession in the case. His argument is that, upon the death of Fateh Muhammad, there was no heir under the law at all. If therefore Mt. Bhano, Mt. Imam Khatun and Mt. Lado succeed they succeed in their own right and must be taken to have got a fresh grant from the Collector. They must therefore be taken to be females to whom the tenancy was first allotted and therefore their successor is to be nominated by the Collector either from the issue of such tenant (who are non-existent) or from the male agnates of the person on account of whose services the tenancy was allotted to them. It appears to me that this contention is without force. Assuming for a moment that it is correct that as there was no heir to the occupancy rights of Fateh Muhammad and that therefore a grant to these ladies must be taken to be a fresh grant to them—a point on which I offer no opinion—it yet remains to be seen how the plaintiffs can claim any right to succeed to the ladies. As a matter of fact they have not been nominated by the Collector. But it seems to me that the point goes much deeper. The Collector is only empowered to nominate from the male agnates of the person on account of whose services the tenancy was allotted to the females. There is nothing whatsoever to show in the first place that Bhula had rendered any services at all and the learned counsel has not been able to show that land cannot be granted in the colonies except to persons who have rendered services. Secondly, it by no means follows that the grant to the ladies was on account of services rendered by Bhula. It is perfectly clear as a matter of fact that the grant was made because the Assistant Colonization Officer considered that they were the heirs of the deceased Fateh Muhammad. It is a well-known fact that succession to such tenancies prior to 14 P R 1908¹ was governed by the ordinary rule of customary succession and it was not till 14 P R 1908¹ appeared that it was realized that the law applicable was to be found in Sec. 59, Punjab Tenancy Act. It seems to me impossible therefore to make any presumption either that Bhula did render service or that, if he did render such service, that there is any presumption that the grant was made to the females concerned because of those services. It follows from the above that Sec. 21 (a) does not apply and, in any case, by no means helps the plaintiffs in the case. It was for the plaintiffs to establish that they had a title which had been ignored and I fail to see why when they have failed to do so they should be given a further chance of proving it or of trying to persuade the Collector that they should be nominated.

The learned counsel next argued, that if S. 21 (b) was held to apply, then the interpretation of the riwajiam by the learned District Judge was incorrect. In the first place, there is no certificate, but no doubt the rulings support the proposition that, in the case of an interpretation of a riwajiam, no certificate is necessary. I express no opinion on this point. But, on the merits, it appears to me that there is no force in the contention that the plaintiffs became the heirs of Mt. Imam Khatun or Mt. Lado. It is obvious to my mind that the enumeration of heirs in the riwajiam is not exhaustive and, in any event, even if we were to fall back on the personal law, the grandmother was conceded by the learned counsel to be an heir under the Mahomedan law and therefore this point is without force also.

The last contention was that, owing to the sale by the Collector of the proprietary rights, an absolute estate passed to the plaintiffs of which they could not be divested by any subsequent decision of the Financial Commissioner or any action of the Collector. I do not think this contention has any force because the Collector clearly purported to act under the rules by which he is empowered to convey proprietary rights to an occupancy tenant on the payment of certain sums and under certain conditions. At best, under the argument of the learned counsel, the plaintiffs are not shown to have been such tenants. It is further doubtful to my mind whether there was any completed sale at all. But, in any event, as no possession passed under the sale, a sale which was not valid cannot be held to be a ground for supporting the plaintiffs' claim to oust a person in possession from the land. I would therefore dismiss the appeal of the plaintiffs. In the circumstances I would leave the parties to bear their own costs. The costs of the Secretary of State which were given him by the District Judge were challenged in ground 4 of the appeal before us. Not a word was said about them in the opening arguments nor in reply to the learned Government Advocate who appeared on behalf of the Secretary of State. The Secretary of State is therefore entitled to his costs in this appeal and the plaintiffs will pay those costs. These costs are assessed at Rs. 32.

I should like to point out before closing this judgment that the wording of S. 21 (a) and S. 21 (b) is far from clear and has led to many difficulties of interpretation. Even in the present case, it is not clear that either S. 21 (a) or S. 21 (b) would apply to either of the respective parties, and so it would appear as if there was no heir at all to Mt. Imam Khatun and there might have been no heir at all to Mt. Lado, if she had not acquired proprietary rights. Sec. 21 (b) speaks of an original tenant which, by definition, must be a male and therefore does not cover the case of a female presumably. S. 21 (a) is limited to the case of a female who is the first allottee and who had received the tenancy on account of services rendered by some other person or on account of her own right. At least there is nothing to show that a female cannot acquire tenancy in her own right. But when we come to determine the heir of such a female the heirs are limited to her issue or to the male agnates of a person on account of whose services the tenancy was allotted to her. If then she has acquired the tenancy in her own right and has no issue, it would appear that she had no heirs. I am not aware if this situation was contemplated. It is however a matter for the Legislature to consider.
